It is asserted, however, that as Mr. Osmont had in his possession the original deeds by which Solomon Heydenfeldt gave title to the property, it was his duty to disclose the information to the other parties to the compromise agreement. Neither in that contract nor in the inventory in the estate, nor in the decree of final distribution was this property described, but to Mangels was distributed all the rest and residue of the estate, "real, personal and mixed, of whatever kind or nature, and wherever situated, now known or hereafter known or discovered." This language followed the provision of the agreement of compromise, except that the last seven words of the decree are not in the other instrument, and one of the contentions of counsel for appellants is that Mr. Osmont, who approved the decree before it was signed, fraudulently sought to make it cover property not included in the contemplation of the other contracting parties, nor, indeed, in the terms of the agreement itself. The lower court in this case found that when the decree of distribution was made no one of these plaintiffs, nor any of their attorneys, personally and actually knew that said real property was a part of the estate of Solomon Heydenfeldt, but that Mr. Osmont did have knowledge of that fact. On August 27, 1903, Mangels executed a deed conveying his interest in this property to Thomas M. Osmont, but the deed did not contain any declaration that the grantor claimed title through the decree in the Heydenfeldt estate. This instrument was not recorded during Mr. Osmont's life, but was placed of record 15 days after his death, and subsequently these defendants received by distribution all interest in the land which he had possessed at the time of his death. The date of Mr. Osmont's death was December 20, 1905. The decree of distribution in the Estate of Osmont, made on or about March 8, 1907, did not in terms declare that the fee in this real property was derived from the estate of Heydenfeldt. In August, 1907, the persons who are here defendants began a "McEnerney action" to quiet their title to this property. They obtained a judgment and a decree, which was placed of record March 1, 1910. On September 16th of the same year the persons who are here plaintiffs moved to set aside the judgment with the result which appears in Osmont v. All Persons, supra. The present action was commenced in August, 1912, while the appeal in that case was pending and undetermined.

It was the theory of the counsel for appellants that one of the elements of Mr. Osmont's alleged fraud was his failure to disclose all knowledge which he possessed regarding the title of Heydenfeldt to the lands here involved. In that behalf it was alleged in the complaint that after the execution of the compromise agreement the decree of distribution was prepared by the attorneys for all of the interested parties acting in common accord and not in hostility one to another. The court correctly found against this contention. While Mr. Osmont had appeared for some of the claimants to shares of the estate of Heydenfeldt, he had ceased so to represent them, had been endeavoring to collect his fee, and the compromise agreement, drawn and executed at a time when his former clients were having independent advice, was made partly in settlement of that very controversy. In a sense, it is true that after the compromise was made the attorneys acted in concert in their efforts to have the court distribute the estate in accordance with the agreement, but that does not mean that any one of them was bound to disclose anything which the contract did not, by its very terms or its clear intendment, call upon him to divulge. They were still acting at arm's length, each interested in getting the share allotted to him or his clients, and only concerned about the success of the whole enterprise because distribution according to the terms of the compromise was the agreed method by which that share might be promptly secured. There was no confidential relation between Mr. Osmont and the other attorneys or their clients which would require him to say to them or any one of them that he had knowledge not possessed by them regarding the residuum of the estate.

[1] In this case appellants are confronted by two judgments, one evidenced by the decree of distribution and the other a judgment in rem in the action to quiet title. Assuming that an action in equity such as this will lie, under the authority of such decisions as Soule v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 495, 89 Pac. 324, against both judgments, we must consider the findings of the trial court that fraud was not proven either in the procurement of the decree in probate or the judgment in rem. We are of the opinion that these findings are amply supported by the evidence. These findings being supported, we need not concern ourselves with any others, because the entire cause of action is based upon the supposed fraud of Mr. Osmont. Without findings that fraud existed there can be no recovery, therefore we shall confine ourselves almost entirely to a discussion of the support to be found for the court's decision on this branch of the case. American National Bank v. Donnellan, 170 Cal. 9–15, 148 Pac. 188, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 744.

[2, 3] The "omnibus clause" in the decree of distribution, so far as the evidence disclosed, was not procured by fraud, nor was it so greatly at variance with the contract of compromise as to fail in the carrying out of that agreement. In the first place, it must be remembered that under the decisions of this court decrees which by their terms distribute a residue known or unknown are sufficient to pass title to lands omitted from the particular description. Smith v. Biscailuz, 83 Cal. 344, 21 Pac. 15, 23 Pac. 314. By such a decree the court is required to distribute all the residue to the persons entitled and its order and decree are conclusive in this regard as to the rights of all distributees. Section 1666, Code Civ. Proc.; Humphry v. Protestant Episcopal Church, 154 Cal. 170, 97 Pac. 187; Victoria Hospital Association v. All Persons, 169 Cal. 455, 147 Pac. 124; Marcone v. Dowell, 173 Pac. 465–468. It was the duty of the court making the distribution to decide who was entitled to the residue. This was done, and the appellants, who were parties to the compromise agreement and who in person or by counsel knew or had means of knowing the terms and the significance of the decree of distribution, are not now in a position to object to the inclusion of the "omnibus clause" in the decree. It was a contemporary interpretation of the contract of compromise to which they agreed.

[4, 5] The court found that there was no duty upon Mr. Osmont to declare his knowledge of the title of the Heydenfeldt estate to the lots in litigation here, and that finding is amply supported. In the absence of confidential relations mere silence, without fraudulent acts or omissions connected therewith, would not be unconscionable. Bacon v. Soule, 19 Cal. App. 428–439, 126 Pac. 384; Mulcahey v. Dow, 131 Cal. 73, 63 Pac. 158.

That the appellants had the same means as did Mr. Osmont of acquiring knowledge of the existence of Heydenfeldt's record title to this property is not, and of course cannot be, denied. Indeed, there was a finding by the superior court in this case which stands uncontested, to the effect "that the means of acquiring knowledge of the fact that said real property was at the time of the making of said decree of distribution, and long prior thereto, a portion of the property and estate of said Solomon Heydenfeldt, deceased, was at all times after the death of said Solomon Heydenfeldt open and accessible to the said plaintiffs, and to the said executors, and to any and all persons interested."

Further, the testimony was to the effect that Mrs. Barkley, who called Mr. Osmont's attention to the records of the ownership of these lands, derived her information from those who had been employed by Mrs. Elizabeth A. Heydenfeldt to look up property belonging to the estate and to search the records. Mrs. Barkley had seen Mr. Bracken, a searcher of records, with Mrs. Heydenfeldt. This man gave Mrs. Barkley a list of lots, which she in turn gave to Mr. Osmont, who then examined the titles. It further appears that Mr. Osmont, who at that time represented clients in hostility to these appellants, got permission to examine the original deeds which were in the possession of the executors of the estate. Doubtless Mrs. Heydenfeldt eventually received these papers, for it is in evidence that upon the closing of the estate all the papers went to her. It also appears that upon receiving these documents from the estate for examination, Mr. Osmont signed a receipt for them. From such evidence the court might well conclude that he believed that the executors knew of this property, since his information was derived in part from papers in their custody. In addition to this, he knew that all of those interested in the estate were represented by able counsel, who at all times possessed opportunities quite equal to his own for learning of the record title to all property in the name of Solomon Heydenfeldt. Therefore we conclude that the record supports the finding that no fraud tainted the distribution of the residuum of the estate to Mangels.

[6] There was no fraud shown in the "McEnerney Action," nor in the conduct of Mr. Osmont between the time of the signing of the decree of distribution and his death. It is undisputed that the possession of the land was and of right would be for many years in persons other than the owner of the fee. There is nothing significant, therefore, in Mr. Osmont's failure to record the deed from Mangels, or in the omission from that deed of a description referring specifically to the decree of distribution. But in any event, the concealment of his claim of title could have worked no injury to appellants. Its only effect would be to postpone the running of the statute of limitations against them. Respondents did not acquire title by the decree in Osmont v. All Persons. That decree established their title, and if, as appellants contend, they hold the naked title in trust for said appellants, they must be trustees by reason of the fraud of their ancestor or his grantor in securing distribution through the residuary clause of the decree in the Estate of Heydenfeldt. But the finding of the superior court on that subject is sustained, and is contrary to the contentions of appellants.

The conclusion we have reached regarding the findings upon the matter of the alleged fraud makes it unnecessary for us to comment upon the finding that the statute of limitations was a bar to any recovery in this case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

In re BOSELLY'S ESTATE. (S. F. 8673.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 8, 1918. Rehearing Denied Sept. 5, 1918.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸264—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.
Although husband died in California, and his estate was being administered therein, evidence held to show that property was not acquired while he was resident of the state, and hence to overcome whatever legal presumption existed as to such property being community property.

2. WITNESSES ⟸379(10) — INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS.
On surviving wife's petition for share of alleged community property, where wife claimed that her testimony as to husband's business affairs was hearsay, statements in wife's deposition previously taken made as of her own knowledge were admissible; court having right to determine if statement as to evidence being hearsay was an afterthought making her testimony and statement in deposition inconsistent.

3. EVIDENCE ⟸272 — STATEMENT AGAINST INTEREST.
On surviving wife's petition for share of alleged community property, where wife claimed that her testimony as to husband's business affairs was hearsay, statements in wife's deposition previously taken, made as of her own knowledge, were admissible, being a statement against interest.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Frederic James Boselly, deceased. Petition by Eugenie Susan Boselly for her share of alleged community property, contested by Violet Aline Holbo. From order denying the petition, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, of San Francisco, for appellant. J. Delmore Lederman, of San Francisco (T. E. Pawlicki, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from an order denying the petition of the widow of the decedent for distribution to her of her share of what she alleges to be the community property of her husband's estate. The answer filed to the petition by a daughter of the decedent by a former marriage denied that the whole or any part of the estate of the decedent was community property, and alleged that the whole thereof was her father's separate estate, setting up specifically and in detail the circumstances under which the said property had been acquired. The court, after a hearing, found that the facts as thus alleged in the answer were true, and as a conclusion of law from such findings of fact found that the whole of the decedent's property was his separate estate. The facts as thus alleged in the answer and found by the court to be true are as follows:

"That Frederic James Boselly and said Eugenie Susan Boselly were married in the city of Reno, in the state of Nevada, on the 24th day of July, 1897, and thencefrom, up to and at the time of the death of said Frederic James Boselly, deceased, as aforesaid, on the 19th of February, 1913, said Frederic James Boselly and said Eugenie Susan Boselly were respectively husband and wife; that said Frederic James Boselly and said Eugenie Susan Boselly were both residents of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, at the time of their said marriage, and continued so to be such residents of said city and county of San Francisco and of the state of California until on or about the 1st day of April, 1899; that on or about said last-named date said Frederic James Boselly, with the intent on the part of said Frederic James Boselly to abandon his said residence within the state of California and to become a resident of the state of New York, removed from the state of California and went to the state of New York, arriving in said state of New York on or about the 6th day of April, 1899, and continued thencefrom until the 17th day of September, 1913, to reside without the state of California; that said Frederic James Boselly acquired a residence in said state of New York on said 6th day of April, 1899, and continued thencefrom until about the 1st day of June, 1910, to be a resident of said state of New York; that on or about the 1st day of June, 1910, said Frederic James Boselly, with the intention of abandoning his residence in the state of New York and acquiring a residence in the state of New Jersey, removed from the said state of New York to the state of New Jersey, and on or about said last-mentioned date acquired a residence in said state of New Jersey and became a resident of said state of New Jersey, and continued thencefrom to be a resident of the state of New Jersey until on or about the 1st day of October, 1910; that on or about the 1st day of October, 1910, said Frederic James Boselly, with the intent of abandoning his said residence in the state of New Jersey and acquiring a residence in the state of New York, removed from the state of New Jersey to the state of New York, and on said last-mentioned date acquired a residence in said state of New York and became a resident of said state of New York and continued to be a resident of said state of New York until the 17th day of September, 1913, upon which date he arrived in the state of California; that during all the period from the 1st day of April, 1899, to the 17th day of September, 1913, said Frederic James Boselly was a resident of no other state or states than the states of New Jersey or New York.

"That all of the property which said Frederic James Boselly died possessed of was, at the time of his death, the separate property of said decedent, Frederic James Boselly, and was acquired by said Frederic James Boselly during the time that he resided outside of the state of California and while he was a resident of the state of New York and of the state of New Jersey under the laws of said states of New York and New Jersey."

The only portion of the foregoing findings with which the appellant disagrees upon this appeal is embraced in the closing paragraph thereof to the effect:

"That all of the property which said Frederic James Boselly died possessed of * * * was acquired by said Frederic James Boselly during the time that he resided outside of the state of California and while he was a resident of the state of New York and of the state of New Jersey."

It is conceded by the appellant that, if the said property of the decedent was acquired by him in and under the laws of the states of New York and New Jersey, it would be his separate estate.

[1] The first point which the appellant urges in support of her above contention is that, the decedent having died in the state of California, and his estate being in process of administration therein, and said property being admittedly accumulated during the period of his marriage with the appellant, and being in his possession at the time of his death, the presumption arose that said property is community property under the sections of the Civil Code dealing with that subject; that the burden of overcoming that presumption by clear and satisfactory proof rested upon the contestant; that such burden had not been sustained, and, in consequence, the foregoing findings of fact could not be upheld upon appeal. It is practically conceded on the part of the contestant that the position of the petitioner with respect to this presumption and the degree of proofs required to overthrow it is correct and is sustained by the authorities which she cites in its support. The dispute arises over the sufficiency of the evidence upon which the court based its finding that the presumption had been overcome. The evidence upon which the contestant in a large measure relied to overthrow the presumption upon which the petitioner depended came from the lips of the petitioner herself, whom the contestant made her witness upon the hearing. It appeared from her testimony that the decedent and herself had been married in Reno, Nev., on July 24, 1897; that they resided from that date until April 1, 1899, in the city of San Francisco, California, during which time he was employed as an agent of the Price Baking Powder Company, keeping at the same time a small store; that in March, 1899, said employment ceased by reason of the absorption of the Price Baking Powder Company by the Royal Baking Powder Company; that shortly thereafter Boselly concluded to go East and seek employment with the Royal Baking Powder Company there; that he sold his store and household furniture, and, taking his wife, went East in April, 1899. The petitioner testified that when she and her husband were married he had no property whatever, and in answer to the question as to whether she knew of her own knowledge whether Mr. Boselly had any property when he left California in April, 1899, she answered, "None to my knowledge," and she further testified that when she and her husband went East in 1899 "we had $726 in a savings bank which we took to go East." And when asked the question, "Had you any stocks or bonds which you carried with you?" she replied, "We had nothing." It is true that the witness undertook to qualify the force of this evidence a little later in her testimony by stating that she only knew what her husband told her upon this subject, but it is a significant circumstance in this connection that, while she testified that her husband and herself were very confidential in respect to her business affairs, she nowhere undertook to testify in support of her own case that her husband and herself had in fact any other property than this small sum of money when they left California for New York in April, 1899. Concerning the rise in the decedent's fortunes after he had taken up his residence in the state of New York and later in the state of New Jersey there is no material dispute. He entered the employ of the Royal Baking Powder Company at a comparatively small salary, but rose rapidly in the confidence and service of the corporation, until he became its president in the year 1906, which position he held until his resignation on account of ill health in 1913. He received a high salary, which he invested wisely. He became associated with other enterprises, and was president of the American Maize Products Company from 1908 on, and was also president of the Tartar Chemical Company, and a director of the Greenwich Bank. He established his legal residence in New York immediately after his arrival there, and later changed his legal residence for a time to the state of New Jersey; and it is an undisputed fact that between the years 1899 to 1913 his actual and legal residence was in one or the other of these two states. In the year 1913 Boselly, on account of his failing health, retired from his business associations and activities in these states and came to California, arriving in September, 1913, where he thereafter resided until his death, five months later, in February, 1914. Taking the story of the decedent's life after the date of his marriage with the petitioner in 1906 and up to the time of his return to California in the year 1913, the conclusion seems irresistible from his widow's own recital of it that whatever property he died possessed of he acquired during the years of his life and business activities and success while a resident of the states of New York and New Jersey. Upon this branch of the case and aside from the question of the competency of the evidence of the petitioner herself by which the facts were mainly proven, and aside from any question as to errors, if any, committed by the court in the course of its admission, we are of the opinion that the contestant overcame whatever presumption existed as to the property of the decedent being community property by clear and convincing proof.

[2] The petitioner, however, contends that the trial court committed several vital errors in respect to and in the course of the admission of the testimony of the petitioner in evidence, and that but for these errors the required proofs to support the contestant's case would have been lacking. The first of these errors of which the appellant complains is the alleged error of the court in permitting the contestant to question the petitioner, when a witness, as to certain statements contained in a deposition of the petitioner which had been previously taken, the purpose of such inquiry being that of showing that in her earlier deposition she had stated certain facts respecting the state of her husband's business affairs as of her own knowledge, whereas upon the hearing of the case she attempted to assert that these were wholly hearsay derived from what her husband had told her respecting them. The objection which was made on behalf of the petitioner to the introduction of these earlier statements from her deposition was that they were not admissible because they did not contradict her testimony then being given; but we do not deem this objection tenable, for two reasons: First, if the statements of the witness as given in her former deposition were as to matters within her own knowledge, they would have been admissible as statements against interest; second, it was a very proper matter for the court's determination as to whether the statement of the witness that these were matters of hearsay was not an afterthought and that her earlier recital of the same facts was not in fact, as it appeared to be, a recital of matters within her own knowledge. If so, there was a sufficient inconsistency between her earlier and later testimony to have justified the admission of the former in evidence.

[3] This conclusion will dispose of another and very material contention made on behalf of the appellant. It is this: The appellant insists that so much of her testimony as was stated by her to have contained facts derived by her from statements made by her husband to her was erroneously admitted in evidence in violation of the rule of law regarding the inadmissibility of privileged communications between husband and wife. It is to be noted that, if the view of the trial court with respect to the admissibility of the testimony of the witness as contained in her former deposition is adopted, enough was therein stated to have justified the ultimate conclusion of the court, and hence any error which it may have committed in admitting other statements of the witness to which she urged the objection that they were hearsay and privileged would not lead to a reversal of the case.

No other questions requiring consideration are presented upon this appeal.

Order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. KEYES. (Cr. 2154.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1159(5)—APPEAL—REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.
Where the evidence as to defendant's sanity or insanity was in conflict, a verdict of guilty cannot be disturbed by the Supreme Court.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸57—CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY — TEMPORARY INSANITY FROM DRUNKENNESS.
Temporary insanity produced by temporary intoxication does not destroy criminal responsibility, when the party became voluntarily intoxicated, and drunkenness forms no defense whatever, but can be considered only to determine the degree of crime.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸825(3)—DUTY TO REQUEST INSTRUCTION.
In prosecution for murder, defended on ground of insanity, if court failed to instruct on specific character of insanity, defendant should have framed instruction and requested court to give it.

4. HOMICIDE ⟸294(1) — INSANITY AS DEFENSE—INSTRUCTIONS.
In prosecution for murder, defended on ground of insanity, court was not required to designate any particular phase of insanity.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸805(3)—DEFENSE OF INSANITY—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTION.
In prosecution for murder, instruction as to quantum of evidence necessary to sustain defense of insanity held proper, though using "must" in stating evidence must be such that if issue were submitted to jury in civil case they "must" find defendant insane.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸570(2)—INSANITY—PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE.
On issue of defendant's insanity in criminal case, if evidence satisfies jury by preponderance that defendant is insane it is jury's duty to so find.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸778(7) — INSANITY AS DEFENSE—PRESUMPTION—INSTRUCTION.
Instructions as to presumption of continuance of insanity once shown to exist, held properly refused as too broad.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸814(13)—INSTRUCTION—SUPPORTING EVIDENCE.
In prosecution for murder, defended on ground of insanity, instruction as to presumption of continuance of insanity once shown to exist held properly refused, as introducing matter of lucid interval without evidence supporting it.

9. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸311—RESPONSIBILITY—INSANITY—PRESUMPTION AS TO LUCID INTERVALS.
When it is shown defendant had lucid intervals, it will be presumed offense was committed in one of them, not while he was insane.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Edward S. Keyes was convicted of murder in the first degree, and from the judgment and order denying new trial he appeals. Order and judgment affirmed.

Ingle Carpenter, of Los Angeles, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn and Jerry H. Powell, Deputy Attys. Gen., and L. A. West, Dist. Atty., and A. E. Koepsel, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Santa Ana, for the People.

LORIGAN, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of murder of the first degree, sentenced to death, and appeals. The victim of the defendant was a newsboy, 11 years of age, whom the defendant had enticed to his home at night and killed after an attempt to commit sodomy on him, the killing being accompanied by the dismemberment of the body of the boy and an attempt at its concealment. In its details the crime was of a particularly fiendish and revolting character, and, in view of the fact that there is no claim on this appeal but that the evidence adduced fully warranted the conviction of the defendant and the penalty imposed upon him, it will be unnecessary to further refer to that evidence.

[1] The sole defense interposed on behalf of the defendant was that he was insane when the killing was perpetrated, and to sustain this claim there was given in evidence the clinical history of the defendant from his infancy, which consisted in the main of misfortune attending his birth and childhood, physical injuries suffered in early youth and a life made up of waywardness, wanderings, delinquencies, bestialities, drunkenness, temporary reforms and early relapses, a term in the state prison, and detention in an insane asylum. On the other hand, there was evidence on the part of the prosecution, given by witnesses who had known, observed, and talked with the defendant weeks or days before the killing, that he was sane when the crime was committed. On both sides there were opinions of medical experts, some that the defendant was insane when the crime was committed, while others declared him to have been sane. As we do not understand that any serious claim is made but that there was a substantial conflict in the evidence and the opinions of the experts as to the legal responsibility of the defendant for the crime charged against him, it is not necessary to refer in detail to that evidence, because where such a condition exists the verdict of the jury resolved from the conflict cannot be disturbed by this court. There being, then, no claim against the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the charge of murder of the first degree, and the defense of insanity being found against the defendant upon substantially conflicting evidence, the verdict upon the judgment must stand unless there is some merit in various points made by appellant as to certain instructions given or refused by the trial court, rulings with reference to testimony, and the refusal of the trial court, before and after the main trial of defendant, to submit the question of his then sanity or insanity for determination by a jury.

Approaching a consideration of these points: It is claimed by the appellant that the principal defense of insanity interposed by him was insanity produced by the use of intoxicating liquors covering a long period of time, and which had resulted in what is often referred to in the books as settled insanity produced by habitual intoxication. While this is the claim of appellant on this appeal, it was not the exact theory upon which the defense of insanity was presented upon the trial. The claim then was of a more extended character of insanity, namely, that the defendant was a moral degenerate; that he had been an imbecile from infancy and had since gradually undergone a further mental deterioration; that the habitual use of alcohol would cause such an imbecile with a deteriorating mind to become more irritable and more disturbed, and accentuate any evil passion with which he might be possessed and render him less capable of self-control; that any abnormal sexual impulse in such an individual would be further inflamed by the use of alcohol, and the possible resistance of the victim would further excite and inflame him into a state of rage where he would become utterly irresponsible and would develop an impulse to violence or to murder. It was further in evidence that defendant, while at the house, had a quart bottle of whisky, which he and his victim drank. The foregoing presents in a general way the character of insanity with which it was asserted the defendant was afflicted on the night of the murder and embodies the claim of defendant as to settled insanity.

[2-4] The defendant insists that the instructions given by the court were not sufficiently clear and broad to advise the jury upon the law as to the defense of settled insanity produced by intoxication, and calls attention to the following instruction, which he claims is deficient in that respect:

"Drunkenness is no excuse for the commission of crime. Insanity produced by intoxication does not destroy responsibility when the party, when sane and responsible, made himself voluntarily intoxicated; and drunkenness forms no defense whatever to the fact of guilt, for, when a crime is committed by a party while in a fit of intoxication, the law will not allow him to avail himself of his own gross vice and misconduct to shelter himself from the legal consequences of such crime. Evidence of drunkenness can only be considered by the jury for the purpose of determining the degree of crime, and the weight to be given it is a matter for the jury to determine in connection with all the other evidence and circumstances in proof in the case."

This instruction, however, does not purport to deal with settled insanity produced by intoxication, but with temporary intoxication as a defense, and has relevancy only to the intoxication of the defendant existing at the time of the killing from the liquor which he and the deceased drank at the house. As such an instruction, it, and the lengthier portion of the instruction which the appellant omitted to quote, is clearly good law as established by a long line of cases in this court, culminating in People v. Hower, 151 Cal. 638, 91 Pac. 507. Appellant says that in any event the giving of this instruction was misleading, as the court gave no other instruction on the subject of settled insanity from intoxication. The appellant, however, requested a large number of instructions, and, if the court had failed to instruct on that specific character of insanity, he should have framed an instruction and requested the court to give it. The truth, however, is that the court gave the jury full instructions on the subject of the defense of insanity from whatever cause proved. It was not required to designate any particular phase of insanity. It is proper to note, however, that at the defendant's request the court did instruct the jury on the subject of insanity through the use of alcoholic liquors as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that temporary insanity as a defense to a crime is as fully recognized by law as is permanent insanity; and if the jury finds that the defendant, though of weak intellect, was not insane prior to and after the commission of the alleged offense, but at the time of the commission of the crime, through the use of alcoholic drinks or because of some other excitement at the time, he was temporarily in such a mental condition that he was not aware of the nature of the offense, and had not the ability to discriminate between right and wrong, you must acquit the defendant on the ground of insanity."

[5, 6] It is next contended by the appellant that the court erred in an instruction to the jury as to the quantum of evidence necessary to preponderate in order to sustain the burden of proof in a defense of insanity. On that subject the court instructed the jury as follows:

"Although it is true, as you have been instructed, that generally the burden of proof is upon the prosecution, yet to this rule there is this exception: Where insanity is relied upon as a defense, the burden of proving the existence of such insanity is on defendant, and it is incumbent upon him to establish by a preponderance of evidence that he was insane at the time of committing the act charged, and the evidence of mental derangement must be such in amount that if the single issue of sanity or insanity of the defendant should be submitted to the jury in a civil case they must find that he is insane. Insanity must be established by a preponderance of the evidence. Therefore, if you believe that the preponderance of evidence is in favor of the sanity of the defendant, or that there is not a preponderance of evidence to the effect that he was insane at the time of the transaction involved herein, you will act upon the hypothesis that he was sane at that time."

Counsel contends that by the use of the word "must" in the instruction too great a burden was imposed upon defendant as to how far his proof of insanity must preponderate. No fault is found with the instruction save in the use of the word "must" and as to that we think the criticism of appellant not justified. All that the instruction tells the jury is that the defense of insanity must be established by a preponderance of evidence, and that preponderance must be such that if the single issue was presented in a civil action as to whether the defendant was insane or not, the jury would find that he was insane. It is suggested that there is an impulsion implied from the use of the word "must." This may be admitted, but it adds nothing to the force of the defendant's criticism of the instruction. Of course, it will not be questioned but that in a civil case, if a jury is satisfied that a defense of insanity is established by a preponderance of evidence, it is its absolute duty to find to that effect; it is the duty imposed upon them by law—they must so find. So, too, on a similar issue in a criminal case, if the evidence satisfies the jury by a preponderance in his favor that he is insane, it is its duty to so find; they must do it to fulfill their obligations as jurors. This is all the instruction tells them to do. A similar instruction to this was approved in People v. McDonell, 47 Cal. 134, and People v. Hamilton, 62 Cal. 377. Counsel for appellant relies in support of his criticism of the instruction on the cases of People v. Wreden, 59 Cal. 392, and People v. Wells, 145 Cal. 138, 78 Pac. 470. But they are not in point. In these cited cases the court, after telling the jury that insanity must be established by a preponderance of evidence, further proceeded to make explanatory statements as to how that preponderance must be shown, telling the jury that it "must be clearly established by satisfactory proof." It was held that such instructions were erroneous, as they amounted to telling the jury that a defense of insanity must be established beyond a reasonable doubt. The instruction here criticized confines itself to telling the jury that a "preponderance of evidence" is sufficient to sustain the defense. Another instruction was given by the court on this same subject, which, together with the instruction criticized, makes the latter more plain, if, indeed, anything of the kind was necessary. That instruction is as follows:

"Up to the moment when the killing is proved the prosecution must make out its case beyond any reasonable doubt. When the killing is proved it devolves upon the defendant to show any circumstances in mitigation to excuse or justify by a preponderance of evidence on his part; that is, the killing being proved, the defendant must make out his case in mitigation to excuse or justify by some proof stronger in some appreciable degree than the proof of the prosecution. The burden of proof changes. It must be in some degree, no matter how small, stronger than the proof of the prosecution on the other side."

[7-9] The next point urged by defendant is that error was committed by the court in refusing several instructions. We quote them as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that if the jury finds from the evidence that the defendant was insane at a period before the homicide in question, then in that case his insanity is presumed to have continued up to the time of the homicide providing the exciting cause of such insanity also exists up to the time of the homicide."

"The court instructs the jury that if the jury finds from the evidence that the defendant was insane at a period before the homicide in question there arises a presumption that such insanity continued, and the burden of proof rests upon one who claims that an act of such person was during a lucid interval to show that the lucid interval existed at the time of the act in question."

"The court instructs the jury that although sanity is presumed to be the normal and natural state of the human mind, when imbecility is once shown to exist in a person it is presumed to exist and continue until the presumption has been overcome by contrary or repelling evidence proving sanity; and that such proof of sanity must be without qualification."

These three instructions in varying form were calculated to instruct the jury that, insanity once shown to exist, it is presumed to continue; that is, if the jury found the defendant was insane at some time prior to the killing of the deceased the presumption is that he was insane at the time the killing was done.

In the case of People v. Schmitt, 106 Cal. 48, 39 Pac. 204, the first instruction asked, which is precisely the same as was under consideration in that case, was condemned on the ground that it was too broad; it did not properly limit the insanity to permanent or habitual insanity as distinguished from temporary insanity, concerning the latter of which no presumption of its continuance can be indulged in from proof of its prior existence. Aside from this, it failed to contain the proper qualifications that it would only be presumed to exist until the contrary was shown. People v. Francis, 38 Cal. 183; Wharton's Crim. Law, sec. 55.

As to the second instruction quoted, the same objection applies as to the one we have just had under consideration, with the added vice that it introduces as an element in the case to which the instruction is to be applied a "lucid interval," evidence of which was nowhere in the case or claimed to be. Even as to "lucid interval" it did not correctly state the law of presumption, because it is laid down in 12 Cyc. 389, as the recognized rule that, "when it is shown that a defendant had lucid intervals, it will be presumed that the offense was committed in one of them." In passing it may be remarked, too, that the instruction assumes that the prosecution contended that the crime of defendant was committed during a lucid interval, and inferentially that the defendant had been, prior to the occurrence of said lucid interval, insane. The prosecution contended for nothing of the kind and did not admit that the defendant was insane at any time.

[10, 11] The third of the quoted instructions was properly refused because it had no relevancy to the case, and further, because it was not a correct statement of law. Imbecility is no defense against crime unless its existence deprives the individual of the power to distinguish between right and wrong. No reference is made in the instruction as to the existence of a mental deficiency in this respect with reference to the imbecility mentioned therein. In People v. Oxnam, 170 Cal. 211, 149 Pac. 165, the distinction between imbecility or feeble-mindedness and insanity as a defense to crime is clearly pointed out, and, this distinction not appearing in said instruction, it was for that reason properly refused.

[12] Complaint is made by appellant because the court refused, prior to the main trial and after such trial, to have the sole question of the sanity of the defendant passed upon by a jury. The demand was made by his counsel under section 1368 of the Penal Code, based upon an affidavit of such counsel. The second application was supported by affidavits of two physicians and also officers of the jail. Counter-affidavits were filed on behalf of the state. The right to a jury trial in proceedings inaugurated under said section 1368 is addressed to the sound discretion of the judge before whom the cause is pending, and the showing must be sufficient to create a doubt in the mind of the judge as to the sanity of the defendant before he is required to submit the question to a jury, and we will not disturb his action unless it appears that there was a clear abuse of such discretion. People v. Hettick, 126 Cal. 425, 58 Pac. 918; People v. West, 25 Cal. App. 369, 143 Pac. 793; People v. Fountain, 170 Cal. 460, 150 Pac. 341. There is not the slightest showing of any abuse of discretion on the part of the judge, and the two applications must be deemed properly denied.

These are the only points presented by appellant on this appeal which we deem require an extended discussion, and, finding them all without merit, the order denying the motion of defendant for a new trial and the judgment awarding the death penalty are hereby affirmed.

WOLFSEN v. SMYER et al. (Sac. 2567.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 3, 1918.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⟸86—PROMISE TO EXECUTE WILL.
Under the laws that existed prior to 1905, an oral promise to convey an estate by will was under certain circumstances enforceable in equity, and is still enforceable, where the promise was made prior to that time.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⟸86—CONTRACT TO MAKE WILL.
Equity may enforce a contract to make a will, where, in reliance on the contract, the promisee has changed his condition and relations, so that the refusal to complete the agreement would be a fraud upon him.

3. WILLS ⟸58(2)—CONTRACT TO MAKE WILL—EVIDENCE.
Evidence held to sustain a finding that no promise was made by a decedent to make a will in favor of plaintiff.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1071(6)—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS.
When there are sufficient findings on issues made in the case to support a judgment, it is immaterial that there is no finding, on some other issue, which, if made, would not compel any different conclusion from that reached by the findings made.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1071(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS.
Where there are sufficient findings on issues made in the case to support a judgment, it is immaterial that there is an erroneous finding on some other issue which, if differently made, would not compel any different conclusion from that reached by the findings made.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1047(4)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.
In a suit to impress a trust upon decedent's property, in enforcement of an alleged contract by decedent to make a will in plaintiff's favor, refusal to reopen the case to admit in evidence a deed for the purpose of contradicting a witness, where such deed would have been of doubtful value as impeaching testimony, if error, was harmless.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Suit by Lawrence L. Wolfsen against Mary Smyer, administratrix of the estate of Silas Bowman, deceased, and others, to declare a trust. From a decree for defendants and the denial of a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Peck, Bunker & Cole, of Oakland, and Ostrander, Tuttle, Griffin & Shaffer, of Merced, for appellant. E. A. Williams and G. G. Graham, both of Fresno, and Croop & Croop, of Merced, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. The claim of appellant in this action is that Silas Bowman, now deceased, and himself, in 1890, while appellant was a minor, entered into a verbal agreement whereby plaintiff was to live with said Bowman during the lifetime of the latter as his son, and help and work and care for him as a son, and attend to his interests as such, and in consideration thereof said Bowman would at his death leave all his property to the plaintiff; that plaintiff faithfully performed all the conditions and terms of the agreement on his part to be performed as a dutiful, affectionate, and considerate son should do; that, notwithstanding said full performance on the part of plaintiff, said Silas Bowman died without having made any conveyance of his property to plaintiff or any will disposing of the same in his favor, but on the contrary died intestate. Based on this claim, plaintiff brought this action to have a trust impressed on all the property left by decedent in his favor, and, from a decree adverse to him and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals.

The court found that neither in 1890 or at any other time did Silas Bowman agree with plaintiff that he would at the time of his death give or leave to plaintiff any of his property owned by him, and that it was not true that plaintiff had performed all the provisions and covenants of the alleged agreement on his part to be performed. The court further found that the claim of plaintiff asserted in his complaint that, pursuant to said alleged agreement, he had during all the years from 1890 till the death of deceased given his efforts, care, services, and attention to the affairs, business, and property of said Bowman, foregoing all opportunity for his own personal advancement, profit, and improvement, was not true; that it was not true that for the services rendered by said plaintiff to said Bowman in his lifetime compensation could not be made in money or that the same were not so compensated.

The contention of the appellant here is that the evidence in the case does not support any of these findings as made by the court, but, on the contrary, clearly showed a contract entered into between Bowman and himself as claimed by him and full performance thereof on the part of plaintiff, and that the court erred in finding differently.

The case was tried by Hon. F. B. Ogden, of the superior court of Alameda county, sitting in the superior court of Merced county, and in disposing of the case in that court the learned judge rendered an opinion as follows:

"This is an action to enforce a trust. The plaintiff claims that in the year 1890 he engaged with one Silas Bowman to give his attention, labor, and services to said Bowman, in return for the promise of said Bowman to leave to said plaintiff all of the property possessed by him, said Bowman, at the time of his death. From the testimony of plaintiff it appears that with his father and two sisters he migrated to America from Germany in the fall of 1881. The father was a widower, and the three children were small; the plaintiff about seven years of age, having been born in 1874. Upon the advent of the family to this country, they went to the residence of Henry Wolfsen, an uncle of the plaintiff. In December of 1881, or the first part of January, 1882, this uncle took his nephew, this plaintiff, to the home of Silas Bowman, where he was installed as a member thereof. Silas was a bachelor residing with his niece on a ranch in Merced county. What arrangements were made between Henry and Silas for the keeping of plaintiff, the plaintiff did not know, as he was unable to understand the English language, in which the conversation between the older men was carried on. It appears that the father of the plaintiff on his arrival here had but little of this world's goods and was without any means of earning the livelihood for the family except through his manual labor. So pressed was he for funds that he was compelled to place one of his daughters with a family, and the other found lodgment in an institution.

"In the family of Silas the plaintiff was made welcome and took the place of a son. He did many of the chores, brought in wood, cooked meals on occasions, washed dishes and clothes, and as he matured in years gave of his advice freely, to Silas, when that advice was sought. During his residence in the Bowman home, the plaintiff went regularly to school, there first learned the English language, and at the age of twenty-one or two graduated from the grammar grades. During the minority of plaintiff his wants were supplied by Silas, who bought the school books necessary, gave to plaintiff such money as he needed, and apparently did everything that a father ordinarily does for a son. It also appears that Silas indulged his foster son, the plaintiff, in outdoor sports, and gave to him, as well, the privilege of earning money on his own account. In this connection it appears that the plaintiff worked on neighboring farms, sold watermelons, killed coyotes for bounty, and in other ways made spending money for himself.

"The father of plaintiff in 1887, or 1888, left Merced and went to the Kittleman Plains, and it appears in evidence that in 1890 he sent a communication to the plaintiff, suggesting that the plaintiff join him there. This was communicated to the decedent Silas, and it is claimed by the plaintiff that Silas then asked the plaintiff if he desired to go with his father; and on being answered in the negative then said, if the plaintiff would stay with him (Silas) and help him on the place, upon the death of Silas, he (Silas) would leave all his property to plaintiff. Plaintiff avers that said Silas repeated this promise on sundry occasions thereafter. After graduating from the grammar grades, the plaintiff bought some well-boring tools, and commenced taking contracts for sinking wells. The money to make the purchase, it may be assumed, was the result of the savings of the plaintiff while a minor. For about a year and one-half the plaintiff followed this latter vocation, still living with Silas, and performing about the place much of the same work as theretofore, and adding to his patrimony by investing in live stock. In 1898, the plaintiff made a trip to Alaska for the purpose of looking over that field, and, if possible, of bettering himself there. His money on hand was about $375, $100 of which was loaned him by Silas, and $275 the result of his earnings. The trip was made with full consent of Silas. In Alaska the plaintiff stayed one year, earning enough money to pay his way and returning with about $400. With this sum he returned to Silas the $100 advanced by him, and resumed the old life upon the farm, and there remained for a short time, when again, with the consent and advice of Silas, the plaintiff made a trip to his father at Kittleman Plains. There it was proposed that the plaintiff file on a homestead in the government domain. This was done in February, 1900, and the land entered upon was improved by a small cabin purchased by the plaintiff in compliance with the necessities of the act of Congress. The plaintiff states, however, that the time he was away from the Bowman place was only about two weeks, although it was his intention at the time of making the entry to comply with the law as to residence, etc. Prior, however, to this entry, and in 1898, he had purchased 160 acres of land adjoining the Bowman place, paying therefor $250. During this time it appears that the plaintiff and Silas had stock which used the lands of Bowman and plaintiff in common. The holdings of the plaintiff were, in 1902, augmented by his purchase of an additional 160 acres of land for which he paid $975, and by a further purchase in 1903 of still another quarter section, costing $1,175.

"In 1904, plaintiff married and took his bride with him to the Bowman place, where the three, Silas, the plaintiff and his wife, remained until 1907. During this time part of the household expenses were borne by plaintiff, and part by Silas. The wife of plaintiff contributed to the domestic happiness and economy by the usual wifely duties. It appears that no stated amount was fixed upon as the share of the plaintiff, and he cannot tell just what amount he paid in as his contribution to the expenses of the family. During all of this time down to 1907, the plaintiff bought and sold stock and used in common with Bowman these lands for pasture. In 1907 at the suggestion of Bowman the plaintiff moved to a house on one of the quarter sections taking with him 35 head of stock, which belonged to him; Bowman being the possessor of about 70 or 75 head. From this new home plaintiff continued the business of well-boring and cattle raising, and in 1908 added to his possessions by a further purchase of 160 acres; this time buying from Silas. Part of the time to 1907 the decedent Silas was away visiting in the Eastern states, and during such time the plaintiff was in charge of the ranch of Bowman, or gave it some supervision, when it had been rented by Bowman.

"In 1912, decedent Silas made a trip to Honolulu, and in 1913 made another to San Diego, at which latter place he died from paralysis. February, 1914, was the date of death. The estate left by him was approximately $30,000. In August, 1913, before leaving, decedent Silas made a lease to plaintiff of his ranch of 750 acres at the agreed price of 80 cents per acre. The lease was for one year with the privilege of three. A portion of the Bowman place, about 50 acres, was reserved from the lease whereon was the house and surroundings, but it appears that even this reservation was not actual, as the plaintiff had the privilege of it except when occupied by Silas. Upon telegraphic advice, from San Diego, that Silas Bowman was in extremis, the plaintiff accompanied by Thomas Scofield, a stepnephew of Silas, journeyed to San Diego, and arrived in time to see him die. Plaintiff paid the hospital bills, undertaker, and incidental expenses of the trip, and was repaid by the administratrix, upon her appointment.

"Many witnesses were examined upon the trial of this case, 43 in all. More than 30 witnesses called in behalf of the plaintiff testified as to the faithfulness of the plaintiff in his devotion to decedent, Silas, and to the expressions of affection of Silas towards the plaintiff. To many of them Silas had declared that the relatives should get nothing, and that his ranch and property should go to the plaintiff on his death. To many of his friends Silas declared that he had already made deeds to the plaintiff and that they were contained in a tin box then in a Merced bank. One or two witnesses stated that Silas had declared that he had promised the boy—meaning the plaintiff—to give him (the plaintiff) the property on the death of him (Silas) in return for the labor of plaintiff.

"From the testimony of all the witnesses it does affirmatively appear that Silas Bowman had a sincere affection for his foster son, the plaintiff, and often expressed the intention of leaving all of his property to him, except that he (Silas) intended to aid Thomas Scofield to some extent. It further appears from the evidence that, upon the return of the plaintiff and said Scofield from San Diego with the remains of Silas, a meeting of some of those interested in the estate was held in the office of W. B. Croop, a practicing attorney of Merced. Before the meeting, Mr. Croop, who had for several years acted as the attorney for the decedent, Silas Bowman, went to the bank which held the papers of the decedent, secured the tin box in which they were contained, and on the arrival of Thomas Scofield and Mrs. Smyer, niece of decedent, the plaintiff proceeded to open the aforesaid box. The key to this box, it appears, was held by Scofield. On opening the box, neither will, deed, nor other paper was found, which could throw light upon the intended disposition of the property of Silas Bowman. Twice afterwards the box was inspected with no better results. Mr. Croop also testified that he had never drawn any deed wherein Silas Bowman made conveyance to the plaintiff.

"After the appointment of Mary Smyer as administratrix of the estate of Silas Bowman, the administratrix requested the plaintiff to give to her the lease under which he held the Bowman ranch, and the plaintiff replied that he could not comply, as this lease was the only evidence of his right to the possession thereof. It also appears in evidence that at another time, after said appointment, and when the plaintiff was being reimbursed for his outlay on the San Diego trip, he was asked if he had any other claim against the estate, and he answered in the negative. Evidence was also introduced on behalf of the defendant tending to show that, at one time after the return of the plaintiff from Alaska, the decedent, Silas, told the plaintiff that he had given to him all that he (Silas) intended to give, and that he need not expect more. Other witnesses for the defense testified that the plaintiff had informed them that he did not expect anything from the estate of Silas Bowman, because Silas had too many relatives. It further appears that the plaintiff asked of the attorney for the administratrix if he could hold the Bowman place under the lease.

[1, 2] "There can be no doubt that, under the law of this state as it existed prior to 1905, an oral promise to convey an estate by will, under certain circumstances, was enforceable in equity and is still enforceable where the promise was made prior to said date. In the case of Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 449, 45 Pac. 711, 33 L. R. A. 369, Mr. Justice Henshaw, speaking for the Supreme Court, said (quoting Jaffe v. Jacobson, 48 Fed. 21, 1 C. C. A. 24): 'We concede the law to be that a court of equity will specifically enforce a promise to leave to another the whole, or a definite portion of one's estate as a reward for peculiar personal services rendered, or other acts done by the promisee, which are not susceptible of a money valuation, and were not intended to be paid for in money, provided the consideration has been substantially received at the promisee's death.' (Through inadvertence the word 'promisee's' was quoted in the California case instead of 'promisor's.') And in the opinions in Owens v. McNally the following language was also used: 'The question whether relief should be granted or denied in a particular case addresses itself peculiarly to the conscience of the Chancellor.' And the rule laid down in Pomeroy on Specific Performance is cited with approval in McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 84, 70 Pac. 1008, as follows: 'Courts of equity will under special circumstances enforce a contract to make a will, * * * where, in reliance upon the contract, the promisee has changed his condition and relations so that a refusal to complete the agreement would be a fraud upon him.' In addition, before such enforcement can be had the court will be more strict in examining into the nature and circumstances of such agreements, than any others, and will require very satisfactory proof of the fairness and justness of the transaction. McCabe v. Healy, Id. See, also, Owens v. McNally, supra; Flood v. Templeton, 148 Cal. 374, 83 Pac. 148; Baumann v. Kusian, 164 Cal. 582, 129 Pac. 986, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 756. The strictness with which courts of equity look upon such agreements has its philosophy in the rule that the stability of the possession and title to property must be preserved. Mr. Justice Melvin, in Blanc v. Connor, 167 Cal. 722, 141 Pac. 218, says: 'It is asserted that this is a class of cases sometimes arising in fraud and abounding in perjury.' But while this observation may have no just application to this case at bar, yet the rule that oral contracts affecting title to real estate are enforceable in equity doubtless gives vigor to the art of imagination and the science of auto-suggestion. The Legislature realizing this, in 1905, provided by statute that agreements to devise or bequeath property must be in writing. Section 1624, Civ. Code.

"From the foregoing statement of the facts in the case it will be seen that considerable doubt exists—viewing the testimony most favorably to the plaintiff—whether a case has been made out authorizing the extraordinary remedy sought by plaintiff. The case at bar is more nearly like the case of Baumann v. Kusian, supra, than any other decided by our Supreme Court. In the case cited two girls were taken into the family by their benefactress, and it was claimed by them that their benefactress agreed to make them heirs of her estate if they complied with her wish to come West with her. The court said: 'We are of the opinion that it also sufficiently appears that there was no such showing of adequacy of consideration for the alleged promise * * * as to appeal to a court of equity as requiring specific performance in the face of the rule that the contract must be just and fair.' In the case at bar the plaintiff gave up nothing of value to become an inmate of Silas Bowman's home. Unable to speak the English language, he was there taught it. Carefully nurtured by loving hands, he received also an education at the expense of his benefactor. Small wonder was it that, when in 1890 the father of the plaintiff sought to gather together his children, the plaintiff revolted and would not return. His affections had been won by his foster parent, and this fact best portrays the kindness of Silas Bowman.

"Unlike the case of McCabe v. Healy, supra, the plaintiff did not give his entire time or services to Silas. During the period of plaintiff's minority he had ample time to work for others, and did so. As one of the witnesses for the plaintiff testified, 'He,' Silas Bowman, 'told me that there was not much work on the ranch and he wanted to have Lawrence go out and work that he might understand the value of money.' That the lessons taught by the foster parent found lodgment in a fruitful field is shown by the fact that in 1907 the plaintiff had in live stock almost one-half the number owned by his foster parent, and land in proportion. So does it appear that, in every venture of the plaintiff to better his condition, he had the active co-operation of Silas. No thought of self-aggrandizement possessed Silas Bowman when the welfare of the plaintiff was concerned, and the court can only marvel that no provision was made carrying out the expressed intention of Silas Bowman to provide well for his protégé. That the plaintiff, after his graduation from the grammar school, looked to his own emolument, there seems to be no doubt. The venture in well boring, the acquisition of stock and land, in which Silas Bowman had no interest, so indicates. The trip to Alaska was likewise taken to provide for the financial interest of plaintiff solely. The work and services of plaintiff from the age of 7 years to 21 must have been of inconsiderable value as opposed by the return given him in the way of education, and comfort and nurture. And when we consider the fact that, during all of this time of minority, the plaintiff had the privilege of earning money for himself, we must conclude that the net value to Silas Bowman of the services of the plaintiff was small and was capable of estimation in dollars and cents. The value of the services of the plaintiff to his foster parent after majority was negligible. A careful perusal of the testimony fails to show any considerable service performed by the plaintiff for Silas Bowman after the trip to Alaska, while it does appear that Silas loaned to his foster child money and otherwise cared for him.

"If then the case at bar does not portray such a one (even viewed most strongly for plaintiff) as appeals to the conscience of a chancellor to award specific performance, it becomes unnecessary to declare upon the weight of evidence. But in passing it is not improper to say that evidence of the declaration of the plaintiff to the effect that he 'expected nothing from the estate of Silas,' and that 'he had no claim against it,' are inconsistent with the idea that a binding obligation had been assumed by Silas Bowman to leave all of his estate to the plaintiff. * * *

An examination and consideration of the record on appeal, under the claims made by appellant for a reversal, satisfies us that in the foregoing decision of the case after submission to him the trial judge stated all the material facts in evidence and correctly applied the law to them. It also fully answers the objections as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings challenged and the further claim that the findings do not support the judgment. We are fully satisfied with the reasoning and conclusions of the trial court, and the opinion of the judge thereof embodying them is hereby adopted as the opinion of this court.

[4, 5] It will be observed that in writing the opinion, though reciting the facts, the court devotes but little discussion to the question whether the contract asserted by appellant to have been made with Silas Bowman was in fact made, the view of the court being that, even if such contract had been made, still the case presented by appellant was not, for the reasons given by the court and sanctioned by the authorities, of such a character as would warrant specific performance. After the filing of its opinion and when the court came to make findings, it found, however, that the contract asserted by appellant as having been entered into between himself and the deceased had not been made, and one of the claims of the appellant is that this finding is not supported by the evidence but is contrary thereto. While we think that there was sufficient evidence in the case warranting the court in making the finding it did, still whether that finding was or was not correctly made could not affect the judgment. The other findings made, with or without any finding on the issue of the making or nonmaking of the contract, support the judgment, and the rule is that, when there are sufficient findings on issues made in the case to support a judgment, it is immaterial that there is no finding, or an erroneous finding, on some other issue which, if made, or differently made, would not compel any different conclusion from that reached by the findings which were actually made.

[6] One point on a ruling as to evidence is made. The court refused to reopen the case on the motion of counsel for appellant in order that he might introduce in evidence a deed from one Bent to appellant, made October 4, 1899. A witness for respondent (Elmer Hill) had testified that he heard Silas Bowman, in July or August, 1898, or 1899, say to plaintiff, "You had better move to your own place," and the averred purpose of the intended offer of the deed by plaintiff was to contradict this witness by showing that appellant had not at the dates mentioned by the witness Hill any place of his own to move to, not having acquired the deed from Bent. As the witness Hill was not at all confident as to the exactness of the dates given by him, this evidence would have been of doubtful efficacy as impeaching testimony. The matter of these dates did not affect the substance of the statement made by Bowman, and, even if it was error to have refused it, it was too trivial to warrant a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

1. TAXATION ⊂⊃811—SALE FOR TAXES—DETERMINATION OF INVALIDITY.

In action to remove cloud on title through issuance of certificate of sale at delinquent tax sale, finding that plaintiff was owner of property involved was necessarily determination that tax sale to defendant was void.

2. STATUTES ⊂⊃219—EXECUTIVE CONSTRUCTION—ACTION UNDER REPEALED LAW—DISTURBANCE OF TITLES BY COURT.

Where city for nearly 50 years has acted in all tax proceedings on theory that repealed tax law was in force, court will be particularly loath to disturb such condition, and unsettle titles, and will do so only when a clear necessity for deciding the point shall arise.

3. TAXATION ⊂⊃656—SALE BEFORE DELINQUENCY—VOID CHARACTER.

A sale for taxes, made December 4th, before the taxes were delinquent, on the first Monday in January following, was void.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃982—CHANGE IN TAX LAWS—ORDINANCES—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In action to remove cloud on title through issuance of certificate of sale at delinquent tax sale, burden was not on plaintiff to prove ordinances of city changing dates of assessments, delinquencies, sales, etc.; it being defendant purchaser's duty to show general law which governed had been modified, the sale being otherwise void.

5. EVIDENCE ⊂⊃32—JUDICIAL NOTICE—MUNICIPAL ORDINANCES.

Supreme Court cannot take judicial notice of tax ordinances of city in action to remove cloud on title, through issuance of certificate of sale in delinquent tax sale, originating in superior court.

6. TAXATION ⊂⊃800(1)—VOID SALE FOR TAXES—TENDER TO PURCHASER.

Sale for delinquent taxes and certificate of sale issued to purchaser being void, owner of property, before bringing action to remove cloud on title, was not required to make any tender to purchaser at all; latter being entitled only to reimbursement for moneys spent in purchasing and for subsequent taxes and interest.

7. INTEREST ⊂⊃50—SUSPENSION—TENDER.

In action to remove cloud on title through certificate of sale for delinquent taxes, purchaser having refused to take more than he was entitled to when plaintiff tendered it, and forced him to sue, trial court's denial to purchaser of interest on purchase price of property and subsequent taxes paid will not be disturbed.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by the Marysville Woolen Mills against Chester A. Smith, Marshal and ex officio Tax Collector of the City of Marysville, and Waldo S. Johnson. From the decree, and an order denying his motion for new trial, defendant Johnson appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Evan J. Hughes, of Sacramento, W. E. Davies, of Marysville, and Downey, Pullen & Downey, of Sacramento, for appellant. W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. Two other cases on appeal—California Midland Ry. Co. v. Chester A. Smith, Marshal, etc., et al., Sac. No. 2576, and John Martin v. Chester A. Smith, Marshal, etc., et al. Sac. No. 2575, 175 Pac. 16, involve the same controlling points as are embraced in this appeal and by stipulation of all parties are submitted to abide the decision on the appeal under present consideration.

This action was brought to remove a cloud upon the title of the plaintiff to certain property in Yuba county through the issuance of a certificate of sale to defendant Johnson at a delinquent tax sale and to enjoin the issuance of a tax deed on the certificate. The court entered a decree declaring the tax sale and tax certificate issued thereon invalid, enjoined the issuance of a tax deed, but required that plaintiff pay to defendant Johnson the sum of $641.91, the amount due for taxes and paid by him for the property at the tax sale. The defendant Johnson appeals from this decree and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The only attack made on this appeal is on the findings. The court found that plaintiff was the owner of the real and personal property involved in the tax sale which, it may be here remarked, was necessarily a determination that the tax sale to appellant was void. It further found, among other proceedings eventuating in the sale of the property for delinquent taxes, that the tax collector of the city of Marysville published in a specified newspaper a notice stating that taxes fixed and levied against the property of the plaintiff would be delinquent on October 3, 1914; that thereafter, said taxes not having been paid, said tax collector published, for the proper time required by law, a delinquent tax notice which provided for the sale of the property on the 3d of December, 1914; that at no time, however, did said tax collector make, or file with the city clerk of the city of Marysville, or with any other person, or in any office, or at all, any copy of the publication aforesaid, or any affidavit attached thereto, or any proof of any such publication; that said sale was advertised and noticed for December 3, 1914, but on said last date was postponed till the 4th day of December, 1914; that said tax collector neither gave, or caused to be given, any notice of the said postponement of sale; that on December 4th a sale was had and the property herein was sold to defendant Johnson and a certificate of sale issued to him; that on December 2, 1915, the plaintiff, through its attorneys, offered in writing to pay defendant Johnson the amount of money paid by him upon the sale of the property, together with interest thereon, and 50 per cent. additional for the purpose of redeeming from said tax sale and offered to pay any other sum that defendant Johnson might claim was necessary for a redemption, but that said Johnson refused to accept any sum except upon payment by plaintiff to him of the sum of $11,000, being the value of certain personal property assessed against the plaintiff in addition to the assessment of the real estate and which purported to have been sold with the real property to said defendant Johnson at the tax sale above mentioned. Upon the refusal of the defendant Johnson to accept the redemption money tendered, plaintiff brought this action with the result above stated.

At the threshold of this appeal, we are asked to determine whether the law governing taxation and tax proceedings as it existed in 1876 applies and governs with reference to this tax sale made in 1914, or whether the general law on the subject of taxation and a sale for delinquent taxes existing when the sale was made in 1914 is to prevail. This question is sought to be presented under the charter of the city of Marysville. It appears that the city of Marysville operates under a charter granted by a special act of the Legislature in 1876 and which expressly provided that the city should be organized with the powers and under the provisions of title 3 of the Political Code of this state. Section 4390, part of title 3 provides, among other things that:

"The mode of making out the list and of certifying the value of property, and of collecting all taxes is the same as prescribed in this Code for assessing and collecting the state taxes."

In harmony with this section, the city of Marysville has been levying and collecting its taxes and making delinquent sales and certificates and deeds thereon to purchasers under the tax law as it stood in 1876 unaffected by any change, alteration, repeal, or amendment to which the law as it then stood has been subjected during the course of these many years. The tax law as it then stood has been treated as incorporated in and as an inflexible part of the charter, and under the provisions of the tax law as it existed in 1876 the taxes, sale, and tax certificate in question here were levied and made, and appellant Johnson defends his title acquired at the delinquent sale on the ground that it was made in full compliance with the tax law governing under the charter. On the part of respondent it is asserted that it was not the intention of the charter provision that the city should be bound inflexibly by the taxation law of 1876, but that it was subject to the changes of the Code and the repeal, modification, or amendment of the tax law, and that the collection and levy of taxes and the proceedings under which the sale here in question was made and the sale itself should have been had under the provisions of the general taxation law as it existed in 1914.

[2] As it is conceded that the city of Marysville for nearly half a century has been proceeding on the theory that the tax law of 1876 bound her in all tax proceedings, and under it has been making her assessments, levying her taxes, selling at delinquent tax sales, and making deeds to purchasers thereat, a court would be particularly loath to disturb this condition of affairs and unsettle titles based on tax sales heretofore made and would only do so when a clear necessity for deciding the point should arise, and we do not here find the existence of any such necessity. It is conceded if the tax law as it existed in 1914 applied to the city of Marysville, notwithstanding the charter provision, that the tax sale here involved was void because there is no pretense that any of the proceedings for taxation or collection of taxes or sales for delinquencies thereon were made under it. As to the tax law and procedure existing in 1876, which for present purposes we will assume governed as to the sale here made, we are satisfied that the tax sale and the certificate thereunder here in question were void for failure to comply with the law.

[3-5] It is provided by section 3746 of the Political Code as it stood in 1876 and as incorporated into the charter of Marysville that "taxes shall become delinquent on the first Monday in January next thereafter," which, of course, as applied to the tax sale in question here was the first Monday in January, 1915. The sale, however, as we have pointed out, was made to the defendant Johnson on December 4, 1914, before the taxes were delinquent, and necessarily the sale was void. It is insisted by the appellant that, while no change was made in the method or mode provided by the state law of taxation, by various ordinances of the city of Marysville changes with reference to the dates of assessments, delinquencies, sales, and other matters provided for in the tax law as laid down in the Political Code in 1876, were made, among others, one with reference to the date, when the taxes should become delinquent, and that under said changes the sale in question made here on December 4, 1914, was authorized. Assuming that the city of Marysville had the authority to change the state law with reference to taxation to the extent contended for by appellant, the trouble in this case is that there is no evidence that this was in fact done. Appellant likewise insists that the burden was upon the respondent to make proof of such ordinances and relies upon the presumption that official duty has been regularly performed and that the law has been obeyed (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1981, 1963, and section 1533, subd. 6) in aid of the validity of the tax certificate. The burden was not upon the plaintiff to make proof of such ordinances. It was the duty of the appellant to show that the general law which governed upon the subject had been modified or changed. Nor in this case can the presumption which the appellant attempts to invoke of duty regularly performed and the law obeyed have any force. The general law required that the tax sale be made on the first Monday in January, 1915. The certificate of the tax sale produced in evidence, together with the testimony of the officer who made the sale, which was the only evidence on the subject, show that the sale was actually made on the 4th of December, 1914, and at a time when under the law the taxes were not yet delinquent. Notwithstanding the absence of anything in the record with reference to the ordinances claimed to have been passed by appellant, we are asked to take judicial notice of the fact that such ordinances were passed. But we cannot take judicial notice of the ordinances of the city of Marysville in a proceeding originating in the superior court. If, in fact, there were ordinances of the city of Marysville existing which modified the provisions of the general law with reference to tax sales which were expressly incorporated into the charter of the city of Marysville, the burden of proof to show their existence was upon the appellant. Metteer v. Smith, 156 Cal. 574, 575, 105

Without consideration of the other attacks made upon the validity of the tax sale, we are satisfied that this plain disregard of section 3746 of the Political Code as to the date upon which tax delinquency occurs vitiated all the subsequent proceedings, and that the tax sale and certificate made and issued before there was any tax delinquency in law rendered them void.

[6, 7] Appellant contends that the tender made by respondent was insufficient; but, as the tax sale and certificate were void, plaintiff was not required to make any tender to defendant at all. All defendant was entitled to was to be reimbursed for the moneys he had paid out in purchasing the property at the sale when an action was brought by the owner to set aside the tax certificate and deed. He complains also because the court did not allow him, in addition to the amount paid as the actual price, $641.91, interest on that amount, and also 50 per cent. penalty added thereto. But the penalty could only be collected upon redemption from a valid sale. Here defendant was offered that amount in an effort to redeem, although the tax sale was void; but defendant refused to accept it. When plaintiff was compelled to sue to remove the cloud upon his title, the defendant, as a matter of equity, was only entitled to be reimbursed for what he had actually paid out as the purchase price and whatever subsequent taxes he had paid and interest thereon. Holland v. Hotchkiss, 162 Cal. 366, 123 Pac. 258, L. R. A. 1915C, 492. What he had actually paid out was $641.91. Ordinarily the purchaser would be entitled to interest on that amount, and the judgment here might be modified by ordering it allowed by the court below; but we do not think that under the circumstances disclosed here we will disturb the judgment even by a modification. The trial court doubtless took the view that as the defendant refused to take more than he was entitled to when plaintiff offered to redeem from the illegal sale and put him to the trouble, annoyance, and expense of bringing an action, no rule of equity would be violated by at least refusing him interest.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. TINNEY et al. (Cr. 605.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⟸143 — KEEPING PLACE—CLUB.

Where members of Loyal Order of Moose in no-license territory, desiring liquor, notified steward, who ordered from wholesaler, liquor being shipped to and charged to club, and upon arrival distributed among members and kept either in locker used in common or in refrigerator indiscriminately until served by steward, the club, and its chairman of house committee and steward as its agents, were acting in violation of Wylie Local Option Act, § 14, prohibiting keeping, etc., of place within no-license territory where alcoholic liquor is sold, served, or distributed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Z. B. West, Judge.

George A. Tinney and R. F. McCombs were convicted of violating Wylie Local Option Act, § 14, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Ault & Chase (Dan V. Noland, of El Centro, of counsel), for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

SHAW, J. Defendants, alleged to be acting as agents of the Loyal Order of Moose in the city of Calexico, were convicted of the violation of section 14 of what is known as the "Wylie Local Option Act," which provides that:

"It shall be unlawful for any person, corporation, firm, company, association or club, within any no-license territory, to keep, conduct or establish, as principal or agent, any place where alcoholic liquors are sold, served or distributed, or are kept for the purpose of sale or distribution, except as provided in section 16 hereof. * * *" St. 1911, p. 599.

It appears without contradiction from the evidence that in the city of Calexico, which was "no-license territory," there existed a lodge of a fraternal order known as Loyal Order of Moose, No. 1623, which, for the use of its members, maintained in the rooms of a building separate from the meeting place of the lodge certain clubrooms, which were in the immediate charge of what was known as a house committee of which Tinney, the dictator of the lodge, was chairman, and wherein McCombs was employed as custodian or steward. In the rear of one of the rooms there was kept a long counter or bar, back of which was another bar upon which, on the night defendants were arrested, were numerous open bottles of liquor of various kinds, and hanging from the bar a government liquor license issued to the lodge. In the rooms at the time were found some seven barrels of whisky, wine, and beer. The evidence further conclusively shows that it was the practice for members desiring liquor to notify McCombs, who would order the same from some wholesale liquor house, which shipped it to the lodge, making a charge therefor, not against the member for whom it is claimed it was purchased, but against the lodge, which paid the seller therefor. Having thus purchased the liquor, it was, upon delivery to the lodge at these clubrooms, distributed and served to the members, according to the kind and quantity ordered, and from whom payment therefor was collected by the lodge in accordance with statements rendered therefor. As desired, the beverage so acquired by a member, and which he kept either in a locker used in common with other members, or placed indiscriminately with that of others in a refrigerator for cooling, was served to him by McCombs who, as custodian of the rooms, was paid a salary for his services by the lodge.

The contention of defendants is that such liquors as those served did not belong to the lodge, nor to defendants, or either of them, but that they were purchased and owned by the members of the lodge, who kept lockers and receptacles wherein the same were placed for the individual use of members who had purchased the same, and since, as held in People v. Winkler, 174 Cal. 133, 162 Pac. 109, the statute does not prohibit one in dry territory from purchasing intoxicating liquors outside of such territory and bringing them within such no-license territory for his own consumption, it was likewise permissible for the individual members of the lodge to employ the lodge or defendants as their agents to make such purchase and delivery, serve and distribute the liquors to them at the clubrooms. So claiming, they contend that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury to the effect that they should acquit defendants if they found that in the purchase and delivery of such liquors they acted as agents of the owners thereof who used it on the premises.

The prosecution in the Winkler Case was under section 13 of the act, which makes it unlawful to sell, furnish, distribute, or give away, within the boundaries of no-license territory, any alcoholic liquors, except in certain cases. The prosecution here had was under section 14 of the act, which makes it an offense to keep, conduct, or establish a place where alcoholic liquors are sold, served, or distributed, except as provided for in section 16 of the act, under which one is permitted to serve liquors at his own home to members of his family or to guests as an act of hospitality. No claim, however, is made that these clubrooms constituted the home of the members of the lodge. Moreover, in the Winkler Case, wherein it was held that an agent was not guilty of a violation of the law in acting as the agent of another in the purchase of alcoholic liquors in license territory and bringing them within no-license territory, the transaction was had with the principal himself, who was the purchaser of the beverage in no-license territory. Not so, however, in this case, since it appears that the transaction, wherein the liquors were acquired outside of the city of Calexico was one had between the seller and the lodge, which made the purchase and thereafter sold the liquors to members of the lodge, in kind and quantity as ordered.

The fact that such sales were by the bottle or barrel makes it none the less an offense than if it had been sold by the drink. There was no privity of contract between the member acquiring liquor and the wholesale house in license territory which sold it to the lodge. Such house did not look to the member for payment, and there was no privity of contract between the two. The members looked to the lodge in supplying them with liquor, and the lodge, having received orders therefor, purchased such liquor from outside territory, and sold, distributed, and served it to the members, thus bringing itself and defendants as its agents within the terms of section 14 of the statute, which prohibits such business. Clearly, this clubroom was a place established and conducted by defendants as agents of the lodge for the sale, distribution, and service of alcoholic liquors. The entire scheme was a subterfuge, calculated to evade the plain provisions of the law, and for this court to give countenance to the practice concededly carried on would nullify the law, both in letter and spirit.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; W. H. Langdon, Judge.

Action by G. Nelligan and M. F. Nelligan, a copartnership, doing business under the firm name of Nelligan & Son, against K. Knutsen. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. N. Graybiel, of Turlock, and E. H. Zion, of Modesto, for appellant. R. R. Fowler, of Turlock, and James L. Crittenden, of San Francisco, for respondents.

HART, J. The complaint alleges: That plaintiffs are partners under the firm name and style of Nelligan & Son, doing business in the city of Santa Rosa, and that defendant is a resident of the county of Stanislaus; that on or about the 11th day of September, 1916, a written contract was entered into between the parties hereto by which plaintiffs agreed to purchase from defendant and defendant agreed to sell to plaintiffs 4,500 sacks of No. 1 white Egytian corn for the sum of $32.50 per ton; that, in accordance with said contract, defendant has delivered to plaintiffs 2,250 sacks, and that 2,250 sacks remain undelivered; that on or about February 19, 1917, plaintiffs demanded the delivery of said corn, but that defendant has failed and refused to deliver the same; that on said date, "and within such period thereafter as would have sufficed for the plaintiffs to purchase the same quantity of Egyptian corn of like quality and kind as specified in said contract, the plaintiffs would have been compelled to pay in the market where delivery of said Egyptian corn was to have been made according to the terms of said contract, to wit, on board cars at Turlock, Stanislaus county, the sum of $942 more than the price for which the defendant promised and agreed to sell said Egyptian corn to plaintiffs," and that on said day, or within a short time thereafter, plaintiffs could have obtained for said corn the sum of $1,305 "more than the price for which the defendant promised and agreed to sell said corn to plaintiffs." Judgment in the sum of $1,305 was prayed for.

The answer admits the execution of the contract and the delivery of 2,250 sacks of corn, but denies that defendant failed or refused to deliver to plaintiffs the balance of the corn; admits demand for the delivery of the balance; denies the allegation of the complaint that plaintiffs, had they purchased corn at Turlock, would have been compelled to pay $942 more than the price agreed upon in the contract, and denies that plaintiffs have sustained any loss. The answer then alleges that at the time of the execution of the contract referred to "plaintiffs understood that the corn which said defendant had agreed thereby to deliver to said plaintiffs was corn which was contracted to be delivered by several different persons who were growers of the same; that without any fault or neglect on the part of this defendant" he has received from said growers only the 2,250 sacks which he delivered; that there was an agreement by plaintiffs that 600 sacks might be released from delivery by defendant; that before the corn contracted for was harvested there were heavy rainstorms, and "that nearly all Egyptian corn that could be obtained was colored and mouldy by reason of having been rained upon in the fall; that by reason of the rains aforesaid defendant could not obtain No. 1 white Egyptian corn as specified in said agreement"; that in December, 1916, defendant shipped a carload of corn to the plaintiffs, who rejected 100 sacks thereof as not being No. 1 white Egyptian corn; that plaintiffs refused to receive corn from defendant between the 12th of December, 1916, and the first of the year 1917, by reason of which "defendant was deprived and prevented while the price was low, namely, the price of $33 per ton, from buying corn outside of that which he had contracted from the growers."

The cause was tried before a jury, and, in accordance with their verdict, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs for $850. The appeal is by defendant from said judgment.

Appellant's position is thus stated in his brief:

"The appellant and defendant relies as a first defense on the fact that the appellant was prevented from fulfilling his contract by destruction of the thing to be delivered, and in connection with that the court erred in refusing to allow the defendant to introduce samples of the corn that was in dispute; and for a second defense the appellant contends that if he were not released by impossibility of performance that all the plaintiffs and respondents could recover would be the sum of fifty cents a ton, the difference between the contract price of $32.50 and that of $33, the price that corn of like quality to that which they had accepted could be bought for in the open market at Turlock."

Under the last contention it is claimed that $50.75 is the greatest amount of damages plaintiffs could recover, being 50 cents per ton for 141½ tons, or 2,250 sacks.

[1] 1. Appellant's contention that he was prevented from fulfilling his contract by reason of the destruction of the corn contracted to be delivered is not borne out by the facts as disclosed by the evidence. The contract was entered into in September, 1916, and thereafter there were heavy rains which caused some damage to the crop. Nevertheless, defendant was able to deliver to plaintiffs 2,250 sacks, which were accepted by plaintiffs as complying with the requirements of the contract as to quality and grade. The witness Brooks, manager of the Turlock Merchants' & Growers' Association, testified that "there was plenty of corn offered us to purchase at that time (between January 8 and February 26, 1917, upon which latter date the complaint in this action was filed), and we purchased considerable." He estimated that between the dates mentioned the association bought between 200 and 400 tons of Egyptian corn No. 1 in and about Turlock.

[2] The above state of facts brings the case within the rule, stated in Pearson v. McKinney, 160 Cal. 649, 654, 117 Pac. 919, 921:

"Where one makes an unqualified agreement to sell goods to be delivered at a fixed time, or on demand of the buyer within a stated period, and it is inherently possible to obtain the goods, the fact that the seller may have expected to manufacture the goods himself, or to procure them from a certain source, and has not been able to complete or obtain them when delivery is due, does not excuse performance. In that event, his contract being unconditional and unqualified, he must go into the market if necessary and obtain the goods, and he will be liable in damages for nondelivery."

Appellant cites the case of Mineral Land Park Co. v. Howard, 172 Cal. 289, 156 Pac. 458, L. R. A. 1916F, 1, wherein it was held, as stated in the syllabus:

"Where performance depends upon the existence of a given thing, and such existence was assumed as the basis of the agreement, performance is excused to the extent that the thing ceases to exist or turns out to be nonexistent."

But in the case at bar the jury was justified in finding that the corn, the subject of the agreement, had not ceased to exist, and that defendant could have performed his contract. See cases cited in 2 Bechem on Sales, § 1103.

It is contended by appellant that there was no "No. 1 white Egyptian corn" in or about Turlock during the time covered by the contract in question, and he refers to the testimony of H. G. Thompson, a grain broker, who stated that there was no No. 1 corn in the year 1916; that corn was rated as No. 1 1916 corn; "we had a grade this year that we called 'season's average' corn, and that is the term that we usually used, and you could not specify absolutely No. 1 or No. 2 corn; we simply had to describe it as best we could as being nearly season's average."

From a letter dated December 12, 1916, written by plaintiffs to defendant, it appeared that plaintiffs had rejected 100 sacks of corn from a carload shipment because it was "mouldy corn." It is further stated therein: "We would prefer to have less corn than the contract calls for than to have mouldy corn mixed with it." It appeared from the testimony of Morris F. Nelligan, one of the plaintiffs, that the mouldy corn complained of was not part of that covered by the contract in question, but was sold by defendant to plaintiffs for $40 per ton.

[3] Plaintiffs accepted all the corn offered them by defendant except the 100 sacks above referred to and those were rejected because of being mouldy. If, as stated by the witness Thompson, there was no No. 1 corn, but that corn "was rated as No. 1 1916 corn," and if corn so rated had been accepted by plaintiffs, it must be assumed that they would continue to accept a similar grade of corn from defendant until his contract was fulfilled. And if plaintiffs accepted corn that was inferior in quality to that called for by the terms of the contract, such acceptance constituted a waiver of the defect in the quality. Jackson v. Porter Land & Water Co., 151 Cal. 32, 90 Pac. 122.

2. On cross-examination this question was asked of the witness Nelligan: "I want to ask you, Mr. Nelligan, what kind of corn you call that? (Showing Egyptian corn to witness.)" To this question an objection was interposed on the ground that it was immaterial, incompetent, and irrelevant, and any testimony that he might give in connection with the grade of the corn would be absolutely irrelevant and incompetent as to the merits of this action, providing he was willing to accept it. The court asked defendant's attorney what the purpose of the testimony was, to which he replied:

"The purpose, in the first place, is the contract calls for number one white Egyptian corn. * * * If this was number one white Egyptian corn which the contract calls for, then if that was what Mr. Knutsen, the defendant, agreed to sell him, then he can't compel Mr. Knutsen to sell to him some other grade. * * * In the next place, I want to know if he knows—he testified yesterday to certain grades of corn. If for no other purpose, I got a right to test him on that."

The objection was sustained and this ruling is complained of as erroneous.

As heretofore stated, plaintiffs had accepted the corn shipped to them by defendant, and it was immaterial whether or not it was No. 1 corn. The last shipment was made on December 21, 1916. On December 26th plaintiffs wrote defendant: "You can ship the other cars contract corn as soon as you want." On January 8, 1917, plaintiffs wrote a letter demanding the shipment of the balance of the corn, to which, on the 10th of January, defendant replied: "I have no more corn to deliver to you." An oral demand for the delivery of the corn was made by plaintiffs on February 17, 1917. The 100 sacks which were rejected because mouldy formed no part of the "contract corn," so plaintiffs had accepted all of the 2,250 sacks which had been delivered, and they requested defendant to ship the balance.

We hold to have been proper, under the indicated circumstances, the ruling sustaining the objection to the question as to what kind of corn the samples shown the witness were.

3. The contention that the only amount which plaintiffs could recover as damages for the breach of the contract was 50 cents per ton is equally devoid of merit.

The witness Nelligan testified that on January 8, 1917, the date when plaintiffs made a written demand upon defendant to fulfill his contract, the market price of corn of like quality as that contracted for and what plaintiffs would have had to pay for it was $41 per ton, and that they could have sold it for $47 or more within a short time after said date, or for a profit of $17 per ton. He said that plaintiffs, relying upon the promise of defendant to furnish corn, had entered into contracts to sell to third parties; that they fulfilled said contracts, purchasing the corn from the Turlock Merchants' & Growers' Association in different lots, in March, 1917; that for one lot they paid $45 per ton, for another $47, and for another $58.

H. Brooks, manager of the Turlock Merchants' & Growers' Association, called as a witness for plaintiffs, testified that from about Christmas, 1916, to February 1, 1917, there was a lull in the market: "The buyers ceased to buy; the bottom dropped out of the market." Witness paid to growers for corn which he bought during that time $33 per ton, and he stated that the market price to any one who desired to purchase from his concern was $40 per ton.

The witness H. G. Thompson, called on behalf of defendant, testified that during January, 1917, and until the 1st of February, the price of corn "was in the neighborhood of $33 and $34 per ton to the rancher, f. o. b. cars at Turlock." On cross-examination he stated that he bought corn about the 20th of December, 1916, at $33 per ton; that there was a general slump in the market during the winter; that the market began to rise about the 1st of February; "that from the 1st of February on it began to strengthen up, and in the middle of February we bought —about the 15th of February—we bought two thousand sacks at $37.50 a ton; * * * it was good No. 1 corn; that is, this year's." The witness stated that at the time the complaint was filed, February 26, 1917, the price was about $39.50.

[4] The verdict of the jury was for the sum of $850. They evidently agreed upon a price of $38.50 per ton, which for 141½ tons would amount to $849. Under the evidence above set out, we must hold that the verdict is sufficiently supported.

Appellant contends that the breach of the contract occurred between the 6th and the 10th days of January, 1917, on each of which dates he wrote letters to plaintiffs stating that he had no more corn to ship, and, as we have seen, plaintiffs wrote, on January 8th, demanding delivery of the balance of the corn. Respondent relies upon the oral demand, made upon February 17, 1917, as the date of the breach. This was a matter for the jury to determine, and, obviously, they selected the latter date as the correct one.

On the theory that the breach of the contract occurred on January 8, 1918, appellant claims that plaintiffs did not "exercise reasonable care and diligence to avoid loss or to minimize the resulting damage," it being contended that they could have purchased corn at and in the neighborhood of Turlock for $33 per ton. But as the jury found that the breach did not occur until February 17th, the rule invoked does not apply, there being but nine days between that date and the date of the filing of the complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HARTWELL. (Cr. 608.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸407(2)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS—SILENCE OF ACCUSED.

Statements of third person, made to or in presence of accused and tending to connect him with commission of crime charged, are admissible not to prove facts stated, but to show what accused should have replied thereto; his failure to reply where statement called for repudiation constituting evidence of his admission of truth of statement.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸407(2)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS IN SILENCE — FAILURE TO DENY STATEMENTS.

In prosecution for lewd acts upon young child, under Pen. Code, § 288, the fact that accused remained mute when his wife stated that he had been "warned about this thing before," and that she did "not believe in this thing of ruining little girls," did not tend to prove his guilt; the statements in no way connecting him with offense charged.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸409—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS.

In prosecution, under Pen. Code, § 288, for committing lewd acts upon young child, admission by accused that he had been warned is not, in the absence of evidence showing reason or occasion therefor, evidence tending to prove that he was of a lascivious nature or that he had theretofore indulged in such acts.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1169(1)—APPEAL—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

In prosecution, under Pen. Code, § 288, for committing lewd acts upon young child, erroneous admission of testimony that accused's wife told accused that he had "been warned about this thing" and that she did "not believe in this thing of ruining little girls," where prosecutor laid great stress on the statements in his argument, held prejudicial error.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

F. S. Hartwell was convicted of committing lewd or lascivious acts upon body of child under 14 years of age, and appeals from the judgment and an order denying new trial. Reversed.

L. E. Dadmun, of San Diego, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

SHAW, J. Upon an information charging him therewith, defendant was convicted of the offense defined in section 288, Penal Code. On his appeal, prosecuted from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial, numerous alleged errors are argued in support of a reversal, only one of which, however, we deem it necessary to consider.

In the course of the trial, the court, over defendant's objection, admitted in evidence the testimony of Officer Cooley as to what transpired on the occasion of a visit made by defendant to his home, as follows:

"We went into the house, * * * and his wife and daughter were there, and his daughter says: 'Well, you don't need to tell us what you are here for,' or words to that effect. 'We already know about it.' Then Mr. Hartwell said he had to have bail or bonds, and asked his wife if she would go on his bonds. She said she didn't know whether she would or not. And they talked back and forth there about the bonds, and she said: 'You have been warned about this thing before now; you have been warned time and time again, and I do not believe in this thing of ruining little girls. I don't know whether I want to go on your bonds or not, as all I have got is this place.' She said: 'I never had a dollar of my own and you never gave me a dollar.' In reply to which defendant said: 'This is not any place to discuss that.' He says to his daughter, 'You get your mother to sign the bonds and get me out of jail.'"

[1-3] In our opinion, the ruling constituted error. Statements of third parties made to or in the presence of one charged with the commission of a crime, and tending to connect him therewith, are admitted, not as of themselves constituting evidence of the facts stated, but to show what it is that calls for a reply; and where the statement is such that under the circumstances the accused, if innocent, should repudiate it, his remaining mute will constitute evidence of his admission of the truth of the statement made. People v. McCrea, 32 Cal. 98; People v. Philbon, 138 Cal. 530, 71 Pac. 650. Other than saying "This is not any place to discuss that," defendant made no reply to what his wife said. The word "that" might well be deemed to refer to her statement that she "never had a dollar of my own and you never gave me a dollar." Assuming, then, that she said, "You have been warned about this thing before now," and that she did not believe in ruining little girls, neither statement constituted an accusation of doing anything which defendant was called upon to deny, and assuming, further, that by remaining mute he be deemed to have assented to all that his wife said, it at most would constitute an admission on his part of the truth of his wife's expressed belief and the fact that he had been warned against committing offenses of a similar character to that with which he was charged. Since, however, the statements made by the wife, if true, did not purport to in any manner connect him with the offense, his assent thereto could not be deemed evidence tending to prove his guilt. Nor, conceding the competency of evidence of prior lascivious acts, as held in People v. Love, 29 Cal. App. 521, 157 Pac. 9, can the admission that he had been warned, in the absence of evidence showing the occasion or reason therefor, be deemed evidence tending in any degree to prove that he was of a lascivious nature or that he had theretofore indulged in such acts. One entirely innocent of ever committing a crime might be warned against so doing; indeed, one of the chief purposes of education is the teaching of obedience to laws having their basis in the principles of morality which govern civilized people.

[4] By reason of the nature of the case, the evidence so erroneously received was not only highly prejudicial, but the effect thereof on the minds of the jurors was no doubt greatly accentuated by the argument of the district attorney, based, not upon the defendant's acts and conduct, but upon this hearsay testimony of his wife. In his discussion of the case he laid great stress upon the fact that, as shown by the statements of the wife and daughter, they knew that defendant was given to the commission of acts like that with which he was charged. True, an objection to this line of argument was sustained, after which the district attorney again directed the attention of the jury to the fact that the wife said, "I do not believe in ruining little girls; you have been warned of this time and time again," and closed by saying, "I am going to leave it to the jury to say what she meant."

Our conclusion renders it unnecessary to consider other alleged errors.

The judgment and order are reversed.

PLACENTIA NAT. BANK v. LANDSBERG.

(Civ. 2582.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 30, 1918.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸488 — PLEADING—EXHIBITS—VARIANCE.
Allegation that defendant made, executed, and delivered a described note to the payee is not negatived by the mere fact that the signature in form was "M. L. [defendant], by N. L."

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸467(2)—ACTION—DELIVERY.
In action on promissory notes, allegations that payee indorsed to plaintiff, and that plaintiff at all times since had been and was then the owner and holder, were sufficient statements, as against demurrer that complaint did not state cause of action, that each note was delivered by payee to plaintiff.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸488—ACTION—ALLEGATION OF INDORSEMENT.
In action on notes, fact that in each count copy of note as set forth carried series of names indorsed thereon, of which payee's was not last name, was not alone sufficient to overcome allegation that payee indorsed to plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by the Placentia National Bank against Marcus Landsberg. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Stewart, Weil & Turner, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Spencer Thorpe, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. By his complaint, which is in four counts, the plaintiff brought this action to recover upon four promissory notes, each of which was made payable to J. M. Thomas or order, and signed "Marcus Landsberg, by Nathan Landsberg." The defendant appeals from the judgment.

It is claimed that for three reasons the complaint does not state a cause of action: (1) Because the copy of the note set out in each count shows that it was not executed by the defendant, as alleged in the complaint, but by Nathan Landsberg, and there is no allegation in the complaint that Nathan Landsberg had any authority to execute the note for or in the name of Marcus Landsberg. (2) Because there is no allegation in either of the four counts that the notes or either of them were ever delivered to the plaintiff. (3) Because the indorsements on each note set out in the complaint show that the same was not indorsed by J. M. Thomas, the payee, but, on the contrary, show in each instance the name of some person other than plaintiff following the name and indorsement of J. M. Thomas, and therefore that the indorsement made by J. M. Thomas must have been made to such other person, and not to plaintiff.

[1] The complaint in each count alleged that the defendant made, executed, and delivered to J. M. Thomas the described note. This is not negatived by the mere fact that the form of signature to the note was as above stated. Goetz v. Goldbaum, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 749, 37 Pac. 646.

[2] The complaint in each count alleged that at a stated time the said J. M. Thomas "indorsed said note to plaintiff, and plaintiff at all times since has been and is now the owner and holder of said promissory note." We think that this was a sufficient statement that the note was delivered by Thomas to plaintiff. It is true that in a certain sense there may be an indorsement of a note prior to delivery thereof; but to construe the stated allegation as merely alleging an indorsement without delivery would be to ignore the meaning of the language used in the allegation as quoted above. There was no demurrer on grounds of uncertainty or ambiguity in the complaint. The sole point urged is that the complaint does not state a cause of action.

[3] It is true that in each count the copy of the note as set forth carries a series of names indorsed thereon, of which J. M. Thomas is not the last name. This is not alone sufficient to overcome the allegation that Thomas indorsed the note to plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

FIRTH (IMMEL, Intervener) v. BOHRMANN et al. (Civ. 2629.)

1. HIGHWAYS ⟸77(5)—VACATION—PROCEEDINGS—PETITION AND PARTIES.

On proceedings to vacate a road, the qualifications of the signers of the petition required by Pol. Code, § 2681, and the genuineness of the signatures, are to be determined by the board of supervisors, and in such determination the board acts judicially.

2. HIGHWAYS ⟸77(11)—VACATION—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where hearing of board of supervisors under Pol. Code, § 2688, on proceedings to vacate road, was regularly had upon a petition sufficient both in form and substance, the evidence will be presumed on collateral attack, to be ample to establish the truth of the board's adjudication as to qualifications of signers of petition and genuineness of signatures.

3. HIGHWAYS ⟸77(11) — VACATION — PROCEEDINGS—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

The adjudication of board of supervisors vacating a highway at hearing, under Pol. Code, § 2688, regularly had upon petition sufficient both in form and substance, can be vacated only in the manner and upon the grounds that would justify vacation of a court of record.

4. HIGHWAYS ⟸77(11) — VACATION — PROCEEDINGS—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Board of supervisor's adjudication vacating a highway at a hearing, under Pol. Code, § 2688, regularly had upon petition sufficient in form and substance, cannot be vacated because of error in adjudication of question of fact not procured by fraud extrinsic or collateral to such question.

Action by Emil Firth against Howard W. Bohrmann and others, in which Thomas Immel intervened. Judgment for defendants, and from order denying new trial plaintiff and intervener appeal. Reversed.

Sheldon Borden, George H. Moore, and Jas. B. Redd, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. A. J. Hill, County Counsel, and Chas. E. Haas, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. In this action plaintiff sought a judgment enjoining defendants from working, improving, and using a certain strip of land as and for a public road. Judgment went for defendants. Thereafter plaintiff's motion for a new trial was by the court denied, from which order he prosecutes this appeal.

It appears that in May, 1909, plaintiff, Firth, was the owner of a tract of land comprising over 400 acres which, under the designation of "Orange Cove," he subdivided into lots ranging from 5 to 18 acres each. Over this tract at said time there extended a meandering public road known as the Vinedale road. On May 19, 1909, there was presented to the board of supervisors a petition in due form and substance, signed by ten persons who therein represented themselves as being freeholders, and praying that said road be abandoned and vacated. After notice thereof published as provided in section 2688, Political Code, a hearing of the petition was had, followed by an order wherein, after reciting that evidence both oral and documentary was received touching all matters set forth in said petition, the board expressly found said petition to be true, and that "all said petitioners are freeholders in said Vinedale road district and taxable therein for road purposes; that they will be accommodated by the proposed vacation, and that at least two of said petitioners are residents in said road district"; and thereupon said board ordered that the petition be granted and that the highway, which was in said petition and said order described, be vacated and abandoned and the land contained therein restored to acreage. Thereafter, on August 5, 1912, the board of supervisors, by a purported order made and entered, rescinded the order made July 7, 1909, hereinbefore referred to, whereby said road was vacated and abandoned.

[1-4] In its answer defendant alleges that four of the ten persons whose signatures were attached to the petition for the vacation and abandonment of said highway were not freeholders; hence it is claimed the petition was insufficient to vest jurisdiction in the board of supervisors to make the order vacating said roadway, or, to use the language of counsel for defendant:

"The county of Los Angeles maintains that inasmuch as the petition was not signed by ten freeholders, as required by section 2681 of the Political Code, the board of supervisors did not obtain jurisdiction and that this order declaring the road vacated was without jurisdiction and void."

In support of this allegation contained in the complaint and in accordance with counsel's contention, the court, over plaintiff's objection, received evidence tending to show that some of the signers of the petition were not freeholders and would not in fact be accommodated by the closing of the road. That a board of supervisors may, of its own motion and without any petition therefor, order a public road abandoned, was held by this court in Swift v. Board of Supervisors, 16 Cal. App. 72, 116 Pac. 317, where it was said:

"That by subdivision 3 of section 2643, Political Code, it is made the duty of the board, of its own motion and without hearing evidence, to abandon by proper order such roads as are not necessary for the public use, and thus relieve the county of the expense and burden of their maintenance."

Conceding, however, that this statement was, as claimed by respondent, unnecessary in the decision of that case, and that the presentation of a petition signed by at least ten freeholders, two of whom shall be residents of the road district wherein the road proposed to be vacated is situated and taxable therein for road purposes, all as provided in section 2681, Political Code, is a necessary prerequisite to the making of such an order, nevertheless the question as to the genuineness of the signatures and the qualifications of the signers of the petition is one to be determined by the board (Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35), and as to which question the order in this case recites that evidence was heard and upon which the board found such facts to be established. As to this question the board acted judicially. Waugh v. Chauncey, 13 Cal. 11. We must assume that at the hearing regularly had upon a petition sufficient both in form and substance the evidence was ample to establish the truth of the facts so found; hence it follows that such adjudication "can be vacated only in the manner and upon the grounds that would justify the vacation of a judgment rendered by a court of record, and a mere error in the adjudication of a question of fact, not procured by fraud extrinsic or collateral to such question, is not ground upon which it may be vacated, since, if it were, no adjudication of a question of fact would ever become final, so long as new evidence could be had, or a different conclusion be reached upon the same [or, as in this case, other] evidence." People v. Los Angeles, 133 Cal. 338, 65 Pac. 749. To permit a collateral attack in such cases as permitted herein by the trial court must inevitably lead to intolerable confusion. The abandonment of the road was not a proceeding which directly affected private property, and hence is distinguishable from those cases in proceedings to open, grade, or improve a street, as was that of Wilcox v. Engebretsen, 160 Cal. 288, 116 Pac. 750.

That the action of the board of supervisors in making the order vacating the road in question is not open to collateral attack is sustained by numerous decisions, among which see Swift v. Board of Supervisors, supra; Levee District v. Farmer, 101 Cal. 178, 35 Pac. 569, 23 L. R. A. 388; Belser v. Hoffschneider, 104 Cal. 455, 38 Pac. 312; County of Siskiyou v. Gamlich, 110 Cal. 94, 42 Pac. 468.

The order is reversed.

PEOPLE v. DELGADO. (Cr. 607.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 29, 1918.)

1. INFANTS ⊜20—LEWD ACTS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.
In prosecution, under Pen. Code, § 288, for committing lewd acts upon and with body of child under 14 years of age, evidence held sufficient to warrant conclusion that accused was the person who committed the acts charged.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜507(7)—EVIDENCE—"ACCOMPLICE."
In prosecution, under Pen. Code, § 288, for lascivious conduct with 8 year old girl, where accused was charged with placing the girl's hand upon his person, the girl was, if anything, a mere passive instrument, and was not an "accomplice," as defined by Pen. Code, § 1111, as amended in 1915.
[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accomplice.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜351(2)—LEWD ACTS — EVIDENCE—SUBSEQUENT ACTS.
Where defendant was charged with committing lewd acts upon and with body of 8 year old girl, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, evidence of what occurred 2 weeks subsequent to date charged, when defendant came and sat down by and started talking with the girl, at which time he was arrested, held admissible.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜1169(9)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXPERT TESTIMONY.
In prosecution for lascivious conduct with young girl, in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, the admission of expert testimony to prove that the placing of a girl's hand upon a man's person would tend to excite his passion and to a certain extent gratify his desire, held harmless, where jury under the evidence could not well have concluded that acts committed were other than those denounced by such statute.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜939(1)—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—DILIGENCE.
Where accused's defense was that, on day crime was committed, he was not in the town in which it was committed, court did not abuse its discretion in denying new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence that accused had been seen a considerable distance from such town at time of crime, which evidence, in view of alibi defense, was not such as could not have been procured with reasonable diligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Louie Delgado was convicted of willfully and lewdly committing a lewd and lascivious act upon or with the body of a child under the age of 14 years, and he appeals from the judgment of imprisonment and from an order denying his motion for new trial. Affirmed.

J. C. C. Russell, of Hanford, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant, after conviction of the crime described in section 288 of the Penal Code, appeals from a judgment of imprisonment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The evidence offered on behalf of the prosecution was as to its most material effect furnished by a little girl eight years of age. She testified that on the 17th day of February, 1918, she entered a picture theater in the city of Hanford and took a seat well towards the front of the room; that in the seat next to her was the defendant, a young Mexican, whom she had never seen before to her knowledge; that defendant offered her 5 cents and told her to get some popcorn, but that she did not do this; that defendant offered her 10 cents, but did not present it to her; that he gave her another 10-cent piece and took that away, then "half a dollar or a dollar" and took that away; that when he proffered her the first 10 cents he said, "if you will give me a kiss;" that thereafter he moved over toward her, placed his hand under her dress, and placed one of her hands in his lap under his hat and upon his private organs. The little girl further testified that she took her hand away "about a minute after," and that upon going out of the theater she told her mother, who in turn told the father. The evidence was further that on a Sunday, 2 weeks later, she went to the theater with her mother and father; the latter being determined to trap the man if he should again approach the child. The mother and father took seats toward the rear of the room, and the child went to the front and sat down. Soon the same man came and sat beside her and began to talk to her, whereupon an officer was called, who placed him under arrest. Throughout the early part of her testimony the little girl had referred in positive terms to the defendant as being the man who had committed the lewd act on the 17th day of February. Toward the conclusion of her testimony she was asked by the district attorney whether she was sure that the defendant was the same man who molested her on the 17th of February, and the following dialogue thereupon occurred:

"A. I am almost sure, because he offered me money. Q. Are you not positive? A. I am almost sure. Q. You are almost sure? A. Yes, sir. Q. Are you sure that it is the same man that came in the second time when they arrested him? A. I am almost sure. Q. Well, are you just as sure it was the same man they arrested on the second Sunday as you are that it was the same man you saw there on the 17th? A. I am almost sure. Q. Well, I want to find out how sure you are, Birdie. You say you are almost sure it was the same man both times; now are you just as sure that it was the same man the first time as you are that it was the same man the second time? A. Yes."

The latter answers given by the child form the basis for the argument made by appellant that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the conviction, in that there was no sufficient proof of the identity of the defendant. The cross-examination of the child developed no greater uncertainty as to the matter of her identification of the defendant than that appearing from the testimony quoted. We think that there was enough presented to the jury to warrant it in concluding that the defendant was the person who committed the lewd acts on the day charged; that is, there is no such want of evidence as to authorize this court to say that the verdict in that particular is unsupported.

[2, 3] The appellant further contends that, if any criminal act was committed, the child was an accomplice to it, and that her testimony should have been corroborated. It does not appear that the child was an active participant in the unlawful performance, but rather that she was, if anything, a mere passive instrument in the hands of the defendant. She was therefore not an accomplice. People v. Camp, 26 Cal. App. 385, 147 Pac. 95. Furthermore, as the Attorney General properly suggests, she could not have been an accomplice under the definition given in Pen. Code, § 1111, as amended in 1915. The amendment referred to is as follows:

"An accomplice is hereby defined as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given."

See, also, People v. Beggs, 172 Pac. 152.

The decisions cited by appellant, which refer to the state of the law as it existed prior to the date of the amendment, are plainly not in point. The evidence of what occurred on the Sunday subsequent to the 17th of February and at the time when defendant's arrest occurred, was admissible under the rule now well settled. There are a number of decisions which give expression to that rule, only one of which need be cited: People v. Mathews, 139 Cal. 527, 73 Pac. 416.

[4] Appellant claims that it was prejudicial error for the court to permit a physician to testify in answer to a hypothetical question embodying the circumstances of the offense, and to give his opinion that the acts complained of would "tend to excite the passions and gratify to a certain extent the desires of the individual perpetrating such acts." The matter was probably not one calling for the expression of expert opinion; but, conceding error in admitting this testimony, we cannot see that any prejudice could result therefrom. Defendant denied in toto the commission of any such acts. The acts themselves, as described by the child (we have not attempted to relate all of the details in the foregoing), were in their very nature of the kind denounced by the statute; and under the evidence the jury could not well have concluded that they were other than of that variety.

The court instructed the jury fully and fairly, and we think no error is shown in the refusal to give certain instructions offered by the defendant and in modifying others. The errors claimed as affecting the instructions, in our opinion, do not warrant any particular discussion. It may be noted that the court was careful to advise the jury that the testimony of a child of tender years ought to be viewed with great care and caution and without bias and prejudice; further stating that the charge made against the defendant was one "easy to make, but hard to disprove."

[5] Appellant urged before the trial court that he was entitled to a new trial because of alleged newly discovered evidence. This evidence, as shown by several affidavits used on hearing of the motion, consisted in the statements of persons who deposed that they had seen the appellant, on the day and during the time that the alleged crime was committed, a considerable distance away from the town of Hanford. One of these deponents at least had talked with the appellant, who, he deposed, was driving a horse and wagon on a journey for firewood. The nature of this so-called newly discovered evidence was such as must have been within the reach of defendant at all times during his trial. His counsel, by the very nature of the defense which he presented, was put upon inquiry as to the same facts. Defendant at the trial testified that he was not in the picture show house on the 17th of February, but that he was at work on a ranch. This contention of his would at once suggest the finding of other evidence in the nature of alibi proof and would ordinarily lead to an inquiry by his counsel as to what persons the defendant had been with, seen, or talked to at the important time. It cannot be said, we think, that the evidence claimed to have been newly discovered was such as could not have been procured with reasonable diligence at the trial. No abuse of discretion is therefore shown in denial of the motion.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

DONNATIN v. UNION HARDWARE & METAL CO. (Civ. 2574.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 30, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 27, 1918.)

1. TRIAL ⊜343—REVIEW — IMPLIED FINDINGS.
In action for negligence, where defendant claimed contributory negligence, verdict of $1 for plaintiff implied findings adverse to defendant upon the issue as to its own negligence and plaintiff's alleged contributory negligence.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜878(2)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.
In action for negligence, where defendant claimed contributory negligence, verdict of $1 for plaintiff implied findings adverse to defendant upon the issue as to its own negligence and plaintiff's contributory negligence, which by its failure to appeal or ask for new trial must be deemed a final determination of such issues upon plaintiff's appeal from order denying motion to vacate verdict in so far as it fixed damage at $1.

3. NEW TRIAL ⊜75(4)—GROUNDS — INADEQUACY OF DAMAGES.
In personal injury action, inadequacy of damages awarded by jury may constitute ground for the granting of a new trial of the case on its merits.

4. NEW TRIAL ⊜9 — ERROR AS TO DISCONNECTED ISSUE.
Where there has been an erroneous trial of a litigated issue, which is separable from other issues in the trial of which there was no error, a new trial may be granted as to the specific issue affected by the error committed.

5. NEW TRIAL ⊜6—DISCRETION OF COURT.
Application for new trial is addressed to sound discretion of trial court.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜977(1)—REVIEW — DISCRETION OF COURT.
Trial court's ruling on application for new trial will not be disturbed by appellate court, unless abuse of discretion is affirmatively shown.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜933(1)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTION — ORDER REFUSING NEW TRIAL.
On appeal from order denying motion to vacate that part of verdict fixing amount of damage and for new trial of issue as to damage sustained, every intendment must be indulged in support of trial court's ruling.

8. NEW TRIAL ⊜75(4) — DISCRETION OF COURT—INADEQUACY OF DAMAGES.
In action for negligence, if court considered that evidence proved defendant not guilty of negligence, it did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion for new trial upon ground of inadequacy of damages awarded, where there was verdict of $1 for plaintiff.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜907(2)—REVIEW — PRESUMPTIONS—EVIDENCE.
In action for negligence, where there was verdict of $1 for plaintiff, it will be assumed, on appeal from order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial of issue as to extent of damage sustained, in absence from record of evidence on question of defendant's negligence, that court considered that evidence did not prove defendant negligent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Donnatin against the Union Hardware & Metal Company. Verdict for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion to set aside part of the verdict fixing damage at $1 and to grant a new trial of the issue as to damage sustained, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Horace S. Wilson and Frank G. Tyrrell, both of Los Angeles, and W. W. Middlecoff, of Visalia, for appellant. John Murray Marshall and James S. Bennett, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff, alleging that he was injured as the result of defendant's negligent operation of an automobile, sued to recover damages for such injuries. The answer of defendant denied that it was guilty of negligence, alleged contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, and denied that he suffered damage in any sum whatsoever. Upon the issues so joined the case was tried before a jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff, wherein his damage was assessed at $1, and judgment was entered in accordance therewith.

In due time, and pursuant to notice given, plaintiff moved the court to set aside and vacate that part of the verdict only wherein the jury fixed the amount of his damage at $1 and grant him a new trial of the issue as to the damage sustained as the result of defendant's negligence, which motion was based upon the ground that the sum so fixed was grossly inadequate and that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict in so far as it was found that plaintiff's damage was $1 and no more. The motion was made upon the minutes of the court, and all the evidence touching the issue as to damage only, omitting therefrom evidence as to other issues, is embodied in a statement thereof settled and allowed by the court and presented in support of the appeal prosecuted by plaintiff from the order of court denying the motion so made by plaintiff.

[1, 2] The verdict of the jury in favor of plaintiff implied findings adverse to the defendant upon the issue as to its own negligence and plaintiff's alleged contributory negligence. By its failure to appeal or ask for a new trial, these implied findings, if fairly made, must be deemed a final determination of such issues as fully as though defendant, after filing its answer, had stipulated to the facts so found. As to the amount of plaintiff's damage, the finding was likewise adverse to defendant, but plaintiff, being dissatisfied therewith, asks that as to this finding, or part of the verdict, it be set aside and a new trial granted as to such issue.

[3, 4] Assuming, as found by the jury, that defendant was legally liable therefor, the award of $1 made to plaintiff as damage for the injury sustained is, upon the evidence presented, grossly inadequate, and there is no room for controversy as to the fact that inadequacy of damage in a suit of this character may constitute ground for the granting of a new trial of the case on its merits. It may likewise be conceded, upon numerous authorities in this and other jurisdictions (see Duff v. Duff, 101 Cal. 4, 35 Pac. 437; San Diego Land, etc., Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 64, 20 Pac. 372, 3 L. R. A. 83; Lake v. Bender, 18 Nev. 361, 4 Pac. 711, 7 Pac. 74; Simmons v. Fish, 210 Mass. 563, 97 N. E. 102, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 588; Doody v. Boston & M. R. R. Co., 77 N. H. 161, 89 Atl. 487, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 846), that where there has been an erroneous trial of a litigated issue, which is disconnected and separable from other issues, in the trial of which it is made to appear there was no error, a new trial may be granted as to the specific issue affected by the error committed. "The guiding principle is that, although a verdict ought not to stand which is tainted with illegality, there ought to be but one fair trial upon any issue, and that parties ought not to be compelled to try anew a question once disposed of by a decision against which no illegality can be shown." Simmons v. Fish, supra.

[5, 6] An application for a new trial in any case, however, is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and its action thereon will not be disturbed by an appellate court, unless an abuse of such discretion is affirmatively shown. In the instant case the amount of $1 awarded plaintiff as damages for the injuries sustained, if the facts were such as to render defendant legally liable therefor, is, upon the evidence presented, so grossly absurd that it furnishes convincing proof that in order to reach an agreement the verdict was the result of unwarranted concessions of convictions made by each of two opposing factions of the jury, one of which conscientiously believed that defendant should prevail in the action, and the other equally conscientious in the opinion that plaintiff should recover damages commensurate with the injuries sustained. It is apparent, we think, that those jurors entertaining the opinion that defendant was not guilty of the negligence charged nevertheless agreed to surrender their views in consideration of other jurors consenting to the trifling award made.

As shown by the evidence, there was no contest as to the extent of plaintiff's injuries; hence the real subject of the trial was the question of defendant's alleged negligence, as to which there was no justifiable verdict. Nevertheless the verdict rendered against defendant was so insignificant in amount that, had it moved for a new trial, no action by any court, other than a denial of such motion, is conceivable. Hence it would work a grave injustice upon defendant to force it to a new trial of the issue as to damages only, with the issue as to liability, upon which no verdict other than in name had been rendered, forever closed against any inquiry. "An examination of all the evidence relating to the injury and its cause and the conduct of the plaintiff, as well as of defendant's agents, might show that it is so interwoven with that relating to damage that to fairly ascertain what is a just compensation the plaintiff should receive, if he is entitled to recover at all, can best be determined by trying the whole case before one judge and one jury instead of 'splitting it up' between different judges and different juries." Norfolk Southern R. Co. v. Ferebee, 238 U. S. 269, 35 Sup. Ct. 781, 59 L. Ed. 1303.

[7-9] Every intendment must be indulged in support of the ruling made by the trial court. If in its opinion the evidence, considered as a whole, was of a character to clearly establish the fact that defendant was not guilty of negligence, and hence not liable for any damage (and in the absence from the record of all evidence touching the question of defendant's negligence, we must so assume), then it constituted no abuse of discretion for the court to deny plaintiff's motion for a new trial, made upon the ground of inadequacy of the amount awarded.

The order is affirmed.

HOMICIDE ⊂=332(2)—APPEAL—AFFIRMANCE.

The evidence abundantly supporting the verdict, and the proceedings below having been in all respects fair and in conformity to law, conviction of murder in the first degree without recommendation will be sustained.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Jose Negrete, indicted as Jesse Negrete, was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

George E. Foote, of Sacramento, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. An indictment was found against defendant, under the name of Jesse Negrete, by the grand jury of Sacramento county, for the crime of murder, in the unlawful killing of one M. Castellano. A trial was had resulting in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, without recommendation. We have here an appeal from the judgment pronounced upon such conviction.

No brief has been filed or oral argument made on behalf of the appellant on this appeal. The matter has been submitted on the record. In view of the fact that this is a capital case, we have carefully examined the record, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was any substantial error in the proceedings in the superior court. We find that the evidence abundantly supports the verdict, and that the proceedings in the trial court were in all respects fair and in full conformity to the law. Nothing appears therein as to which any claim of substantial error could well be made.

The judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte TANNER. (Cr. 2199.)

CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=1216(1)—TERM OF IMPRISONMENT—ESCAPED PRISONER—CONFINEMENT IN OTHER PRISON.

Where escaped prisoner of one state, upon completion of a term of imprisonment in another state for another crime, was held by authorities of latter state upon request of authorities of former state pending arrival of officers to take him back to former state, the 6 months and 18 days he was so held cannot be credited towards his uncompleted term.

In Bank. Application by Bert Tanner for a writ of habeas corpus against James A. Johnston, Warden of State Prison at San Quentin. Denied.

Bert Tanner, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. The petition sufficiently shows that the term of imprisonment in the state prison, which petitioner was lawfully adjudged to suffer, has not expired, unless he is entitled to be credited with certain time during which he was confined in the Ohio state prison at Columbus. It appears that while imprisoned in the California state prison at San Quentin under the judgment, he was released on parole, but that his parole was subsequently revoked, and he was declared an escaped prisoner, because he had left the state of California without permission. Subsequently, upon conviction of a crime in Ohio, he was adjudged to a term of imprisonment in the Ohio state prison at Columbus. Upon the completion of his term of imprisonment there, he claims that he was held a prisoner in that institution for 6 months and 18 days further, upon request of the California authorities, waiting the arrival of California officers to take him back to the California state prison to there complete his term. It is this 6 months and 18 days that he claims should be taken into consideration as constituting imprisonment in partial satisfaction of the judgment of imprisonment in the California state prison. Assuming the situation to have been as alleged by him, it is clear that petitioner was not, while in the Ohio prison, imprisoned in execution of the California judgment, and that he cannot be credited with any portion of such time.

The application for a writ of habeas corpus is denied.

PEOPLE v. EMRICK. (Cr. 600.)

HOMICIDE ⊂=300(5) — SELF-DEFENSE — INSTRUCTIONS.

A charge in a homicide case held not misleading as to the right of defendant to use a weapon when attacked.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Harry L. Emrick was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Robert M. Clarke, of Los Angeles, and Martin H. Buck, of Santa Barbara, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. The defendant appeals from a judgment directing his imprisonment after conviction of the crime of murder in the second degree. Appeal is also taken from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

At the time of the alleged homicide, defendant was residing at Carpinteria with his wife and stepchildren. On the day of the killing, defendant's wife had, in company with the wife of Weiler, the deceased, visited the city of Santa Barbara, a short distance away. Defendant's wife returned home about 6:30 o'clock. Defendant, upon entering the house, engaged in an exchange of angry words with his wife and one of his stepsons, and left the house with a revolver in his possession. Some time thereafter Weiler and his wife came to the defendant's house, Weiler remaining for the most part upon the porch of the house, while his wife held some conversation with Mrs. Emrick. It reasonably appears from the testimony that defendant was somewhat under the influence of liquor at all of the times before mentioned. Later on, and before the shooting occurred, the defendant secured a bottle of whisky. Some of the witnesses testified that when he learned that Weiler was there he declared that he intended to kill him. He met Weiler near the main-traveled highway at about the front of the house, Weiler being accompanied by his wife. It also appears that a brother of defendant endeavored to pacify the man. It nowhere appears in the evidence that Weiler was armed, although the brother of the defendant testified that just before the shot was fired he thought he saw something passed by Weiler to the latter's wife, and that he notified the defendant of his belief in that regard. Little question can be made under the evidence but that defendant was at the time intoxicated and was withal threatening and boisterous. He displayed the gun, which he held in his hand, openly. There was some testimony that Weiler addressed him and asked him to put up the gun, telling him that, if he wanted to fight, he would fight him that way, but not with a gun. As between Mrs. Weiler and her husband, the former seems to have been more outspoken and active in the part which the Weilers took in the affair. Just before the shot was fired, by the testimony most favorable to the defendant, it would appear that Weiler pulled his wife back and advanced toward the defendant, whereupon the defendant shot and killed him. As we have before noted, we can find no testimony tending to show in the slightest degree that Weiler on the night in question was armed. After the shooting had occurred, blood was seen upon the back of the head and neck of the defendant, and it was claimed that this was caused by the attack of Mrs. Weiler, some of the witnesses expressing the view that defendant was so attacked by Mrs. Weiler before he fired the shot, while the evidence for the prosecution was to the effect that, after her husband had been shot to the ground, Mrs. Weiler made an attack with her hands and fists upon the defendant. No briefs were filed in support of this appeal, but at the oral argument our attention was called to a certain instruction given to the jury, as constituting the chief ground of error claimed. That instruction had to do with the right of self-defense. We may add to the statement of the testimony, that by some of the evidence for the defendant it was said that Mrs. Weiler, when she attacked the defendant, had something "shining" in her hand. The court, among other instructions, gave the following:

"The jury are instructed that, though the right to take life, or to use a deadly weapon, in self-defense, is unquestionable, yet one on whom another is making a mere assault with the fist, not with intent to kill, or to do great bodily harm, and who is not deceived as to its character, is not justified in taking life, or in using a deadly weapon in self-defense."

It is contended that by this instruction the court advised the jury, first, that an assault with the fist would in no case justify the use of a deadly weapon in repelling such assault, and, second, by the instruction it was intimated to the jury that the only assault made upon the defendant by the Weilers was one with the fist. We do not think that the objection to the instruction is well taken. We find upon examining the charge, in other of its statements, as the court gave it, that the jury was very fully advised as to the right of a person assaulted to repel the assault with force, even to the extent of using a deadly weapon. By instruction 49 the jury was told:

"To justify a homicide committed by one in resisting or repelling an assault or battery committed or attempted to be committed upon his person by another, it must appear to the slayer as a reasonable man that the danger threatened, if any, was immediate and sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable person that he was in danger of receiving death or great bodily harm, and that he acted under the influence of such fears and not in a spirit of revenge; and it must further appear that the degree of resistance was not clearly disproportionate to the nature of the injury offered or given—that the force used in repelling or resisting the assault or battery was not clearly greater than necessary."

Under this instruction, the jury must plainly have understood that the court intended to advise it that even an assault or battery might, under proper circumstances, sufficiently defined, furnish justification for the use of a deadly weapon and the killing of the assailant. Instruction 51 enumerated specifically the various conditions under which homicide is justifiable. In our view of the case, the instructions were full and fair and not misleading.

No other alleged error is called to our attention which warrants particular discussion.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

DE LAVAL DAIRY SUPPLY CO. v. TALBOTT. (Civ. 1819.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 2, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1039(1), 1050(1) — HARMLESS ERROR—DAMAGES.
Defendant failing to establish warranty and its breach, rulings adverse to him on pleadings and evidence relative to damages for its breach were harmless.

2. EVIDENCE ⟸397(2)—PAROL EVIDENCE — VARYING WRITING.
A written contract which by provision of Civ. Code, § 1625, supersedes all negotiations or stipulations concerning its matter, may not, when importing to be a complete expression of the agreement, be added to by parol.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1011(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.
Findings of fact on conflicting evidence, there being sufficient substantial evidence to support them, cannot be disturbed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James F. Lodge, Judge.

Action by the De Laval Dairy Supply Company against Fred Talbott. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Collier & McNamara, for appellant. C. J. Luttrell, of Yreka, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action upon two certain promissory notes, executed by defendant to plaintiff, both of which were dated June 30, 1914, one for $200, due December 15, 1914, and the other for $175, due March 15, 1915, and both recited that they were given on account of the purchase price of a certain 20 horse power Stickney gas engine sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant. The notes also provided for reasonable attorney's fees in case of suit brought to enforce collection. Included in the action was a claim for goods furnished amounting to $8.48. In his answer defendant denied that said notes were made on June 30, 1914, but alleged that they were executed about October 18, 1914; admitted nonpayment. For a further defense "and by way of counterclaim," defendant alleged: That in May, 1913, he contracted with one Lloyd Collar, agent of plaintiff, to purchase a 20 horse power Stickney gas engine for the sum of $750. "That before the making of said sale the said defendant caused the said agent of plaintiff to visit the mine where defendant was working and where the said engine was to be installed." That defendant then and there informed said agent of all the facts surrounding the situation of said work and that all of these facts became known to plaintiff, who thereupon "agreed that it would furnish to defendant a Stickney gas engine that would develop 20 horse power and would not hammer, and the said plaintiff expressly warranted to said defendant that plaintiff would furnish and install such engine, and he expressly warranted that the same would work in said altitude and that the same would develop sufficient power to crush said ores and that the same would run on a small amount of oil, viz. one-half pint per horse power per hour, all of which this defendant relied upon." It is then alleged that said engine would not and did not do the work that plaintiff warranted it would do, setting forth in the answer with much particularity wherein the said engine failed to meet said warranty and mentioning several defective parts of said engine and its failure to develop more than 14 horse power; that, on many occasions before the bringing of this suit, defendant requested plaintiff "to fix the said engine so that it would work" and to make good its warranty, but plaintiff neglected and refused to do so; that in January, February, and June, 1914, defendant offered to return the said engine to plaintiff; that, "under the first agreement with plaintiff herein, he executed to the plaintiff two promissory notes on July 30, 1913, each for the sum of $375; and that the $200 note and the $175 note set out in plaintiff's complaint were given in October, 1914, for the second $375 note that defendant had executed to plaintiff in 1913." It is then alleged that defendant paid the first $375 note and interest; that he paid out for freight on said engine $86.38, and hauling the same to the defendant's mine, $45. Defendant also claims damages for various amounts, namely, $53 for storage of said engine; for lost time, $816; for the purchase and operating of a substitute engine and for certain necessary work, $1,850. These last two items went out of the answer on demurrer. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and plaintiff had findings and judgment in its favor. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The execution and delivery of the two promissory notes mentioned in the complaint are not disputed; they were, however, not delivered at the date they bore, but were delivered October 18, 1914, and the complaint was amended to conform to the evidence; and, as alleged by defendant in his answer, these two notes were given to take the place of the second of the notes for $375, falling due in December, 1914, as the evidence showed, for defendant's accommodation and to extend the time of payment. In point of fact, the defense to the action depended entirely upon defendant's maintaining his alleged counterclaim.

[1] Defendant calls attention to certain alleged errors of law committed by the court. It is claimed that it was error to sustain plaintiff's demurrer to that part of the answer alleging lost time, etc., by reason of the defect in the said engine by which he was precluded from making proof of his resulting damages; that it was error to sustain an objection to the question put to defendant as a witness, "Were you then compelled to go out and purchase another engine?" as the result of the failure of said engine to do its guaranteed work; that it was error to strike out defendant's testimony to the effect that the said engine "was not fit for the purpose of operating the machinery defendant then had on the mine." Obviously, if defendant failed to establish the alleged warranty and failed to prove, to the satisfaction of the court and by a preponderance of the evidence, that the said engine was defective in respect of the particulars pointed out by him and failed to show that the said engine would not and did not develop 20 horse power—in short, if he failed to establish the facts constituting his alleged counterclaim—the errors complained of became immaterial and nonprejudicial.

Defendant was permitted to testify and did testify to the representations by plaintiff's agent made to him when negotiating for the purchase of the said engine, which were, as he testified, substantially as set out in his answer. He testified also to the existence of the numerous defects in the engine as alleged in his answer; that by reason of these defects he was unable to keep the engine running; that he could not at any time make it develop more than 14 horse power; and that it was incapable of doing the work intended to be done by it which said agent guaranteed it would do. His testimony tended to show that the engine was worthless for his purposes and would not do his work; that he had frequently so informed plaintiff and requested plaintiff to take the engine away. Defendant's testimony was in some degree corroborated by that of other witnesses who had seen the engine in operation at different times. Neither defendant nor any of his corroborating witnesses was familiar with the construction and operation of gas engines, nor could either be said to have been in any sense experts or competent to express expert opinion upon the capacity or working condition of this engine. It appeared that defendant was attempting to run two stamps or ore crushing mills with this engine and doing the work without any assistance; that he had himself installed the mills, though not a millwright or familiar with machinery; that the foundations of these mills were not as secure as they should be, and the alignment of the shafts and the setting of other parts of the machinery were such as to waste power. Defendant admitted that he did not know what horse power was required efficiently to operate his mills; that he never had tested the horse power of the gas engine sold to him and did not know how to make such test; that he had never before attempted to run a gas engine, had never taken one apart or put one together. He testified:

"Q. And really, up to the time that you acquired this engine that is in controversy here, you really never knew anything about these gas engines, did you? A. No."

Such was the character of the testimony submitted in support of defendant's counterclaim.

It appeared from the evidence submitted by plaintiff in reply to defendant's evidence in support of his counterclaim: That, subsequently to the negotiation between defendant and plaintiff's agent to which defendant testified, defendant signed an order on plaintiff for a 20 horse power Stickney engine. This document contains the terms and conditions upon which the purchase and sale were made and sets forth specifically the warranty given by plaintiff in making the sale and under which defendant received and used the engine. This was that plaintiff "warrants that each Stickney or St. Paul engine purchased under this contract shall be tested before leaving the factory and shall have developed the full rated horse power. They also warrant the engine to be made of good material. Parts proving defective in workmanship and material (except batteries) will be replaced for the period of one year f. o. b. factory, free of charge." Among the conditions found in this contract are the following:

"In the event of any engine's alleged failure to fulfill the above warranty, written notice shall be given the De Laval Dairy Supply Company, stating wherein it failed to fulfill warranty, and the De Laval Dairy Supply Company reserves the right to send a man to test the same and if found defective in material or workmanship" the company will pay all expenses of the test, "but if the failure lies with the fault of operating the engine, then the purchaser agrees to pay such expense."

The contract contained the following provision:

"No agreements, stipulations or conditions, oral or otherwise, save those mentioned in this order, will be recognized, and it is agreed that the original order is held by the De Laval Dairy Supply Company, and shall govern settlement."

[2] The principle of law applicable is found in section 1625 of the Civil Code:

"The execution of a contract in writing, whether the law requires it to be written or not, supersedes all the negotiations or stipulations concerning its matter which preceded or accompanied the execution of the instrument."

We had occasion to apply the rule in the somewhat similar case of J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Copren Bros., 32 Cal. App. 194, 162 Pac. 647, which may be consulted for a discussion of the question. The contract here involved by its terms "imports on its face to be a complete expression of the whole agreement—that is, contains such language as imports a complete legal obligation"—and, as was said in Harrison v. McCormick, 89 Cal. 327, 26 Pac. 830, 23 Am. St. Rep. 469:

"It is to be presumed that the parties have introduced into it every material item and term; and parol evidence cannot be admitted to add another term to the agreement, although the writing contains nothing on the particular one to which the parol evidence is directed."

Defendant at no time complied with the provision in the contract that he was to give notice in writing of any failure to fulfill the warranty, but he did notify plaintiff that the engine was not satisfactory and that he was unable to make it do his work. Plaintiff sent its expert engineer, Mr. Workman, and its general superintendent, Mr. Zirbel, to inspect the engine and report its condition. They arrived at defendant's mine on June 18, 1914. Mr. Workman testified that he had had 17 years' experience with gas engines and was perfectly familiar with their construction and operation. His qualification to testify knowingly was not disputed. Mr. Zirbel sufficiently qualified himself to testify as an expert. Approaching the mine they heard the engine "shooting" and apparently running all right, and on reaching the mine witness Workman testified that it was "running both the stamp and the Lane mill." He testified that defendant explained to him his troubles. Witness testified:

"We told him we were going to blank the head end of the piston connecting rod and the main base, and this would shove the piston closer to the compression head. * * * Q. What was that for? A. To take care of the altitude"—which, he explained, affected the air pressure.

They stayed there most of the day, the engine running all right, and on the next day made the adjustment proposed. He testified that they tested the power of the engine by the recognized method and at different speeds and found that "at the speed she was running we would develop 22 horse power." He weakened the springs of the carbureter—"the springs were a little too stiff for the high altitude. The igniter, we had no trouble with that whatever." They remained at Yreka five or six days, visiting the mine, 12 miles distant, every day, and, with the exception of a casting breaking which was replaced the next day, the engine worked all right without more than temporary interruption. Workman's testimony was that there was nothing the matter with the engine and that it developed the full 20 horse power guaranteed. His testimony was corroborated by that of witness Zirbel. Both of these witnesses testified to the insecure foundations of defendant's mills and the defective alignment of shafting, which, in their opinion, resulted in a loss of power. The evidence was that defendant had paid the first note of $375, which fell due in September, 1913. It appeared that he executed the two notes in question in October, 1914, in lieu of the second $375 note. It also appeared that on June 30, 1914, defendant wrote to plaintiff as follows:

"I have tryed the engine 5 day and am satisfied with it now so if you will send the old note to your attorney to Yrek I will go in about the 16 or 18 of July and will draw new note to be made in too payments Dec. 15, 1914, $200.00, March 15, 1915, $175.00. Yours truly, Fred Talbott."

These were the two notes which later, October 18, 1914, were signed by him and are now in suit.

[3] Without pursuing the evidence further, it is quite apparent that the court was justified in its findings and in its judgment. We are unable to discover any just ground upon which defendant can claim error. Having expressed his satisfaction with the engine in a letter to plaintiff after a trial, having paid one of the notes several months after the purchase without objection, and having executed the notes in question more than a year after he accepted the engine without objection, it would seem rather late now to urge a right to rescind or to claim want of consideration. Upon the essential facts the evidence was conflicting, and, as there was sufficient substantial evidence to support the findings, we cannot interfere with the court's decision.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BROWN. (Cr. 789.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Aug. 15, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸274—CHANGING PLEA—DISCRETION OF COURT.
Where an old offender first pleaded "not guilty," then changed his plea to "guilty," speculating upon the anticipated clemency of the judge, court did not abuse its discretion in not granting a motion to be allowed to again change his plea to "not guilty."

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1149—REVIEW—CHANGING PLEA—DISCRETION OF COURT.
A motion to change a plea of "guilty" to "not guilty" is addressed to the discretion of the court, and a denial will not be set aside except for abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

James Brown was charged with having violated Pen. Code, § 476a. From the judgment and from an order denying his motion to change his plea, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fred W. Moore, Jr., of Oakland, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction and from an order of the court denying defendant's motion to change his plea from "guilty" to "not guilty." The defendant was charged by information with having violated the provisions of section 476a of the Penal Code, a prior conviction of felony also being charged. Upon this information he was duly arraigned, and admitted the prior conviction, but entered a plea of "not guilty" to the charge set forth in detail in the information; whereupon his case was set for trial. At the time set for the hearing, the defendant appeared in court, withdrew his plea of "not guilty," pleaded "guilty," and asked for probation. The court thereupon dismissed the charge of prior conviction, but denied the request for probation, and continued the case for four days for sentence. When the case was again called, the defendant, through new counsel, requested permission to withdraw his plea of "guilty" and to plead "not guilty." This request was denied. Whether such denial constituted error is the sole question presented for determination.

[1, 2] According to the showing made by the prosecution upon the hearing of this motion, the defendant had confessed that he was guilty of the offense charged, and it also appears from the record that he was an old offender; that in the matter of changing from "not guilty" to "guilty" he had not been imposed upon in any way, and realized fully the consequence of his act. It is clear that he speculated upon the anticipated clemency of the trial judge, and it was not until he learned that his expectation in this behalf would not be realized that he attempted to retract his plea of "guilty." The motion was addressed to the discretion of the court, and, under the circumstances of the case, it not being shown that there was any abuse of discretion, the action of the court must stand. People v. Dabner, 153 Cal. 398, 95 Pac. 880; People v. Miller, 114 Cal. 10, 45 Pac. 986; State v. Cimini, 53 Wash. 268, 101 Pac. 891.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

LAURENCE v. PACIFIC OIL & LEAD WORKS. (Civ. 2431.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 31, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS ⊜313(1)—BREACH—PLEADING IN PRIOR ACTION.
Plaintiff's cause of action for defendant's failure to deliver oil in violation of oral agreement immediately arose upon his categorical denial, in answer in prior action between same parties, of any right or interest of plaintiff in the oil.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊜201—FINDING AS TO STATUTE.
Where facts found show that action is barred by statute of limitations, it is not necessary that court find expressly as to statute.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1170(10)—REVERSAL—TECHNICAL GROUNDS.
Appellate court will not reverse judgment for defendant on purely technical ground there was no finding as to statute of limitations, it being evident that trial court made its findings in response to issue of statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by C. R. Laurence against the Pacific Oil & Lead Works. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Powell & Dow, of San Francisco, for appellant. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro and A. D. Plaw, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff brought this action to recover from the defendant damages for failure and refusal to deliver a certain quantity of oil in violation of an oral agreement. The answer, among other defenses, set up that the action was barred by subdivision 3 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, requiring an action for the taking, detaining, or injuring of goods to be brought within three years; and also subdivision 1 of section 339 of said Code, limiting to two years the time in which suit may be brought upon an obligation or liability not founded upon an instrument in writing. The complaint was filed on June 4, 1915. The court found, evidently in response to the issue of the bar of the statute, that prior to the 24th day of April, 1912, the defendant had wholly failed and neglected to deliver said oil upon the order of plaintiff; and also that on the 23d day of April, 1912, the defendant refused to deliver said oil to plaintiff's order, and notified plaintiff in writing of such refusal, and these findings are supported by the evidence. The court further found that the plaintiff was not injured by defendant's refusal to make the demanded delivery, and gave judgment in defendant's favor, from which plaintiff appeals.

[1] The appellant claims that there is no evidence to support the finding of defendant's refusal in writing to deliver the oil; but the evidence is found in the sworn answer of the defendant in a previous action between the same parties concerning the same oil, in which the ownership by plaintiff of the oil or any interest therein was specifically denied, and it was also alleged that the merchandise belonged to another party, to whom it had been actually delivered by the defendant. This evidence was introduced by the plaintiff himself. His cause of action against the defendant immediately arose upon this categorical denial of any right or interest of the plaintiff in the merchandise.

[2] The point is made by appellant that the court failed to find in terms upon the plea of the statute of limitations, which was a material issue in the case, and that it is not sufficient to find facts from which the bar of the statute may be inferred, citing the case of Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 513, 12 Pac. 570, in support of this contention. While it is true that the judgment in that case was reversed, the reversal was not had upon this ground, and later cases considerably weaken the force of what is said in the opinion in that case upon this point. In Water Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 598, 14 Pac. 379, there was no finding in terms upon the plea of the statute; but the court said that:

"Where 'probative facts are found, and the court can declare that the ultimate facts necessarily result from the facts which are found,' the finding is sufficient."

This principle was again announced in McCray v. Burr, 125 Cal. 636, 58 Pac. 203; and in Woodham v. Cline, 130 Cal. 497, 62 Pac. 398, it was said:

"It is not necessary that the court find expressly as to the statute of limitations, where the facts found or admitted show that the action is not barred."

We take it that the same principle must apply where the facts found show that the action is barred. And in the case last mentioned the court also said that:

"A party cannot be heard to complain of the absence of a finding upon a material issue if the finding must have been against him upon the record as presented."

[3] It is quite evident from the present record that the trial court made the findings above recited in response to the issue of the statute of limitations; and it would be idle for this court to reverse the judgment for the purpose of requiring the trial court to make a formal finding in terms upon the bar of the statute, when the fact of the bar is plainly covered by the findings as made. Such a reversal would be purely upon technical grounds, and out of harmony with the trend of recent decisions made under the authority of constitutional amendments designed to affect matters of procedure of the kind now under consideration.

In view of our conclusion upon this point, it is unnecessary to discuss other contentions made by the appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

McCREARY v. TORONTO MIDWAY OIL CO., Limited, et al. (Civ. 1746.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸112(1) — LABOR ON OIL WELL—STATUTE.
Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, subd. 2, as amended by St. 1911, p. 1313, giving persons who perform labor in any mining claim a lien, is only statute on mechanics' liens applicable to an oil well.

2. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸114—CLAIM.
So far as a mining lien is concerned, claimant's case can be no stronger than is set forth in his claim of lien.

3. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸114 — COMPLIANCE WITH LAW.
Though all provisions of lien law are to be liberally construed to protect and promote legitimate interests of laborers and materialmen, there must be substantial compliance with law to enforce remedy against property.

4. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸114—CLAIM.
Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, claim for lien on oil well, totally omitting to allege claimant performed manual labor thereon, does not support judgment foreclosing lien.

5. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸113—CLAIM OF SUPERINTENDENT.
Claim for lien of superintendent of oil well as such is not subject to lien, not coming within Code Civ. Proc. § 1187.

6. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸114 — CLAIM — PREMATURE FILING.
Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, claim for lien filed while claimant was still employed on work, as shown by allegations, was premature, and conferred no right of lien.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by F. E. McCreary against the Toronto Midway Oil Company, Limited, the Pioneer Midway Oil Company, and others. From judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying motion for new trial, the Pioneer Midway Oil Company and others appeal. Judgment and order reversed.

Edmund Tauzsky, of San Francisco, and George E. Whitaker and T. N. Harvey, both of Bakersfield, for appellants. S. Wyman Smith, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was to foreclose a mechanic's lien, and the appeal is from the judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Respondent has made no appearance in this court, and it is fair to assume that he has abandoned the case. His attorney in the court below died after the appeal was taken, and respondent failed to secure other counsel to represent him. The points made here for a reversal seem to have been urged at the trial and on the motion for a new trial, and we regret that we have not been furnished with the views of respondent and of the trial judge on the questions herein presented. However, we have given the record careful examination, and we are satisfied that respondent's claim for lien cannot be maintained.

The second subdivision of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1313), gives persons who perform labor in any mining claim a lien for the value of the labor done, and it provides that the superintendent shall be considered the agent of the owner for the purposes of the Mechanic's Lien Act.

[1] This is the only statute on the subject applicable to an oil well. Berentz v. Belmont Oil Mining Co., 148 Cal. 577, 84 Pac. 47, 113 Am. St. Rep. 308. Plaintiff in his claim of lien stated:

"That since May 1, 1911, the claimant has been employed continuously by the Toronto Midway Oil Company, Limited, and is still so employed, and no part of claimant's salary has been paid since March, 1912, and that the claimant at all times since the 1st day of April, 1912, up to date, has been employed continuously by the Toronto Midway Oil Company, Limited, as superintendent of the oil operations of the Toronto Midway Oil Company, Limited."

[2] It is to be observed that nothing therein indicates that he performed manual labor.

It appears that the duties of superintendent were to supervise and direct the oil drilling operations for the purpose of developing and improving the premises. It is true that in his deposition plaintiff testified as follows:

"My duties were looking after the things and handling the properties and in case of fishing jobs or anything like that helping the men at the well. All the men—four men steady and sometimes more—were under me; I hired them and laid them off, seen to and O. K.'d all orders and bills for work and material used in and about the premises. After the well was cemented, I pumped one tower for twelve hours, testing the well to see what it would do. I did this for several days. I had general control of all the property about the lease."

The foregoing language may indicate that he did some actual labor on the mine, but even that was incidental to his main duty, which was of supervision and direction. But we may concede that there is sufficient evidence to show that he did manual labor, and in that respect that there is support for the allegation of the amended complaint, "that as such superintendent he did supervise and direct the oil drilling operations of said company, and in connection with such supervision and direction he performed manual labor." Yet, as far as the lien is concerned, his case can be no stronger than is set forth in his claim of lien, and in that, as we have seen, there is no statement as to manual labor. Section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the claimant must file a claim of lien "containing a statement of his demand after deducting all just credits and offsets, with the name of the owner or reputed owner, if known, also the name of the person by whom he was employed, or to whom he furnished the materials, with a statement of the price, if any, agreed upon for the same and when payable, and of the work agreed to be done and when the same was to be done, if agreed upon, and also a description of the property to be charged with the lien, sufficient for identification."

[3-5] While all the provisions of the lien law are to be liberally construed with a view of protecting and promoting the legitimate interest of the laborer, or materialman, there must, of course, be a substantial compliance with the requirements of the law in order to enforce the remedy against the property. Assuredly, a total omission of the essential element of a lien, the performance of manual labor, leaves the claim too fragile to support any such judgment as was awarded herein. The claim of superintendent, as such, is not subject to lien, since it does not come within the purview of section 1187. Durkheimer v. Copperopolis Copper Co., 55 Or. 37, 104 Pac. 895. We conclude therefore, for the reason stated, that the claim of lien was fatally defective.

[6] We think, also, that the claim of lien was prematurely filed. This was filed at 12:15 p. m. of August 22, 1912; but the claimant declared therein that he was still employed as superintendent, and in his amended complaint he alleged that he was so employed between April 1, 1912, and August 23, 1912, and that his services were concluded on or about August 22d. His employment had not ceased, therefore, before his notice of lien was filed. But the statute, section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, provides that every person save the original contractor shall file his claim of lien within 30 days after he has ceased to labor. This necessarily means that the last day on which he labored must have passed before he can file his claim. His employment having terminated on August 22d, the first day on which he could file his claim was the 23d.

When a claim of lien is prematurely filed, it confers no right for a lien. Davis v. McDonough, 109 Cal. 547, 42 Pac. 450; Santa Monica Lumber & Mill Co. v. Hege, 119 Cal. 376, 51 Pac. 555; Marchant v. Hayes, 120 Cal. 137, 52 Pac. 154; Baker v. Lake Land Canal & Irrigation Co., 7 Cal. App. 482, 94 Pac. 773.

Other considerations which seem to possess merit are called to our attention by appellants, but we think it unnecessary to notice them specifically.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

PEOPLE v. BAKER. (Cr. 447.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⊂⊃159(1)—SALE TO INFANTS.

Though, as concerns Pen. Code, § 397b, declaring the offense of selling intoxicants to persons under 18 sales to minors over that age are legal, they may constitute the offense under Juvenile Court Law, § 21, of doing an act causing or tending to cause a minor to become a delinquent.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⊂⊃159(1)—SALE TO INFANTS.

Sale of beer to minor leading a more or less idle, dissolute, or immoral life, though it was taken from him by another, held to warrant conviction under Juvenile Court Law, § 21, of doing an act causing or tending to cause a minor to become a delinquent.

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⊂⊃159(2)—SALE TO INFANTS—INTENT.

Relative to the offense under Juvenile Court Law, § 21, of doing an act causing or tending to cause a minor to become a delinquent, intent in selling beer to the minor is immaterial.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃372(1) — EVIDENCE — OTHER OFFENSES.

On a prosecution under Juvenile Court Law, § 21, based on sale of beer to a minor, for doing an act tending to cause him to become a delinquent, sales to him in the saloon on prior occasions are admissible to show his tendency to become a delinquent, though not to show the sale complained of.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; George D. Murray, Judge.

Peter Baker was convicted of violation of the Juvenile Court Law, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

James W. Henderson, of Eureka, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. By information filed by the district attorney of Humboldt county it was charged as follows:

"That the said defendant, Peter Baker, did then and there, to wit, in said certain saloon, barroom, and place in said city of Eureka, county of Humboldt, state of California, on said 23d day of December, 1917, willfully, knowingly, and unlawfully sell, furnish, and give to Frank Mahan, who was then and there a minor under the age of 21 years, to wit, of the age of 18 years, intoxicating liquor, to wit, beer. That said act by said defendant, Peter Baker, did then and there manifestly cause, tend to cause, encourage, and contribute to the said Frank Mahan, then and there a minor under the age of 21 years, to wit, of the age of 18 years, to become and remain a person coming within the provisions of section 1 of the Juvenile Court Law of the state of California., to wit, a person under the age of 21 years who habitually uses intoxicating liquors, and who is leading or is in danger of leading an idle, dissolute, lewd, and immoral life; contrary," etc.

Tried by a jury, the verdict was guilty as charged in the information, and defendant was sentenced to pay a fine of $300 and in default of payment to serve imprisonment in the county jail for the period of one day for each $2 of said fine until the same be paid or satisfied. Defendant appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

The following quotation from the defendant's opening brief will obviate the necessity of stating at length the testimony:

"There was sufficient evidence introduced to justify the jury in believing that the defendant sold the two bottles of beer to Frank Mahan, and that Frank Mahan was over the age of 18 and under the age of 21; therefore I do not propose to question those facts. There was sufficient evidence introduced to justify the jury in believing that Frank Mahan was a person likely to become addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors, or who was leading or in danger of leading an idle, dissolute, lewd, or immoral life; therefore I do not propose to question that fact. I make no attack on the credibility of the witnesses for the prosecution, and I shall treat these three facts as abundantly established by the evidence. However, I do propose to question the proposition that there was sufficient evidence to justify the jury that the act of the defendant in selling these two bottles of beer to Frank Mahan caused or tended to cause Frank Mahan to become or remain a person who was leading or in danger of leading an idle, dissolute, lewd, or immoral life, or a person who was likely to become addicted to the use of intoxicating liquor. In doing so I shall refer only to the evidence introduced by the prosecution, and shall take it at its face value, making no attack on its credibility."

The argument that as matter of law the evidence was insufficient to justify the conviction is based upon the following propositions: (1) That the sale of beer to Frank Mahan, a person over the age of 18 and under the age of 21, was lawful under the state liquor law, to wit, section 397b of the Penal Code; (2) the act of selling the beer, in and of itself a lawful act, could only become unlawful under the Juvenile Court Law if it caused or intended to cause Frank Mahan to become a delinquent; (3) the sale of beer to Mahan did not cause or tend to cause him to become or remain a delinquent for the reason that he did not consume even the smallest portion of the beer.

[1] Defendant's attorney contends that because section 397b of the Penal Code makes it a crime to sell intoxicating liquor to a person under the age of 18 years there is an implied right given and it is perfectly lawful to sell such liquor to any person over the age of 18 years, and hence the Juvenile Court Act cannot be given effect without holding that it works the repeal of section 397b. Section 21 of the Juvenile Court Law (Stats. 1915, p. 1246) provides that:

"Any person who shall commit any act or omit the performance of any duty, which act or omission causes or tends to cause or encourage any person under the age of twenty-one years to come within the provisions of any of subdivisions 1 to 13 inclusive of section one of this act, or which act or omission contributes thereto, * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. * * *"

There is no conflict between the two statutes, nor are they irreconcilable. The section of the Penal Code is intended to reach specific offenses, to wit, sales of intoxicating liquors to minors under the age of 18 years. The Juvenile Court Act is designed to protect all persons under the age of 21 years from suffering the consequences of any act which causes or tends to cause or encourages such persons to become addicted to the use of intoxicating liquor or to lead idle, dissolute, or immoral lives. If under certain circumstances it may reasonably be held that selling intoxicating liquor to any person under the age of 21 years might or would have such tendency, the act of selling such liquor comes clearly within the statute and is punishable as a misdemeanor. That this particular act is punishable in a given case under another statute, namely, where the purchaser is a person under the age of 18 years, can in no wise limit or affect the operation of the Juvenile Court Act. It does not follow that, because the selling of intoxicating liquor to a person under the age of 18 years is made a crime, it is therefore lawful under all circumstances to sell such liquor to a person over the age of 18 years and under 21 years. The Penal Code contains many sections denouncing as crimes various acts which when committed upon or with a minor would invariably cause or tend to cause such minor to lead an idle, dissolute, or immoral life. Yet those acts may properly be punishable as crimes independently of their effect as contributing to the delinquency of minors and thus violating the Juvenile Court Law. For instance, the Penal Code makes it a felony to be guilty of lascivious conduct with a minor child. Section 288, Pen. Code. Notwithstanding the existence of such statute, the guilty person may be prosecuted under the Juvenile Court Act because of the tendency of such conduct to cause the minor to lead a dissolute and immoral life.

In the case of the sale of intoxicating liquor to a person under the age of 18, the sale alone, regardless of its consequences, constitutes the crime under section 397b of the Penal Code. But where the sale might not of itself alone constitute the offense denounced by the Juvenile Court Act, the act must be accompanied by circumstances tending to show that it would cause the minor to lead an immoral, idle, or dissolute life. When these circumstances sufficiently appear, an offense is made out different from that referred to in section 397b of the Penal Code and may be punished under the Juvenile Court Act. As we understand defendant's position, he concedes that such is the law.

[2, 3] It is urged, however, that the facts in this case show that the consequences contemplated by the Juvenile Court Act by the sale charged could not have followed, nor could the sale have had any tendency to cause the prosecuting witness, Mahan, to lead an idle, dissolute, or immoral life for the simple reason that he did not even taste of the beer; that all he did was to purchase the two bottles of beer and pass them over to witness McKay immediately after leaving defendant's saloon. If this was all that appeared it might well be doubted whether there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict.

There was evidence that the boy, Frank Mahan, had been under observation by the juvenile court officers for some time; that he was a frequenter of saloons and billiard rooms where the liquor was sold; that he had been in the saloon frequently where defendant was in charge as barkeeper and had purchased and drunk liquor there; that he and another boy had been drinking beer the earlier part of the day charged and that he went to this saloon purposely to purchase more beer with the intention of drinking it; that he put the bottles in his pocket and was on his way to the rendezvous to meet his boy friend when he was accosted by witness McKay, who was in the employ of the district attorney to discover violations of the law, and the bottles were taken from Mahan and were proved to be bottles of beer. It appeared also that Mahan was afterwards adjudged a delinquent under the Juvenile Court Law. He was, in fact, shown to be the very kind of person whom the statute was designed to protect and reform and who by being allowed to purchase beer would be encouraged to drink it and thus contribute to the more or less idle, dissolute, or immoral life he was shown to be leading. The intent moving defendant to sell him the beer is immaterial. It is the effect of selling and the tendency in selling to cause the minor to become a delinquent that the law contemplates, and not the motive or intent of the seller. Under the facts and circumstances here shown we think the jury were justified in reaching the verdict as rendered.

Defendant relies much upon expressions of the court in deciding the case of the People v. De Leon, 170 Pac. 173, in which it is stated that the act or omission of the defendant must amount to "the breach of a definite duty, and is of such nature and tendency as to affect directly the welfare of such minor." Also reliance is placed upon expressions in People v. Bergotini, 172 Cal. 717, 158 Pac. 198, wherein it was said:

"The statute must have contemplated some offense having not merely a possible, but an inevitable, effect upon the minor."

Again:

"If this information were to be upheld it would be impossible to foresee what application juries might make of this law to persons having some remote possible connection with the delinquency or dependency of minors."

These observations of the court must be read in connection with the facts of the cases.

We do not understand the court to hold by the use of the terms "breach of a definite duty" in the De Leon Case, that the accused party must be shown to have violated some duty defined by statute or some particular obligation towards the minor. It may very properly be said that a definite duty is owed by all persons to abstain from doing any act having a tendency to cause a minor to become a delinquent or dependent. The court explains what is meant by the terms referred to in adding that the act must be "of such nature and tendency as to affect directly the welfare of such minor." Where the court, in the Bergotini Case, speaks of an "inevitable effect" which the act must have, the context shows that what is meant is that it is not sufficient to show that the act might have "some remote possible connection with the delinquency or dependency of the minor." We do not think the court intended to hold nor do we think it should be held that the effect of the act complained of must have an absolutely certain and unmistakable tendency to cause the minor to lead an idle, dissolute, or immoral life. The jury, in interpreting the facts, may apply the teachings of human experience. It is common knowledge that minors are susceptible to harmful influences more readily than are adults; that their power to resist such influences and to discriminate between good and evil or to comprehend the subtle effect which yielding to temptation may have upon their lives is much less. The laws of all civilized nations recognize the deficiencies of minors in respect to their mental and moral faculties and have thrown around them the protection which their immature years demand. These laws have always been given the most liberal construction in effectuating their object. The Juvenile Court

Law is one of the more modern devices of our reformatory statutes calculated to conserve and strengthen the moral forces of our youths and to protect them from the dangers and follies attending their immaturity.

The concrete question here is whether or not it may reasonably be said that the sale of beer to this boy, Mahan, in view of his character and habits and associates, would tend to cause him to lead or continue to lead an idle, dissolute, and immoral life. We feel justified in expressing the opinion that such sale did have this tendency.

[4] The prosecuting witness, Mahan, was recalled for further direct examination and the following proceedings occurred:

"Mr. Nelson (District Attorney): Q. Frank, how many times have you been in the Myrtle bar? A. About a dozen times. Mr. Henderson: I object to that, incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and has no bearing upon the particular offense charged here. The Court: The objection is overruled; you may answer. A. About a dozen times. Q. Have you ever purchased and consumed liquor in that saloon? A. Yes, sir. Mr. Henderson: We object to that under the former ruling of the court. The Court: I believe that will be sustained. Mr. Nelson: The object is to show that the last sale, the sale of the two bottles to Frank Mahan, encouraged him to remain a person who was likely to be an habitual user of intoxicating liquors. If we can show the liquor this lad has consumed in this saloon at previous times, I think we are entitled to do that, we are entitled to show that he was a frequenter of this saloon. It all shows his remaining or being encouraged or induced to remain a lad who was habitually or frequently using intoxicating liquors in that saloon or any other saloon. It is for that purpose only. The Court: It is for that particular purpose only? Mr. Nelson: Yes. (Argument.) The Court: It is not offered for the purpose of showing or tending to show that this defendant sold the two bottles of beer to Frank Mahan. It is not offered for that purpose at all. It is simply offered for the purpose of showing that Frank Mahan was addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors, and he would be likely to become a habitual drunkard. Mr. Henderson: I think the purpose of it is to bolster up their case by showing other events and other times, other places. I don't think it is competent. The Court: They are entitled to have it for the purpose of showing that Frank Mahan was a user of intoxicating liquors before the event, they are entitled to have it. Mr. Henderson: Do I understand the court, if the evidence is allowed, it is allowed for just that purpose? The Court: It is offered solely for that purpose, and is admitted solely for that purpose. Mr. Henderson: And only for that purpose? The Court: For that purpose only. Mr. Henderson: I wish to object to the introduction of such evidence even for the limited purpose on the same ground as my previous objection. The Court: Certainly, the objection will be overruled. * * * The jury will understand though from what I have said that the question asked this witness is allowed to be answered by him upon the theory that the evidence might tend to show that this boy was a person who was in danger of becoming a habitual drunkard, and it is offered for that purpose, and for that purpose alone, not offered for the purpose of attempting to prove the main charge in the case, that is that this defendant sold 2 bottles of beer to this witness."

The admissibility of this kind of evidence and the reasons for admitting it in cases arising under the Juvenile Court Act were discussed by Justice Hart in People v. Oliver, 29 Cal. App. 576, 579, 156 Pac. 1005. We think the testimony was for like reasons admissible in the present case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

GERO et al. v. RICHEY et al. (Civ. 1764.)

1. INTEREST ⊜44—DEFERRED PAYMENTS.
Under a contract of sale of land, naming the purchase price and providing that it be paid in certain amounts at specified time, grantors are not entitled to interest on the deferred payments until due, under Civ. Code, § 1917.

2. CUSTOMS AND USAGES ⊜16 — EVIDENCE ⊜461(1)—DEFERRED PAYMENTS—INTEREST—PAROL EVIDENCE.
A contract of sale of land providing for deferred payments in certain amounts at specified times, interest not being mentioned, cannot be shown by parol to have been intended to give grantor interest on the deferred payment, the intent being indicated by the language of the instrument, nor was evidence of custom admissible to so show.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by Kasper Gero and another against W. H. Richey and others. From a judgment, granting only part of the relief demanded, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Ben Berry and George F. McNoble, both of Stockton, for appellants. O. B. Parkinson and Parkinson & Parkinson, all of Stockton, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from a final judgment in favor of plaintiffs for the sum of $226.98, they being dissatisfied with the amount awarded. The controversy is over the question whether they should have been allowed interest on deferred payments under a contract of sale of real property. The matter was presented to the court on a motion to strike out certain portions of the complaint, and there is no objection to the form of the procedure, it being admitted by appellants that:

"The sole point in dispute in the case was and is whether, under the said contract of sale, the plaintiffs, as vendors of the land described in the contract, had a right to collect interest on the deferred payments from the vendees mentioned therein. If they had that right under said contract properly interpreted, the judgment of the lower court ought to be reversed. If they had not that right, the said judgment ought to be affirmed."

Said contract was as follows:

"This agreement, made and entered into this 12th day of October, 1915, by and between Kasper Gero and Margaret Gero (his wife), of the county of San Joaquin, state of California, the parties of the first part, and W. H. Richey, Josie Richey, E. A. Richey, and W. H. Richey, Jr., of the county and state aforesaid, parties of the second part, witnesseth: That the said party of the first part for and in consideration of the covenants and agreements on the part of the said party of the second part hereinafter contained, agrees to sell and convey unto the said party of the second part, and said party of the second part agrees to buy, all of that certain lot or parcel of land situated in the county of San Joaquin, state of California, and being more particularly described as follows, to wit: The west thirty-three (33) acres of the northwest quarter (N. W. ¼) of the northeast quarter (N. E. ¼) of section thirty-three (33), township two (2) north, range eight (8) east, lying north of the county road, containing thirty-three (33) acres more or less for the sum of five thousand eight hundred ($5,800.00) dollars, gold coin of the United States of America, to be paid in the following manner, as follows, to wit: Three hundred fifty ($350.00) dollars upon the execution ond delivery of this agreement, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged; two hundred ($200.00) dollars on or before the 12th day of October, 1916; five hundred ($500.00) dollars on or before October 12, 1917; five hundred ($500.00) dollars on or before October 12, 1918; seven hundred fifty ($750.00) dollars on or before October 12, 1919: one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars on or before October 12, 1920; and the balance of twenty-five hundred ($2,500.00) dollars to be paid on or before October 12, 1921. It is hereby agreed by the parties hereto that upon the payment of the amounts above stated, amounting to five thousand and eight hundred ($5,800.00) dollars, the said parties of the first part agree to execute a bargain and sale deed to the above described property free and clear of all incumbrances, and further agree to furnish to the said parties of the second part a certificate of title or abstract to said property. And it is further understood and agreed that the said parties of the second part shall have the privilege to pay to the said parties of the first part the sum of two hundred ($200.00) dollars at any time upon this agreement, providing that the time the said payments are made that the parties of the second part will pay all interest due on said agreement to that date. And the said parties of the first part agree to accept the full amount of this agreement at any time upon the payment by the parties of the second part of the full amount to the said parties of the first part, and the parties of the first part agree to execute a bargain and sale deed to said property. And the said parties of the second part agree to pay all state and county taxes or assessments, whatsoever nature, which are or may become due on the premises above described. In the event of failure to pay the said installments, or any of them, by the said party of the second part, as said installments shall become due, the said parties of the first part shall be released from all obligations in law or in any equity to convey said property, and the said parties of the second part shall forfeit all right to all payments made upon this agreement. Time shall be the essence of this agreement, and it is understood that the stipulations aforesaid are to apply to and bind the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the respective parties hereto, and that the said parties of the second part are to be let into and have immediate possession, and hold peaceable possession so long as they comply with the terms of this agreement. Upon failure of said parties of the second part to comply with the terms of this agreement, they agree to yield peaceable possession to the said parties of the first part. In witness whereof, the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written."

[1, 2] We are entirely satisfied that the lower court was right in holding that appellants were not entitled to interest on said installments before they became due. This follows from the express agreement of the parties themselves. The contract provides that the consideration for the land is the sum of $5,800, to be paid in the manner specified. There is no element therein of ambiguity or uncertainty. As far as the sum to be paid is concerned, the contract is complete, and there is no room for parol evidence. The effect of such evidence, if permitted to show that the intention of the parties was that an additional sum was to be paid, would be to vary the terms of a written agreement, which needs no addition nor explanation. The statement that $5,800 is the sum to be paid for the land has the same significance as if the parties had provided that said sum and no more was the consideration. The recital of the amount carries, of course, the necessary implication that it is exclusive of any other sum. Other provisions of the contract confirm the view that interest on the deferred payments was not contemplated. For instance, the agreement states that:

"In the event of failure to pay the said installments, or any of them, by the said parties of the second part, as said installments shall become due, said parties shall be released from all obligations," etc.

If interest had been intended, it would have been provided:

"In the event of failure to pay the said installments, or any of them, or any accrued interest thereon, by the said parties of the second part, as said installments and interest shall become due."

Also, the other covenant in reference to the execution of the deed would have read:

"Upon the payment of the amounts above stated, amounting to five thousand and eight hundred dollars, together with interest accrued and unpaid thereon, the said parties of the first part agree to execute," etc.

To interpret the language used by the parties, so as to uphold the contention of appellants, would be to interpolate a covenant into the contract, and to ignore the significance of the terms they have chosen to express their intention. If we may look beyond the contract itself, we find that the decisions in this state uphold the view that, unless the parties to such an agreement provide otherwise, interest is allowed only from the time the debt becomes due. In City of Los Angeles v. City Bank, 100 Cal. 22, 34 Pac. 512, it is said:

"In the absence of an express contract, the law only awards interest upon money from the time it falls due. Civ. Code, § 1917."

This language is quoted with approval in the case of Hayt v. Bentel, 164 Cal. 685, 130 Pac. 432. The principle is recognized, also, in other decisions, among which we find the case of Taber v. Piedmont Height Building Co., 25 Cal. App. 222, 143 Pac. 319, decided by this court.

But the point is made that it inferentially appears that interest was to be allowed on the deferred payments, or, at least, that an inconsistency is created, so as to render parol evidence admissible, by virtue of the provision that the parties of the second part shall have the privilege of paying the sum of $200 at any time, providing that, at the time the said payments are made, they "will pay all interest due on said agreement to that date." This manifestly extended a favor to respondents in allowing smaller partial payments; but, to take advantage of it, they were required to pay whatever interest might be due. It was probably contemplated that some of the installments called for in the former clause of the contract might be delinquent. If so, and they desired to pay only $200 of the consideration at one time, the parties of the second part were also to pay interest on said payment or payments that had become due. This clause must, of course, be construed in connection with what goes before, so as to give effect, if possible, to the language of the whole contract. It should not be given a meaning that will nullify or vary the entire covenant to which we have alluded. We need not quote the familiar rules embodied in the provisions of the Civil Code for the interpretation of written instruments. These rules are all designed to aid in ascertaining the intention of the parties. That the intention was such as we have indicated, we think, follows necessarily from the very language of the instrument.

Of course, if, as appellants contend, "by clerical, misprision, inadvertence, or typist's error, the usual clause reading substantially as follows, 'interest on all deferred payments herein at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum', was left out or omitted from the memorial or typewritten evidence of the contract," under proper proceedings the instrument might have been reformed; but with that consideration we are not concerned in this action. We may add that, if the question involved a loan of money, the case would be governed by the special rule provided in section 1914 of the Civil Code, as follows:

"Whenever a loan of money is made, it is presumed to be made upon interest, unless it is otherwise expressly stipulated at the time in writing."

But, manifestly, we are not dealing with a loan, but with a contract for the sale and purchase of real estate. Nor is there any greater reason for holding that by virtue of section 1917 of the Civil Code appellants are entitled to interest on the deferred payments. That section provides:

"Unless there is an express contract in writing, fixing a different rate, interest is payable on all moneys at the rate of seven per centum per annum after they become due, on any instrument of writing, except a judgment, and on moneys lent, or due on any settlement of account, from the day on which the balance is ascertained, and on moneys received to the use of another and detained from him."

Said deferred payments were not due, they do not involve money lent or due on any settlement of account on which a balance has been ascertained. Assuredly, these terms are so well understood as to require no argument or citation of authority to demonstrate that we have before us no such case.

We think it is equally plain that evidence of custom as to the payment of interest under such circumstances was not admissible. Usage is admissible only as an instrument of interpretation. Subdivision 12, § 1870, Code Civ. Proc.; Loyalton Electric Light Co. v. Cal. Pine Box Co., 22 Cal. App. 75, 133 Pac. 323. Herein the contract needs no extraneous aid, as its express terms plainly provide (1) that the purchase price is $5,800; (2) how and when that amount is to be paid, without mentioning the payment of interest; (3) that upon the payment of said amount the said parties of the first part agree to execute a deed; and (4) that the parties of the second part may have the option to pay the principal in smaller installments, provided that they also pay any interest that may be due. In none of the cases cited by appellants do we find anything opposed to the views herein expressed.

In Wagner v. Eustathiw, 169 Cal. 663, 147 Pac. 561, the contract expressly provided that interest should be paid at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and the court very naturally and properly held that the date of payment of interest would be supplied by custom. The contract, of course, was incomplete in that respect, and the omitted term was therefore added.

In Ehrenstrom v. Phillips (Del. Ch.) 77 Atl. 81, the contract provided that interest should be paid, and also the rate, but omitted to specify the term of payment, whether annually or semiannually. It also recited: "Terms of mortgage to be arranged satisfactorily." The court properly held that it could be shown by parol evidence that the parties intended that the mortgage should be in the usual form providing for the term of payment of interest.

In Burns v. Sennett & Miller, 99 Cal. 363, 33 Pac. 916, the contract was oral and general in its character, and the court held that:

"So far as the offered testimony involved proof of the usage, if any such there were, which entered into a general employment to load or unload a ship, in the absence of a special contract, it should have been admitted."

In Standard American Dredging Company v. Oakland, 30 Cal. App. 237, 157 Pac. 833, this court held that the evidence of usage admitted by the trial court was harmless, even if the ruling was erroneous, and it was said:

"In making its findings, we think the court was justified in disregarding the evidence as to usage, as we infer it did in not making any finding on that question."

The foregoing cases, and others which might be referred to, are illustrative of the familiar practice of allowing evidence of custom to supply an omission from a contract, which contract is incomplete and uncertain; but, for reasons already stated, we do not consider them applicable herein.

While appellants have made an able and interesting argument against the decision of the lower court, we cannot avoid the conclusion that respondents are right in the following contentions:

"(1) The contract in question does not anywhere provide expressly that interest should be paid upon deferred installments of principal as contended by appellants. (2) The contract as concluded is a complete, workable, and unambiguous instrument, which does not require the addition of any terms in regard to interest to enable it to be carried out according to the expressed intention of the parties, and therefore does not require either evidence of usage or implication of law to interpret it or carry it into effect. (3) The contract is a contract for the sale of land, upon which there was, at the time of bringing action, no portion of the principal due and unpaid of which tender in full had not been made to the plaintiff; that under the general principles of law no interest is allowed upon moneys not yet due under such contract, where the contract itself does not provide for interest. (4) The allegations in the complaint to the effect that interest on deferred installments was due under the terms of the contract were therefore in direct conflict with the contract itself, which was set forth in full in the complaint, and were therefore properly stricken out of the complaint as conclusions of law, and also redundant and contradictory to the contract's provisions."

We think the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. ZAVALA. (Cr. 445.)

HOMICIDE ⊂=191 — ACTS OF DECEASED—EVIDENCE.

In trial for homicide, wherein defendant claimed that deceased was always angry and chased everybody away, and when intoxicated would chase his wife away, evidence that wife filed complaint against deceased for assault was not competent proof that deceased at another time had struck defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Francisco Zavala was convicted of murder in the first degree, and from the judgment and order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

H. W. Coale and John R. Cronin, of Stockton, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, the jury fixing the punishment at imprisonment for life in the penitentiary. The appeal is from the judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

In the brief of appellant, while it is stated that there are several grounds demanding a reversal of the case, specific attention is directed to only one, and that possesses no merit whatever. Consideration is invited to the fact that the assistant district attorney introduced in evidence a statement by the defendant made a day after the homicide in which the following questions and answers appear:

"Were you over in the brewery yesterday evening or the afternoon? Yes; I was at the brewery; the man at the brewery struck me here in the eye. What did he hit you for? He is a man he is always angry; he chases everybody away; he even chases—whenever he is under the influence of liquor, he even chases his wife away from there."

It is claimed by appellant that he afterwards sought to prove that the portion thereof relating to the brewery was in fact true, and for this purpose called George Frerichs, city recorder of the city of Tracy, Ernest Gieseke, constable of Tulare county, wherein Tracy is located, and George Chidester, constable of Stockton township. The method by which appellant sought this corroboration is shown by the following question addressed to the said city recorder:

"Mr. Frerichs, has Mrs. Schmidt, wife of Henry Schmidt, ever filed a complaint in your court against Henry Schmidt for disturbing her peace and assaulting her there at any time?"

In other words, the position is that testimony that the wife had filed a complaint against Schmidt charging him with assaulting her is evidence that Schmidt at a different time had struck the defendant. Of course, the statement of the proposition is a sufficient refutation of its soundness. It is equally apparent that the reputation of the witness could not thus be assailed.

In justice to counsel for appellant it is fair to say that they content themselves with merely stating the contention. They make no argument, as indeed no argument is possible, in support of the admissibility of such incompetent and irrelevant testimony.

We have examined the record sufficiently to be entirely satisfied that the defendant was justly convicted and that no error was committed.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN P. J.; HART, J.

DOUGHTY v. MOORS et al. (Civ. 1806.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⟸398(3)—REPRESENTATION —SOLE OWNER.
As against the purchaser of the real and personal property of an insolvent corporation, the right of the corporation to the portion of the purchase price not paid to the corporation is not affected by the fact that stockholder who, with his wife, owned all the stock of the corporation had previously agreed with the purchaser that the purchaser might pay such portion of the price by assuming and paying indebtedness of such stockholder and another.
2. CONSPIRACY ⟸6—INJURY.
To support action for conspiracy to defraud a corporation, there must be injury or damage to the corporation as a result of the conspiracy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by E. W. Doughty, as trustee of the Electric & Garage Company, a corporation, a bankrupt, against Frank Moors and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wallace Rutherford, U'Ren & Beard, and E. L. Webber, all of Napa, for appellant. George Clark, of San Francisco, for respondents.

HART, J. A demurrer, interposed to plaintiff's amended complaint, was sustained, plaintiff declined further to amend and judgment was entered in favor of defendants, from which judgment plaintiff appeals.

The allegations of the amended complaint are: That the Electric & Garage Company was a corporation. That C. W. Crouch "was the owner of a large majority of, and all but one of, the issued and outstanding shares of the capital stock of" said corporation, "and he was its president and general manager. That the remaining shares" stood upon the books of the corporation in the name of S. Grace Crouch, who was the secretary of said corporation and the wife of said C. W. Crouch. That on the 18th of October, 1915, certain creditors of the corporation filed, in the United States District Court, a petition in involuntary bankruptcy, and that, on the 3d of January, 1916, said court made an order adjudging said corporation a bankrupt and referred the matter to the referee in bankruptcy. That on the 15th day of February, 1916, the creditors elected and appointed plaintiff as trustee of the estate of said corporation, which action was approved by the referee, and plaintiff duly qualified as such trustee. It is alleged: That on the 19th day of June, 1915, and for more than one year prior thereto, the corporation was the owner of certain real estate in the town of Calistoga, Napa county, and of certain personal property, consisting of machinery, tools, etc., used by the corporation in carrying on the business of an automobile repair shop and garage. That said corporation, prior to the 19th day of June, 1915, entered into an agreement with said defendant Frank Moors, whereby the corporation agreed to sell and said Moors agreed to buy said real and personal property for the sum of $9,192.93. That said Moors agreed to assume and pay a mortgage upon said real property amounting to $3,692.93, and to pay the balance of $5,500 in cash. "That on the 19th of June, 1915, and for more than six months prior thereto, the defendants C. W. Crouch and J. R. Clark were indebted to the James H. Goodman & Co. Bank" of the city of Napa "in the sum of $1,500." That on or about said date "all of the defendants herein combined and conspired to defraud the Electric & Garage Company and to prevent" its creditors from collecting their claims, "in this: That on or about said date said Frank Moors, C. W. Crouch, and J. R. Clark entered into an agreement whereby Frank Moors agreed to assume and pay to" said bank said sum of $1,500 "as part consideration to be paid for said real and personal property belonging to" said corporation, and said Moors did thereafter pay said sum to said bank. "That by reason of said agreements and the payment of said indebtedness, it was understood and agreed among said defendants that said Frank Moors would be released from the payment of $1,500 in cash to said" corporation "to fulfill his said agreement of the purchase of said property * * *" for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of the corporation "and to have the said indebtedness of J. R. Clark and C. W. Crouch paid and canceled with the proceeds of said real property so belonging to the" corporation. "That at the time said deed to said real property and the bill of sale of said personal property were delivered to said Frank Moors, said Moors, first, delivered to C. W. Crouch two checks aggregating the sum of $1,850; second, assumed and agreed to pay and thereafter did pay said note of $1,500 due by said C. W. Crouch and J. R. Clark; third, surrendered to C. W. Crouch and S. Grace Crouch their promissory note for $2,000; and, fourth, assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage on said real property as and in fulfillment of his agreement to pay said sum of $9,192.03 for said real and personal property." It is next alleged: That on or about the 23d day of June, 1915, the corporation executed and C. W. Crouch, as president and manager, delivered to the defendant Moors a deed to said real property and a bill of sale transferring said personal property, "and said defendant Frank Moors ever since has claimed to be the owner of said real and personal property. That said defendants, on or about said 19th day of June, 1915, and prior thereto, had reasonable cause to know and believe that the said" corporation "was insolvent, and had such knowledge thereof as would put a reasonable man upon inquiry." That by reason of the above-stated facts the corporation "was deprived of the sum of $1,500 which the said Frank Moors should have paid in cash" to said corporation as part of the consideration for said real and personal property, "and by reason of said transaction the creditors of said" corporation "have been deprived and defrauded of the said sum of $1,500" and judgment was prayed for that amount.

The demurrer interposed to the amended complaint specified all the grounds allowed by the code, but respondents particularly rely upon the grounds of uncertainty and ambiguity, the improper joining of parties defendant, and the want of facts to constitute a cause of action.

[1, 2] The assumption upon which the action proceeds is that the sale of the corporation's property to Moors constituted a perfectly valid transaction—that is to say, that the sale was made in good faith and free from any element of fraud as against the corporation or its creditors or stockholders—and, therefore, the essential gist of the action is that the payment by Moors, as a part of the consideration for the purchase of the said property, of the private obligation of Crouch and Clark to the bank was the culmination of a fraudulent conspiracy between all three defendants to defraud the insolvent corporation and its creditors of so much of its assets as is represented by the amount so paid by Moors to the bank. But, assuming it to be true, as the complaint charges, that the transaction whereby the individual obligation of Crouch and Clark was extinguished by Moors out of the money due the corporation for the property sold by it to Moors was fraudulent or conceived and executed by the three defendants for the purpose of defrauding the corporation and its creditors, still it is clear that the complaint fails to state a cause of actionable fraud against the defendants. There is no allegation showing that the corporation or its creditors suffered any injury or damage as the result of the alleged fraudulent act of the defendants. The original contract—that is, the contract whereby Moors purchased the property of the corporation from the corporation itself—being in all respects valid, Moors is still indebted to the corporation for the unpaid balance of the purchase price of the property. The fact, if it be a fact, that out of the money due the corporation from him for the property he paid the private debt of Crouch and Clark, upon an understanding and agreement between him and Crouch and Clark that he would thus be released from the payment to the corporation of the amount so paid, cannot have the effect of releasing him from the full payment to the corporation of the balance due on the purchase price of the property. Indeed, the Crouches and Armstrong, not being parties to the contract of sale between Moors and the corporation, could not release Moors from any part of his obligation to the corporation. This proposition is not disputed by the plaintiff. Nor does the fact that Moors paid the individual obligation of Crouch and Clark out of the money he owed to the corporation, even though said transaction was initiated and carried out by the three defendants with the intent thus to defraud the corporation or its creditors of the sum of money so paid, make Crouch and Clark either jointly with Moors or otherwise liable to the corporation or its creditors for said money. As already suggested, to sustain the action as against the defendants upon the theory that the superseding agreement—that is, the agreement whereby Moors agreed to and did pay the individual debt of Crouch and Clark as a part of the consideration for the sale to and purchase by him of the corporation's property—was the result of a fraudulent conspiracy to deprive the corporation or its creditors of money belonging to it and constituting a part of the assets of the insolvent concern to which its creditors were entitled, it is necessary to show that the corporation or its creditors were damaged by that transaction, and, as stated, the complaint does not make such a showing. It is not alleged that Moors is himself insolvent, and that, therefore, the debt he owes to the corporation cannot be paid by him, or that the enforcement of its payment by him through the appropriate judicial proceeding cannot be had. And as to him it may be added that nowhere does the complaint allege that any demand upon him for the payment of the full amount of the balance he owes the corporation on the purchase price of the property was ever made, or that he ever refused to pay the corporation all that was coming to it from him.

Our conclusion is that the complaint fails to state a cause of action against any of the defendants; that, at any rate, the defendants, Crouch and Clark are improperly joined with Moors in the action; and that, therefore, the order sustaining the demurrer to the complaint cannot be disturbed.

The foregoing considerations are decisive of this appeal and render unnecessary consideration of other points made against the complaint upon the special grounds of uncertainty and ambiguity.

The judgment is affirmed.

CORPORATIONS ⟸398(3) — SOLE OWNER OF STOCK — INSOLVENCY — SALE OF PROPERTY —PURCHASER'S LIABILITY.

Where one stockholder, with his wife, owns all the stock of an insolvent corporation, that purchaser of real and personal property of the corporation pays private debts of the stockholder upon agreement that such payment would release the purchaser to the extent thereof from his obligation to the corporation for the purchase price, does not affect his liability for the full purchase price, unaffected by such payment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by E. W. Doughty, as trustee of the Electric & Garage Company, bankrupt, against Frank Moors and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wallace Rutherford, U'Ren & Beard, and E. L. Webber, all of Napa, for appellant. George Clark, of San Francisco, for respondents.

HART, J. A demurrer to the amended complaint filed in this action was sustained, and, plaintiff declining further to amend, judgment was entered in favor of defendants, from which judgment plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

We have this day filed an opinion affirming the judgment in an action, Civil No. 1806, wherein the plaintiff here was plaintiff and Frank Moors, J. R. Clark, and C. W. Crouch were defendants. 175 Pac. 273. The allegations of the amended complaints in both actions are the same, except that in lieu of the averments in No. 1806 respecting an indebtedness to the James H. Goodman & Co. Bank, the following is set forth in the case under review: "That on said 19th day of June, 1915, and for more than six months prior thereto, the defendants C. W. Crouch and S. Grace Crouch were indebted to the defendant Frank Moors in the sum of $2,000 upon a promissory note made and executed by them"; that in April, 1915, "the defendant E. L. Armstrong, by an instrument in writing, guaranteed the payment to said Frank Moors" of said promissory note; that on or about said 19th day of June, 1915, the defendants entered into an agreement whereby said Frank Moors canceled and surrendered to the defendants Crouch said promissory note and released the defendant Armstrong from his guaranty to pay said note, "and all of said transactions were had for the purpose of enabling said Frank Moors to surrender to said C. W. Crouch and S. Grace Crouch their said promissory note in his favor as a part of and in part settlement of the purchase price to be paid by him for said real and personal property, and to enable said Frank Moors to apply said sum of $2,000 so due him towards a settlement of the amount he agreed to pay for said property." Judgment was prayed for the sum of $2,000, the amount of said promissory note, and interest.

The demurrer to the amended complaint was similar to that filed in action Civil No. 1806.

This case was submitted for decision on the briefs filed in Civil No. 1806, supra. As stated, the above allegation makes the only difference between the two cases, so far as the complaint is concerned. The note which it is herein alleged was canceled by Moors as part of the consideration for the purchase of the corporation's property is, so far as the complaint shows, the individual note of Crouch and his wife, Armstrong being a guarantor of the payment of said note.

What we have said in Civil No. 1806 applies with equal pertinency and force to the instant case. It is obvious that the complaint does not show that the Crouches and Armstrong are liable to the corporation or the trustee, representing both the insolvent corporation and its creditors, for the debt or any part thereof which Moors may owe the corporation for the property bought by him from it. As is said in the opinion in Civil No. 1806 of the transaction therein considered, so it is to be said of the transaction upon which this action is based, that, while it may be assumed to be true that Crouch, his wife, Armstrong, and Moors were guilty of a conspiracy to defraud the corporation and its creditors by the extinguishment of the note in question here, out of money due from Moors to the corporation as the consideration for the sale to him (Moors) of the property of the corporation, yet there is nothing in the complaint disclosing that damage resulted to the corporation or the creditors thereof or to the plaintiff by reason of said transaction. The obligation of Moors to pay his full indebtedness to the corporation created by his purchase of the property still exists, and, so far as the complaint shows to the contrary, he is or was, at the time of the commencement of this action, solvent and able to meet it. It is very clear that his payment of the note referred to in the complaint, even if made under an agreement with the makers and the guarantor for the purpose of defrauding or with the fraudulent intent to deprive the corporation and its creditors of the sum required to extinguish the obligation, cannot have the effect of making the Crouches and Armstrong jointly with Moors or otherwise liable to the corporation or to the trustee in bankruptcy, who is vested with the legal title to all the insolvent corporation's assets, for the debt due from Moors to the corporation arising by reason of his purchase of the latter's property. In other words, the fact that Moors might have paid the private debts of a stockholder of the corporation upon the agreement between him and such stockholder that such payment would release him to the extent thereof from his obligation to the corporation would not have the effect of binding the stockholder to said obligation, in the absence of an agreement to that effect by all the parties, including the corporation itself. As to Moors, the complaint does not show that he has ever refused to pay the corporation or the trustee all that is due from him on the purchase price of the property. But we have sufficiently stated our views of the situation as it is presented in the complaints in both actions in the opinion in Civil No. 1806.

We doubt not that the demurrer to the complaint in this action was properly sustained on the grounds that no cause of action is stated against any of the defendants, and that there is an improper joinder of parties defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

PEOPLE v. OUBRIDGE. (Cr. 789.)

WITNESSES ⟸337(5) — IMPEACHMENT — DEFENDANTS.

The defendant, as a witness, is subject to the same rules for testing his credibilty before the jury, by impeachment or otherwise, as any other witness, and may be asked if ever convicted of felony without violating Pen. Code, § 1025, relating to evidence of previous conviction, and section 1323 limiting defendant's cross-examination.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Harry Oubridge was convicted of attempting to pass a fictitious check, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Fred W. Moore, Jr., of Oakland, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was charged by information with the crime of attempting to pass a fictitious check and with a prior conviction of forgery. He was tried, convicted, and sentenced under the indeterminate sentence law.

The only point urged for reversal is that the court erred in permitting the district attorney to ask defendant, who had taken the stand in his own behalf, upon cross-examination if he had ever been convicted of a felony. It has been held that:

"Where a defendant, though admitting the charge of prior conviction upon arraignment, becomes a witness in his own behalf, he may be asked if he has ever been convicted of a felony. Such conviction may be proved as affecting his credibilty as a witness." People v. Martini, 21 Cal. App. 743, 132 Pac. 1069.

When the defendant offers himself as a witness he becomes subject to the same rules for testing his credibility before the jury, by impeachment or otherwise, as any other witness. In the case of People v. Oliver, 7 Cal. App. 601, 95 Pac. 172, the court said:

"It is clear that it was not the intention of the Legislature, by the re-enactment of section 1025 (Penal Code), any more than it was by the enactment of section 1323, to give to a defendant the opportunity of making any statements upon his direct examination that he might choose, and preclude the prosecution from testing the truth or falsity of such statements, or to prevent the people from impeaching the defendant's testimony by the same rules applied to the testimony of other witnesses."

Judgment and order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HART. (Cr. 805.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Aug. 16, 1918.)

CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1043(2)—EVIDENCE—GENERAL OBJECTION.

A general objection to the admissibility of impeaching evidence is insufficient for review of a specific objection to the questions.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Frank T. Hart was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Edward W. Parker, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant together with Stanley J. Fink and Gus Hinos were charged by information with the crime of robbery. The charge against Hinos was dismissed. Fink pleaded guilty, while the defendant pleaded not guilty, relying upon an alibi. After trial he was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment. This is an appeal from that judgment and from orders denying defendant's motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment.

The evidence amply supports the verdict. During the trial however, the prosecution called a witness to the stand for the purpose of impeaching Stanley J. Fink, a witness for the defendant; and as the proper foundation for the question, as provided in section 2052 of the Code of Civil Procedure, had not been laid, the defendant asserts that the judgment of conviction should be reversed. This might or might not be true if the defendant had interposed a seasonable or any objection to the question; but while he stated that he objected to the question he did not give or attempt to give the grounds of his objection, nor did he move to strike out the answer to the question. A general objection to the admissibility of evidence is insufficient. People v. Nelson, 85 Cal. 421, 24 Pac. 1006. A party objecting to evidence must specify the grounds of his objection, and if he does not, there is no error in overruling it. People v. Chee Kee, 61 Cal. 404.

Appellant makes no other point warranting special mention.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MAGINESS v. WESTERN SECURITIES CORPORATION et al. (Civ. 1839.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 13, 1918. On Petition for Rehearing, Sept. 12, 1918; Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 10, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⊂=116—SALE OF STOCK—FRAUD.

Misrepresentations, by stock salesmen, as to amount of such stock subscribed, and statements that wealthy and influential men had each subscribed for $10,000 worth of stock, whereas they had only one share which was unpaid for, were fraudulent as to purchasers of stock on strength thereof.

2. CORPORATIONS ⊂=117 — SALE OF STOCK — RESCISSION.

Under Civ. Code, § 1691, subd. 1, exacting prompt action in case of rescission, buyer of stock held precluded from rescinding his contract on ground of fraud, where action to rescind was brought more than six months after the discovery of the fraud and of about ten months after knowledge of a part of the fraud and of his right to rescind, where there was no legal justification for such delay.

3. CORPORATIONS ⊂=117 — SALE OF STOCK — RESCISSION.

Where a person who purchased stock in reliance on misrepresentations, after having discovered the fraud, discharged a note he had given in payment of stock, and entered into new contract with agents of the corporation for the resale of his stock, he ratified his contract of purchase of stock and could not thereafter rescind.

4. EQUITY ⊂=65(2)—MAXIMS—CLEAN HANDS.

Where buyer of stock, after discovering fraud, makes contract for resale and brings action for rescission, equity will regard his claim for relief with disfavor, since he is endeavoring to impose upon an innocent person the burden of fraud.

5. CORPORATIONS ⊂=117—SALE OF STOCK—RESCISSION—RESTORATION.

Buyer of stock suing for return of consideration and cancellation of notes is not entitled to judgment, where he did not rescind contract prior to commencement of action by restoring whatever of value he had received, as required by Civ. Code, § 1691, subd. 2.

6. CORPORATIONS ⊂=117—SALE OF STOCK—RESCISSION—TENDER.

Where purchase of stock is complete, though certificate has not been delivered to buyer, buyer, to effect rescission, must offer to surrender and have canceled his interest in the stock upon condition of similar action by seller as to note given in payment for stock.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by S. H. Maginess against the Western Securities Corporation and others. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. T. Hatfield, of Sacramento, for appellant. Dunn & Brand, of Sacramento, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. [1] The appeal is from a judgment of nonsuit. From the complaint it appears: That on August 16, 1912, plaintiff purchased 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the California Guarantee Life & Accident Insurance Company, paying therefor the sum of $2,000, and thereafter received the certificate of stock. That subsequently, on November 23, 1912, he entered into an agreement for the purchase of 3,200 additional shares at the rate of $2.50 per share, and, in payment therefor, he executed and delivered to said company two promissory notes, one for $3,000, and the other for $5,000. That on the 21st day of July, 1913, plaintiff paid off the $3,000 note and executed a new note for $5,000 on the same day and delivered it to said company, which note is still outstanding. By the action plaintiff sought the return of the $5,000 paid by him and the cancellation of the said note for $5,000 and of the balance due on his subscription. The ground for his claim is found in the allegation of certain false and fraudulent statements and representations made by the agents of the company, relying upon which plaintiff was induced to make said purchases. It is not disputed that the facts alleged constitute "fraud" as that term is contemplated by the Code and the decisions of the courts. As to that, the allegations and proof are sententiously stated by appellant as follows:

"They (the agents) represented that the company was fully organized. Capital stock, $350,000. All but $40,000, actually sold. Large numbers of wealthy, influential men, subscribers and directors with $10,000, stock each. Begin business early in 1913. Very profitable. Facts established: Never had $250,000 of stock subscribed. Never did begin business. Never earned or paid a dividend. The actually wealthy men reputed stockholders and directors had only one share each and never paid for that."

It is apparent that some of the representations were mere matters of opinion and could hardly constitute the basis of rescission of the contract, but misrepresentation of existing facts was sufficiently alleged and shown to make a case of gross and wicked imposition and fraud. The agents seem to have acted in the transaction with unconscionable greed, and the directors, who were men of wealth and prominence in the community, by the pretext and artifice of a mere nominal investment and the assumption of an important relation to the company became parties to a questionable practice that was likely to result, and which undoubtedly did result, in loss and injustice to many innocent purchasers of stock. We believe these directors had no intention of participating in any fraud, but the fact of their connection with the company induced others to invest money which they could illy afford to lose. Men of high standing in the community should be reluctant to thus lend the prestige of their names and influence to an interprise in which they have not sufficient confidence to risk their own money. In consequence of similar action on the part of prominent men in this state, many unsophisticated persons have been led to embark, to their financial loss, in unsafe and fraudulent schemes which have had the alluring recommendation of such persuasive indorsement.

However, notwithstanding the nefarious conduct of the agents and the moral wrong suffered by plaintiff, there are several reasons why the lower court could not legally grant them any relief in this action and why we are constrained to uphold the decision of the trial judge. They were stated in the motion for nonsuit, and some of these grounds we proceed to notice.

[2] First, it may be said that the plaintiff failed to comply with the requirement of subdivision 1 of section 1691 of the Civil Code exacting prompt action in case of rescission. To take advantage of this remedy, he must act immediately when he discovers the facts that entitle him to rescind and he is aware of his right to rescission. He cannot speculate upon the chance of profit notwithstanding the fraud, and thereafter rescind the contract. He is put to his election whether to stand upon the contract, and, if he delays in making his choice, it must be amply excused, or else he is deemed to have waived his right to have the contract avoided. The allegations of plaintiff's complaint show that he did not comply with the established rule in that respect, and no facts are averred that relieve him from compliance. He alleges that on the 1st day of July, 1913, he was convinced that the representations as to the solvency and efficiency of the said company were false in fact. It also appears that as early as March of that year he became dissatisfied with his transaction and "notified said defendant, California Guarantee Life & Accident Insurance Company, that he would not receive and pay for said undelivered shares of stock, and that any right he might have in that behalf would be abandoned by him, and that he desired to abandon and rescind his right to such shares and to receive back his said notes."

If he had maintained this position and brought his action immediately, his attitude might have received favorable consideration at the hands of the court. But on July 21st he paid off one of the notes, and, with knowledge of the fraud and his right to rescind, he executed a new note for $5,000 and entered into another agreement with the agents for a resale of his stock. Then the action was not brought until January 31, 1914, a delay of more than six months after the full discovery of the fraud and of about ten months after knowledge of a part of the fraud and of his right to rescind. There is no attempt in the pleadings to excuse this delay, and we find no legal justification in the evidence. It is true that plaintiff testified that he had communications with the president of the company and with other interested parties who explained why the company had not begun business, and who promised and assured plaintiff that this condition would soon be remedied. But these conversations cannot be considered to excuse his delay in rescission for the reason that they did not relate to the facts that constituted the basis of this action. The fraud consisted in the misrepresentations as to the existing condition of the company, and not as to its future operation. It is true that there is a reference in the complaint to a promise that the company would begin business at a certain time, but there is no allegation that this was made with the intention of deceiving plaintiff. It cannot therefore be regarded as an element of the fraud, and it is quite apparent that any renewed promise as to that matter could not legally excuse plaintiff from promptly deciding whether he would rescind in consequence of the false statements of fact that induced the contract.

The necessity for prompt rescission with the alternative of the loss of the right or privilege is declared and illustrated in a large number of cases, many of which are cited by counsel herein. One of the latest is Garstang v. Skinner, 165 Cal. 721, 134 Pac. 329, wherein it was held:

"That notice of facts and circumstances which would put a man of ordinary prudence and intelligence on inquiry is, in the eyes of the law, equivalent to knowledge of all the facts a reasonably diligent inquiry would disclose."

This case is stronger than that in so much as it appears from the complaint herein that plaintiff had actual knowledge of the fraud and of his right to rescind many months before suit was brought.

In Marten v. Burns Wine Co., 99 Cal. 355, 33 Pac. 1107, it was held that a delay of three months was too long.

In the case of Bailey v. Fox, 78 Cal. 389, 20 Pac. 868, it was held that:

"A delay of four months after the discovery of fraud in a partnership contract, during which business is carried on as usual under the contract, is fatal to a claim of right to rescind the contract for the fraud."

"A party cannot wait until time shall determine whether the contract sought to be rescinded turned out to be good or bad." Hammond v. Wallace, 85 Cal. 522, 24 Pac. 837, 20 Am. St. Rep. 239.

Moreover, at least as to the second cause of action, we must entirely eliminate the consideration of said fraudulent representations. This follows for the reason that the complaint shows that, after the contract was executed, plaintiff, with knowledge of the fraud, and being under no disability, voluntarily acquiesced in and ratified said contract and entered into a new agreement with said agents for the resale of said stock. The particular allegations in question are:

"That plaintiff paid off and discharged said note maturing July 1, 1913, amounting to $3,000, and received back said note. That plaintiff entered into a new agreement with said defendant, California Guarantee Life & Accident Company, and its agents, Morgan, Allen, and Whisner, whereby said agents Morgan and Allen were to sell and dispose of plaintiff's rights to said stock and the whole thereof and to continue said original agreement for the subscription for such stock provided plaintiff would execute a new note, dated July 21, 1913, for $5,000, payable on or before March 1, 1914, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from date until paid, and that said Whisner, representing himself to be in control of said note, agreed to withhold said new note from sale until the 1st day of December, 1913. That plaintiff accepted such proposition, and on the 21st day of July, 1913, executed and delivered to said agents for California Guarantee Life & Accident Insurance Company, his promissory note for $5,000, payable on or before March 1, 1914, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from date until paid, and the same is now outstanding and unpaid."

The controlling principle in such a situation was carefully considered in Oppenheimer v. Clunie, 142 Cal. 313, 75 Pac. 899, and the court quoted with approval the clear enunciation of the doctrine in section 897 of Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence that:

"If, after discovering the untruth of the representations, he (the party defrauded) conducts himself with reference to the transaction as though it were still subsisting and binding, he thereby waives all benefit and relief from the misrepresentations."

The court also approved of the following from Grymes v. Sanders, 93 U. S. 55, 23 L. Ed. 798:

"Where a party desires to rescind upon the ground of mistake or fraud, he must, upon the discovery of the facts, at once announce his purpose and adhere to it. If he be silent and continue to treat the property as his own, he will be held to have waived the objection, and will be conclusively bound by the contract as if the mistake or fraud had not occurred."

[3] Here, as already seen, the plaintiff was more than silent. He virtually admitted the validity of the contract, and he deliberately entered into another agreement upon the basis and understanding that he was the owner of the stock. He thereby elected to stand upon the original contract and he could not thereafter disaffirm and rescind it. If the remedy of rescission was still available, it must necessarily be confined to said agreement of July 21, 1913. But as to that agreement there is an entire absence of an allegation of any fact constituting fraud. It appears to have been an entirely voluntary arrangement, plaintiff executing the note upon the consideration that the agents would sell the stock and divide the profits with the former. No false statements are charged, nor is it alleged that any promise was made with the intention of deceiving or defrauding plaintiff. In fact, we can perceive therein no ground for rescission.

[4] It may be said, further, that the conduct of plaintiff in entering into said contract for the sale of the stock after he had knowledge of the financial insecurity of the company would incline a court of equity to look with disfavor upon his claim for relief. His conduct in reference to the whole transaction must be free from reproach if he expects a court of conscience to restore him to his former condition. Of course, a litigant does not meet the requirement of "clean hands" where it appears that he is endeavoring to impose upon an innocent person the burden of the fraud which he himself has suffered. If his conduct has been inequitable in reference to the same subject-matter, his plea to a court of equity will fall upon deaf ears.

[5] Aside from the foregoing, it is clear that plaintiff was not entitled to judgment for the reason that he failed to effect a rescission prior to commencing suit. Indeed, the complaint itself is totally insufficient in its failure to set forth such allegation, and the evidence does not supply the defect.

Subdivision 2 of section 1691 of the Civil Code provides that:

"He must restore to the other party, everything of value which he has received from him under the contract; or must offer to restore the same, upon condition that such party shall do likewise, unless the latter is unable or positively refuses to do so."

The only reference to restoration in the complaint is found in this allegation:

"Plaintiff comes now and tenders return of the certificates for 1,000 shares of stock issued to him as set forth herein and consents to the cancellation of all agreements and obligations created or intended to be created hereunder."

In the second count there is no reference whatever to any offer to restore.

It has, however, been settled by the decisions of the Supreme Court that, with the exceptions specified in said section of the Code, rescission must be effected prior to the commencement of the action, and that such rescission must be alleged in the complaint and, if denied, it must be proved at the trial. The early case of Gifford v. Carvill, 29 Cal. 589, considers the question at length, and it was held that, in order to justify a court in setting aside the sale of certain mining stock for fraud, it was necessary for the vendee to allege that he "rescinded the contract and returned or made a tender of the stock," unless it appeared that the stock was of no value. It was further held that to excuse the absence of such allegation as to rescission the burden was upon the vendee to allege and show that the stock was valueless.

In Herman v. Haffenegger, 54 Cal. 161, the complaint seems to have been sufficient in this respect, but it was held that the proof failed to show that the defrauded party before the trial had returned or offered to return what he had received of value, and the court held that he was properly nonsuited.

In Hammond v. Wallace, 85 Cal. 522, 24 Pac. 837, 20 Am. St. Rep. 239, it is said:

"Moreover, there is neither averment nor proof that plaintiff ever made any attempt to rescind or made any tender, or offer to return, anything of value received from defendant previous to the filing of complaint, or any tender at all. The only averment upon the subject is that plaintiff is 'willing and able to return to the defendant all the money which she paid to him on the purchase of the property and all the moneys which she has lawfully or legitimately paid out or expended on account of the purchase of said property and now offers to do so.' This is not sufficient."

Then, after citing the earlier cases, the court concludes that "this defect in plaintiff's case is fatal."

The latest decision of the Supreme Court, concerning whose controlling effect herein there can be no doubt, is Fairchild v. Western Securities Corporation et al., 169 Pac. 363. The complaint therein was essentially the same as the first count of the complaint here. Indeed, both represent a series of cases involving a similar situation and prosecuted by the same attorney. In the Fairchild decision it was held that the complaint failed to state a cause of action because there was no averment that the stock was valueless or that defendants were able to or had upon tender thereof refused to return the $500, so received by them as the purchase price therefor. It was also held that the averment, "Plaintiff comes now and tenders return of the certificates for 250 shares of the stock issued to her, * * * and consents to the cancellation of all agreements and obligations created or intended to be created hereunder," did not constitute a compliance with the requirement of the statute in regard to restoration; the court saying:

"In the absence of anything pleaded excusing plaintiff from so doing, it was her duty, upon declaring that it was not her property, to restore or offer to restore to defendants upon condition that they repay to her the $500, so paid therefor, thus prior to bringing suit affording them an opportunity to join in the act of rescission."

As to this decision, the learned counsel for appellant admits that "the same language as to tender was involved for the same reason as this suit is being prosecuted." However, he declares that:

"With all due respect to the Supreme Court Justices who united in the opinion in department and to the court in banc, which refused a rehearing, that decision is against law, good morals, and is not sound."

The opinion of the counsel on any question of law is not to be lightly regarded; but, of course, we are constrained to accept the opinion of the Supreme Court, although the attorney for appellant may consider it entirely erroneous.

[6] The second count of the complaint presents a little different aspect, in that the certificate of stock was not delivered. The allegations show, however, that the purchase was complete, that appellant was the owner of said stock and was in a position to demand the delivery of the certificate. He was under the same legal necessity of offering to surrender and have canceled his right and interest in and to the stock upon condition of a similar action on the part of respondents as to the note. This question was fully considered by this court in the case of Majors v. Girdner, 31 Cal. App. 47, 159 Pac. 826, wherein it was said through Justice Hart that the duty to restore or offer to restore everything of value was imperative, and "to do this it was not requisite * * * that he should have previously had issued to him or had in his possession the certificate for the stock, which is, as suggested, the mere physical evidence of the interest he owned in the capital stock of the corporation."

There is, indeed, in the second count of the complaint the allegation of the offer of rescission in March, 1913, as already stated; but it was withdrawn and nullified by the subsequent action of appellant. It does not appear to have been renewed, and therefore the sufficiency of the allegation we need not consider.

As a matter of pleading, it is thus apparent that appellant's case is vitally defective.

If it had been tried upon the theory, however, that the complaint was sufficient and evidence received without objection that the proper tender was made or that the stock was of no value, it might be held, according to the familiar rule, that the defect was cured. But such is not the situation, as we view the evidence. The showing by plaintiff added nothing to the efficacy of his allegation, and the same infirmity appeared on the motion for nonsuit.

We think the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Appellant's counsel has misconstrued certain expressions used in the opinion filed in the case. The court has nothing but the highest respect for his ability and sincerity, although, like many other good men, he is at times somewhat intemperate in his criticism and denunciation of opinions adverse to his own. We adhere to our former opinion, as we believe that under the decisions the judgment must be upheld.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

DONOVAN v. STEVENS. (L. A. 4597.)

PUBLIC LANDS ⊂=39(5)—TOWN-SITE TRUSTEE—MONEY COLLECTED BY MISTAKE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that defendant, as Nevada town-site trustee, under mistake as to authority, fixed and collected of grantees of lots greater fees for attorney obtaining patent than statute authorized; and so, as to excess, is, under Civ. Code, § 2224, trustee, not for plaintiff, the attorney, but for the grantees, who but for the mistake would have it.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by James Donovan against Theron Stevens. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Geo. B. Watson, Riley & Heskett, and James G. Pfanstiel, all of San Diego, for appellant. William Ogden, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff by which it was determined that $3,500 on deposit with the American National Bank of San Diego, Cal., in the name of Theron Stevens, trustee, and $4,480.35 on deposit with the John S. Cook & Co. Bank of Goldfield, Nev., in the name of Theron Stevens, trustee, are held in trust for said plaintiff, James Donovan, and also directing said Theron Stevens individually or as trustee to assign, transfer, and set over to said plaintiff all right, claim, and interest therein.

According to the allegations of the complaint, plaintiff is an attorney at law, admitted to practice in all the courts of Nevada. In April, 1905, the people constituting the inhabitants of Goldfield, Nev., and occupants of public lands embraced within the said town of Goldfield and South Goldfield, assembled in public meeting and organized the "Squatters' Association of Goldfield, Nevada," for the purpose of procuring and defending an application for the public lands so occupied by them as a town site under sections 2387, 2388, and 2389 of the United States Revised Statutes (Comp. St. 1916, §§ 4791–4793), and for the purpose of contesting certain alleged mineral claims purporting to cover some of said lands. By law the judge of the district court of Esmeralda county was constituted trustee for the inhabitants of the town and occupants of the public lands for the purpose of making such application. He made and filed a certain amended application (which had been prepared by plaintiff) for the entry of the lands embraced within Goldfield and South Goldfield, naming respondent in such application as his attorney. About the month of May, 1907, the said "Squatters' Association," in mass meeting assembled, by unanimous vote, authorized a committee then and there named to enter into an agreement with the plaintiff, whereby he would undertake as attorney for applicants to procure a townsite patent for the lands embraced within Goldfield and South Goldfield. The inhabitants, on their part, agreed to pay plaintiff $10 per lot for the issuance of such patent. There were, approximately, 4,300 lots in the tract involved. Plaintiff prosecuted the applications and contested the mineral claims, fully performing his contract, and in November, 1909, the United States issued a patent to the land embraced within the town site. In January, 1909, defendant was appointed judge of the district court of Esmeralda county and thereafter continued the administration of the trust for the inhabitants of Goldfield and South Goldfield. On the issuance of the patents, plaintiff presented his contract for $10 a lot to the trustee, who, believing the amount was excessive, suggested a modification of the agreement with the result that four arbitrators were appointed, two by plaintiff and two by the trustee, who, after considering the matter thoroughly, determined that the value of plaintiff's services was $15,000, or $3.45 per lot assessed against 4,342 lots. The complaint contains the allegation that:

"Under and by virtue of said compromise and agreement of arbitration and in acceptance of said award said defendant collected from each and every person the sum of three dollars and forty-five cents ($3.45) for each lot, which said defendant issued deeds for up to or about the first of February, 1911, and that there was issued up to the said date and deeds delivered for twenty-six hundred and three (2,603) lots, and that the amount received by said defendant from the recipients of said deeds to and for the use of this plaintiff was the sum of eight thousand nine hundred and eighty dollars and thirty-five cents ($8,980.35), all of which money was paid by the inhabitants and occupants of lands and lots as aforesaid, and by each and every thereof freely and voluntarily for the purposes aforesaid, upon the delivery of the deeds to the respective lot claimants."

It is further alleged that in February, 1910, defendant paid plaintiff $1,000, but has refused to surrender to him the remaining $7,980.35.

After unsuccessfully demurring to the complaint, defendant answered, admitting many of the allegations of the complaint, and alleging that, after apportionment to each lot of $3.45, defendant, as trustee, assessed that sum against each of the lots, together with all other costs and charges in connection with the execution of his trust, believing he had power so to do under section 7 of an act of the Legislature of Nevada (Comp. Laws, § 345) prescribing rules and regulations for the execution of a trust arising under an act of Congress (Act March 2, 1867, c. 177, 14 Stat. 541) entitled "An act for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands, approved March second, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven." In delivering deeds to the claimants, defendant, as he alleged in his answer, demanded, as a condition precedent to said delivery, that the claimants should each pay all costs and charges, including the amount assessed as attorney's fee, which, however, was not separately itemized as such. It is also alleged that, after the payment of $1,000 to plaintiff by defendant, certain actions were brought which caused defendant to refuse further payments until the court should determine the respective rights of the plaintiff and the inhabitants of the town site; that by its decision in the case of Jennett v. Stevens, 34 Nev. 128, 116 Pac. 601, the Supreme Court of Nevada held that under section 7 of the statute, in accordance with which defendant believed he had been acting, he was not authorized as trustee to assess and receive the fees to be paid over to plaintiff in accordance with the pleaded contract; and that by that decision the maximum charge which could be made by the trustee was $5.50 per lot, which had been collected by defendant as trustee for proper and legal items, exclusive of attorney's fees. The answer also contains allegations that the money on deposit in the state of Nevada is withheld from defendant's possession and control by virtue of an injunction issued in a suit still pending; and that, the Nevada courts having assumed jurisdiction and control of the trust and of the fund collected thereunder, the courts of California are without jurisdiction in the matter.

The court found in favor of the plaintiff on all material issues. The theory upon which the learned judge of the trial court decided the case is revealed, we believe, in the findings:

That defendant collected the aggregate and unitemized sum of $9.50 per lot; "that said money was paid with the understanding that the said defendant claimed a lawful right to demand of said lot claimants the said sum of $3.45 per lot for the use of plaintiff, and that the plaintiff claimed the right to recover the said sum; that the said defendant then received said money for the benefit of this plaintiff and as a matter of convenience to the parties in interest, and that the collection of said money was not involved within his duties as trustee nor as judge of the district court of the state of Nevada in and for the county of Esmeralda, and that he had full power and authority to receive said collections outside of his duties as trustee and judge as aforesaid."

To sustain these findings, without which the judgment against the defendant personally—not as trustee, for he is not sued in that capacity—cannot be supported, it is necessary to hold that Judge Stevens acted, not in his official and fiduciary capacity under the law of Nevada, but that he collected the fees for plaintiff as the latter's agent. Yet no agency is alleged in the complaint.

It is the theory of respondent (and the superior court accepted that view) that although the Supreme Court of Nevada, in the interpretation of the statute governing the power of the trustee, has decided, in Jennett v. Stevens, supra, that "a fee may not be paid which, together with moneys expended in the acquisition of the title and the administration of the trust and for reasonable charges for the services of the trustee, will exceed $1.00 per lot," nevertheless an additional sum could be levied and collected by the trustee, because of a collateral contract between the attorney and the lot owners. In pursuance of this theory, it is alleged in the complaint that each lot owner freely and voluntarily paid the amount assessed for plaintiff's fee. The court found, however, that a large number of the "assessments" for plaintiff's fees were paid by the lot owners "without protest or objection," but that some of them were paid "under protest and upon the representations by said trustee that the amount would be repaid to such claimants if it should be decided that the collection thereof was unlawful; but the evidence does not disclose what payments or what proportion of the payments, if any, were so paid under protest or upon objection." Obviously, such amounts as were paid under protest must have been collected by Judge Stevens under color of his official power as trustee, and it does not follow, merely because the sums assessed against other lot owners (which did not reveal by itemization the purposes to which the component parts were to be devoted) were paid without protest, that therefore they were delivered to and received by the trustee, not in the supposed execution of the trust, but partly in compliance with a contract involving the payment of larger fees than those allowed by the statute for the services of an attorney.

The court also found:

"That the evidence does disclose that adverse claims have been made upon said fund now on deposit in Goldfield, Nev., and a restraining order issued purporting to be on behalf of certain of said lot claimants in the courts of Nevada against the payment of said fund on account of plaintiff's claim for attorney fees."

The court found that the trustee refused to recognize the original contracts whereby plaintiff demanded $10 per lot, and that after arbitration which was satisfactory to plaintiff said trustee, pursuant to said arbitration, "apportioned and assessed" $3.45 against each lot. There is no pleading nor finding that this modification of the contract was ratified by the lot owners, yet it is found that they paid the exaction, not to the trustee under compulsion, but to him personally in compliance with the agreement, as matter of convenience, so that he might deliver the money to their attorney. Respondent's theory and contention is that by accepting the services of the attorney and by paying the amount assessed the lot owners ratified the new contract made for them by the trustee and the attorney. Yet there is no pleading nor finding that the lot owners even knew of the arbitration. When they paid less than $10 a lot, they must have known that no collection was being made under the original contract. They are presumed to have known that under the statute the trustee might make a charge for attorney's fees. How could they know, when they paid either with or without protest the amount "assessed" by the trustee against their lots, that they were executing a new contract made by arbitrators whom they did not appoint and ratified by those having no authority to act for them? To ask the question answers it.

All of the evidence tends to show that defendant acted at all times under the belief that he was executing the trust imposed upon him by statute. The federal statute (section 2387, U. S. Rev. Stats.) provides that the state Legislature must create machinery for the execution of the trust "as to the disposal of the lots in such town, and the proceeds of the sales thereof," and under the Nevada law Judge Stevens undoubtedly was the trustee for both purposes. There is no support for the finding that the money was paid "with the understanding that said defendant claimed a lawful right to demand of said lot claimants the sum of $3.45 per lot for the use of plaintiff." And we find nothing in the record to support the finding that the defendant "had full power and authority to receive said collections outside of his duties as trustee and judge as aforesaid."

The evidence shows that the trustee refused to recognize plaintiff's right to collect $10 a lot for his fee. The arbitration was not the making of a new contract between the attorney and his alleged clients. It was merely the fixing of an amount which the trustee recognized as a just compensation and which he believed he had the power to assess under the statute. The manner of assessment without segregation of the items corroborates his own testimony in this regard that he fixed the attorney's fee as trustee believing that the statute authorized him so to do. He was mistaken in this and collected too great a sum of money. This makes him an involuntary trustee as to the excess, not for plaintiff, but for the inhabitants of Goldfield and South Goldfield. Civ. Code, § 2224.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary for us to pass upon the contention of appellant that the courts of California have no jurisdiction of the controversy.

The judgment is reversed.

HENEY v. JORDAN, Secretary of State.

1. ELECTIONS ⟸21—DIRECT PRIMARY—VALIDITY OF STATUTE.

Direct Primary Law of June 16, 1913, § 23, as amended in 1917, precluding a candidate who failed to receive the highest number of votes cast for a nomination by the party with which he was affiliated 35 days before election, as evidenced by his affidavit of registration, from being the nominee of another party, is constitutional under Const. art. 2, § 2½, authorizing the Legislature to prescribe tests and conditions for candidates at primary election.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸50—LEGISLATIVE POWERS—PRIMARY ELECTION LAW.

The question of what provisions of Direct Primary Law of June 16, 1913, as amended in 1917, are essential to attain the objects contemplated by Const. art. 2, § 2½, authorizing enactment of primary election laws, is one peculiarly within the domain of the Legislature.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸48—PRESUMPTION OF VALIDITY.

In determining whether any provision of Direct Primary Law of June 16, 1913, as amended in 1917, is violative of Const. art. 2, § 2½, authorizing enactment of primary election law, the presumption is in favor of validity.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸48—DETERMINATION OF VALIDITY—JUDICIAL AUTHORITY.

If there is any theory upon which the Legislature could have concluded that a provision of Direct Primary Law of June 16, 1913, as amended in 1917, is essential to attain objects contemplated by Const. art. 2, § 2½, authorizing enactment of primary election laws, courts will not declare such provision invalid.

5. ELECTIONS ⟸21—PRIMARY ELECTIONS—STATUTES—CANDIDATES.

The Legislature, under Const. art. 2, § 2½, may prescribe tests and conditions for primary election candidates as well as for electors.

6. ELECTIONS ⟸126(4)—PRIMARY ELECTIONS—CANDIDATE.

Candidate for nomination of Governor at primary election who received the highest vote by the Democratic party, but failed to receive the highest vote for such nomination by Republican party with which he was affiliated 35 days prior to date of election, could not become Democratic nominee in view of Direct Primary Law of June 16, 1913, § 23, as amended in 1917.

7. ELECTIONS ⟸126(1)—INELIGIBILITY OF CANDIDATE RECEIVING HIGHEST VOTE—RESULT.

Where candidate receiving the highest number of votes is ineligible, the candidate receiving next highest vote is not elected, in absence of statutory provision to the contrary, with the result that there is no election.

8. ELECTIONS ⟸126(1)—PRIMARY ELECTIONS—QUALIFICATIONS OF CANDIDATES.

Where primary election candidate receiving highest vote for Democratic nomination for Governor did not become Democratic nominee in view of Direct Primary Law of June 16, 1913, § 23, as amended in 1917, because of failure to get highest vote of Republican party with which he was affiliated 35 days before election, there was no nomination by Democratic party.

9. ELECTIONS ⟸135—PRIMARY ELECTIONS—STATUTES—"VACANCY."

The word "vacancy," in Direct Primary Law of June 16, 1913, § 25, as amended in 1917, prohibiting the filling of any vacancy on a party ticket by party committee, except where caused by death occurring after primary election, refers to any case where for any cause there is no nominee of the party for an office.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Vacancy.]

10. ELECTIONS ⟸135—PRIMARY ELECTION—FILLING OF VACANCY BY CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

Where candidate receiving largest vote for Democratic nomination for Governor did not become Democratic nominee in view of Direct Primary Law of June 16, 1913, § 23, as amended in 1917, because of failure to get highest Republican vote, with which party he had affiliated 35 days before election, the Democratic State Central Committee was precluded by section 25 as amended in 1917 from filling the vacancy.

11. Elections ⊂=22 — Primary Election — Filling of Vacancies—Validity of Statute.

Direct Primary Law of June 16, 1913, § 25, as amended in 1917, prohibiting the filling by party committee of any vacancy on a party ticket except where caused by death occurring after primary election, is not unconstitutional.

In Bank. Application by Francis J. Heney for writ of mandate directed to Frank C. Jordan, as Secretary of State of the State of California. Order to show cause discharged, and the proceeding dismissed.

Joseph H. Call and Daniel Simms, both of Los Angeles, and Bert Schlesinger and John O'Gara, both of San Francisco, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen. (Wm. H. Jordan, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent. Isidore B. Dockweiler, of Los Angeles, and Garret W. McEnerney, of San Francisco, for Democratic State Central Committee.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is a proceeding in mandate which has been submitted for decision upon the petition and a demurrer interposed thereto.

The material facts as stated by the petition are as follows: At the recent primary election, petitioner and Thomas Lee Woolwine, who were each affiliated with the Democratic party for 35 days and more before the date of the primary election as shown by their affidavits of registration, were candidates for the Democratic nomination for Governor of the state of California, as was also James Rolph, who was so affiliated with the Republican party, as shown by his affidavit of registration. Said James Rolph, together with certain others, including Governor Wm. D. Stephens, were candidates for the Republican nomination for Governor. Mayor Rolph failed to receive the highest number of votes for the nomination of the Republican party, Governor Stephens winning that nomination. He did, however, receive the highest number of votes for the nomination of the Democratic party, the petitioner receiving the next highest number of votes for such nomination. Petitioner claims that, under our primary law, Mayor Rolph, by reason of his failure to win the Republican nomination, cannot be the nominee of the Democratic party, and that he (petitioner), by virtue of having the next highest vote, is the Democratic nominee. He further claims that, in the event that a vacancy has been caused by the disqualification or ineligibility of Mayor Rolph, he is the nominee of the Democratic party by reason of having been selected by the Democratic State Central Committee to fill the vacancy. His petition alleges, and it is conceded by the demurrer thereto, that such committee has assumed to designate him to fill such vacancy, if, in fact, a vacancy existed. He has demanded of respondent that he issue to him a certificate of nomination and that he certify his name as that of the nominee of the Democratic party for the office of Governor at the coming general election, and respondent has refused to do so. Hence this application for a writ of mandate.

In view of the proximity of the day fixed by law for the holding of the general election, and the fact that to nominate any independent candidate or candidates for the office of Governor under the provisions of section 1188, Political Code, it is essential that the nomination papers therefor be presented to county clerks and registrars not later than September 26th, 1918, we deem it imperative, in the exercise of common fairness to all concerned, to announce at once the conclusion of the court upon the various questions presented by this application. It will be impossible in the short time afforded for the preparation of an opinion to do more than to state very briefly the reasons for those conclusions.

1. Section 23 of our Direct Primary Law of June 16, 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 1404), as amended in 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 1356), declares that except as to judicial, school, county, township, or municipal officers, "the person receiving the highest number of votes, at a primary election as the candidate for the nomination of a political party for an office shall be the candidate of that party for such office, and his name as such candidate shall be placed on the official ballot voted at the ensuing election"; provided he has paid a filing fee, and, "provided, further, that no candidate for a nomination for other than a judicial, school, county, township or municipal office who fails to receive the highest number of votes for the nomination of the political party with which he was affiliated 35 days before the date of the primary election, as ascertained by the Secretary of State from the affidavit of registration of such candidate in the office of the county clerk of the county in which such candidate resides, shall be entitled to be the candidate of any other political party." This proviso was added by the amendment of 1917. It is plain and unambiguous in its terms, and the language is susceptible of only one construction. If it be a valid enactment, and, of course, it is such unless violative of our state Constitution, Mayor Rolph, owing to his failure to receive the highest number of votes for the Republican nomination for the office of Governor, cannot be the candidate of the Democratic party for that office at the general election.

[1-4] We are entirely satisfied that there is no good ground upon which the courts may declare this provision to be violative of our Constitution. The Constitution itself declares as follows:

"The Legislature shall have the power to enact laws relative to the election of delegates to conventions of political parties; and the Legislature shall enact laws providing for the direct nomination of candidates for public office, by electors, political parties, or organizations of electors without conventions, at elections to be known and designated as primary elections; also to determine the tests and conditions upon which electors, political parties, or organizations of electors may participate in any such primary election. It shall also be lawful for the Legislature to prescribe that any such primary election shall be mandatory and obligatory." Section 2½, art. 2.

It is in pursuance of this provision that the Legislature has enacted our direct primary law. There can be no doubt that the object and effect of the laws enacted by the Legislature was to make primary elections mandatory and obligatory in so far as political parties are concerned, and to preclude a nomination by a political party made in any other way than that allowed by the act. In considering whether any particular provision of that act is violative of our Constitution, it must be borne in mind that the question as to what provisions are essential to attain the objects contemplated by section 2½, art. 2, of the Constitution, is one peculiarly within the domain of the legislative department, which is practically given plenary power in the matter; that the presumption is in favor of the validity of any provision made; and that, if there is any theory upon which the provision might reasonably have been concluded by the Legislature to be essential, the courts may not interfere. As was said in Re Spencer, 149 Cal. 400, 86 Pac. 897, 117 Am. St. Rep. 137, 9 Ann. Cas. 1105, quoting approvingly from a prior decision:

"The delicate act of declaring an act of the Legislature unconstitutional and void should never be exercised unless there is a clear repugnancy between the statute and the organic law. * * * In a doubtful case the benefit of the doubt is to be given to the Legislature."

[5] We regard the opinion in the case of Socialist Party v. Uhl, 155 Cal. 776, 103 Pac. 181, as practically disposing of what we conceive to be the principal claim of those attacking the provision which here disqualifies Mayor Rolph. The essential thing there decided, in so far as any question here involved is concerned, was that it was competent for the Legislature, under section 2½, art. 2, of the Constitution, to prescribe any test not only for electors voting at the primary, but also for candidates for a party nomination, which had any reasonable relation to the maintenance of the integrity of political parties, which was held to be one of the obvious and authorized purposes of the primary law. The precise question there under discussion was as to the validity of a provision of the primary law which precluded any one from being a candidate for a party nomination at a primary and practically precluded the party from nominating him, unless he filed with his nomination papers an affidavit showing that he affiliated with the party at the last preceding election and that he had either not voted at all, or had voted for a majority of the candidates of that party. Substantially the Legislature had thus said that only one affiliated with a party could be a candidate for nomination by it, and that the reasonable method of determining whether one was so affiliated was the one prescribed, the manner in which he voted at the last preceding election as stated in his own affidavit. The matter was very fully considered by the court and the provision was sustained. In this respect the decision was expressly approved in the later case of Hart v. Jordan, 168 Cal. 321, 143 Pac. 537; the court saying: "Under this section (2½ of art. 2, Const.), the Legislature may prescribe tests and conditions for candidates as well as for electors." We regard this matter as definitely settled by our decisions. In so far as is material to the question of power and reasonableness, there is no real difference between the provision involved in Socialist Party v. Uhl, supra, and the provision here assailed. A person affiliated with one party is precluded from nomination by any other party at the primary only when he fails to receive nomination at the hands of his own party, and the matter of his party affiliation is to be determined in a different way. As to the condition rendering him ineligible in the event of his failure to obtain his own party nomination, the Legislature may well have concluded that it would not be conducive to the integrity of parties that one who has failed to obtain nomination for a certain office by his party should be allowed to avail himself of the nomination of an opposing party for that office in opposition to the successful nominee of his own party; or that such opposing party should be allowed to have him as the nominee under such circumstances. We certainly cannot say that this was an unreasonable conclusion, or that in providing against such a situation the Legislature was exceeding its power. Nor can we say that the test prescribed by the Legislature for determining the party affiliation in such a case is unreasonable. Doubtless other tests might have been adopted, some of which might appear to us, if we were sitting as legislators, more reasonable than the one prescribed. But the Legislature adopted the one stated in the provision. The theory apparently was that it was reasonable to accept the sworn avowal of allegiance of a person to a party, standing of record 35 days before the primary, as constituting the best and only evidence of such real and permanent affiliation with a party for all the purposes of the ensuing primary, as would make desirable such a provision as the one here involved.

We have considered the many other minor objections made by learned counsel to this provision, and are of the opinion that none of them is sufficient to warrant us in declaring the provision violative of the Constitution.

[6] The claim of petitioner that Mayor Rolph, who received the highest vote at the primary for the nomination of the Democratic party for the office of Governor, cannot be the candidate of that party in view of this provision of the primary act, a claim not disputed by respondent, must be held good.

[7] 2. We are satisfied that, under the circumstances we have stated, petitioner cannot be held to have been nominated at the primary election, or to be the candidate of the party by virtue of such primary election. There is nothing in the primary law to authorize such a construction of the act as would lead to such a conclusion. Indeed, the provision is explicit, that, as to party nominations, "the person receiving the highest number of votes at a primary election as the candidate for the nomination of a political party for an office shall be the candidate of that party for such office," etc. The petitioner did not receive the highest number of votes cast for such nomination, but only the next highest, It is a rule approved by the overwhelming weight of authority in this country, and expressly affirmed several times in this state, that, where the one receiving the highest vote at an election is for any reason ineligible, the candidate receiving the next highest vote is not elected, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, with the result that there is no election. See Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 145; Crawford v. Dunbar, 52 Cal. 36; People v. Rodgers, 118 Cal. 396, 46 Pac. 740, 50 Pac. 668; Campbell v. Free, 7 Cal. App. 151, 93 Pac. 1060; note to State v. Bell, 124 Am. St. Rep. 211; note to Sanders v. Rice, L. R. A. 1918C, 1157.

[8] We can see no good reason why this rule is not applicable to primary elections. There is support in some authorities for an exception to this rule to the effect that in a case where votes are cast by voters for an ineligible candidate with full knowledge on their part of his ineligibility, or for one who is dead with full knowledge of his death (see State v. Frear, 144 Wis. 79, 128 N. W. 1068, 14 Am. St. Rep. 992), they may be disregarded altogether, and treated as nullities, with the result that the person receiving the next highest vote may be held to have received the highest number of lawful votes. But this exception is necessarily and avowedly based on a theory that the votes are knowingly cast under such circumstances that they may fairly be held to be mere nullities—cast with full knowledge that they cannot be effective for any purpose. We have no such situation in this case. Those of the Democratic party who voted for Mayor Rolph voted for one whose name was lawfully on the primary ballot and who was conditionally eligible to receive the Democratic nomination. In view of the law, of course they must be presumed to have known, as is alleged in the petition, that he could receive the Democratic nomination only in the event that he was also nominated by the Republican party; but they nevertheless chose to vote for him as the law contemplated they might lawfully do. To our minds we would not be warranted in disregarding their votes as mere nullities. The result necessarily is that as to the office of Governor there was no nomination made by the Democratic party at the primary election.

[9-11] 3. As to the claim that petitioner is entitled to be the nominee of the Democratic party by virtue of his selection by the Democratic State Central Committee: Prior to the amendments made to the primary act of 1917, a party committee was empowered to fill vacancies on the ticket of the party occurring after the holding of the primary election in all but two specific cases. In 1917 section 25 of the act was so amended as to prohibit the filling of any vacancy on a party ticket, resulting from any cause whatever, except in the single case of a vacancy by reason of the death of the candidate occurring after the holding of the primary election. In such a case only is the party committee authorized to select a candidate of the party for the general election. The language of the section, which is one devoted wholly to the matter of "vacancies," is such as not to fairly admit of any other construction. It is expressly provided that "the vacancy created," among other things, "by reason of the failure of a party to nominate any candidate for the office at the primary election, or for any other cause except the death of the candidate occurring after the primary election, shall not be filled." It is clear that the term "vacancy," as used in this section, refers to any case where, from any cause, there is no nominee of the party for an office. It seems plain to us that, if this provision is a valid enactment, it must be held that the party committee was without authority to make petitioner the nominee of the party. It is claimed by learned counsel that it is violative of our Constitution. We are of the opinion that it cannot fairly be so held. The plain object of the provision was to prevent any departure from or evasion of one of the main purposes of the primary law, that of requiring all party nominations to be made directly by the members of the party at a primary election. Authorization to the party committee to fill a vacancy was therefore confined to the single instance of the death of the candidate after the primary election. Certainly we cannot hold that the Legislature was not warranted in concluding that the provision was a reasonable and necessary provision to make in this behalf.

We can see no warrant for disregarding the plain terms of the primary law that are involved in this proceeding. To any complaint that is made concerning their practical effect we can only say that they are a part of the law of the land, authorized by the Constitution itself, which embodies the will of the people of the state expressed directly by the popular vote on the proposition.

From what we have said, it follows that the respondent properly refused to comply with the demand of the petitioner.

The order to show cause is discharged, and the proceeding dismissed.

In Bank. Application for writ of mandate by Frank N. Rodgers against Frank C. Jordan, as Secretary of State of the State of California. Order to show cause discharged, and proceeding dismissed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, Theo. J. Roche, and Cullinan & Hickey, all of San Francisco, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen. (Wm. H. Jordan, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent. O. K. Cushing, of San Francisco, Isidore B. Dockweiler, of Los Angeles, and Garret W. McEnerney, of San Francisco, for Democratic State Central Committee.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of mandate.

According to the petition, the allegations of which are admitted by the demurrer, the material facts are as follows: At the recent primary election, petitioner Rodgers, who was affiliated with the Republican party for 35 days or more before the date of the primary election, as shown by his affidavit of registration, was a candidate for both the Republican and Democratic nominations for the office of member of the assembly for the Thirty-Second assembly district, as was also one George W. Warren. Petitioner failed to receive the highest number of votes for the Republican nomination, being defeated therefor by said Warren. He, however, received the highest number of votes for the nomination of the Democratic party, defeating said Warren therefor. He therefore claims to be the nominee of the Democratic party for such office and has demanded of respondent, Secretary of State, that he certify his name as that of the nominee of the Democratic party for such office at the coming general election, and respondent, basing his action on provisions of our primary law, has refused to so certify; hence this application.

What we have said as to the question presented by these facts in the matter of Heney v. Jordan, as Secretary of State (S. F. No. 8875), 175 Pac. 402, disposes of the claim of the petitioner.

It is ordered that the order to show cause be discharged and the proceeding dismissed.

COUSINO et al. v. WESTERN SHORE LUMBER CO. (S. F. 7987.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟸103(8) — JOINT POWER OF ATTORNEY—HUSBAND AND WIFE —CONVEYANCE OF SEPARATE PROPERTY.

A joint power of attorney executed by husband and wife, and authorizing conveyance of land "which we now own or which we may hereafter acquire or become seized of," authorized the attorney to convey the wife's separate property.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION ⟸17—TIMBER LAND —PATROLLING LAND.

Where timber land was valuable chiefly, if not solely, for the timber, possession thereof by lumber company claiming title under written instrument, consisting of patrolling the land for prevention of trespassing and for protection against fire, in doing of which trails were laid out, a cabin built, and bodies of fire fighters used, held sufficient, where continued for statutory period, to constitute adverse possession under Code Civ. Proc. § 323, subd. 3, such occupation being for the ordinary use of the occupant.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Geo. H. Buck, Judge.

Action by John Cousino and others against Western Shore Lumber Company in which defendant filed cross-complaint. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Francis G. Burke, of Los Angeles, for appellants. McCutchen, Olney & Willard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This action was brought to determine the adverse claim of the defendant to 480 acres of land in San Mateo county under the provisions of section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendant denied title in the plaintiffs to any portion of the property, and in a cross-complaint asserted ownership of the property in itself. The facts of the case are practically without conflict, and are briefly these:

Mary Huot, a Sioux mixed blood Indian woman, was born on the Lake Pepin Reserve, in Minnesota, in the year 1850. Pursuant to an act of Congress passed July 17, 1854 (10 Stat. 304, c. 83), there was issued to her and in her name Sioux half-breed scrip entitling her to locate for herself lands of the public domain. The scrip was delivered by the United States government to John Huot, the father of Mary Huot, for her use and benefit, on March 25, 1857. On January 22, 1864, said John Huot was appointed his daughter's guardian by the county court of Pierce county, Wis., where she then resided, and on the same day and as such guardian he executed to one Wm. S. Chapman a power of attorney, by which he authorized said Chapman to locate said scrip upon public lands. On October, 19, 1868, said Chapman, acting under said power of attorney, located the scrip upon the lands involved in this action in the name of Mary Huot, and patents therefor were issued to her on January 20, 1874, which patents were recorded in the county of San Mateo on September 16, 1881. Mary Huot married John Cousino, also spelled Cosineau, on June 17, 1864, in the state of Wisconsin, where she continued to reside until 1876, when she and her husband removed to the state of Minnesota, where they lived until the year 1888, when they took up their residence at Grant's Pass, Or., where she died on May 28, 1894, leaving as her heirs her husband and seven children, who constitute the plaintiffs in this action, basing their claim of title upon their heirship of Mary Huot.

The defendant bases its claim of ownership of the lands in question upon several grounds, the first of these being that of an alleged conveyance by Mary Huot and her husband to Wm. S. Chapman, dated July 26, 1871, by whom the premises were conveyed to the defendant. The deed from Mary Huot and her husband to Wm. S. Chapman was executed on their behalf by one Henry T. Welles, purporting to act as their attorney in fact under a certain power of attorney executed by them on May 20, 1871, by which Mary Cosineau, formerly Mary Huot, and John Cosineau, her husband, of the county of Pierce, state of Wisconsin, constituted and appointed said Henry T. Welles their true and lawful attorney—

"for us, and in our names, places, and stead, to enter into and upon and take possession of any and all pieces and parcels of land or the timber and other material therein in the state of Minnesota and in any state or territory of the United States, which we now own or which we may hereafter acquire or become seised of, or in which we may now or hereafter be in any way interested, and we further authorize and empower our said attorney to grant, bargain, sell, demise, lease, convey, and confirm said land or any part thereof * * * to such person or persons and for such prices as to our said attorney shall seem meet and proper," etc.

The first point urged by the appellants herein is that said power of attorney was not sufficient in its grant of powers to have authorized said Henry T. Welles, as the attorney in fact of Mary Cosineau, formerly Mary Huot, to convey her separate property, their particular contention being that said power of attorney, being joint in its terms, must be construed as having reference only to the joint property of the parties executing the same, or, at most, to such property as both of the parties "now own" or "may hereafter acquire or become seized of," or "may now or hereafter be in any way interested" in; and that since the property with respect to which the power was attempted to be exercised was situated in California, and was the separate property of the wife, in which the husband had no present or prospective interest, it was not covered by the terms of the power. Whatever the rule may be in other jurisdictions, we are constrained to hold that from an early date in the judicial history of California it has been the rule that conveyances and powers of attorney joint in form are to be construed as conveying or authorizing the conveyance of whatever interest both or either of the parties have in the property to be affected by the instrument under consideration. In the early case of Castro v. Tennent, 44 Cal. 253, the instrument in question was a conveyance wherein the grantors undertook to convey all of the undivided half of the right, title, and interest of the said parties of the first part of, in, and to that certain tract and parcel of land, etc. In construing this clause in said conveyance the court said:

"It has been suggested in argument that such a description includes only the joint estate or interest of the grantors, but this construction is hypercritical and is too narrow and technical. In a large majority of cases such a construction would defeat the real intention of the parties. If there be several adverse claimants to separate undivided interests in a tract of land, and if all the claimants unite in a joint deed to a stranger, conveying all their right, title, and interest in and to the lands, it would not be seriously contended, I apprehend, that nothing passed by the deed because the grantors had no joint interest in the land."

In the case of Douglas v. Fulda, 50 Cal. 77, the instrument in question was a power of attorney given by a husband and wife, joint in form, authorizing one Calderwood to lease a certain lot, and under which he undertook to execute a lease of the lot, which was the separate property of the wife. The court said:

"The power of attorney was sufficient. In Castro v. Tennent, 44 Cal. 253, a similar question arose upon the construction of a deed executed by the husband and wife jointly, and purporting to convey their joint interest in the land. It was contended that the separate estate or interest of the wife did not pass by the conveyance. But this court said that this construction was hypercritical and too narrow and technical, and held that the separate estate of the wife passed by the deed. The question now presented is substantially the same. It was undoubtedly the intention of the parties to confer upon Calderwood the power to deal with the separate property of Elizabeth Douglas, and that power was conferred by the instrument, as we construe it."

The rule of construction declared in these two cases has never been departed from or criticized in any later cases, and has, therefore, we think, become a rule of property in this state which should not now be changed.

In addition to this, however, the Supreme Court of the United States has declared the same rule for the construction of powers of attorney joint in form. In the case of Holladay v. Daily, 19 Wall. 606, 22 L. Ed. 187, involving the validity of a transfer of the separate property of the husband under a joint power of attorney executed by the husband and wife, Mr. Justice Field, in sustaining such conveyance, said:

"A power of attorney created by two or more persons possessing distinct interests in real property may, of course, be so limited as to prevent a sale of the interest of either separately; but in the absence of qualifying terms, or other circumstances, thus restraining the authority of the attorney, a power to sell and convey real property, given by several parties, in general terms, as in the present case, is a power to sell and convey the interest of each, either jointly with the interests of the others, or by a separate instrument."

[1] The chief reliance of the appellants herein is upon the case of Gilbert v. How, 45 Minn. 121, 47 N. W. 643, 22 Am. St. Rep. 724, in which a power of attorney substantially in the form of the power under review in this case was held to be insufficient to authorize the donee of the power to convey lands in which only one of the donors of the power was interested. That this case is in conflict with the rule laid down in the foregoing California cases and also with the statement of the rule by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case above cited was pointed out by Mr. A. C. Freeman in his notes to the case of Gilbert v. How, as reported in 22 Am. St. Rep. 724. It is also to be noted that the rule announced in the case of Gilbert v. How has been very much modified by the courts of Minnesota in three later cases, viz. Tuman v. Pillsbury, 60 Minn. 520, 63 N. W. 104, Snell v. Weyerhauser, 71 Minn. 57, 73 N. W. 633, and Roy v. Harrison Iron Mining Company, 113 Minn. 143, 129 N. W. 154, in each of which later cases powers of attorney in almost the precise phraseology of that under review herein were held to be sufficient to support conveyances of the separate property of the husband, in which at most the only interest of the wife was an inchoate right of dower. In each of these last-named cases the Supreme Court of Minnesota lays special emphasis upon the clause in the power authorizing the donee thereof to convey any lands, wherever situated, in which the donors of the power "may now or hereafter be in any way interested"; holding that these words must be given a broadening effect so as to take these cases out of the rule laid down in Gilbert v. How. The same precise phrase occurs in the power in question here. We are therefore of the opinion that for all of the foregoing reasons the power of attorney given by Mary Cosineau, formerly Mary Huot, and her husband, John Cosineau, was sufficient to have authorized the execution of the conveyance of the lands in question to Wm. S. Chapman, and hence to sustain the defendant's title derived through such conveyance.

[2] The respondent further supports its claim of title to the premises by the plea and proof of adverse possession, and we think its claim in that behalf should also be sustained. The lands in question are rough mountain timber lands valuable chiefly, if not solely, for the timber thereon, which consists of a heavy growth of redwood, fir, and oak. From a period not long after the defendant received the conveyance of these lands from Chapman it began patrolling the same for the prevention of trespassing and for the protection of the timber against fires. In connection with both of these purposes trails were laid out and constantly maintained through various portions of the property from a time shortly after the conveyance to it of the property down to the date of the inception of this action, and which were made use of constantly by the agents of the defendant to keep hunters, fishers, campers, and other trespassers off the property, and to protect all portions thereof against fires. A cabin for the use of the patrols was built and maintained upon the premises, and from time to time as fires occurred within or threatened to invade the property bodies of fire fighters were used in preserving its timber from destruction. It is conceded that the defendant paid the taxes assessed against the property during all these years. The lands, as we have seen, were timber lands. The defendant, who was thus the occupant of said lands, was a lumber company, and the ordinary and eventual use to which said lands were to be put was that of the cutting, logging, and milling of the timber thereon; and this being so, we think the possession of the defendant, as indicated by its foregoing assertion of control over said property, based as it was upon a claim of title founded upon a written instrument, was sufficient to constitute adverse possession for the required statutory period under subdivision 3 of section 323, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 567; Wolf v. Baldwin, 19 Cal. 306; Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 24; Spotts v. Hanley, 85 Cal. 155, 24 Pac. 738; Webber v. Clarke, 74 Cal. 11, 15 Pac. 431.

The other points made upon the appeal do not require discussion.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. JONES v. ZEMANSKY et al.

1. ELECTIONS ⊜156—RIGHT TO CERTIFICATE OF NOMINATION—PRIMARY ACT.

Under Primary Act, § 23, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1356, two candidates for judge of superior court of city and county of San Francisco were not entitled to certificate of nomination, where neither was "majority candidate" under section, that is, one receiving majority of all votes cast in San Francisco at primary election, and there were not four such majority candidates nominated at primary.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊜43(2)—VALIDITY OF STATUTE—ESTOPPEL TO RAISE QUESTION.

Where establishment of claim of petitioner for writ of mandate to compel respondents to issue certificate of nomination to her, that the whole primary act is unconstitutional, would bar her from receiving certificate of nomination sought, Supreme Court need not consider points made by petitioner as to unconstitutionality of act.

In Bank. Application for writ of mandate by the People of the State of California, on the relation of Charlotte F. Jones, against J. H. Zemansky and others. Application denied.

Charlotte F. Jones, of Seattle, Wash., for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] Notwithstanding its title, this proceeding in so far as it can be considered by us, is in effect simply one by Charlotte F. Jones to obtain a writ of mandate compelling respondents to issue certificates of nomination to her and another, as candidates for judges of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, by reason of the votes received by them respectively at the recent primary election. As to neither herself nor the other candidate, who does not join in or assent to the petition, are sufficient facts alleged to make a prima facie case for relief, in that it is not made to appear that either was a "majority candidate" under the provisions of section 23 of the Primary Act (St. 1913, p. 1404, by St. 1917, p. 1356), that is, one receiving a majority of all the votes cast in San Francisco at said primary election, and that there were not four such "majority candidates" nominated at said primary. If this was the situation, neither she nor the other candidate named in her petition was entitled to a certificate of nomination, in view of certain provisions of said section 23 as to the validity of which provisions we can perceive no serious question. Furthermore, as to herself, her name not having been printed on the primary ballot and her 49 votes having been received from persons writing in her name on the ballot, it is not made to appear that she received a sufficient number of votes to equal the number required for a nomination paper, so as to entitle her to a certificate of nomination, under a provision of subdivision 9 of section 5 of the Primary Act.

[3] It is further claimed by petitioner that the whole Primary Act is violative of our Constitution. The establishment of any such claim would effectively bar her from receiving the certificate of nomination sought, and it is therefore unnecessary to consider the points made by her in that regard.

The application for a writ is denied.

1. PLEADING ⊂⊃403(4)—CURING OF DEFECTS — DEFECTIVE COMPLAINT — ANSWER — EVIDENCE.

Where demurrer was overruled, failure to allege that employers failed to provide safe place for work, and that he should have known place was unsafe, was cured by answer raising such issues, and by evidence and requested instructions relating thereto.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃289(35)—INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—ACTIONS—JURY QUESTION.

In employé's action against city for injuries sustained in water main excavation, caused by caving in of walls, whether city had provided safe place for work, which had been made unsafe by disobedience of orders by injured employé, held for jury.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃286(19)—NONSUIT —CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

In city employé's action for injuries sustained in water main trench, where evidence as to whether city had provided employés safe place in which to work was conflicting, there was no error in denying motion for nonsuit.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃107(5)—INJURY TO SERVANT—SAFE PLACE.

Rule requiring employer to provide safe place for work applied, where actual construction of trench was completed before injured employés entered it.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Actions by William T. Noakes and by George B. Noakes against the City of Los Angeles and others. From judgments for plaintiffs, and orders denying new trials, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Albert Lee Stephens and Charles S. Burnell, both of Los Angeles, for appellants. Harriman, Ryckman & Tuttle, of Los Angeles, and Hyman Levin, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Defendants appeal from two certain judgments against them for damages and from the orders denying their motions for new trials. The plaintiffs, who are brothers, were both injured August 14, 1913, while at work in a trench excavated for the purpose of laying water pipes in Sixteenth street in the city of Los Angeles. They were workmen employed by the defendant board of public service commissioners of the city of Los Angeles. The other defendants were the city of Los Angeles, E. R. Flores, foreman in charge of the work, and the individuals composing the board of public service commissioners. Plaintiffs were nonsuited as to their asserted causes of action against the members of the board. The two complaints were essentially the same; the only differences arising from the fact, as pleaded, that one brother was more seriously injured than the other. There was a general demurrer to each complaint, which was overruled in each case. Appellants contend that the court erred in failing to sustain the demurrers, in refusing to grant a motion for nonsuit in each case, and because of error in one of the instructions to the jury.

The complaint in each instance alleged that the city was engaged in the business of selling and supplying water to its inhabitants; that the board of public service commissioners was the administrative branch of the government in charge of the water system; that on August 14, 1913, said board was excavating a trench on Sixteenth street and installing therein a main for use in its business of distributing water; that the plaintiff was working in said trench as a laborer, and as a servant of the city and its said board, under the immediate direction and control of defendant Flores; that while plaintiff was so employed the sides of the trench suddenly fell upon him, crushing and injuring him in a manner and to an extent specified; and "that said injuries and damage and said falling of the walls of said trench were and are due to the negligence of defendants in failing to take proper, or any, precautions to prevent said walls from caving in, and in leaving them in an unsafe, insecure, and dangerous condition."

It is contended that the demurrer in each case should have been sustained, because of lack of averment in the complaint that the injury was the natural and proximate result of the negligence of defendants; because said pleading does not, if taken as true, show that defendants failed to exercise reasonable care to provide a safe place to work; because it fails to set forth any facts showing that defendants knew, or should have known with exercise of reasonable care, that the place was unsafe; and because the "safe place" rule has no application in cases like these (citing in support of the last point Thompson v. California Construction Co., 148 Cal. 35, 82 Pac. 367).

[1] But we need not follow counsel for appellants in their discussion of the alleged infirmities of the complaints, because by their answers, their proposed instructions, and the testimony offered they put squarely in issue the matters which, according to their present contention, were not set up by the complaints. They alleged in the answer that they instructed the plaintiffs and other workmen to leave a bench of earth unexcavated along the line of said trench at every 10 feet, so that no greater distance than 10 feet of said trench should be in process of excavation at any one point; that this order was given to insure the safety of the workmen; and that it would have been effective for that purpose if the plaintiffs, in willful violation of instructions, had not dug out one of the "benches." This was in effect the pleading of compliance with the rule requiring employers to furnish a reasonably safe place in which to work. The testimony and offered instructions followed the same lines. Therefore any deficiency in the complaint was cured by the conduct of defendants. Boyle v. Coast Improvement Co., 27 Cal. App. 714, 151 Pac. 25; Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 26 Cal. App. 318, 147 Pac. 90.

[2, 3] The facts as related by the foreman himself emphasize the justice of discarding the rule applicable in cases where the laborer is engaged in preparing the very place in which he is to work, and is therefore under the same obligations as his master to look for and guard against dangers. Flores, the foreman, said that the trench was dug down to grade at the point where the accident occurred, that it was practically completed, and that the men were just leveling up the bottom of the trench. Plaintiffs had been employed there less than half an hour when they were injured. The cases were evidently tried upon the theory, so far as defendants were concerned, that they had provided a safe place which plaintiffs made unsafe by disobeying orders. Of course, it was for the jury to determine whether or not such defense was supported by the evidence, there being a substantial conflict. There was, therefore, no error in denying the motion for nonsuit.

[4] The instruction criticized by appellants is denounced merely because it was predicated upon the rule requiring an employer to provide a safe place for his workmen. As the actual construction of the trench was completed before plaintiffs entered it, the applicability of the instruction is obvious. Ryan v. Oakland Gas, Light & Heat Co., 21 Cal. App. 14–21, 130 Pac. 693.

The judgments and orders are affirmed.

1. BILLS AND NOTES ⊂=525 — BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—EVIDENCE.

In mortgagor's suit to cancel a mortgage and the nonnegotiable notes secured thereby, with intervention by purchasers of the notes before maturity, evidence held to sustain a finding that interveners purchased with full knowledge that the loan was a building loan, payable to mortgagor or his contractor, as building contract was performed, and charged with knowledge of outstanding equities.

2. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⊂=31 — HOLDERS OF MORTGAGE NOTES.

As all defenses in a foreclosure suit could have been urged against purchasers of nonnegotiable mortgage notes before maturity with knowledge of outstanding equities between mortgagor and mortgagee, such purchasers in the mortgagor's action to cancel the mortgage and notes would stand in place of the mortgagee.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⊂=137(1)—SALE OF NOTES—ESTOPPEL.

That a mortgagor obtaining a building loan executed nonnegotiable notes, knowing that mortgagee would try to dispose of them and that they were more salable than one note, did not amount to an effort to mislead innocent purchasers, so as to estop him to deny that mortgagee was his agent in selling them, where a known related escrow contract required expenditure of $6,000 furnished by mortgagor before use of money secured by mortgage.

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⊂=123(1)—AGENCY TO SECURE LOAN—PROOF.

That a mortgagor, obtaining a building loan of $12,000, executed 14 nonnegotiable notes, knowing that mortgagee would try to dispose of them and that they were more salable than a single note, did not prove mortgagee's agency to secure the loan, in view of a known related escrow contract providing for the use of $6,000 furnished by mortgagor before use of money secured by mortgage.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William A. Donahue, Judge.

Suit by George A. Crawfis against Edwards, Brewster & Clover, a corporation, with intervention by C. H. Smith and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and interveners appeal. Affirmed.

Brittain & Kuhl, of San Francisco, and Earl D. White, of Oakland, for appellants.

Edgar C. Chapman, of San Francisco, for respondent Edwards, Brewster & Clover. Wm. F. Rose and Bruce Glidden, both of San Francisco, and Snook & Church, of Oakland, for respondent Crawfis.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued as mortgagor to cancel 14 promissory notes secured by a mortgage and also to cancel the mortgage itself. Edwards, Brewster & Clover, corporation defendant, is the mortgagee, and the interveners, appellants, are persons who acquired the 14 promissory notes prior to maturity, paying for the said notes their face value. Interveners appeal from the judgment in favor of plaintiff.

The facts, about which there is little if any dispute, are as follows:

Crawfis owned certain real property and desired to place a building thereon. Patton, a contractor, undertook to secure a loan for Crawfis, if he, the said Patton, should be given the contract to erect the building on the land belonging to Crawfis. Accordingly, arrangements were made with Edwards, Brewster & Clover, and Crawfis executed the mortgage here in question and 14 promissory notes, aggregating $12,000 in face value. The notes and mortgage were delivered on November 23, 1914, and on the same day and as part of the same transaction Crawfis entered into a contract by which he was required to deposit with the corporation $6,000. By the latter contract it was recited that the "cash received and the notes enumerated," making the sum of $18,000 in all, was to be delivered to G. A. Crawfis in specified installments as progress payments became due on the building to be thereafter erected. The building was constructed and as the work went on the corporation paid $6,060, according to agreement, but failed and refused to pay any further sum, either to Dr. Crawfis or to his building contractor.

Interveners purchased the notes before maturity, and it is not denied by them that these instruments are nonnegotiable in form. It is contended, however, that plaintiff is estopped by his conduct from questioning the validity of the claims of interveners, and that it was the intention of all of the parties to the transaction that the 14 notes should be treated and offered for sale as negotiable instruments. The judgment provided that plaintiff should restore the $60, the amount in excess of the $6,000 deposited by him, which was paid for the purposes of the building by the corporation; but the further contention is made by appellants that, inasmuch as some of the money realized from the sale of the notes came into the hands of Edwards, Brewster & Clover on the very days upon which certain payments were made on the building contract, it is fair to assume that the money so paid, and not a part of the $6,000 deposited by plaintiff, went into the building, and these interveners assert that at the very least they should be entitled to share in the fund of $6,000 in the proportion that the sum of $12,000 bears to $18,000.

The court found that, by reason of the refusal of the corporation to make the next payment on the building following the exhaustion of the $6,000, the consideration for the notes and mortgage failed; that on or about the 15th of January, 1915, and at various subsequent times down to March 3d of that year, Edwards, Brewster & Clover, not acting as agent for Dr. Crawfis, requested the interveners to purchase the notes, and pursuant to such request the instruments were sold for their full face value; that neither at the times of purchase nor at any time did either plaintiff or the corporation represent to the purchasers that said Edwards, Brewster & Clover was the agent of Dr. Crawfis in the sale or distribution of the notes; and that as matter of fact the corporation was not and did not act in any of the transactions as Dr. Crawfis' agent. There was a finding specifically negativing the contention of appellants that the very purpose of issuing 14 notes rather than 1 was to further the success of the alleged agency, and there is a finding:

"That plaintiff, George A. Crawfis, executed said 14 promissory notes, rather than 1, solely at the instance of said defendant Edwards, Brewster & Clover, and without any intention on the part of plaintiff, George A. Crawfis, to authorize said defendant Edwards, Brewster & Clover to sell said notes, or any of them, as the agent of plaintiff, George A. Crawfis."

There were findings that no one of the interveners made any inquiry of plaintiff before purchasing the notes, and that when the sales were made the corporation represented that it was the mortgagee in fact. There was also a finding that:

"Said interveners took said notes and paid the purchase price thereof with full knowledge that the loan contemplated by the plaintiff, George A. Crawfis, from the defendant Edwards, Brewster & Clover was a building loan, and that said building loan was not to be paid by defendant Edwards, Brewster & Clover to plaintiff, George A. Crawfis, or to said Patton, except as the building contract should be performed by said Patton in accordance with its terms and to the satisfaction of defendant Edwards, Brewster & Clover, the mortgagee of said mortgage."

[1, 2] If these findings are sustained by the evidence, the judgment is correct. The finding last quoted is supported by the testimony of Mr. Smith, one of the interveners, whose declarations under oath were by stipulation made binding upon his associates. He said that, when asked by Mr. Edwards, representing the corporation, to buy some of the notes, he investigated the mortgage and the value of the property. It seemed to him that the value was there, so he purchased the notes. Asked if Mr. Edwards said anything to him about a contract between the corporation and Dr. Crawfis, Mr. Smith said:

"Yes; we went over the entire matter. I looked over the mortgage, and he told me about this private contract, and I have the impression he showed it to me. I would not like to say positively. I think there is a further paper that he told me about; that is, some contract, the building contract."

It will thus be seen that, not only were the purchasers of the nonnegotiable instruments charged with knowledge of outstanding equities, but they knew or had the means of knowing by actual inspection of the contracts that their purchase money was to become a part of a fund into which $6,000 had already been paid and that the full consideration for the notes had not yet passed to the mortgagor. All defenses available in a foreclosure suit in favor of Crawfis against Edwards, Brewster & Clover could have been urged against them, and consequently they stand in the place of that corporation in an action to rescind.

[3, 4] We do not agree with appellants in their theory that respondent, Dr. Crawfis, is estopped by his conduct to deny that the corporation was his agent. The mere fact that he executed 14 notes, instead of 1, does not prove agency; nor does it amount to any effort on his part to mislead innocent purchasers of the notes. He probably did comply with the request of the corporation, knowing that the latter would endeavor to dispose of the notes, and that a number of small notes would be easier to sell than one large note. The mortgagor cannot prevent the mortgagee from disposing of the note or notes supporting the mortgage, even if he so desires. We fail to see how the execution of the small notes furnishes either proof of mere agency on the part of the corporation to secure a loan for Dr. Crawfis or was any part of conduct amounting to an estoppel. It is true that the mortgage recited the receipt of the $12,000, but the contract of escrow between Crawfis and the corporation and the building contract between Crawfis and Patton were parts of the same transaction, and these were not merely available to Smith and the other interveners, but were in fact called to the attention of the purchasers of the notes. There is, therefore, no similarity between this case and such authorities as, for example, National Hardware Co. v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 130 Pac. 881, in which it was held that Firth could not impeach the recitals in a deed of trust to which he was a party. In that case there was by the record a representation as a fact of something not true, made with the intention that another should act upon it. It would merely prolong this opinion to no good purpose to analyze all the authorities cited by appellants. In each the facts differ radically from those involved in the case at bar. In the one which is "most nearly like the case at bar," according to learned counsel for appellants (Kucher v. Scott, 96 Wash. 317 165 Pac. 82), Robinson & Co., the nominal mortgagee, was held to be an agent of the mortgagor, and the loss occasioned by the dishonesty of its secretary was not visited upon the assignee of the mortgage. But the representative of Robinson & Co., who induced plaintiff and his wife to execute the note and mortgage, informed them that he was getting the money from a man who lived in Portland. Moreover, this was in accordance with the invariable custom of the house of Robinson. In the case at bar there were no such facts. Edwards, Brewster & Clover did not represent any undisclosed principal, nor does it appear that the invariable course of business of that corporation was to negotiate the sale of notes and mortgages for clients.

The conclusion which we have reached, and our conviction that the court properly held the interveners, as purchasers of nonnegotiable instruments, bound by the equities in favor of the mortgagor, makes it unnecessary to discuss the contention that some of the money paid for the erection of the building actually was derived from the sale of notes, rather than from the $6,000 deposited by Dr. Crawfis with the corporation. The appellants were bound to consider the agreement by which the corporation was to expend that fund before any moneys secured by the mortgage should be used, and the plaintiff was under no obligation to inquire the exact source from which the $6,000 actually paid to his contractor was obtained.

SCOTT et al. v. JUNGQUIST. (L. A. 4532.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF ⊂⊃56(9)—PARTNERSHIP AGREEMENT—LAND.

Agreement for inclusion of south half of section of land within written partnership arrangement for acquisition, subdivision, and disposition of north half did not need to be in writing.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1058(1) — CURE OF ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Errors in excluding evidence offered by plaintiff were cured by final admission of whole of plaintiffs' offered evidence.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1011(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Findings of court as to matters whereon evidence was in substantial conflict will not be disturbed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by M. D. L. Scott and J. W. Scott against F. A. Jungquist. From judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Manning, Thompson & Hoover, of Los Angeles, for appellants. Jones & Weller, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in the defendant's favor in an action wherein the plaintiffs sought an accounting and division of partnership assets and profits based upon an alleged partnership between the parties, relating to the subdivision and sale of certain real estate. The complaint, in the first paragraph thereof, sets forth an agreement alleged to have been made on July 27, 1912, whereby the parties entered into a partnership for the purchase, subdivision, and sale of the north one half of section 11, township 10 north, range 12 west, San Bernardino B. & M., sharing equally the expenses, profits, and losses thereof. The second paragraph avers that on October 29, 1912, the parties, standing in the relation of copartners as created by their first agreement, further agreed that they would purchase, subdivide, and sell the south half of the foregoing section upon the same understanding as to the division of expenses, profits, and losses. The complaint then proceeds to allege that the plaintiffs have performed their part of each of said agreements, but the defendant, while collecting a large sum of money from the sales of said properties, has failed, refused, and neglected to make or render an accounting thereof, or to allow said plaintiffs access to the books of the copartnership, in order to ascertain the state of its accounts or to deliver to the plaintiffs their due proportion of the proceeds of the copartnership transactions. The complaint not being verified, the answer of the defendant was in the form of a general denial.

Upon the trial, and in support of the averments contained in the first paragraph of their complaint, the plaintiffs presented a written agreement, which fully supported said averments, relating to the formation of the partnership for the purpose of acquiring, subdividing, and disposing of the north one half of the said section of land. As to the introduction of this written agreement the defendant offered no objection, but admitted in open court the making of the same, and that the lands therein referred to had been subdivided and sold according to its terms. The plaintiffs then undertook to establish the averments of the second paragraph of their complaint, relating to the subdivision and sale of the south half of the section, by showing the existence of a later oral agreement covering that portion of the section. To the offered proof of this oral agreement the defendant objected, upon the ground that it was oral and thus within the provisions of the statute of frauds. The trial court was at first disposed to sustain this objection, and, in fact, did so for some time during the trial, but finally apparently became convinced that a partnership for the sale of real estate need not be in writing, but could be shown by parol, and thereafter permitted the plaintiffs to proffer such proof upon the subject as they desired, and their evidence upon the subject of the existence and terms of this alleged parol agreement was then admitted without further objection on the defendant's part. The defendant, however, as a witness in his own behalf, positively denied the existence of any such oral agreement relating to the south half of the section, or any partnership understanding, or to the sale thereof, and his testimony in that regard was supported by that of other witnesses. There was evidence pro and con as to an accounting and settlement having been made between the parties, in so far as the sales within the north half of the section were concerned. The court, in deciding the case, found that the written agreement had been entered into between the parties affecting the north half of the section, and also found that an accounting and settlement had been fully had between them as to the transactions arising out of said written agreement; but the court further found that no agreement had been made between the parties relating to the purchase, subdivision, or sale of the south half of the section, and that the plaintiffs at no time had any interest therein or in the proceeds derived from the sale thereof. Judgment thereon went for the defendant. The plaintiffs moved for a new trial on various grounds, which motion was denied, wherefore they prosecute this appeal.

[1-3] That the trial court in the earlier stages of the trial of the case committed various errors of law in at first excluding the offered evidence of the plaintiffs as to the existence of the oral agreement for the inclusion of the south half of the section of land in question within the terms of their partnership arrangement, there can be no doubt, in the light of the cases holding that such an agreement need not be in writing. Koyer v. Willmon, 150 Cal. 785, 90 Pac. 135; Musick Consol. Oil Co. v. Chandler, 158 Cal. 7, 109 Pac. 613. But it appears from the record that the trial court, having had its attention called to these cases, became convinced of its error, and thereupon and thereafter during the trial permitted the plaintiff to present such evidence as they desired upon the subject, which evidence was admitted without further objection. The appellants do not here claim that they were thus prevented from producing whatever proof they had in support of the averments of this portion of their complaint, and, this being so, whatever earlier errors the trial court committed were cured by its final admission of the whole of the plaintiffs' offered evidence. The only other point urged by the appellants is that of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of the court as to the nonexistence of any agreement affecting the south half of the section of land in question, and also as to the fact of a full accounting and settlement having been had between the parties as to the north half thereof. But as to both of these matters the evidence was in substantial conflict, and for that reason the findings of the court thereon will not be disturbed upon appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

NEWMAN et al. v. CITY OF ALHAMBRA. (L. A. 4471.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1002 — REVIEW — VERDICT ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Appellant's contentions, based on conclusions drawn from conflicting testimony, may not prevail, if the Supreme Court finds any substantial proof in support of the verdict and judgment.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃835 — FLOODING LAND — CHANGING GRADE OF STREET—"ACT OF GOD."

A city, which by changes in grade of ditch and street so changed the drainage of the locality that abutting owners suffered injury from flooding, could not attribute consequences of its engineering to an "act of God," that could not happen by the intervention of man.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Act of God.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃751(3) — CHANGE IN GRADE OF STREET—LIABILITY OF CITY—FLOODING.

Where contractor, in raising grade of street above a ditch, a change which flooded abutting property, acted under instructions of city engineer, rather than terms of city ordinance or his contract, the city, having accepted street and maintained it, was liable for his act and the flooding.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1050(1) — HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In action against city for flooding property by changing grade of a street and ditch, testimony as to conversations between plaintiffs and officers of city regarding its intended action in grading the street held harmless to the city.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by John and Emma Newman against the City of Alhambra, a municipal corporation. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying its motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Alfred Barstow and Barstow, Beach & Rowe, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Frank A. Jeffers, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiffs recovered a judgment in the sum of $1,250 against the city of Alhambra because of damage by flood to their property, due, as alleged, to the negligence of the municipal corporation in diverting the flow of certain surface water. While stipulating that the amount of the judgment is not an unjust compensation for the injury to their property suffered by plaintiffs, defendant, denying any liability on its part to compensate the Newmans for such damage, appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

It is argued that the evidence did not justify the verdict; that the verdict is against the law; that errors of law were committed in the superior court which should cause a reversal of the judgment on appeal; and that the trial court erred in refusing to grant defendant's motion for a new trial. In support of the first of these points appellant's counsel elaborately analyze the evidence and argue that plaintiffs, after buying a low-lying lot, negligently failed to grade it in such manner as to guard against inundation during the rainy season; that the street, the grade of which, plaintiffs declared, was raised to a height and given a trend that backed water upon their property, was in reality paved according to good engineering practice; that the city did not raise the crown of the street; that the water which caused the injury to the land of plaintiffs came from sources other than those to which it was attributed in the complaint; and that the damage was caused by act of God.

[1] All of these contentions, except, perhaps, the last one, are based upon conclusions drawn from conflicting testimony, and, of course, no one of them may prevail, if we find any substantial proof in support of the verdict and the judgment.

[2] Respondents bought a lot on the south side of Cedar street in Alhambra in the year 1910. The property was immediately adjoining and west of a concrete waterway, without a top, used for drainage purposes and having a cross-section of 35 square feet. Prior to the purchase of the realty by respondents the street had been graded, the curb had been set and the sidewalk had been laid. Respondents graded their land to a level higher than the curb and built a house on the property. The concrete drainage ditch which borders the property of plaintiffs also crosses Cedar street. Appellant maintained the part of this waterway traversing its highway, so that the open ditch had a cross-section of only 24 feet. It was then covered with planks and the low point of the street being at the ditch, the drainage of Cedar street, both from the north and the south, was toward and into said waterway. There was testimony tending to show and sufficient to support the conclusions reached by the jury that prior to 1914, at times of heavy rainfall, the water which the ditch could not carry would follow the planks across Cedar street from the north to the south side of said street and then would be drained by the ditch of greater capacity than that crossing the said highway, thus being made to flow along the border of the property of plaintiffs without any injury to the land or buildings. There was testimony that this was the condition at the time the Newmans bought the land. In 1913 Cedar street was raised about 22 inches at the ditch by the filling in of earth upon the top of the planks covering the ditch and by crowning it with some hard concrete material. It was the contention of respondents, and their theory was supported by substantial evidence, that when the heavy rains of the season of 1914 came, on two occasions the water filled the ditch to the brim and at such times the smaller caliber of the waterway traversing Cedar street and the raise of 22 inches in the paving of said street over the ditch combined to force upon the land of plaintiffs the flood waters which would have otherwise been harmless.

In view of the evidence rationally supporting such an asserted set of facts, the argument in appellant's brief on this branch of the case amounts merely to an assertion that the jury decided against that which counsel for appellant regard as the weight of the evidence. While the argument is ably and plausibly maintained, we cannot undertake here to pass upon the weight of conflicting testimony. Nor can the appellant under the facts of this case, as the jury was justified under the evidence in finding them, assert that it is exonerated because the detriment to the property of plaintiffs was caused by "the act of God." The owner of property who by unwarranted physical means provides for a change in the drainage of his land so that another must thereby suffer injury may not attribute the logical consequences of his engineering to an act of God. In defining an "act of God," as that term is used in the law, this court long ago, in Polack v. Pioche, 35 Cal. 416–423 (95 Am. Dec. 115), adopted the following language of Lord Mansfield in Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 27:

"Now, what is the act of God? I consider it to mean something in opposition to the act of man; for everything is the act of God that happens by his permission; everything by his knowledge, * * * such acts as could not happen by the intervention of man, as storms, lightnings, and tempests."

In the same paragraph the learned Mr. Justice Sanderson, who delivered the opinion of the court, further expounded the law as follows:

"The expression excludes the idea of human agency, and if it appears that a given loss has happened in any way through the intervention of man, it cannot be held to have been the act of God, but must be regarded as the act of man."

This definition and its application to injuries produced partly by the intervention of man in dealing with the elements has been followed ever since. Chidester v. Consolidated Ditch Co., 59 Cal. 197; Odd Fellows Mutual Aid Association v. James, 63 Cal. 598, 49 Am. Rep. 107; Pope v. Farmers' Union & Milling Co., 130 Cal. 139, 62 Pac. 384, 53 L. R. A. 673, 80 Am. St. Rep. 87; Fay v. Pacific Improvement Co., 93 Cal. 253, 26 Pac. 1099, 28 Pac. 943, 16 L. R. A. 188, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198.

[3] The evidence tended to show that the contractor who raised the grade of the street above the ditch, acting not in accordance with the terms of the contract but under instructions of the city engineer, made the crown of the street higher than the ordinance or his agreement required, and the argument is made that any detriment caused by the act of the contractor may not be attributed to the city. The city accepted the completed street, however, and maintained it at the grade actually established. It therefore is immaterial, say respondents, whether the contractor followed the specifications of his contract accurately or not. Tyler v. Tehama Co., 109 Cal. 618, 42 Pac. 240. But appellant suggests that this case is governed not by the rule in Tyler v. Tehama Co., supra, but by that announced in Sievers v. City and County of San Francisco, 115 Cal. 648, 47 Pac. 647, 56 Am. St. Rep. 153, which holds that a city is not responsible for the remissness of its officers or contractors. In that case no act of the city was shown to have been performed in authorization or ratification of the contractor's act. In this case it was not only stipulated that the city accepted the street as raised in grade and used it, but, moreover, there was a conflict of testimony regarding the repair and consequent raising of Cedar street at the place where the ditch crossed; some of the witnesses declaring that the altitude of the grade at that place was due to repairs made by the city's own workmen and not to the acts of the contractor.

[4] Error is asserted by counsel for appellant because the court permitted testimony regarding alleged conversations between plaintiffs and certain officers of the city government regarding the intended action of the municipality in grading the street. Without reviewing this matter in detail, it is sufficient to say that we find no material injury could have been suffered by defendant because of the admission of this testimony.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

In re WATTS' ESTATE. (Sac. 2813.)

1. WILLS ⊂=506(4)—CONSTRUCTION—DEVISE TO HEIRS—STATUTE.

Where testatrix, whose husband had died intestate, devised all her estate, which had been community property, to her heirs for distribution according to law, and neither had left any issue nor surviving father or mother, their brothers and sisters and the children of deceased brothers and sisters were all entitled, under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, and in view of sections 1327, 1334, to share in distribution.

2. WILLS ⟸507—"HEIRS."
The word "heirs" is a technical term, and is used to designate the persons who would by the statute succeed in the real estate, or, in California, estate of any kind, in case of intestacy.
[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Heirs.]

3. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION ⟸1—INHERITANCE—STATUTE.
In California, there is no inherent or natural right of inheritance, independent of the statute of succession.

4. WILLS ⟸440—CONSTRUCTION—MEANING OF LANGUAGE.
A testator's intent must be determined from the language of the will, and where it is clear and unambiguous it must be interpreted according to its ordinary meaning and legal import.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Lydia M. Watts, deceased. Proceeding by Ella Gray and others against A. V. Watts and others and Herbert W. Whitten, as executor of Lydia M. Watts, deceased. From a decree of partial distribution, A. V. Watts and others appeal. Reversed.

Lon Bond, Deirup & Deirup, and Samuel J. Nunn, all of Chico, and Samuel M. Shortridge, of San Francisco, for appellants. W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, D. Hadsell, of Sand Francisco, and Guy R. Kennedy, of Chico, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Appeal from a decree of partial distribution. Lydia M. Watts, the decedent, was a widow. She left a large estate, all of which had been community property of herself and her predeceased husband, Nelson Watts. Nelson Watts had died intestate. The decedent, Lydia M. Watts, left a will. Its first paragraph directs the payment of funeral expenses and debts. The next reads as follows:

"Secondly. I hereby give, devise and bequeath all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate wheresoever situate to my heirs and to be distributed to them according to law."

The third and last paragraph appoints an executor, and directs that no bond be required of him. There was no issue, and no surviving father or mother of either Nelson or Lydia Watts. Lydia M. Watts left brothers and sisters and children of deceased brothers and sisters. The members of this class are the respondents herein. The appellants bear a similar relationship to Nelson Watts. The court below granted distribution to the blood relatives of Lydia M. Watts alone, refusing to recognize the claims of the relatives of Nelson Watts.

[1-3] If Lydia M. Watts had died intestate, one-half of her estate would have passed to the appellants, and the other half to the respondents. Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8. The appellants claim that the second paragraph of the will gives them the share they would have taken in case of intestacy. This contention, we think, must be sustained. The will gives the residue, virtually the entire estate, "to my heirs and to be distributed to them according to law." Under section 1327 of the Civil Code:

"Technical words in a will are to be taken in their technical sense, unless the context clearly indicates a contrary intention. * * *"

It is further provided by section 1334 of the same Code that:

"A testamentary disposition to 'heirs,' 'relations,' 'nearest relations,' 'representatives,' 'legal representatives,' or 'personal representatives,' or 'family,' 'issue,' 'descendants,' 'nearest' or 'next of kin' of any person, without other words of qualification, and when the terms are used as words of donation, and not of limitation, vests the property in those who would be entitled to succeed to the property of such person, according to the provisions of the title on succession, in this Code."

Both sections are directly applicable here. The word "heirs" is a technical term, and is used to designate "the persons who would by the statute succeed to the real estate [or, in California, estate of any kind] in case of intestacy." Clarke v. Cordis, 4 Allen (Mass.) 466, 480. "The 'heirs' of a person," said this court in Hochstein v. Berghauser, 123 Cal. 681, 687, 56 Pac. 547, 549, "are those whom the law appoints to succeed to his estate in case he dies without disposing of it by will." This is the ordinary meaning of the word, used in an instrument of any kind. Where a will makes a gift to the "heirs" of a person, section 1334 adds the sanction of statutory definition to the interpretation.

When, then, Mrs. Watts, by the second paragraph of her will, gave the residue to her heirs, she adopted, for the purposes of her testamentary disposition, the statute of succession. In designating her "heirs" as the objects of her bounty, she used a word which, by its legal definition, embraced those persons who would, under the terms of section 1386 of the Civil Code, have taken in the absence of a will. There is no inherent or natural right of inheritance, independent of our statute of succession. Section 1386, which embraces all of that statute material here, affords the only means of ascertaining who are the "heirs" of the decedent. The respondents must rely upon it equally with the appellants, for it constitutes the sole basis for their own status as heirs. It is true that, if the property of the decedent had not been derived from her husband, it would, by virtue of subdivisions other than 8, have passed to her blood relatives alone. But, under the actual facts of this case, subdivision 8 is the governing provision, and under it the appellants would, in case of intestacy, have succeeded to one-half of the estate. That subdivision is as much a part of the law of succession as any other, and those who inherit under it take as heirs of the decedent widow or widower, not as heirs of the predeceased spouse. See subdivision 9 of section 1386.

[4] Any suggestion that Mrs. Watts would probably have wished her estate to go to those of her own blood is based on mere conjecture. In any view, it can have no force here. We must determine her intent from the language of her will, and where that language is clear and unambiguous it "must be interpreted according to its ordinary meaning and legal import, and the intention of the testator ascertained thereby." Estate of Blake, 157 Cal. 448, 459, 108 Pac. 287, 291.

An analogous situation was considered by us in the recent case of Estate of Marshall, 169 Pac. 672. There the will of the testatrix gave the residue of her estate "to my own family, who I think are all in Mexico." The court held that the use of the word "own," coupled with the concluding clause referring to residence in Mexico, indicated that the testatrix intended to limit her gift to her blood relatives. The entire argument proceeded, however, on the assumption that, in the absence of these "words of qualification," the term "family" (which, under Civil Code, § 1334, is equivalent to "heirs") would have covered the persons designated by subdivision 8 of section 1386. In the will of Mrs. Watts there are no qualifying terms to limit or explain the ordinary meaning of the word "heirs." The testatrix says simply that she gives the residue to her heirs. The further provision that it is "to be distributed to them according to law" only serves to strengthen the conclusion that she was directing that the property should go just as it would have gone under the statute of descent in the absence of any testamentary disposition.

The decree appealed from is reversed.

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸177(1)—DAMS — TEMPORARY INJUNCTION — DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where a basin had been surcharged with flood waters which, with another storm impending, were steadily rising and threatening, to cross a ridge separating such basin from another basin, whether a temporary mandatory injunction should be issued requiring removal of temporary sack levee along top of ridge built as protection against such water and causing accumulation threatening to cross ridge onto plaintiff's land, was largely discretionary with court.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸954(1)—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT—INJUNCTION.

An order issuing a temporary mandatory injunction requiring removal of temporary sack levee along top of ridge separating two basins causing accumulation of flood waters that threatened to overflow plaintiff's lands, will be sustained, unless court's discretion was clearly abused.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸167(1)—DAMS—SURFACE WATERS—NATURAL FLOW.

Where flood waters overflowing basin threatened to flow over a ridge separating the basin from another basin, landowners in latter basin could not protect their land from overflow by maintaining obstructions on ridge restraining such water as was surface water from passing over ridge at its lowest point of natural elevation in its accustomed course.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸177(1)—FLOOD WATERS — OBSTRUCTIONS — INJUNCTION—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where, at a time of heavy floods and storms, flood waters overflowing a basin were steadily rising, threatening to cross over ridge separating such basin from another basin, court did not abuse its discretion in issuing temporary mandatory injunction requiring removal of temporary sack levee along top of ridge built to protect certain land in latter basin from overflow and causing accumulation of water threatening plaintiff's land.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸781(7)—MOOT QUESTIONS—TEMPORARY MANDATORY INJUNCTION.

Where an appeal is taken from a temporary mandatory injunction commanding that temporary sack levee along top of ridge constructed as protection against overflow of water be removed, the doing of the things commanded to be done does not make questions involved in appeal moot, inasmuch as execution of order did not deprive defendants of the right to costs and damages if injunction was unlawful.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸781(1)—MOOT QUESTIONS — TEMPORARY MANDATORY INJUNCTION — REMOVAL OF OBSTRUCTION TO WATER.

Where an appeal is taken from a temporary mandatory injunction ordering removal of temporary sack levee on top of ridge obstructing flow of water across ridge, the building of a canal making levee unnecessary did not make the questions involved in appeal moot, such questions being important to the state and reversal entitling defendants to costs and damages.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by Ida B. Piper against Stewart S. Hawley and others. From an order directing the issuance of a temporary mandatory injunction, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Arthur C. Huston and Harry L. Huston, both of Woodland, for appellants. Elmer W. Armfield, of Woodland, John S. Partridge, of San Francisco, and Arthur B. Eddy, of Woodland, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from an order directing the issuance of a temporary mandatory injunction requiring the removal of a certain earth embankment and temporary sack levee from what is known as Knights Landing ridge, in the county of Yolo. The facts out of which the controversy between the parties hereto arose are substantially as follows:

The Sacramento river flows through the Sacramento valley in a general northerly to southerly direction. During its course therein and from a point near its entry into the valley to its mouth it passes between banks raised above the level of the adjacent lands on each side of the river, these lands lying in depressed basins or troughs, varying in width from 2 to 7 miles, which at intervals are separated from each other by low ridges which have been built up by the sedimentary deposits of streams which intersect these basins and are tributary to the Sacramento river. On the west side of the river are two main basins, the Colusa basin and the Yolo basin, between which is what is known as the Knights Landing ridge, which extends from the bank of the river at Knights Landing in a southerly and westerly direction toward the town of Yolo, and which was originally built up by the sedimentary deposits of Cache creek. The Colusa basin lies to the northward of this ridge and the Yolo basin to the southward, and the levels of each of these basins have a gradual downward trend toward the south, except as intercepted by this ridge. The natural elevation of the ridge at and near the bank of the river is 38 feet, which increases as the ridge extends westerly. During the winter season flood waters formerly collected in the Colusa basin from rains and from the numerous streams which flow into it and also, in times of high water, from the overflow of the Sacramento river, and these when they reached an elevation in excess of 38 feet would flow over the Knights Landing ridge at the point of its lowest elevation, making their way into the Yolo basin and thence formerly through Cache slough into the main river. The lands of the plaintiff herein are situated on Knights Landing ridge about 3,600 feet westerly from Knights Landing on the river bank and at an elevation from 41 to 42 feet, according to the official data of the state engineering department. In the year 1909, during a period of severe flood, the waters collecting in the Colusa basin, augmented by the overflow of the river, reached a higher elevation than that of the ridge near the river. Reclamation District 108, with other landowners having land holdings in the Colusa basin, in order to relieve the situation, attempted to make a cut through Knights Landing ridge with a view to discharging the waters then collected in the Colusa basin into the Yolo basin. One T. F. Laugenour, a landowner in the Yolo basin below Knights Landing ridge, applied to the superior court of Yolo county for an injunction to restrain the above parties from cutting through the ridge. In May, 1910, said court gave its judgment granting such injunction restraining the defendants in that action from in any manner excavating, cutting, or injuring the Knights Landing ridge, or doing any act or thing whatever in, on or about the ridge which would cause or tend to cause or permit the waters above the ridge to escape through or over the ridge, until such time as a canal could be built, under the direction of the court, to such point that the waters of the Colusa basin could be discharged without injury to the rights of the plaintiff, Laugenour, and others owning land below the ridge. The judgment further provided that such canal should have an elevation, on both sides, of sufficient height to keep back the waters of Cache creek, and the carrying capacity of the canal should be sufficient to take care of the drainage through the same. The judgment further provided that any cuts or excavations made in the ridge should be made under the direction of the court, and that the ridge should be safeguarded from further destruction or injury. Subsequently and in the year 1913 a drainage district was created by an act of the Legislature of that year (St. 1913, p. 109) having for its purpose the cutting of Knights Landing ridge and the construction of a canal through the same to a point near the sink of Cache creek in the Yolo basin. This act, in providing for the creation of the proposed drainage district, made express reference to the act of the Legislature approved December 24, 1911 (St. Extra Sess. 1911, p. 117), adopting the report of the California débris commission transmitted to the federal government on June 27, 1911, providing for a plan of reclamation along the Sacramento river and its tributaries and creating a reclamation board and defining its powers and duties. Said act also directed that the board of drainage commissioners to be created in accordance with its terms should take such steps as should be necessary—

"to open a cut through Knights Landing ridge in Yolo county, and to construct a canal leading from said cut for the purpose of draining and disposing of the waters of Colusa basin by carrying the same to the head of the proposed Yolo by-pass * * * as defined by and in accordance with the general plan of the California Débris Commission."

The act further provided that:

"No water shall be permitted to flow through any cut or excavation in said ridge provided to be made in this act until the canal to be constructed as hereinbefore provided shall have been completed so as to convey the waters flowing or to flow through said cut to the head of said proposed Yolo by-pass * * * in a manner satisfactory to the said reclamation board. Said reclamation board shall have power to direct the method of the construction of said cut, canal, and levees."

It will thus be seen that this act of the Legislature creating the Knights Landing Ridge drainage district and defining its purposes and powers was in harmony with and in furtherance of the earlier and larger plan for the confining or returning of the overflow waters of the Sacramento river to their natural channel, preventing this recurring overflow and reclaiming the lands of the several basins lying along the course of said river. Stats. 1913, p. 109. Upon the organization of this drainage district under said act, the defendants in the aforesaid action moved the superior court of Yolo county for a modification of its injunction against the cutting of the ridge so as to permit said district to make a cut of sufficient width through the ridge to permit the passage of dredgers in order to construct the canal below such cut, the said penetration of the ridge to be temporary and to be filled when its immediate purpose was accomplished so that the waters accumulating above the ridge would not be permitted to flow through it until the canal which was to dispose of them below had been completed. Upon the hearing on this motion the said court made an order approving the plan of the drainage district for the construction of the permanent works in the ridge and canal below for which it provided, and so modified its former injunction as to permit the temporary penetration of the ridge applied for, specifically directing how such work should be done, and providing for the restoration of the ridge to its former state when the dredgers had sufficiently done the work for the doing of which passage through the ridge was required. The order also provided that all of this work should be completed on or before October 15, 1914, or at such further time as the court should direct. The defendants in said action, having procured the foregoing order, dismissed their appeal from the previous judgment of injunction; and pursuant to such modification thereof, the drainage district began making the excavation of the ridge in accordance with the direction thereof. Ida B. Piper, the plaintiff in the present action, was not a party to the former action and does not appear to have interposed any objection to the progress of the work being done by the drainage district by virtue of the terms of the act of its creation nor by virtue of the modification of the injunction granted in the former case. The work proceeded to the point of the refilling of the gap in the ridge so as to put the same in condition to prevent any water from flowing through or over it until the lower work upon the canal had been completed. In order to do this the drainage district apparently deemed it necessary to raise the summit of the ridge at the point of the cut and for some distance on both sides of the same to such a height as would prevent any waters from passing over it in that vicinity even at extreme high water in times of flood. Accordingly, the top of the ridge was raised from its former natural elevation of 39 feet at points to the eastward of the plaintiff's lands, to an elevation of from 48 to 50 feet. Not long thereafter occurred the heavy flood of the winter of 1914–15, said to be the largest flood known in the history of the region, reaching its maximum in February of the latter year, as a result of which the Colusa basin filled and the waters threatened to cross the ridge at points to the easterly of the plaintiff's premises. In order to prevent this result, Reclamation District 730, one of the defendants and appellants herein, caused to be constructed a temporary sack levee along the top of the ridge extending further westward from the point where the increase of elevation accomplished by the work of the drainage district had ceased, toward the plaintiff's lands. The effect of both of these changes in the elevation of the ridge at points east of the plaintiff's lands was to check the overflow of the increasing waters at their former point of exit and to cause them to further accumulate in the Colusa basin until they reached an elevation which placed the plaintiff's premises in immediate danger of overflow. This was the state of things when the plaintiff herein commenced the present action on February 15, 1915. By this action and especially by the temporary mandatory injunction applied for therein, this plaintiff sought to have all obstructions removed from the top of the ridge to the eastward of her lands which interfered with the free passage of the flood waters of the Colusa basin over the ridge at their former point of exit when they attained a height in excess of 39 feet; or, in other words, to have the natural elevation of the ridge at these points restored. Upon the hearing of the application for this temporary order much testimony was presented, after the hearing of which the court made the order for such mandatory injunction pendente lite, from which this appeal has been taken.

Reclamation District No. 730 lies, as to the lands included within it, to the southward of Knights Landing ridge, in the Yolo basin. Neither it nor other appellants herein were parties directly engaged in the performance of the work of making the cut through the ridge or the canal below, provided for in the act of the Legislature creating the Knights Landing drainage district. The interest of these appellants in seeking to prevent the flood waters of the Colusa basin from overtopping the Knights Landing ridge was primarily that of preventing the overflow of said waters upon their own lands. Knights Landing Ridge drainage district, which had immediately in charge the making of said cut and the construction of the canal below it, was also made a party to this action and was present by counsel in court when the hearing was had upon the application of the plaintiff for this injunction and offered no resistance to the granting of the same, although said injunction was mandatory in character and required the removal of the more permanent portion of the obstruction of the passage of these waters over said ridge which had been placed there by said drainage district in the course of making said cut. It would seem to be manifest, therefore, that the effect of the removal of the obstruction from the ridge provided for by the order complained of by the other defendants, who are the appellants herein, would not be that of causing any injury to the construction work which had been or was in process of being done by the drainage district, but would be merely that of permitting the accumulating waters of the Colusa basin to pass over said ridge, as formerly, at the point of its lowest natural level and flow down into the Yolo basin and thus reach and overflow the lower lands of the appellants herein.

The foregoing review of the facts of this case removes from our consideration in connection with it a number of the questions which were involved and elaborately considered in the case of Gray v. Reclamation District No. 1500, 174 Cal. 622, 163 Pac. 1024, wherein it was held that the defendant in that action, while engaged in carrying forward the plans adopted by both the federal and state governments for the confinement of the waters of the Sacramento river to their natural channel, thus increasing the navigability of the river and thus also accomplishing the reclamation of the vast tracts of low-lying land comprising the several basins adjacent to the course of said river, could not be prevented from proceeding with such work at the suit of some landowner in one of said basins who might be temporarily injured by the overflow of his lands consequent upon the prosecution of such work, and that the injury of such landowner was in such a case damnum absque injuria. The court also in that case decided that the several basins lying along the west side of the Sacramento river did not possess the characteristics of water courses as that term is therein defined so as to require that all waters that might from any source be collected in them were to be permitted to take their natural course without obstruction. The court also decided in the same case that the conditions which existed along the west side of the Sacramento river in respect to these several basins and their collected waters were not those presented for consideration in the case of Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., 155 Cal. 59, 90 Pac. 502, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391, wherein the annually recurring floods made the stream wider during the period of such floods so as to include therein adjoining lands, in which case such regularly recurring flood waters were to be deemed a part of the ordinary flow of the stream. The chief point of departure between the case of Gray v. Reclamation District No. 1500, supra, and the case at bar arises from the fact that in the Gray Case the defendant was acting in accordance with the declared policy of the state and federal governments in their combined efforts to increase the navigability of the Sacramento river by confining its waters to their natural channel and also to work the reclamation of the vast areas of fertile land belonging to the state or its citizens, lying within these several basins along both sides of the river; while in the instant case the defendants were acting in the purely private capacity of seeking to protect their lower-lying lands from overflow, and were not in so doing promoting either of the public purposes commended by the court in the Gray Case. The case of Sanguinetti v. Pock, 136 Cal. 466, 69 Pac. 98, 89 Am. St. Rep. 169, in some of its aspects more nearly resembles the case at bar in the respect that in that case each of the parties thereto were private parties occupying the relation of upper and lower owners of lands across which there was a depression wherein surface waters were collected in the winter season and into which at times the flood waters of Mormon slough overflowed and intermingling there with the surface waters descended from the plaintiff's to the defendant's lands. The defendant undertook to so obstruct this depression as to prevent the flow of both sorts of waters upon his land and to cause them to collect upon and flood the plaintiff's land. The court in that case held that the defendant, while he had the right to protect his land from the overflow waters of Mormon slough, had no right to obstruct the downward flow of the surface waters in their natural and accustomed course from the plaintiff's lands to his own, and that in connection with whatever obstruction he constructed against the overflow waters of Mormon slough he must have first provided for a sufficient canal or ditch to carry all such surface waters as were accustomed to flow in said depression from the plaintiff's lands to his own.

[1-3] In the case at bar the trial court, upon the hearing of the application for a temporary injunction, was presented with an extraordinary situation. It was a time of most unusual storm and flood. The Colusa basin had become surcharged with waters which were steadily rising and threatening to obliterate the levees which had been built for the protection of the several reclamation districts in the region and even to destroy the embankment and sack levees along the top of the ridge and descend in destructive volume upon the lower lands. Another storm was impending. If the plaintiff was refused the immediate relief demanded it was made to appear that not only her lands but also the lands of other and more remote owners along the ridge would also be overflowed. The volume of the rising waters consisted of intermingled surface and flood waters, the proportion of each being impossible of speedy or exact ascertainment. The particular defendant which had placed the main and more permanent obstructions along the tops of the levee at its point of lowest elevation was not objecting to the removal of the material which had been placed there by it, and thus evidently did not anticipate any substantial injury to the work it had been carrying on by the restoration of the ridge at that point to its former natural elevation. If this were done the maintenance or removal of the temporary sack levees which had been put in place by the other defendants would become inconsequential, since the overflow waters would pass over the lowest part of the ridge and to the eastward of said defendants' lands. Under such unusual and extraordinary conditions the trial court was invested with a very large discretion as to what temporary and immediate order should be made in the premises, and unless it should be made to very clearly appear that such discretion had been abused its order so made should be sustained. Conceding the right of the appellants to protect their lands from overflow by such of the accumulated waters of the Colusa basin as were strictly flood waters from the Sacramento river under the authority of Sanguinetti v. Pock, supra, they had not the right under the same authority to maintain obstructions upon the ridge which would also have the effect of restraining such of said waters as were strictly surface waters, from passing over the ridge at its lowest point of natural elevation in their accustomed course and way. Whether it was possible in the emergencies of the moment to make a practical order which should undertake to distinguish and divide these rising waters and the right of the respective parties as to their retention or passage was a matter intrusted almost entirely to the trial court's discretion. In the case of Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal Co. supra, the rule, as well stated by Mr. Justice Sloss, is applicable to the extreme conditions presented by the case at bar:

"It would be superfluous to cite authorities to show that the granting or refusing of a preliminary injunction is a matter resting largely in the discretion of the trial court. Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence regarding an issue which may affect the discretion of the court in passing upon the application for such injunction, the order made will not on appeal be overthrown merely because there may be considerable or even preponderating evidence which, if believed, would have led to a contrary conclusion. The granting or denial of a preliminary injunction does not amount to an adjudication of the ultimate rights in controversy. It merely determines that the court, balancing the respective equities of the parties, concludes that, pending a trial on the merits, the defendant should or that he should not be restrained from exercising the rights claimed by him."

[4] In the case of Jones v. California Development Co., 173 Cal. 565, 160 Pac. 823, L. R. A. 1917C, 1021, the court, quoting from 3 Farnham, Water & Water Rights, § 889, declared that:

"No arbitrary rule can be laid down which will govern all cases, but each case must be dealt with upon its facts, applying the rule which will be reasonable under the circumstances, under the general rule that the water should be allowed, as far as possible, to seek its natural outlet."

Upon these authorities, from a careful examination of the record before us, we are unable to say that there was any abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in making the order complained of.

[5, 6] In this case the respondent moved the dismissal of the appeal upon the ground that the questions involved therein had become moot questions for the reason that the things commanded to be done by the mandatory injunction had been done, and upon the further ground that the Knights Landing ridge has been cut and the by-pass and levees constructed under and in accordance with the Statute of 1913 providing therefor and which will hereafter conduct the waters of the Colusa basin through the ridge and into the Yolo by-pass, thus avoiding future floods. As to the first of these grounds the motion is clearly not good, for to hold otherwise would be to deprive a party rightfully resisting an improper preliminary mandatory injunction of his remedy for costs and damages by the simple process of executing the unlawful order. As to the second ground of said motion, while it may be true in the instant case that the removal of the source of trouble may have rendered unimportant its final determination, still the appellants, had our conclusion been otherwise as to the right of the trial court to make the order complained of, would have been entitled to their damages and costs as a result of a reversal of such order; besides, the questions involved are of wider moment than the particular case because of the great importance to the state of California of the settlement of the law relating to the waters and adjoined lands of its two great internal waterways. The motion to dismiss is denied. The order is affirmed.

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸132—DIVERSION OF WATER — PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHTS.
The rule which denies to a lower riparian proprietor the power of acquiring prescriptive rights to the use of the water of a stream by the mere user thereof for any period, after they have passed the lands of the upper proprietor, had no application, where plaintiff's lands were not riparian lands, and he did not divert the water after it had passed defendants' lands, but, on the contrary, went on defendants' riparian lands and by means of dams and ditches diverted water from a stream thereon, and conveyed it to his own lands, and a prescriptive right to the ditch and the waters flowing therein might be acquired.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸143—DIVERSION OF WATER — PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHTS.
Plaintiffs, whose lands were nonriparian, entered on the lands of defendants, through which a stream flowed, and cleaned out and reopened an old and unused miner's ditch, rebuilding a dam at its head, and diverted waters from the stream, through an extension of such ditch, to their own lands. The entry was in the nature of a trespass, and defendants knew of plaintiffs' acts and invasions of defendants' rights, but never objected to or interfered with the diversion of the water for over 15 years, during which plaintiffs used the water under a claim of right. Defendants also used water from the stream in their mining operations, but it appeared that such operations were carried on during the winter months, when plaintiffs were not using or claiming the right to use the waters, and that the waters used by defendants were returned to the stream, so that the amount of water at plaintiffs' point of diversion was apparently not reduced. Held, that plaintiffs had a prescriptive right to the amount of water diverted by them, during the months of May to October, inclusive, as awarded by the court.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1011(1) — FINDING ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE — CONCLUSIVENESS.
Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the trial court's findings thereon are binding upon appeal.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸130—DIVERSION—PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHTS.
Where a tunnel was run into the side of a ravine, striking and conducting to the ravine waters which had theretofore come to the surface of the ravine naturally, such waters were properly treated as a part of the natural flow of the stream, to the extent of its previous flow, in determining prescriptive rights.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸302(5) — EXCEPTIONS BELOW—NECESSITY.
A motion for new trial, containing no such specification of insufficiency of evidence as would direct attention to the defect, will not authorize its review on appeal.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by L. A. Smith and others against E. C. Gaylord and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying the motion for a new trial, made by the defendants, other than Gaylord, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Ben P. Tabor and John M. Fulweiler, both of Auburn, for appellants. Tuttle & Tuttle, of Auburn, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This cause was originally heard in Department 1, where the judgment and order appealed from were affirmed upon grounds stated in an opinion prepared by RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. A hearing in bank was ordered to enable the court to give further consideration to the question of the relative rights of the opposing parties to a flow of water artificially added by defendants to the natural volume of the stream. It was thought that the opinion might, on this point, be in conflict with E. Clemens Horst Co. v. New Blue Point Mining Co., 171 Pac. 417, which had been decided by the court in bank shortly after the filing of the department opinion herein. On further study of the record we are satisfied that the facts of the present case do not present the legal questions determined in the Horst Case. With the exception of a paragraph dealing with this branch of the case, we adopt, virtually verbatim, the following statement and discussion from the opinion of Mr. Justice RICHARDS:

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs and from an order denying the defendants' (other than Gaylord's) motion for a new trial. The nature of the action is that of a suit by plaintiffs to quiet their title to a ditch and water right in the county of Placer. The defendant Haskell Gold Mining Company has been for many years the owner of certain real property in said county known as the Greenwood Place. During the same period the plaintiffs were the owners of another nearby tract known as the "Oleander ranch." Through the said defendant's property passes a ravine known as "Dirty Face ravine," down which originally flowed a certain limited amount of water. This ravine does not border upon or traverse the plaintiff's lands, nor did its waters originally flow to or across the same. In about the year 1891 a tunnel had been run into the side of "Dirty Face ravine" upon the defendant's property and a flow of water struck, which increased to some extent the amount of water which had theretofore flowed down the ravine. There had been an old miner's ditch having its head in the ravine at some little distance below the site of said tunnel and which conveyed the original flow of the waters of the ravine over towards the Oleander ranch. This ditch had been unused for years, but in about the year 1894, after the accretion in the original waters of the ravine, through the addition of those developed in said tunnel, the plaintiffs went upon the defendant's property, cleaned out the old ditch, repaired the dam at its head, and began diverting a considerable portion of the waters then flowing in the ravine, and conveying the same by means of said reconstructed ditch to their own lands, where they used said waters during certain months of the year for purposes of irrigation. There is evidence tending to show that this diversion and use of these waters continued thereafter up to a time shortly before the commencement of this action. Upon the trial of the cause the court found that the plaintiffs were the owners of the ditch extending from its head in "Dirty Face ravine" to the Oleander ranch, together with the right to take, divert, and use, by means of said ditch, two miners' inches of the waters of said ravine during the months of July, August, and September of each year, and three miners' inches thereof during the months of May, June, and October of each year. The court further found that for more than 15 years next preceding the commencement of the action the plaintiffs had been in actual, exclusive, open, and notorious possession of said waters and said ditch, and during all of said time said plaintiffs had actually, exclusively, openly, and notoriously used said water and said ditch; that the said possession and user by plaintiffs during all the said times had been hostile to said defendant's title and rights, and said defendants during all such times had full knowledge of said possession and user; that said user and said possession of plaintiffs during all of said times had been under a claim of title exclusive of any right in said defendants; and that said user and possession of plaintiffs during all of said times had been continuous and uninterrupted. It was chiefly these findings and the judgment based thereon which were the subject of defendants' assault upon motion for a new trial, and of the appellants' attack upon this appeal.

[1] It is to be noted at the outset that this is not the case of a lower riparian owner diverting or using the waters of a stream at a point below the lands of the upper riparian owner for the statutory period required for the acquisition of easements by prescription. The lands of the plaintiffs herein are not riparian as to the waters in question, nor is the point of their diversion of such waters below the lands of the defendant which are riparian to such waters, but is upon the lands of the defendants at a point which would constitute an interference with their riparian rights therein. The cases cited by appellants, which deny to a lower riparian proprietor the power of acquiring prescriptive rights to the use of the waters of a stream by the mere user thereof for any period after they have passed the lands of the upper proprietor, have no application to the facts of the case at bar. This is a case where the owners of lands distant from the stream, and in no sense riparian, as to its waters, go upon the lands of another through which a stream is flowing, and by means of dams and ditches, divert a certain amount of such waters, and convey them to their own lands. Having done this for a period much longer than that prescribed by the statute for gaining title by prescription, the plaintiffs now assert a prescriptive right to continue so to do, to the extent of their prior diversion, as shown by the evidence in the case. That a prescriptive right, both to the ditch and to the waters flowing therein, may be thus acquired does not seem to be seriously disputed by the appellants herein, and their contention is therefore reduced to the question as to whether the evidence in the case was sufficient to justify the findings of the court above set forth.

[2] Turning to the evidence in the case, the record discloses practically without contradiction, that in about the year 1894 the plaintiffs entered upon the lands of the defendant Haskell Gold Mining Company, and there cleaned out and reopened the old and unused miner's ditch, and rebuilt the dam at its head, and then began to divert the waters at that time flowing in "Dirty Face ravine," and conveyed the same by an extension of said ditch to their own lands. This entry was, so far as the record discloses, in the nature of a trespass. The opening of the ditch and establishment of the dam was an interference with the said defendant's rights upon its own land, and the diversion of the water then taken, and continued to be thereafter taken, constituted an invasion of the defendant's ownership thereof, and of its rights as a riparian proprietor therein. All of these acts and invasions were from their beginning known to the officers and agents of the defendant Haskell Gold Mining Company, according to their own admissions on the witness stand. They were, therefore, from their inception, an open and adverse user of the defendant's lands, and an interference with its rights as to these waters. There is some evidence that such user was attended with a claim of right on the plaintiff's part, and there is also evidence, which is practically uncontradicted, that the maintenance of the dam and ditch and the diversion of the amount of these waters accomplished thereby was never objected to or interfered with by or on behalf of the said defendants until a short time prior to the institution of this action. There is some evidence tending to show that occasionally during the course of the 15 years of the plaintiffs' user of these waters, the said defendant, through its agents and lessees, during the course of mining operations upon its property, used without objection on plaintiffs' part, some, and at times all, of the waters collected and flowing in "Dirty Face ravine"; and it is argued by appellants that this user of said waters by said defendant was sufficient to prevent the plaintiffs' use thereof from being exclusive, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs' use of such waters could not ripen into a prescriptive right. On the other hand, however, there is evidence tending to show that such mining operations and occasional use of said waters by the defendant were carried on during the winter months when the plaintiffs were neither using nor claiming the right to the use of said waters, and there is also some evidence that even during the occasions of such use thereof by the defendant in connection with its mining operations, the waters after such use were returned to the ravine and flowed on down it, so that the amount of water at the plaintiffs' point of diversion was never apparently reduced. In this connection it is to be noted that the trial court in its findings and judgment only awarded to the plaintiffs the right to use "two miners' inches of water during the months of July, August, and September, and three miner's inches of such waters during May, June, and October of each year." There is some conflict of evidence regarding some of the matters above recited, but we think that, taking the testimony as a whole, there was sufficient evidence before the court to justify its findings to the effect that the plaintiffs had established a prescriptive right to the use of so much of the waters in question as were awarded to them by the court.

[3, 4] The appellants contend, however, that the trial court awarded the plaintiffs a flow of water developed by the tunnel to which reference has been made; that the waters thus developed would not, under natural conditions, have flowed down the ravine or come to the head of plaintiffs' ditch; and that plaintiffs could not, as against those developing such waters and adding them to the natural flow, acquire any prescriptive right. See E. Clemens Horst Co. v. New Blue Point M. Co., 171 Pac. 417. The findings, however, are against the allegations of the answer which form the basis of this claim. There is a substantial conflict in the evidence on the point, and the finding is therefore binding here. The respondents introduced testimony to the effect that the running of the tunnel intercepted springs and sources from which water had theretofore come to the surface of the ravine naturally, and that the stream had, prior to the running of the tunnel, carried an amount of water at least equal to that awarded the plaintiffs by the decree. To the extent of the right adjudged to belong to the plaintiffs the waters were therefore properly treated as a part of the natural flow of the stream. McClintock v. Hudson, 141 Cal. 275, 74 Pac. 849.

[5] It is urged that plaintiffs failed to make out a case of title by prescription for want of proof that they had, for the required period, paid all taxes levied and assessed upon the water right claimed by them. The point is not available on this appeal. The court found that plaintiffs were the owners of the right, and the statement on motion for new trial contains no such specification of insufficiency of evidence as would direct attention to the defect which is now, apparently for the first time, asserted.

The foregoing discussion covers the several points upon this appeal to which the appellants have presented argument or cited authority in support of their contentions. As to the several other grounds of error which are merely stated without argument or citation of authority, they have no such apparent merit as to justify their consideration or as to warrant a reversal of this case upon appeal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

SORMANO v. WOOD et al. (L. A. 4616.)

1. QUIETING TITLE ⊂⊃47(2)—PLEADING—DESCRIPTIONS.

In action to quiet title, where defendants filed answer and cross-complaint, and one defendant later filed an individual amended cross-complaint, tendering no new material issue, and not intended as a substituted pleading, the variance in descriptions between petition and amended cross-complaint being unsubstantial, findings of fact as to amended cross-complaint were unnecessary.

2. PLEADING ⊂⊃406(5)—FAILURE TO DEMUR—FINDINGS ON CROSS-COMPLAINT.

A contention that the rule that no findings are necessary on cross-complaint in action to quiet title, where there is a general finding for plaintiff, is inapplicable, when there is a variance in description between the complaint and cross-complaint, cannot be raised by defendant, where he did not demur to complaint and put all essential matters in issue by an answer in general terms.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Giuseppe Sormano against Luther B. Wood and others. From the judgment rendered, defendant J. H. Smith appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. S. McKelvey and Chas. S. Conner, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. George W. Crouch and E. W. Freeman, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff was successful in an action to quiet title to certain real property in the county of Los Angeles. One of the defendants, J. H. Smith, has appealed, bringing here the judgment roll alone.

The complaint is in the usual form, and contains the allegation that plaintiff "is now and for many years last past has been the owner and in the possession of that certain real property," which is described in detail. Luther B. Wood and J. H. Smith (now appellant) answered, denying plaintiff's ownership in the property or any part thereof, and setting up their alleged ownership in fee to all of it. By way of cross-complaint they averred that they were tenants in common to the fee. Plaintiff answered their cross-complaint, again averring his claim of interest in the property. Defendant Loop answered the complaint and alleged his ownership of the described property by virtue of a certain tax deed.

All of the pleadings above described were filed in March and April, 1912. In May, 1915, J. H. Smith filed an amended answer and cross-complaint denying plaintiff's ownership or right to possession of the land described in the complaint. By way of cross-complaint he averred that before the filing of the action he was, and at the time of the signing of his amended answer and cross-complaint still was, the owner and entitled to the possession of the land in question. The clerk entered Sormano's default for his failure to answer this cross-complaint. Defendant Loop answered the amended cross-complaint of Smith setting up his own title, acquired, as he alleged, by certain deeds from the state and from one Hall.

Thereafter the cause was tried, and the court found that all of the allegations of the complaint of Sormano were true, and all of the denials and allegations of the answer and cross-complaint of Wood and Smith were untrue, and that the allegations and averments of the answer of defendant E. E. Loop were untrue. There were other findings and appropriate conclusions of law, requiring plaintiff to pay into court for Smith's benefit a certain amount for taxes, penalties, and costs included in the sale of the land by the state in February, 1912. Judgment was entered against J. W. Hall by default.

Although he admits that the findings dispose of all of the issues raised by the answer and cross-complaint of himself and Wood, and those raised by the answer of Loop, appellant argues that those raised by his later so-called "amended answer and cross-complaint" have not been the subject of any findings, and that therefore the cause must go back for retrial, because of the court's failure to find on material issues.

[1, 2] In the first place, there is no showing, either by recital in the pleading itself or by any order set out in the transcript, that the court gave Smith permission to file his belated and so-called "amended" verified pleading, which seems to be in conflict with the earlier verified answer and cross-complaint of Smith and Wood. But, assuming that the later document was regularly filed, there was nothing to show that it was intended to be in lieu of the pleading which Smith and Wood had previously verified and used in the action. By that pleading all of the essential issues were joined. The amended cross-complaint of Smith tendered no new material issue not involved in both of his answers. Although a defendant in an action to quiet title may properly aver in a cross-complaint his own right to have his title quieted, the principal function of the practice of cross-pleading is to prevent plaintiff from dismissing his action before trial without the consent of the defendant. Larkin v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 719, 154 Pac. 841, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 670. It has even been held that an erroneous ruling of the court striking out such a cross-complaint is without prejudice in a case in which, like the one at bar, judgment is given in favor of plaintiff. Bulwer Consolidated Mining Co. v. Standard Consolidated Mining Co., 83 Cal. 589, 23 Pac. 1102; Miller v. Luco, 80 Cal. 257, 22 Pac. 195; Hanson v. Goldsmith, 170 Cal. 512, 150 Pac. 364. Indeed, the question presented by this appeal is answered by Brooks v. White, 22 Cal. App. 719, 136 Pac. 500, in which it is held that, where an answer denies plaintiff's and avers defendant's ownership and right to the possession of land, the omission of plaintiff to answer the cross-complaint does not authorize the clerk to enter a judgment by default.

In the closing brief appellant tries to differentiate this case from Larkin v. Superior Court, supra, on the theory that in that case there was no variance (as he asserts there is in this) between the descriptions of the properties as set up in plaintiff's complaint and his own so-called amended cross-complaint. In the latter he asserts title to lots 7 and 8, First addition to Huntington Park, and to a lot 20 feet in width adjoining each lot on the south. In the complaint the property is described as lots 7 and 8 and the north 20 feet of Hogan street (vacated) adjoining lots 7 and 8 on the south, and lying between the east and west lines of the two said lots "extended south," in block 5 of the First addition to Huntington Park, etc. Appellant's counsel solemnly argue that their description contained in the so-called "amended cross-complaint" puts the strip 20 feet in width outside of block 5, while the description in the complaint would seem to put it inside of that block. There is absolutely no merit in this contention, which amounts at most to a very tenuous distinction. In both descriptions the strip 20 feet in width is referred to and located "south" of lots 7 and 8 and "adjoining" them, and for more graphic details reference is made in each to the same recorded map. If the flimsy distinction upon which appellant's counsel rely really existed, still we would be bound to determine that the court, depending upon the map and the testimony, decided that the two descriptions were substantially identical and had application to the same property. Having failed to demur to the complaint, and having answered its averments in general terms, which placed all essential matters of controversy at issue, appellant may not with propriety raise any such question at this late date, even if the variance were one of a more substantial nature.

No other of the contentions contained in the closing brief merits discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

SOUTHERN PAC. CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION. (S. F. 8803.)

COMMERCE ⊂⊃27(8)—FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT—"INTERSTATE COMMERCE."

A member of a repair gang employed by a railroad company to make light repairs upon cars side-tracked in a yard used for interstate and intrastate commerce, killed while passing from one car to the other, was engaged in "interstate commerce" within the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, §§ 8657–8665).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Interstate Commerce.]

In Bank. Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by the widow and children of James Morton, deceased, to obtain compensation for decedent's death, opposed by the Southern Pacific Company, employer. Compensation was awarded by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the employer applies for a writ of review. Award annulled.

Henley C. Booth, of San Francisco, for petitioner. Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondent. Frank J. Creede, of San Francisco, for the guardian.

WILBUR, J. The petitioner seeks to review an award of the respondent Industrial Accident Commission in favor of the widow and children of James Morton, deceased, made under the terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act of California (St. 1913, p. 279). The only question here involved is whether or not the respondent has jurisdiction to make an award, or whether the liability of the petitioner is to be determined by the courts in accordance with the provisions of the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act Cong. April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, §§ 8657–8665]). This depends upon whether the deceased when killed was engaged in interstate commerce.

The deceased was a member of the repair gang employed by petitioner to make light repairs upon cars side-tracked and detained upon side tracks reserved respectively for inbound or outbound freight traffic in the Bay Shore Freight Yards of petitioner. Such detention on said tracks was in part for the purpose of inspecting the cars to ascertain defects therein and to make such light repairs thereof as were thereby found necessary, in order that the cars might proceed to their destination. "Light repairs" were made upon the cars without moving them from their positions in the "cuts" or "drags" on the side tracks, but "heavy repairs" were made by cutting out said cars and transferring them to tracks specially devoted to repair work. About 40 per cent. of the business of the yard at that time was interstate business, the balance intrastate.

The tracks upon which the cars repaired by the deceased and his fellow laborers were standing were part of the switching tracks in the freight yards essential to the movement of interstate as well as the intrastate commerce. The system of light repairs inaugurated in the yards in question was for the purpose of facilitating the movement of trains to and from the yard and was distinct from the heavy repair jobs which required the cars to be cut out of the "cuts" or "drags" and placed on special side tracks arranged for such repair work. During the day the light repair men doing "light repairs" would repair on an average 100 cars. Decedent's duties required him to pass from one car to another and one track to another seeking out the cars which were tagged by the inspectors as requiring light repairs and finding them to make such repairs. Decedent and his assistant had released the air on a string of cars, some containing interstate and others intrastate freight, and were proceeding across the yard for the purpose of making light repairs upon other cars. While the deceased was crossing one of the switches, he was killed by an empty freight car being suddenly moved upon him because struck by another car "kicked" upon the track by a switch engine. It is not known whether the next car to be repaired by deceased would be loaded with interstate or intrastate commerce, as that would depend entirely upon which sort of a car they happened to first discover tagged for light repairs.

Whether or not deceased was engaged in interstate commerce "depends upon whether the series of acts that he had last performed was properly to be regarded as a succession of separate tasks or as a single and indivisible task," as was said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Erie R. Co. v. Welsh, 242 U. S. 303, 37 Sup. Ct. 116, 61 L. Ed. 319, in passing upon the case of a yard conductor injured while going to report to the yard master for further orders. "The true test," it is there held, "is the nature of the work being done at the time of the injury, and the mere expectation that plaintiff would presently be called upon to perform a task in interstate commerce is not sufficient to bring the case within the act." The deceased and his assistant would work on 25 cars daily, and in so doing move from place to place in the yards. Some cars repaired were filled with interstate and others with intrastate freight. The character of employment in which decedent was engaged seems to approach more nearly to that of a switch engineer, as a "single and indivisible task," than to that of a "heavy repair" man, whose work might be properly characterized as a "succession of separate tasks." Such an engineer was killed while leaving the carrier's yard, and it was held that he then was engaged in interstate commerce. "In leaving the carrier's yard at the close of his day's work, the deceased was but discharging a duty of his employment. See North Carolina R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, 260 [34 Sup. Ct. 305, 58 L. Ed. 591, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 159]. Like his trip through the yard to his engine in the morning, it was a necessary incident of his day's work and partook of the character of that work as a whole, for it was no more an incident of one part than of another. His day's work was in both interstate and intrastate commerce, and so when he was leaving the yard at the time of the injury his employment was in both. That he was employed in interstate commerce is therefore plain, and that his employment also extended to intrastate commerce is for present purposes of no importance." Erie R. Co. v. Winfield, 244 U. S. 170, 173, 37 Sup. Ct. 556, 557, 61 L. Ed. 1057, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 662. By the same process of reasoning the decedent, whose general employment was to repair cars containing interstate and intrastate freight in the yards of the petitioner, was employed in interstate commerce while passing through the yard from one such car to another. In considering this question it is also proper to bear in mind the requirements of the federal Safety Appliance Acts (Act Cong. March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531; Act Cong. March 2, 1903, c. 976, 32 Stat. 943; Act Cong. April 14, 1910, c. 160, 36 Stat. 298 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, §§ 8605–8615, 8617–8619, 8621–8623]) in regard to the inspection and the care of cars on railways engaged in interstate commerce. The inspection and repair service of the deceased was required by such statute and was therefore made an essential part of the movement of interstate commerce, and the decedent was engaged in performing this work upon cars brought to a standstill partly for that purpose.

We conclude therefore that the deceased was engaged in interstate commerce when killed.

The award of the commission is annulled.

PERERA v. PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION CO.

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 1, 1918.)

1. TRIAL ⟸171—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.
The right of trial court to direct a verdict is, with regard to the condition of the evidence, the same as its right to grant a nonsuit.

2. TRIAL ⟸139(1)—NONSUIT WHEN PROPER.
The court may grant a nonsuit only when disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled the result is that there is no evidence of sufficient substantial nature to support a possible verdict for plaintiff.

3. BAILMENT ⟸2—FOR MUTUAL BENEFIT—EXHIBITION.
Confiding jewelry with another for exhibition purposes and for sale on commission at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition was a bailment for the mutual benefit of both parties.

4. BAILMENT ⟸14(1)—FOR MUTUAL BENEFIT—DEGREE OF CARE.
Bailment being for the benefit of both parties, the bailee would be liable to the bailor for theft by a third person only if the theft was due to lack of ordinary care on the part of bailee.

5. BAILMENT ⟸31(3) — NEGLIGENCE OF BAILEE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.
In action for value of jewelry confided by plaintiff to care of defendant for exhibition purposes and sale on commission at Panama-Pacific International Exposition, evidence held insufficient to show that theft of jewelry was due to defendant's negligence.

6. BAILMENT ⟸14(3)—FOR MUTUAL BENEFIT—DEGREE OF CARE.
Defendant, with whom plaintiff confided jewelry for exhibition purposes and for sale on commission at Panama-Pacific International Exposition, was not an insurer against theft.

7. BAILMENT ⟸14(3)—FOR MUTUAL BENEFIT—DEGREE OF CARE.
The limit of defendant's obligation to furnish protection for jewelry confided to him by plaintiff for exhibition and sale on commission at Panama-Pacific International Exposition was the exercise of ordinary care in protecting exhibits against theft.

8. BAILMENT ⟸31(1) — NEGLIGENCE — BURDEN OF PROOF.
In action for value of jewelry confided by plaintiff to care of defendant for exhibition purposes and for sale on commission at Panama-Pacific International Exposition, plaintiff had the burden of showing that theft was due to defendant's negligence.

9. BAILMENT ⟸31(3) — NEGLIGENCE OF BAILEE—EVIDENCE.
Evidence of facts and circumstances from which want of ordinary care of defendant, with whom plaintiff confided jewelry for exhibition and sale on commission at Panama-Pacific International Exposition, may be inferred, is sufficient to support conclusion of negligence.

10. BAILMENT ⟸31(2) — CUSTOMS — PROTECTION AGAINST THEFT OF JEWELRY.
In action for value of jewelry confided by plaintiff to care of defendant for exhibition purposes and for sale on commission at Panama-Pacific International Exposition, the court did not err in refusing to allow jeweler to testify as to a custom with reference to protection against theft of jewelry displayed for sale on exhibition.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Edgar Perera against the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Company. Judgment that plaintiff take nothing, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Ambrose Gherini, of San Francisco (J. Edwin Lyons, of Sacramento, of counsel), for appellant. Brittain & Kuhl, of San Francisco, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment that he take nothing. At the close of the plaintiff's case, the trial court directed the jury to render a verdict for defendant, and upon the verdict so rendered the judgment was given. The principal question on this appeal is as to the correctness of the action of the trial court in so directing the jury.

[1, 2] It is now settled that the right of a court to direct a verdict is, with regard to the condition of the evidence, absolutely the same as the right of a court to grant a nonsuit; and also that a court may grant a nonsuit only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, herein indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were given. Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147, 155 Pac. 631.

[3, 4] The action was for the value of certain jewelry, worth, according to plaintiff's testimony, between $10,000 and $15,000, confided with other jewelry by plaintiff to the care of defendant for exhibition purposes and sale for him by defendant on commission, at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and which was never returned or accounted for. There was here a bailment for the mutual benefit of the parties. The evidence introduced on behalf of plaintiff showed that while so on exhibition the jewelry was stolen by some unknown third party. It is conceded by plaintiff that under the circumstances it was incumbent on him, in order to make out a case, to introduce evidence from which the jury might legitimately infer that the theft was due to lack of ordinary care on the part of defendant. See Colburn v. Washington State Art Ass'n., 80 Wash. 662, 141 Pac. 1153, L. R. A. 1915A, 594; 6 C. J. 1158, 1159, 1160. Defendant does not dispute that it was bound to the exercise of ordinary care in the matter of protecting the property of plaintiff from theft.

[5] Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff's claim, as we must, the case made by plaintiff's witnesses, so far as material, was substantially as follows: The jewelry was placed, according to the agreement of the parties, in the arts and crafts section in the Palace of Varied Industries. This building contained a floor space of about 5 acres, and the arts and crafts section comprised about 5,000 square feet of this space in the northwesterly corner of the building. This section contained some other displays of valuable jewelry, as well as displays of other articles. There were many other sections in the building, some containing valuable exhibits. The jewelry of plaintiff was contained, as was the other jewelry exhibited in the section, in showcases. That of plaintiff was contained in two showcases, which, including the locks thereon, were furnished by plaintiff, through his own representative, one Gugliemetti; the defendant requiring only that the cases be uniform in color and design with the other cases in the same section. The section was in sole charge of defendant's employés; but plaintiff's representative, who visited the place occasionally, was cognizant of the manner in which the jewelry was placed and exhibited. On the evening of June 19, 1915, about 7:10 p. m., just before the closing of the building for the night and while patrons were still therein, the two locked cases were pried open at about where the locks thereon were placed, and a large portion of plaintiff's exhibit abstracted by the thief. There was an attendant of the section on duty at the time, and he was engaged for the moment with a customer. There is no suggestion in the evidence that he was in any way negligent. The locks on the cases were not of the best type, and the indications were that it was a simple matter to pry the cases open. Defendant's representative had accepted the cases as delivered, and had never investigated the locks. The regular guard force of the defendant for the exposition, which comprised some 625 acres of ground, consisted of 300 trained men, who were assigned, as required, to particular places and buildings. Defendant had, in addition to this force, some Pinkerton private detective agents, whose duty it was to look out for suspicious characters in and about the buildings and grounds, and had also arranged with the city authorities for the presence on the grounds of "plain clothes men" of the police department for the same purpose. The force of regular exposition guards assigned to and on duty in the Varied Industries Building at the time of the theft consisted of three, two guards and a corporal; the duty of each guard being to patrol one-half thereof, and that of the corporal "to supervise the * * * whole building." As we have seen, there was an attendant on duty in the section at the time of the theft, and there is no suggestion that this was not ordinarily the situation with regard to the other sections in the building. In addition to this, some of those having very valuable exhibits in the building had their own private guards or watchmen. There was no burglar alarm system in any portion of the building. Some nine or ten evenings before this theft the place was entered (whether after the building was closed for the night does not appear), and a case in this section opened and some jewelry stolen; but we have no evidence at all as to the circumstances under which this theft occurred.

We are unable to see in this evidence any substantial support for a conclusion that the theft was due to negligence on the part of defendant. In view of the evidence, the defendant was in no way responsible for the condition of the locks on the cases, or the facility, demonstrated by the theft, with which the cases could easily and quickly be pried open at the locks. There was, of course, no showing of negligence on the part of defendant in the evidence as to the manner in which the jewelry was placed and kept on exhibit. As said by counsel for defendant:

"The very nature of the bailment was such that the goods were to be kept so that the public might very readily see and examine them."

And plaintiff, through his representative, knew exactly how his property was being kept and displayed, in the cases furnished by him. There is nothing in the evidence reasonably warranting a conclusion that the representative of defendant in charge of this section at the time of the theft was guilty of any lack of ordinary care, or that the defendant was negligent in not having more than one attendant in the section. The real contention of plaintiff is that there was lack of ordinary care in the matter of police protection for the exhibits contained in this building. The evidence introduced by him showed that defendant did furnish in various ways police protection for the exhibits at the exposition, including those contained in this building, and we find in the evidence no sufficient gauge by which it may fairly be concluded that the police protection so furnished was not reasonably adequate; that is, that it was less than a reasonable man, in view of all the circumstances, would deem essential to the proper protection of the various exhibits.

[6-9] Of course, as is conceded, defendant was not an insurer against theft. It could not be expected, in the very nature of things, to have the articles exhibited by plaintiff under the observation of some guard or other employé every moment of the time. The limit of its obligation in this behalf was to exercise ordinary care in the matter of the protection of this exhibit in common with all other exhibits, against theft. The evidence that there were only three regular exposition guards on duty at the time in this building must be considered in connection with the evidence to the effect that the building was still open for business; that there were patrons therein; that there was an attendant on duty in special charge of this section in which plaintiff's jewelry was contained in locked cases; that, so far as appears, there were special attendants in other sections; and that special provision had been made in the way of "plain clothes men," both Pinkerton men and San Francisco police officers, to guard against the presence on the grounds of known criminals and suspicious characters. There is no sufficient data upon which one may reasonably conclude that the provision made for protection of the exhibits was not reasonably adequate. With the limited evidence as to the conditions and circumstances which is contained in the record, it seems to us that any conclusion of want of ordinary care in the matter of police protection would be one based solely on mere conjecture or surmise. The prior theft is of no practical importance in this connection, in view of the want of evidence as to the circumstances thereof. The burden was on plaintiff to affirmatively show negligence. It is true, of course, that evidence of facts and circumstances from which want of ordinary care may reasonably be inferred is sufficient to support a conclusion of negligence, in which event the question of negligence is one for the jury. But the difficulty here is that the facts and circumstances shown by the evidence furnish no sufficient basis for any such inference. This being the condition of the proof, the trial court properly directed the jury to render a verdict for the defendant.

[10] It was claimed in the opening brief of appellant that the trial court erred in refusing to allow an expert jeweler called by him as a witness to testify as to the custom as to the care of jewelry among jewelers when being displayed for sale or exhibition. The sole object of this proposed evidence, as stated by counsel, both in making his offer and in his brief, was to show what protection is given by jewelers to jewelry displayed for sale or exhibit for the purpose of establishing what amount of protection was essential to the exercise of ordinary care by defendant. We do not see how any such custom could be binding on defendant, or competent on the question of exercise of ordinary care.

MADERA SUGAR PINE CO. v. NORMAN B. LIVERMORE & CO. et al. (S. F. 7780.)

1. EVIDENCE ⊜441(9)—PAROL EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITING—WARRANTY.
If oral warranty of article sold was in direct conflict with written specifications, evidence of such warranty could not be received.

2. EVIDENCE ⊜441(9)—PAROL EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITING—SALE—WARRANTY.
Where purchaser of locomotive received engine with tractive power of 25,830 pounds called for by contract, evidence of oral agreement that engine would pull more than was stipulated in writing was inadmissible, in action for breach of warranty.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the Madera Sugar Pine Company, a corporation, against Norman B. Livermore & Co., a corporation, and Norman B. Livermore. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, for appellant. Arthur H. Redington and Thomas H. Breeze, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in an action brought by it for a breach of warranty on the sale of a locomotive. The alleged warranty was:

"That the engine would be of sufficient power to haul at one time over the railroad track of plaintiff 15 of plaintiff's cars, loaded in the manner customary by plaintiff."

This it failed to do, only hauling 10.

[1] The question involved is whether or not evidence of an oral warranty was admissible, in view of the fact that the specifications and order for the locomotive and the letters accepting the same were in writing. It is claimed that the oral warranty was made at the time the locomotive was ordered, and that it was not the intention of the parties to reduce the entire contract to writing, and that therefore, although a portion of the contract was oral, the latter could be proved by parol evidence. The parties did, however, subsequently reduce the specifications of the engine to writing. If the oral warranty was in direct conflict with these written specifications, evidence thereof could not be received. Germain Fruit Co. v. Armsby, 153 Cal. 585, 96 Pac. 319.

The specifications for the "three-truck sixty-ton Shay" locomotive cover 14 pages of the printed transcript, and, among other things, specify the weight of the engine in average working order 120,000 pounds, and empty approximately 100,000 pounds, number of cylinders, their diameter, cylinder stroke, gear, size of boiler, steam pressure, grate area, and the tractive power, viz., 25,830 pounds. Experts testified that the term "tractive power," as used in the specifications, means the actual drawbar pull which the engine exerts on the cars after all the friction of the engine has been overcome; that "a tractive power of 25,830 pounds" means the tractive power or pulling power on the level, and that the specifications of this engine would have to be changed in order to give it greater tractive power than 25,830 pounds; that the "theoretical" tractive power of the engine, as derived from the specifications, without allowance for friction, etc., would be 34,000 pounds; and that certain deductions were made therefrom, under recognized engineering rules, for friction, etc., which reduced the actual computed tractive power to 25,830 pounds. In other words, an expert, from the written specifications (without any specific statement of the tractive power), would, by computation from recognized formulæ, ascertain that a locomotive built in accordance therewith would have a tractive power of 25,830 pounds. But these specifications, in addition to such details, stated the tractive power to be 25,830 pounds. It is conceded that this engine had a tractive power on the level equal to 25,830 pounds, as specified. It is, of course, obvious that the tractive power will decrease as the grade increases, for the reason that the engine must lift its own weight, which was also specified.

[2] The situation, then, is that the plaintiff got an engine with the pulling power called for by the written contract, but contends that there was an oral agreement that it would pull more than was stipulated in the writing, although in fact it could not pull more, if built according to written specifications. Under these circumstances the writing must control. It is claimed by the appellant that there was sufficient reference in some of the writings to the oral negotiations or stipulations to permit evidence thereof. There is not the remotest reference to any warranty or stipulation concerning the tractive power of the engine. Without quoting from the letters, the most that can be said of them is that they recognize the fact that there had been negotiations between the parties. They do not attempt in any way to incorporate such oral negotiations into the letters or into the specifications. In a letter of September 25, 1912, to the plaintiff from the defendants, it was said:

"Referring to correspondence and conversations with you in regard to the subject of Shay locomotive," etc.

This reference does not attempt to incorporate any previous conversations into the contract between the parties, and, even if it did, it was entirely superseded by the subsequent agreement of the parties upon the specifications of the engine. The trial court properly struck out evidence of the oral agreement with relation to the alleged oral warranty.

Judgment affirmed.

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⇐224— CLAIMS—STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY — PRESENTATION.

Under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1493, and in view of section 1500, the personal obligation of a stockholder, since deceased, to pay a call for unpaid subscriptions, is barred by the corporation's failure to present a claim therefor within the time for presenting claims to the executor.

2. CORPORATIONS ⇐144 — TRANSFERS OF STOCK—UNPAID SUBSCRIPTION.

Where a stockholder makes an absolute transfer of stock in good faith, which is duly recorded on the corporate books, he is thereby wholly discharged from further liability on the uncalled-for subscription price.

3. CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃144 — PURCHASERS OF STOCK—UNPAID SUBSCRIPTION.

A corporation, which has purchased stock from a stockholder, is not personally liable to calls thereon which have been made prior to the transfer of the stock on the books, but is so liable for calls subsequently made.

4. CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃144 — TRANSFER OF STOCKHOLDERS—UNPAID SUBSCRIPTION.

A corporation by-law, providing that the stock shall, after payment of all calls or installments thereon be transferable on the books, refers to calls or installments then due, and not to the unpaid balance of the stock, so as to make a purchaser of stock liable for calls made while the stock was in the possession of the seller.

5. CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃144—TRANSFER OF STOCK —UNPAID SUBSCRIPTION.

That a purchaser of corporation stock did not know that part of the original subscription price was unpaid is immaterial, since stock certificates are not negotiable instruments, and the stock represented by them is subject to assessment for subscription calls, no matter to whom transferred.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by the Geary Street, Park & Ocean Railroad Company, a corporation, against Bradbury Estate Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry T. Gage and W. I. Foley, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Defendant appeals from an adverse judgment. By this action the plaintiff sought to recover the amount of a call upon the original subscription to 30 shares of the capital stock of plaintiff owned at the date of the commencement of the action by the defendant. The court found defendant liable for the payment of the amount of the levied assessment. The facts are as follows:

In 1915 plaintiff, being indebted in the sum of about $300,000, issued a call upon the unpaid subscriptions to its capital stock for $34 a share. This stock involved in the appeal before us had been bought in the open market by Simona M. Bradbury some time prior to December 10, 1902. The purchase was made from a registered holder and a new certificate representing her 30 shares was issued to said Simona M. Bradbury. This writing upon its face showed no indebtedness and contained no information regarding the matter of its being fully or partially paid. While holder of the stock Simona M. Bradbury died testate on the 10th day of December, 1902. Her estate, which was of a value in excess of $10,000 was regularly distributed after probate proceedings in due form in the county of Los Angeles, where she had resided up to the time of her death. The distributees under the will of Simona M. Bradbury held the original certificate without registration on the books of the company from January 2, 1904, the date of final distribution, until May 3, 1904, when they duly sold and transferred title by bill of sale to the defendant, and within a few days a new certificate was issued to that corporation. Defendant, at the time of the sale and assignment of the stock, had not any actual knowledge or information of any unpaid balance due upon the stock by reason of the original subscription, and believed that said stock was fully paid, and knew that no claim for any unpaid balance of the subscription price had been presented against the estate of Simona M. Bradbury, deceased. At the time of the issuance of the new certificate section 17 of the by-laws of the plaintiff corporation provided that:

"The stock of the company shall after payment of all calls or installments thereon be transferable on the books of the company by endorsement on the certificate by the signature of the proprietor or his attorney or legal representative, and delivery of the certificate of stock. The surrendered certificate shall in all cases be canceled by the secretary before issuing a new one in lieu thereof."

Appellant contends that plaintiff's claim for the unpaid balance due on the original subscription, if assumed by Simona M. Bradbury as transferee during her life, is "barred forever," under the law as found in section 1493, Code of Civil Procedure, by plaintiff's failure to present its claim to the executors of her estate, and that this defense is available to the purchaser from the distributees under her will and to their transferee; that by its conduct plaintiff is estopped in view of its by-law 17 from asserting that a part of the subscription price is still due; and that in view of that same section of the by-laws plaintiff's claim is barred by its own laches.

[1] The personal obligation or promise of Simona M. Bradbury to pay calls upon these shares in the plaintiff company, whatever its origin or nature, whether it was merely "not due," or was contingent, became forever barred by the failure of the plaintiff to file or present a claim therefor within the time limited in the notice to creditors given by the executrix of her estate after her death. Such is the express language of section 1493 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it is further said in section 1500 that no holder of such claim shall thereafter maintain any action thereon. This does not bar him from maintaining an action against a third person, if there were any such, who was jointly or severally liable with the decedent upon the obligation, but there was no such person. The defendant had not then even come into existence.

[2] It cannot be held liable upon the theory that it had assumed the obligation of the original subscriber for the stock; that obligation ceased to exist when Simona M. Bradbury bought the stock and had it transferred to herself on the corporate books. "Where a stockholder makes an absolute transfer of his stock in good faith, and the transfer is duly recorded on the corporate books, the transferrer is thereby wholly discharged from all further liability upon the uncalled subscription price of the stock." 1 Cook on Corp. (7th Ed.) § 255. By that transaction Simona M. Bradbury became the obligor. The defendant cannot be held liable for the obligation which she then assumed, for that obligation, as we have shown, was forever barred before the defendant became the owner of the shares.

[3] It cannot be held liable on the ground that its purchase of the shares (prior to transfer on the books) rendered it personally liable to calls thereon. This is settled by the decision in People's Home Savings Bank v. Stadtmuller, 150 Cal. 106–109, 88 Pac. 280. In that case the registered owner of the stock died and the stock was distributed to his widow as his heir. She continued to hold the stock, but did not have it transferred to her on the corporate books. A call for the unpaid balance of the subscription was thereafter made and the corporation began suit against her to recover the same. It was held that the suit would not lie, that her ownership of the stock did not make her liable for the unpaid balance of the subscription price thereof, and that where stock has passed from a registered holder to a third person, whether by purchase or descent, the corporation "has no right of action against the transferee, because, as between him and the corporation, the contractual relation of stockholder has not been created." The opinion quotes with approval the following passage from section 258 of Cook on Corporations (4th Ed.):

"Until a transfer is recorded in the transfer book of the corporation, the transferee, not being duly recognized as a stockholder, is not chargeable * * * with * * * unpaid balances of the subscription."

It is obvious from this decision that if the defendant corporation, after having received this stock from the legatees of Simona M. Bradbury had retained it without having it transferred upon the books, no right of action for calls would ever have existed against it, personally, in favor of the plaintiff corporation. In that event the plaintiff's only means of enforcing calls would have been to sell the stock as provided in Civil Code, §§ 331–349.

[4] The result is that the present action can be maintained only upon the theory that, by having the stock transferred to itself upon the stock books, a personal liability was thereby created against the defendant in favor of the plaintiff to pay calls upon the subscription price. This does not mean that the defendant then assumed the obligation of the original subscriber. The liability arises out of the transaction at the time of the application for the transfer on the corporation books. "If the law implies a promise by the original holders or subscribers to pay the full par value when it may be called, it follows that an assignee of stock, when he has come into privity with the company by having stock transferred to him on the company's books, is equally liable. * * * Being thus liable, there is an implied promise that he will pay calls made while he continues the owner." 3 Clark & Marshall, Corp. § 564a, p. 1736; Webster v. Upton, 91 U. S. 65, 23 L. Ed. 384. The circumstances thus existing at the time that transfer was requested and made were sufficient to create the inference that the transferee agreed to pay calls thereafter to be made. The plaintiff's stock was divided into shares of $100 each. At the time the stock was issued, $37.50 was paid upon each share, and the balance of $62.50 per share remained unpaid. This was the condition at the time the defendant obtained the transfer of these shares to itself. When a person thus comes into an enterprise with other stockholders, upon whom there is an obligation to pay calls for the remainder of the stock price, it is at least a fair inference, and the law makes it a necessary one under our decisions, that he thereby agrees that he will be bound for calls the same as other stockholders. It is upon this implied agreement that the present action is based.

The defendant claims exemption from this liability by reason of the language of section 17 of the by-laws of the company. This by-law was adopted in 1887 and still remains in force. The part relied on reads as follows:

"The stock of the company shall after payment of all calls or installments thereon be transferable on the books of the company."

If this could reasonably be said to mean that before the company was obliged to make such transfer it would have the right to insist on the payment of the entire balance due on the original price, there might be some ground for the claim that the acceptance of stock and the making of the transfer without insisting on such payment and without informing the transferee that there was any balance unpaid, would create an estoppel preventing the company from afterwards demanding such payment upon calls. But it is clear that this is not its meaning. If that were its meaning, and it had been enforced, the result would have been an inequality among the stockholders. Those who owned the original stock would have paid only $37.50, while the subsequent transferees would have paid the full price. No such absurd interpretation is necessary. In the phrase "all calls or installments thereon," the words "installments thereon" do not refer back to the word "stock" in the prior portion of the sentence, but refer to the word "calls" directly preceding the same, and the passage means that the stock of the company shall be transferable after the payment of all calls or of all installments then due upon such calls. The unpaid balance of the stock would not become due and payable until a call therefor was made by the corporation, and then only to the extent of such call. If the call is to be paid in installments, as sometimes happens, the installments do not become due until the dates fixed therefor. The intention was that, if the installments of a call had been paid up to the time of the application for transfer, the transfer would be made without insisting upon the payment of subsequent installments and that the transferee would then become liable for such subsequent installments and for all future calls on the subscription price. At the time the defendant applied to have its stock transferred, no calls had been made upon this stock, and consequently there was no necessity for the plaintiff to demand any payment from the defendant as a condition of making the transfer.

[5] The fact that the defendant did not know that there was any balance unpaid on the stock at the time it requested the transfer and accepted a new certificate is not a material element in the case. The rule generally prevailing is that:

"Where one buys stock in open market, in good faith, and without notice that the subscription price thereof has not been paid-up, such a purchaser cannot be held liable to pay the unpaid balance of subscription." 1 Cook on Corp. (7th Ed.) § 257.

It is doubtful whether the defendant, or its immediate predecessors, would come within this rule, since it does not appear that they gave any consideration. The legatees took under the will of Simona M. Bradbury, and the defendant appears to be a mere holding corporation for them. But, however this may be, a different rule is established in this state. Certificates of stock, under the decisions in this state, are not negotiable instruments, and "the stock represented by them is subject to assessment for subscription calls, no matter to whom it may be transferred. The rule in this state is that certificates of stock in a corporation are but mere evidences of the holder's right to a given share in the franchises and property of the corporation and are not negotiable instruments." O'Dea v. Hollywood Cemetery Ass'n, 154 Cal. 53, 72, 97 Pac. 1, 8. The purchaser of stock buys it under the rule of caveat emptor and takes thereby a share in the assets of the corporation. If he desires to ascertain whether or not there is an unpaid balance due or owing on the par value of the stock, or on the subscription price, he must make inquiry on that subject. If he fails to do so, he is to be considered as having agreed to take it as it may be, and to become subject to calls when he assumes the position of a stockholder by having his shares transferred to him on the books.

The law on this subject in this state, therefore, stands thus: When a purchaser buys a share of stock in the open market, he holds the same interest in the enterprise, proportionally, as other stockholders and the stock is liable to calls, the same as other stock. The purchaser does not become personally liable to the corporation for subsequent calls until he has his transfer entered on the corporate books, or in some other manner comes into privity with the corporation as a stockholder. In an ordinary case if the transferor to such a purchaser is made to pay subsequent calls, he may recover the same from his vendee. People's Home Savgs. Bank v. Stadtmuller, supra. In the present case this could not happen, for the corporation, by failing to present a claim against the estate, lost its right of personal action against Simona M. Bradbury, the only person then personally liable to calls. But the stock itself remained subject to be charged for calls for the unpaid part of the subscription price and to the enforcement of such charge by sale in the manner prescribed in the Civil Code. When the defendant had its transfer recorded on the corporate books, it then created a personal liability against itself for subsequent calls. The court below properly gave judgment for the plaintiff against defendant for the amount called in on the subscription price after it thus became personally liable.

Plaintiff's claim is not barred by the statute of limitations. The indebtedness was not payable at any time prior to the levying of the assessment and the issuance of the call. Union Savings Bank v. Leiter, 145 Cal. 696, 79 Pac. 441.

WHITAKER v. TITLE INS. & TRUST CO.

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1918.)

1. COSTS ⊂=3—STATUTE.

The right to recover costs exists solely by virtue of statute.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=382—UNDERTAKING ON APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY—COSTS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 942, as to undertakings on appeal from a judgment directing the payment of money, the undertaking need not include an amount double the amount of costs awarded, in view of provisions of sections 1022, 1025, 1033, 1035, as to allowance of costs, and sections 943–945, 949, as to undertakings on appeal.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Frank Whitaker against the Title Insurance & Trust Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On defendant's application for writ of supersedeas. Application granted.

C. H. Brock and J. N. Hastings, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. J. W. Bell, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. The action was one for damages, and plaintiff obtained judgment in the court below. The judgment, so far as material, was as follows, viz.:

"That said plaintiff, Frank Whitaker, have and recover from said Title Insurance & Trust Company, a corporation, the sum of $6,391, with interest thereon from the 20th day of September, 1912, and $375.75, with interest thereon from October 4, 1913, together with his costs and disbursements incurred in this action, amounting to the sum of $72.75."

The judgment was thus "one directing the payment of money," and was governed by the provisions of section 942, Code of Civil Procedure, in so far as the requirements essential to a stay of execution pending appeal are concerned. An appeal was taken to this court from said judgment, and the same is still pending herein. An undertaking for the purpose of staying execution pending appeal, in the form prescribed by said section, was filed in the lower court. This bond was given for an amount exactly double the aggregate amount of principal, with interest thereon to the date of entry of the judgment, and did not include the $72.75 cost. Notwithstanding the giving of this undertaking, the plaintiff is proceeding to enforce the judgment by execution, and the superior court holds that the bond is ineffective as a stay bond, because not sufficient in amount. Hence this application.

Section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, so far as material here, as follows:

"If the appeal be from a judgment or order directing the payment of money, it does not stay the execution of the judgment or order unless a written undertaking be executed on the part of the appellant, by two or more sureties, to the effect that they are bound in double the amount named in the judgment or order"; that if the judgment or order, or any part thereof, be affirmed or the appeal be dismissed, "the appellant will pay the amount directed to be paid by the judgment or order," etc. (Italics are ours.)

The precise question presented here is whether an amount specified in the judgment as recoverable as and for the prevailing party's costs and disbursements is a part of "the amount named in the judgment," within the meaning of those words as used in section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If this question be answered in the affirmative, the undertaking here was insufficient in the amount of $145.50, and consequently ineffective as a stay bond.

[1, 2] This precise question apparently has never before been brought to the consideration of this court. It is, of course, well settled that the right to recover costs exists solely by virtue of statutory provisions, and that when allowed by statute they are allowed solely as an incident of the judgment given upon the issues in the action. See Begbie v. Begbie, 128 Cal. 154, 60 Pac. 667, 49 L. R. A. 141. Our statutes provide for the allowance of costs by the trial court to the prevailing party in practically every kind of action and proceeding, in most cases as of course, and in some matters in the discretion of the court. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1022, 1025. They are "allowed of course" in an action for the recovery of money or damages "when plaintiff recovers three hundred dollars or over." Subdivision 3, § 1022, Code Civ. Proc. They constitute no part of a judgment at the moment of its rendition, accruing only upon verified claim therefor, specifying items, served and filed within a specified time after verdict or notice of decision, and the fixing by the court of the amount thereof if the claim be disputed by the adverse party within a specified time. Section 1033, Code Civ. Proc. The clerk is required to include the costs in the judgment entered by him if the same have been taxed or ascertained, and it is further provided that:

"He must, within two days after the same are taxed or ascertained, if not included in the judgment, insert the same in a blank left in the judgment for that purpose." Section 1035, Code Civ. Proc.

If by the terms of section 942, Code of Civil Procedure, a stay bond is required on appeals from a judgment or order directing the payment of money covering the amount awarded as costs in order to effectuate a stay of proceedings pending the appeal, it apparently is the only instance under our statutes in which such requirement as to costs is made on appeals from a judgment or order of the superior court. In no other case in which an undertaking is essential to a stay of proceedings do we find any requirement whatever for security as to the costs incidental to the judgment appealed from. Where the judgment is of such a character that an undertaking to stay proceedings is not specifically required by any provision of the statute, execution of the judgment is stayed by an appeal without any undertaking (section 949, Code Civ. Proc.), entirely regardless of the judgment for costs. This was expressly held in McCallion v. Hibernia, etc., Society, 98 Cal. 442, 33 Pac. 329. As to such a situation it was substantially said in the opinion in that case that "the real judgment" in that case was that the plaintiff was the owner of certain money which had been deposited in court to await the determination of the question as to its ownership, and that the costs taxed against the defendant were incidental to the judgment, and as to a stay of execution inseparably connected therewith. It was also said:

"A judgment for costs is not the judgment directing the payment of money contemplated by section 942. * * * The judgment referred to in the foregoing sections [sections 942, 943, 944 and 945, Code Civ. Proc.] is the decree passing upon the matter directly involved in the litigation."

While the case referred to does not decide the precise question we have here, we think it fairly points the way to the proper construction of the provision of section 942, Code of Civil Procedure, which is here involved. The statutory provisions material to the question of a stay of proceedings pending an appeal from the judgments and orders of superior courts in all other cases than the one covered by section 942, Code of Civil Procedure, show that no security was contemplated in the matter of the costs incidental to the judgment. No good reason appears why any exception should be made to this general rule in the one case of judgments or orders covered by section 942, Code of Civil Procedure, viz. judgments or orders directing the payment of money. In such a case the costs are just as much a mere incident of the judgment for the money decreed to be due upon the claim of the prevailing party, as they are a mere incident to the judgment for the relief granted in all other cases. As said in the McCallion Case, the real judgment referred to in sections 942 to 945, Code of Civil Procedure, "is the decree passing upon the matter directly involved in the litigation," which in the case at bar is the judgment determining and awarding the amount due the plaintiff on the claim alleged in the complaint. The judgment here is "a judgment or order directing the payment of money" within the meaning of section 942, Code of Civil Procedure, only in so far as it awards a recovery for the sums awarded on the issues made by the pleadings, the principal sum, with interest to the entry of the judgment. This manifestly, together with interest accruing subsequent to entry of judgment, and the damages and costs on appeal, was the only thing as to which security was deemed essential to a stay of proceedings pending an appeal.

Under these circumstances, it seems to us that the words "in double the amount named in the judgment" must be taken as referring to the amount adjudged to be due the prevailing party upon the claim involved in the action, and for which recovery is awarded, and as not including the incidental recovery on account of the costs of the action awarded only upon claim made and ascertainment of amount had subsequent to the giving of the judgment. It is worthy of note, in this connection, that so far as material here section 942, Code of Civil Procedure, and section 978, Code of Civil Procedure, relative to undertakings on appeal and to stay proceedings on appeals from justices and police courts, were enacted in 1872 as parts of our original Code in the same form in which they now exist, and that section 978 expressly required, as an essential to a stay pending an appeal, security not only for the judgment proper, but also for all costs. It was expressly provided therein that, if the judgment be one for money, the bond must be "in a sum equal to twice the amount of judgment, including costs," and, when for the recovery of property, in "twice the value of the property, including costs"; also that the bond must be conditioned, when the judgment was for money, "that the appellant will pay the amount of the judgment appealed from, and all costs," and, when for property, "the judgment and costs." As to actions to foreclose a lien on specific personal property, the condition was to be that the appellant "will pay the judgment and costs." The deposit provided for in lieu of a bond was also expressly made to cover the costs. The difference between these contemporaneous enactments is significant, and indicates that the omission to specially cover the matter of the costs of the action on appeals to the Supreme Court was intentional. If it had been intended to provide for security for costs in the cases covered by section 942, Code of Civil Procedure, it would have been an easy matter to so specify, as was done with regard to appeals from justices' or police courts, and section 978, Code of Civil Procedure, shows that such specification was deemed necessary by the Legislature, if it was desired to provide security therefor.

It follows, from what has been said, that the undertaking filed was sufficient to stay proceedings under the judgment pending the appeal. Let a writ of supersedeas issue as prayed.

NILES v. KAVANAGH et ux. (S. F. 8669.)

1. USURY ⊂⊃56—COMMISSIONS—STATUTES.
Under St. 1909, p. 969, § 3, as amended by St. 1911, p. 978, § 2, restricting interest on personal property loans to 2 per cent. per month, a commission charged by a broker for obtaining a loan will make the contract usurious, unless the lender is in no way interested in the commission.

2. USURY ⊂⊃59—PAYMENT OF INSURANCE ON MORTGAGED PROPERTY.
That a chattel mortgagor pays insurance premiums on the property does not make the contract usurious, particularly where the premium is received by a third party who has no interest in the loan.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by L. F. Niles against Robert P. Kavanagh and wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. C. Flannery, of San Francisco, for appellants. Henry B. Lister, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff brought this action to foreclose a chattel mortgage executed by the defendants to secure the payment of their promissory note for $600, with interest at 2 per cent. per month. From the judgment, which was in favor of the plaintiff, the defendants appeal.

The execution of the note and mortgage, and the nonpayment of the amount for which judgment was given, are not questioned; the sole claim of the defendants being that the loan evidenced by the note and mortgage was void under the terms of "an act to define personal property brokers and regulate their charge and business." St. 1909, p. 969, as amended by Stats. 1911, p. 978. That act defines "personal property brokers" as including, among others, all persons engaged in the business of loaning money upon the security of chattel mortgages. It authorizes such brokers to charge and receive 2 per cent. per month as a benefit or percentage upon money advanced, and declares (section 3) that:

"No further or other charges either for recording, insuring or examining the security or property, or for the drawing, executing or filing of papers, or for any services or upon any pretext whatsoever beyond the aforesaid charge for interest or discount shall be asked, charged, or in any way received, where the same would thereby make a greater charge for the money or thing advanced than the aforesaid rate of two per centum per month, and where made, all such charges shall be considered and be of the same effect as so much added interest. * * *"

Section 4 of the act provides that no such contract of a personal property broker, by which any greater interest rate than 2 per centum per month is charged, received, or contracted for, "shall be valid or of any force, virtue or effect."

The court found that the plaintiff was not a personal property broker, or engaged in the business of loaning or advancing money as such, and found further, in effect, that she had not charged or received any rate of interest in excess of that permitted by law. These findings are assailed as unsupported. We need not consider the first of them, which becomes immaterial if there was sufficient evidence to justify the findings that the plaintiff had not charged or received interest beyond the lawful rate.

It appears that the plaintiff was a widow, who had been, for a number of years, in the habit of loaning small sums of money upon the security of chattel mortgages. Her transactions were conducted through one Winston, a broker. In the instance under consideration, there was no direct communication between her and the defendants. The latter applied to Winston for a loan upon the security of their household furniture. The loan was made upon the following day, the defendants executing their note for $600 and their mortgage. They received from Winston the amount specified in the note, less $30, which he claimed as a commission for obtaining the loan. From the sum so advanced, the defendants subsequently paid the sum of $12 as a premium upon a policy insuring the mortgaged property against fire; the loss, if any, being made payable to the plaintiff, as her interest might appear. The mortgage required the borrowers to keep the property thus insured for the protection of the mortgagee.

[1] With reference to the $30 charged by Winston, the court's finding was that Winston acted as agent of both parties, and received the $30 from the defendants as commission for services rendered to them in obtaining the loan. The statute seeks to prevent the lender from receiving as compensation for the use of money anything in excess of 2 per cent. per month. Any device by means of which a greater compensation is exacted is forbidden, despite any attempt to cloak its character under the name of "bonus" or "commission." A payment to an agent of the lender is, in effect, a payment to the lender himself. But where the lender is in no way interested in a charge, or connected with it, the transaction is not to be denounced as usurious. The evidence in this case justified the court in concluding that the defendants employed Winston as their agent to obtain a loan for them, and agreed to pay him $30 for the services rendered by him to them in obtaining it. The plaintiff was not concerned with this charge, she herself paying a separate compensation to Winston for his services to her. The rule generally applied under statutes similar to ours is that under such circumstances commissions paid by borrowers to loan brokers "do not render loans made through them usurious, even though the lender may receive the full legal rate of interest." 39 Cyc. 979, and cases cited.

[2] The only other ground upon which the validity of the loan is assailed is that the borrowers, pursuant to the terms of the mortgage, paid a premium for insuring the property. The insurance was for $1,000, an amount considerably in excess of the loan, and ran for three years, a period which would expire long after the maturity of the note. In the absence of anything to show bad faith, the requirement that the security be protected by insurance, and compliance with this requirement, did not violate the act. The prohibition of the statute against the making of charges for "insuring" the security or property applies only "where the same would thereby make a greater charge for the money or thing advanced than the aforesaid rate of 2 per centum per month." Where a payment does not go to the lender, and is in no sense a compensation to him for the use of his money, the requirement that it be made does not violate the law. It is a very usual and entirely legitimate practice for one lending money upon mortgage of real or personal property to require that the borrower insure the security against loss. By so insuring, the borrower is protecting his own property. He is not paying any additional compensation for the use of the money. Even where the lender is an insurance company, and requires, as a condition of making a loan at full legal interest, that the borrower take out insurance with it, the loan is not to be deemed usurious in the absence of evidence that the premium is in excess of the usual or fair rate for insurance, or that in some other respect the provision for insurance was designed as a cover for unlawful interest. 39 Cyc. 983; Washington Life Ins. Co. v. Paterson Silk Mfg. Co., 25 N. J. Eq. 160; Homeopathic Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Crane, 25 N. J. Eq. 418; Utica Ins. Co. v. Cadwell, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 296, 301; New Eng. M. S. Co. v. Gay (C. C.) 33 Fed. 636. These decisions go upon the ground that the premium is not a payment for the loan of the borrowed money, but is simply compensation to the insurer for the risk incurred. If this be so where the lender is the insurer, there is much less reason for claiming illegality where the insurance is issued, and the premium received, by a third party.

No other points are made.

The judgment is affirmed.

UNION LITHOGRAPH CO. v. BACON et al. (S. F. 7714.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹162(1)—RIGHT TO APPEAL — ACCEPTANCE OF PAYMENT OF JUDGMENT.

In suit to enforce stockholders' liability, where judgment was entered for plaintiff, which, on motion of three individual defendants, was set aside, and judgment entered for a smaller amount, apportioned among the three defendants, who paid the amounts, plaintiff, who accepted the money from the clerk, could not thereafter appeal.

2. JUDGMENT ⟹894—PAYMENT—COMPELLING SATISFACTION—STATUTES.

In suit to enforce stockholders' liability, where three individual defendants paid amounts for which they were cast in judgment, plaintiff receiving the money from the clerk, on defendants' motion, the court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 675, properly made an order compelling plaintiff to satisfy the judgment.

3. JUDGMENT ⟹314 — SATISFACTION — COMPELLING FURTHER PAYMENTS.

In suit to enforce stockholders' liability, where, on motion of three individual defendants, judgment for plaintiff was set aside, and judgment for a smaller sum, apportioned among the defendants, was entered, after payment by defendants, thus satisfying the judgment, the court could not compel further payments by them, as to whom the case had terminated.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by the Union Lithograph Company against W. R. Bacon, Hugh Center, E. E. Cox, and others. From the judgment, and certain orders, as to the named defendants, plaintiff appeals. Appeals from a certain order and judgment dismissed, and other orders affirmed.

Arthur Crane, of San Francisco, and Crane & Crane, of Chicago, Ill., for appellant. Walter R. Bacon, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. These appeals are from a judgment of September 13, 1915, and from certain orders which will be more fully described in the course of this opinion.

The action was commenced in 1914 by the "Union Lithograph Company, on behalf of all creditors of the Salinas Portland Cement Company, against W. R. Bacon" and other named defendants. The stated purpose of the action was "to create a fund, by collecting stock subscriptions, to pay debts of Salinas Portland Cement Company." The complaint set forth the insolvency and forfeiture of its charter by the cement company; the indebtedness of that corporation (evidenced by a judgment recovered subsequent to said forfeiture) to the Union Lithograph Company in the sum of $1,273.10; the fact that the cement company owed obligations to other creditors not specified, amounting, with the named judgment, to $10,000; the status of the several individual defendants as stockholders in certain specified amounts of stockholdings; and the fact that the subscription price of their stock was unpaid. The prayer was for a judgment requiring the stockholders to pay a receiver, to be appointed by the court, the sum of $10,000, to be distributed by him proportionately to the creditors of the cement company, together with the payment of $1,000 as attorney's fee, and costs of suit.

Defaults of the individual defendants were entered, and plaintiff, Union Lithograph Company, had judgment for $1,375 in its own favor, and in favor of certain other specified creditors of the cement company in sums which, with the amount above set forth, amounted to $10,000. The judgment was also for costs ($13.75) and for attorney's fee ($250). Respondents herein promptly moved to vacate and set aside this judgment upon numerous grounds, and after a hearing following due notice the motion was granted on September 13, 1915, and on the same day judgment was entered for $1,375, to be apportioned among the defendants sued as stockholders in accordance with their holdings of the capital stock of the defunct corporation. An attorney's fee of $250 was included in the judgment, and the court found the amount due from each of the defendants as stockholders to make up the sum necessary to pay the judgment and attorney's fee. The judgments against these respondents, Bacon, Center, and Cox, were, respectively, $10.56, $375.40, and $26.40. No provision was made for costs, except those which might become due if execution should issue. Appeals have been taken from the order, and from the judgment of September 13, 1915, in so far as the latter sets aside the former judgment. The judgment of September 13, 1915, was entered, and immediately thereafter each of the respondents, Cox, Bacon, and Center, paid to the county clerk the amount found to be due thereunder from him. On the day following such payment plaintiff received these amounts from the county clerk, but did not satisfy the judgment as to these respondents. After demanding and being refused such satisfaction upon proper notice, these respondents, on October 1, 1915, acting under the provisions of section 675, Code of Civil Procedure, moved the court for an order or judgment entering satisfaction as to them of the judgment of September 13, 1915. After a hearing the court made such an order, and from it plaintiff has appealed.

Thereafter, on December 10, 1915, plaintiff moved for an order requiring these respondents to pay into court an additional sum "in the above-entitled action." There can be no doubt that by this motion plaintiff was seeking the additional sums in satisfaction, not of the first judgment, but of that of September 13, 1915, because in the notice of motion are recited the amounts unpaid by respondents other than those now appearing identically as those amounts are fixed by the judgment of September 13, 1915. After a hearing the plaintiff's motion of December 10, 1915, was denied. An appeal has been taken from this order.

Respondents are of the opinion that all of the appeals should be dismissed as to them. They say that all debatable questions between plaintiff and these respondents would have been settled by the judgment of September 13, 1915, if no appeal had been taken by either party; that before any appeal was taken they had satisfied the judgment so far as it was binding upon them; that plaintiff had acquiesced in the judgment by accepting their payments; and that the appeal from the judgment, taken long after December 10, 1915, was therefore of no effect. If, as they assert, plaintiff had no right of appeal after having accepted the amounts of the judgment, we are of the opinion that their position is correct.

Appellant cites such cases as Bryan v. Berry, 8 Cal. 130, and Copple v. Aigeltinger, 167 Cal. 706, 140 Pac. 1073, to support its position that it may collect the amounts found due without satisfying the judgment. The opinion in the former case merely holds that a judgment entered in place of another judgment is appealable, and in the latter it is decided that an order vacating a judgment for defendants and drawing a new judgment for the plaintiff is appealable. But appellant quotes from the opinion in Warner Brothers Co. v. Freud, 131 Cal. 639, 63 Pac. 1017, 82 Am. St. Rep. 400, a sentence which at first blush would seem to justify its contention. The court there used the following language (from Hayes v. Nourse, 107 N. Y. 577–579, 14 N. E. 508, 1 Am. St. Rep. 891):

"It must be deemed too well settled by authority to require further discussion that a party against whom a judgment has been rendered is not prevented from appealing to this court by the fact that he has paid the judgment, unless such payment was by way of compromise, or with an agreement not to take or pursue an appeal."

But that was a case in which the party against whom a judgment was given paid the amount thereof and afterwards took an appeal from the judgment. In the opinion in that case the court quotes with approval section 480a of Freeman on Judgments as follows:

"One against whom a judgment is entered, if he fails to satisfy it, must expect to see his property seized and sold at a sacrifice, and it is difficult to conceive how his payment of the judgment can give rise to any estoppel against his seeking to avoid it for error. The better view, we think, is, that though the execution has not issued, the payment of a judgment must be regarded as compulsory, and therefore as not releasing errors, nor depriving the payor the right to appeal."

But in the same opinion Kenney v. Parks, 120 Cal. 22–24, 52 Pac. 40, is cited to the effect that:

"A party in whose favor a judgment has been rendered cannot enforce the judgment, and while enjoying its benefits appeal therefrom and seek its reversal."

In County of San Bernardino v. County of Riverside, 135 Cal. 618, 67 Pac. 1047, the superior court had ordered a default opened on payment by defendant of a certain sum to plaintiff. Payment was made and accepted, and thereafter plaintiff appealed from the order. In dismissing the appeal the court said, in part:

"The rule and the principle upon which the rule rests are the same, whether such judgment be the final determination of the cause or an intermediate order made in the course of the procedure. A party cannot accept the benefit or advantage given him by an order, and then seek to have it reviewed. After receiving the money which the court has directed to be paid to him, he will not be heard to say that the court erred in making such order."

In Estate of Shaver, 131 Cal. 219, 63 Pac. 340, the court said:

"The right to accept the fruits of a judgment, and the right of appeal therefrom are not concurrent. On the contrary, they are totally inconsistent. An election to take one of these courses is therefore a renunciation of the other."

Indeed, there is abundant authority to the effect that when the prevailing party with a judgment in its favor has accepted the fruits of such judgment, satisfaction thereof, either voluntary or under the compulsion authorized by section 675, Code of Civil Procedure, is "the last act and end of the proceeding." Estate of Baby, 87 Cal. 200, 25 Pac. 405, 22 Am. St. Rep. 239. The same principle is declared in Storke v. Storke, 132 Cal. 349, 64 Pac. 578.

was one for the creation of a fund to which they might on behalf of the creditors compel the stockholders to contribute in the proportions of the holdings of each to the entire indebtedness of the corporation, and that plaintiff might satisfy its particular claim if necessary from the contribution of a single solvent stockholder. They assert that the court entirely misconceived the law in deciding that there was only a several liability of each stockholder for his proportion of appellant's claim. These matters might well have been urged upon the appeals from the order and judgment of September 13, 1915; but in the court's errors, if any there were, appellant acquiesced by accepting the payments made in accordance with that judgment.

[2, 3] The order compelling satisfaction of the judgment as to these respondents was properly in accord with the law on the subject, and was within the jurisdiction and power of the court making it, and the later order of December 10, 1915, followed as matter of course, because the court could not compel further payments on a judgment by those parties to the litigation as to whom the case had terminated by satisfaction of the said judgment.

The appeals from the order and judgment of September 13, 1915, are as to these respondents dismissed, and the other orders are affirmed.

1. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS ⟸35—REVIEW OF ORDERS—SCOPE OF REVIEW.

Under Public Utilities Act 1915 (St. 1915, p. 161) § 67, authorizing the Supreme Court to review orders or decisions of the Railroad Commission by a writ of certiorari or review, and providing that the review shall not extend further than to determine whether the commission has legally pursued its authority, including a determination of whether the order or decision violates any constitutional right of the petitioner, and that the findings and conclusions of the commission on questions of fact shall be final, and not subject to review, the findings and conclusions which are not subject to review are those on questions of fact within the jurisdiction of the commission, and the question of mixed law and fact, as to whether or not a corporation is a public utility, so as to give the commission jurisdiction over it, is reviewable.

2. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS ⟸21, 35—REVIEW OF ACTS—POWERS OF SUPREME COURT.

The Supreme Court may restrain the Railroad Commission from exercising powers which it does not possess, or annul its decree when such unwarranted powers have been exercised.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸257(1)—IRRIGATION—REGULATION OF RATES.

If a corporation, contracting to furnish water for irrigation purposes at an agreed rate to purchasers of water right certificates, was at the time of so contracting a public service corporation, its contracts were subject to modification by the Railroad Commission.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸257(1)—IRRIGATION—REGULATION OF RATES—"PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATION."

Where a corporation, which sold water right certificates to purchasers of land from an associate corporation, entitling the certificate holders to a specified quantity of water per acre for irrigation at an agreed price, also engaged to supply a town site and the succeeding city with water for municipal and domestic purposes, and proceeded to do so, but the city required only 1½ per centum, or at the utmost 3 per centum, of its water, while approximately 94 per centum of its water was devoted to use under its water right certificates, though it became a public service corporation in so far as the needs of such city were concerned, it did not thereby dedicate all of its water to public use, though it had a single and undivided supply of water, and, so far as the water which it had contracted to furnish to the certificate holders was concerned, it was not a "public service corporation," and the rates for such water were governed by the contract, and not subject to regulation by the Railroad Commission.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Public Service Corporation.]

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸257(1)—IRRIGATION—REGULATION OF RATES—"PUBLIC UTILITY."

The corporation did not become a public utility merely by itself fixing the rates and charges for the water which it sold, nor could its submission to the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission, and its declaration that it was a public utility, affect the previously vested rights of the certificate holders.

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸257(1)—IRRIGATION—REGULATION OF RATES.

That such corporation's articles of incorporation stated that one of the purposes of its incorporation was to supply the inhabitants of towns in a particular valley with water for domestic purposes did not constitute a dedication of its properties to a public use, so as to make it a public service corporation, subject to the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission; especially as the articles of incorporation further declared that the corporation would acquire its water and water rights by purchase and appropriation without saying anything about condemnation.

7. DEDICATION ⟸41—PRESUMPTIONS AS TO DEDICATIONS.

A dedication of property to a public use is never presumed without evidence of unequivocal dedication.

8. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸254—SALE OF WATER—REGULATION—"PUBLIC UTILITY"—"WATER CORPORATION."

Const. art. 12, § 23, declares that every private corporation furnishing water directly or indirectly to or for the public is a public utility, subject to control and regulation by the Railroad Commission, and provides that every class of private corporations, individuals, or associations declared by the Legislature to be public utilities shall be subject to such control and regulation, and that the right of the Legislature to confer powers upon the Railroad Commission respecting public utilities is plenary and unlimited by any provision of the Constitution. St. 1913, p. 84, § 1, provides that whenever any corporation sells, leases, rents, or delivers water to any person, etc., except as therein limited, such person, etc., is a public utility, and subject to the jurisdiction, control, and regulation of the Railroad Commission. Public Utilities Act defines a water corporation as including every corporation or person, etc., owning, controlling, operating, or managing any water system for compensation within the state. Held, that all private rights in the matter of the rental or sale of water are abolished so far as that can be done under the Constitution of the United States.

9. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸254—SALE OF WATER—REGULATION—"PUBLIC UTILITY."

While, in a broad sense, everything upon which man bestows labor, for purposes other than the benefit of his immediate family, is impressed with a public use, to constitute a true "public utility," over which the state may exercise its regulatory control without regard to the private interests which may be affected thereby, the devotion to a public use must be of such a character that the public generally, or that part of it which has been served, and which has accepted the service, has a right to demand that such service shall be conducted so long as it is continued with reasonable efficiency under reasonable charges.

10. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸154(2), 296(1)—WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸216—SALE OF WATER—CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 12, § 23, St. 1913, p. 84, and the Public Utilities Act, relative to the regulation of public utilities, including water companies, must be construed as applying only to properties, which have in fact been devoted to a public use, and not as an effort to impress with a public use properties which have not been devoted thereto; since, if given this latter construction, they are void wherever they unjustly interfere with private property or private contractual rights under Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, and Amend. 14, prohibiting laws impairing the obligation of contracts and forbidding the taking of property without due process of law.

Wilbur, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Application by J. C. Allen and others for a writ of review directed to the Railroad Commission of the State of California and the Lake Hemet Water Company. Decree of commission annulled.

E. E. Keech, of Santa Ana, and Henry Goodcell, of San Bernardino, for petitioners. Douglas Brookman, of San Francisco (Max Thelen, of San Francisco, of counsel), for Railroad Commission. Oscar Lawler and James E. Degnan, both of Los Angeles, and W. A. Purington, William Collier, and H. H. Craig, all of Riverside, for applicant Lake Hemet Water Co. Short & Sutherland and L. L. Cory, all of Fresno, amici curiæ. Hunsaker & Britt and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, all of Los Angeles, for protestant Hart. H. S. Dukes, of Hemet, for City of Hemet.

SHAW, J. Upon further consideration of this case we adhere to the opinion prepared by Mr. Justice HENSHAW and rendered by the court upon the original submission. Some additional treatment of points discussed upon the rehearing is appropriate.

The principal reason for the order granting a rehearing was the desire of the court to re-examine the evidence upon the question of fact whether the Lake Hemet Water Company, at the time it executed to the respective petitioners the water contracts held by them, had dedicated to public use the water which the company thereby agreed to sell and deliver to the holders of the contracts, or whether these contracts were made without such dedication and in each case for the private advantage of the parties contracting. Further examination on this point has satisfied us that our original conclusion was correct. The water was held in private ownership, it had not been dedicated to public use at the time these several contracts or water certificates were executed, and the right thereby vested in the landowners to whose land the water was thereby made appurtenant was private property.

In the subsequent briefs emphasis is laid on evidence to the effect that in the year 1898, prior to the execution of a large number of the water certificates in question, the water company sold to persons who were not owners or purchasers of any part of the land to which Whittier and his associates intended the water to be applied, an amount of water equal to 50 per cent. of its supply for that year. This, it is claimed, was in effect a dedication of that proportion of the water to public use. It is plain from the evidence in the case that these sales were not made with the intent to dedicate that water to public use. They were made solely and only because that year was one of extreme drouth in that vicinity, and as a temporary relief for that time only to outside lands which would otherwise have suffered great damage from the failure of their usual water supply. There was no intention to vary the original plan of applying the water to the land which the managers of the enterprise had for sale and to none other, except to the extent of any incidental surplus.

In the argument by the attorneys for the Commission great reliance is placed on the decision in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77, and especially on the phrase "affected with a public interest," used in the opinion. This case and this phrase is frequently invoked to advance the idea that the general interest of the state in the welfare and prosperity of its citizens is a sufficient basis for the right of the state to regulate prices for the use or sale of private property. Because of the use of this phrase the case itself is misunderstood. The phrase was used in quotations from the old English authorities declaring that there could be public regulation of the tolls to be taken by millers for grinding grain. These millers, having invited all persons to bring their grain to the mill to be ground, and having thus established a business, sought to increase the tolls, or to favor some customers above others, and claimed the right to do so. It was held that, having thus dedicated the mill to this public use, the public had a right or interest in it, and in describing this right it was said that when property was thus "affected with a public interest" it ceases to be exclusively private property. So with the great grain elevators involved in the Munn Case, which, by the development of modern commerce and steam machinery, had become established as an adjunct to railroads, though managed by others, and as practically the only means of shipping grain on the railroads, it was said that they, too, as well as the ancient English mills, had become "affected with a public interest," and were, therefore, no longer private property only, and were subject to public regulation. The parallel is obvious, but it does not apply to water sold with land for use upon the land and as an appurtenance thereto in the manner shown in the present case. The fact that the parties holding separate water rights, each upon his own land, are numerous, does not convert their several private uses into a public use.

There is no ground for the claim that the water distributing system used by the water company can be considered as a thing separate from the right to receive water and declared to be a separate and public service, the rates for which, as to these petitioners, can be fixed by the Railroad Commission, and made to exceed the rates specified in the water certificates. The distributing system is a species of real property. Stanislaus W. Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 726, 93 Pac. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359. The right of a landowner to receive water not devoted to public use upon land for its benefit, from an outside source, through a system of canals or pipes for conducting it to the land, is an easement attached to the land and a corresponding servitude upon the source of supply and the distributing system. Copeland v. Fair View Co., 165 Cal. 154, 131 Pac. 119; Palermo Co. v. Railroad Commission, 173 Cal. 386, 160 Pac. 228. The easement and the servitude constitute a single entity and the one cannot be separated from the other without destroying both. The petitioners have property interests in the distributing system by reason of these easements and servitudes. The contract fixed the rate, not only for the water as such, but also for its delivery; that is, for the use of the system for that purpose. To raise the rate without consent of the landowner would impair the obligation of the contract, and, so far as the increase inured to the benefit of the public use of other water through the same system, it would be taking the private property of these petitioners for public use without compensation.

It may be that the rates fixed by the contracts with petitioners are too low, and that the company will be unable to go on with the service, either to the public utility serving the town of Hemet or to the petitioners, unless both shall pay more for the service. That will demonstrate that the contracts which the water company voluntarily made for disposition of its own property were improvident and unwise. But that does not give the Railroad Commission power to interfere, however desirable such interference might be if the power were wisely exercised. It is not the guardian of those who do not wisely manage their property.

All the other points that are material or important to the decision of this case are fully and adequately treated in the former opinion. It leaves nothing more to be said and we adopt it as the opinion of the court.

"The Lake Hemet Water Company, a corporation, hereinafter called the applicant, petitioned the Railroad Commission to fix the rates to be charged and collected by it for the sale and distribution of water, asserting itself to be a public service corporation. Some 300 or more landowners receiving water under contracts from the applicant appeared and made objection, insisting that, so far as their water and water rights were concerned, these rights were held in private ownership, and that as to them at least the applicant was not a public service corporation, and jurisdiction to fix the rate charges for such water was therefore not in the commission. The commission heard evidence, made its finding and decree, by which it was declared that the applicant, as to all of its corporate functions, was a public utility, and thereupon fixed water rates. From this determination the aggrieved landowners sought and obtained this writ of review.

[1, 2] "This review is held under section 67 of the Public Utilities Act of 1915. It is plain, and indeed it has in effect been decided, that the declaration in that section that 'findings and conclusions of the commission on questions of fact shall be final and shall not be subject to review' has to do with the commission's determinations upon questions of fact within its jurisdiction. When the question, ever one of mixed law and fact, goes, as here, to the jurisdiction itself, when the whole controversy revolves around the inquiry as to whether or not the corporation is a public utility, to say that the determination of the commission upon this matter is final and conclusive, and is not subject to review, is the equivalent of denying to a petitioner a hearing upon a right carefully preserved to him by the language of section 67 itself—a hearing and a determination of whether the order and decision under review 'violates any right of the petitioner under the Constitution of the United States or of the state of California.' So it will be found that in such petitions as Pacific Telephone Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal.

640, 137 Pac. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822; Del Mar Water Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 666, 140 Pac. 591, 948; Title, etc., Co. v. Railroad Commission, 168 Cal. 295, 142 Pac. 878, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 738; Marin Water, etc., Co. v. Railroad Commission, 171 Cal. 706, 154 Pac. 864, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 114; Atchison Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 173 Cal. 577, 160 Pac. 828; Western Association, etc., v. Railroad Commission, 173 Cal. 802, 162 Pac. 391—this court has uniformly and without a dissenting voice investigated every complaint where the petitioners upon reasonable grounds asserted that the commission had either exceeded its jurisdiction or refused to exercise the jurisdiction which in law it possessed. In the last-cited case the commission, believing it did not have jurisdiction to entertain the application of the petitioner, refused to do so, and this court, reviewing its powers, held that it did possess this jurisdiction and issued mandate to the commission to exercise it. The converse of this proposition must be equally plain. If this court by mandate may compel the commission to exercise powers which it does possess, upon the other hand it may restrain the commission from exercising powers which it does not possess, or annul its decree when such unwarranted powers have been exercised.

"Thus we are brought to a consideration of the evidence upon which the commission acted in holding this plaintiff to be in toto a public service corporation. The evidence, consisting for the most part, and indeed so far as value is concerned, wholly, of undisputed record and written facts, is without substantial controversy. And indeed it may be added that the pure findings of fact set forth by the commission are not seriously disputed, petitioners' grievance arising over the conclusion—one of mixed law and fact—that the applicant is wholly a public service corporation.

"Into a Mexico rancho, the San Jacinto Viejo, flows the San Jacinto river. This rancho was partitioned between Estudillo, Stone, Jordan, and others. The allotments to the named persons did not boarder on the stream, but the partition judgment provided that each of these and their successors should have a right of way for a ditch, flume, or acqueduct across the lands of intervening owners for the purpose of securing and using, upon equal terms with the owners of all other allotments, their due proportion of the waters of the San Jacinto river for irrigation and other purposes in connection with their land. In 1886 the Fairview Land & Water Company was the owner of that portion of the rancho whereat the river entered. In that same year W. F. Whittier and his associates acquired certain rights and asserted certain claims to the waters of the river, and secured a contract from Estudillo for the sale to them of 3,000 acres of his land. The following year Mr. Whittier and his associates simultaneously organized two corporations under the laws of this state—the Hemet Land Company and the Lake Hemet Water Company. These two corporations were in all essentials under identical ownership and control, with the same stockholders, boards of directors, offices, and letter heads. From time to time Mr. Whittier acquired the interests of his associates, and at the time of this hearing, in January, 1916, he was the sole and real owner of both corporations, owning all of the stock in equity and all of the stock in law, saving a few shares outstanding and used to qualify the members of his directorates. Sixty per cent. of the stock of the Lake Hemet Water Company was originally issued to Mr. Whittier and his associates in consideration of their transfer to the corporation of their interests in the land along and adjacent to San Jacinto river, and of their water, water rights, and claims to water pertaining thereto, and, in addition, of similar rights and claims to the waters of South Fork, North Fork, and Strawberry creek, tributaries of the San Jacinto river. To the Hemet Land Company they conveyed their interests in the lands of Estudillo, Stone, and Jordan which they had acquired, and under the ownership of the Hemet Land Company these lands became known as the Hemet tract. In 1887 Mr. Whittier caused the survey of these lands to be made and recorded. It was known as the 'Map of the lands of the Hemet Land Company and of the three thousand acre Estudillo tract.' This map was adopted by the Hemet Land Company. Upon it a town site embracing 160 acres was delimited, and the Hemet Land Company dedicated the streets and avenues thereon designated and named to public use, reserving therefrom, however, certain rights of way for street cars, steam cars, telegraph lines, sewers, gas conduits, 'flumes and water pipes for domestic use or irrigation purposes.' During this year also the Lake Hemet Water Company and the Fairview Land & Water Company adjusted and settled their conflicting claims to these waters, as will be found adequately set forth in Copeland v. Fairview Land & Water Co., 165 Cal. 148, 131 Pac. 119. The Lake Hemet Water Company in this year carried a pipe line into this 160-acre tract where the town or city of Hemet now is and established a public watering trough therein. Aside from the question of dedication, this was the first actual devotion to public use of any of the waters of the company. Lots were sold in the town site, homes and other structures erected, and the applicant supplied them with water from its system. In 1891 the applicant began the construction of the Hemet dam on South Fork, and completed it in 1895, and contemporaneously constructed a diverting, transmitting, and distributing system to deliver water for irrigation and domestic purposes to, and was at the time of the hearing delivering water upon, practically all of the lands as shown on its official map.

"If it has not already become apparent it soon will be that so far as Mr. Whittier and his associates are concerned, this was a purely private business venture for purposes of legitimate private gain. Vast areas of land in Southern California are valueless (except for grazing purposes) unless artificially supplied with water. Because of this, two methods of meeting the exigencies arose and both came into common use—the one the method whereby certain landowners associated themselves together and expended money in securing water to be used on their own lands, forming for this purpose a mutual water company; the second, the method here put in practice, whereby men of means—for only men of means could do this thing—secured tracts of land at almost nominal prices (because the land without water had so little value), upon which lands they knew or believed they could put water. They then developed their water system and advertised the lands with appurtenant water rights for sale at a greatly enhanced price. The latter was the method here adopted by Mr. Whittier and his associates. In some of the minor details these companies moved along different plans. In their essentials, however, the methods were the same. Sometimes with the land went proportionate shares of water stock to the purchaser, entitling him to the use of a given amount of water on his land. Sometimes the land and water rights were held by a single corporation, and the conveyance of the land in express terms carried with it the right to the use of a given quantum of water. Mr. Whittier and his associates, soon after the official map of the Hemet Land Company was approved, began to advertise and sell these lands, and the practice is set forth in the finding of the commission as follows:

" 'The testimony shows that, with possible minor exceptions all water regularly sold by petitioner for irrigation (as distinguished from "extra water") was sold to persons who are owners of water right certificates issued by petitioner. Under the plan originally formulated by Mr. Whittier and his associates, owning both Hemet Land Company and Hemet Land & Water Company, whenever a parcel of land was sold by Hemet Land Company the purchaser of such land desiring water thereon was obliged to purchase a water right certificate from Hemet Land & Water Company. Later, when other lands were purchased by Mr. Whittier and his associates, in addition to the original Hemet Tract, a similar arrangement was made. The land company sold the land and the water company sold so-called "water certificates." These certificates entitled the holder to one miner's inch of water for eight acres of land.'

"On the average these land purchasers paid $75 per acre for their land and $75 per acre for their water rights appurtenant to their land. The company issued prospectuses in 1887, 1902, and 1906, each prospectus in similar language declaring that 'each purchaser of land in the Hemet tract is provided with a contract calling for both a domestic and irrigation supply of water. Domestic water is free during the irrigation season, and $1.00 per month for each family the remaining five months. The irrigation supply costs $2.00 per acre per annum. Each acre of land under this contract is entitled to one-eighth of a miner's inch of water, continuous flow, during the irrigation season. That is, the water right is inseparable and is only transferable with the land.' These water right certificates contained a binding obligation upon the water company to deliver to the purchaser a constant flow of one inch of water for each eight acres on his designated land during the irrigation season, with a right to cumulate the water, under such regulations as would best subserve the interest of all parties. The purchaser agreed to pay, and did pay, the $75 per acre, or such other sum as might have been designated in the contract for this water right, and the further sum of $2.00 per acre while the contract remained in force. The use of the water was limited to described land. Provision was made for the use of water for domestic purposes as above outlined. The contract bound all assignees or successors in interest, but could not be assigned by the purchaser without the written consent of the water company. At the time of the hearing these water right certificates covered 69 acres at an annual rate of $5 per acre and 5874 at an annual rate of $2 per acre. The applicant also announced special rates, whereby the owners of these water right certificates could, when the quantity of water which the applicant possessed justified it, secure extra water for irrigation at fixed rates, measured by the California miner's inch for all excess water above that provided for in the water certificates—10 cents an inch when there was a large abundance of excess water, 25 cents an inch when there was an abundance of water immediately preceding the opening of the regular irrigation season, April 14th, and 50 cents an inch during the period of the irrigation season proper.

"The quantity of water which can be supplied by the applicant is limited. Of that 'net, safe yield,' not to exceed 3 per cent., and perhaps but 1½ per cent., is actually required and used by the city of Hemet. All the rest of this 'net, safe yield' is used under these water certificates, and after such use there is a protective remainder of water amounting to but 3 or 4 per cent. of the total supply. This, of course, takes no account of excess waters, which, being occasional, are not to be depended upon. Thus approximately 94 per cent. of the waters of applicant are devoted to use under its water right certificates, 3 per cent. in supplying the needs of the municipality and citizens of the city of Hemet, while the remaining 3 per cent. remains in storage.

"The articles of incorporation of the Lake

Hemet Land & Water Company declared the purposes of the corporation to be 'to acquire by purchase and appropriation water and water rights and to develop water and to use, hold and enjoy the same, * * * and to acquire all other and further easements necessary for the storing, conveyance, use, sale and other disposal of such water in the county of San Diego and elsewhere in the state of California; and to construct dams, reservoirs, flumes and ditches and other conduits for the storage and distribution thereof; and to supply the inhabitants of the towns in San Jacinto Valley with pure water for domestic purposes.'

[3] "The petition of applicant to the Railroad Commission to fix its water rates upon the asserted ground that it was a public service corporation was based upon the allegation that the remuneration which was received by the applicant from the existing rates was wholly inadequate. In brief, the time had come when the applicant, Mr. Whittier, concluded that the duty was an onerous one, and he sought a repudiation of these contracts and water right certificates upon the ground, unquestionably sound in law, that if the corporation which entered into the contract was, at the time of entering, a public service corporation, these contracts were subject to modification at the instance of the commission. S. P. Co. v. Spring Valley Water Co., 173 Cal. 291, 159 Pac. 865, L. R. A. 1917E, 680; Limoneira v. Railroad Commission, 174 Cal. 232, 162 Pac. 1033. Certain facts in addition to those above set forth were presented to the commission. Beginning with the year 1912, in response to a general order issued by the commission to all public utilities, this applicant filed its schedule of rates, rules, and regulations for the service of water for irrigation and domestic use and did so each year thereafter. The applicant further recognized its own character and the jurisdiction of the commission by making an application before it for an order authorizing the sale of certain of its properties. No doubt can be entertained but that from 1912 Mr. Whittier, who, as the sole owner of these corporations, may be indifferently regarded with the water company itself as the applicant, did all that lay in his power to declare the company to be a public service corporation and to destroy the water rights of these petitioners, for which water rights he had received the sum of $438,938.60.

"The next series of facts presented to the commission comes, first, from the testimony of Mr. Whittier as to the 'policy' of the water company, which was to sell its water 'to every one that wanted water.' Mr. Whittier at the time he gave this testimony was 84 years of age. But Mr. Whittier further testifies that he is giving his evidence from his recollection, and that he is quite sure the records are better evidence, and this, of course, may not be questioned. The final fact before the commission is that the applicant established and maintained a public watering trough on the town site of the present city of Hemet before it issued any of its water certificates.

"It is well now, for a clear understanding of the question, to epitomize the position of these petitioners. They concede that the applicant is a public service corporation in so far as the city of Hemet is concerned and as to the amount of water which that city does or may require. They will not object to a finding that such present or future needs on behalf of the city constitute a first and preferential right to the use of the water. They insist, however, that, subject to that public use only, they have a private right in ownership by virtue of their water right certificates to the use of all water provided for in those certificates; that their rights, being private rights, are governed wholly and exclusively by their contracts. Next, as to the excess waters, the rates for which have been fixed by the applicant itself, their attitude is one substantially of indifference as to whether or not the rates to be charged for those waters shall or shall not be fixed by the commission.

"The position of the commission, and of the applicant before it, is, first, that, under the facts above set forth, applicant was from the time of its creation and continuously thereafter a public service corporation, and that it had dedicated all of its waters to public use; second, that whether or not it had so dedicated its waters and properties to public use, by virtue of the laws of this state and their definition of a public utility, the applicant was such a public utility. Necessarily resulting from the upholding of either of these positions it is declared (and granting the premise the conclusion is unescapable) that all of these water right certificates were, in contemplation of law, issued subject to the rate-fixing power of the commission, and that therefore in so fixing the rates in derogation of these contracts no right of contract is violated.

[4-6] "1. Treating first of the facts above set forth as establishing or failing to establish the public service character of applicant, it may at once be said that when it engaged to supply the town site and the succeeding city of Hemet with water for municipal and domestic purposes, and proceeded to do this thing, it became a public service corporation, at least in so far as the needs, present or future, of the growing city of Hemet were concerned. But, of course, it does not follow, either in law or in reason, that because of this it had dedicated all its water to public use. To-day the city of Hemet requires but 1½ per cent., or at the utmost 3 per cent., of those waters. It would be little short of ridiculous to contend that upon the 97 per cent. remaining had been imposed the same servitude. Our decisions fully recognize that a private water company may be organized to sell water for purposes of private gain and not in so doing become a public utility. Thayer v. California Development Co., 164 Cal. 117, 128 Pac. 21. Further, that a company having a single and undivided supply of water (if that circumstance be considered of consequence) may devote its properties and a part of those waters to public service and may retain a part for the advantages of private sale, and not become a public service corporation as to all by virtue of the dedication of a part. Leavitt v. Lassen Irrigation Co., 157 Cal. 83, 106 Pac. 404, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 213; Thayer v. California Development Co., supra; Del Mar Water, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 666, 140 Pac. 591, 948. Manifestly the applicant did not become a public utility merely by itself fixing the rates and charges for the water which it sold, nor could its submission to the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission and its declaration that it was a public utility in the slightest affect the previously vested rights of these petitioners. Herein this case is broadly differentiated from that of Franscioni v. Soledad Land & Water Co., 170 Cal. 221, 149 Pac. 161. In the last-named case a private corporation had been delivering water for private use under contract. It petitioned the proper authority to fix the rates to be charged for this service. The landowners who had been receiving water under private contract acquiesced in this petition and the rates were fixed. These rates were acted upon by all the parties in interest without question or dissent. Thereafter the company sought to amend its articles of incorporation and declare therein that it was supplying water 'as a private corporation and not as a public water company,' and this court held that it was within the power of a private corporation to change the character of its use, with the assent of the recipients of the water under private contract, that this change had been so effected, and, the property having thus become stamped with a public use, it was not within the power of the corporation alone to change that use back to a private use, as it undertook to do. So while a public service corporation cannot out of these waters impressed with a public use sell private or preferential water rights, a private corporation can and may. Leavitt v. Lassen Irrigation Co., supra; Byington v. Sacramento, etc., Co., 170 Cal. 124, 148 Pac. 791. Of course the purposes avowed in articles of incorporation do not fix the character of the corporation in its future activities as being a public service corporation. Such declarations of purpose merely serve to give the corporation capacity to engage in such public service if it shall so desire. Del Mar Water, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 666, 140 Pac. 591, 948.

"So far as weight is to be attached to the purposes of the organization of the applicant as expressed in its articles of incorporation, amongst those purposes is one 'to supply the inhabitants of the towns in San Jacinto Valley with pure water for domestic purposes.' But this, standing alone, constitutes no dedication of applicant's properties to a public use. A most thorough and elaborate exposition of this, and, indeed, it may be added, of many other matters pertaining to this consideration, having been made by this court in Thayer v. California Development Co., supra, better cannot be done than to quote at some length from that exposition:

" 'The language plainly imports that the right, when acquired, is the property of the person who claims it and takes the steps prescribed to gain it. * * * The property does not become impressed with a public use or trust until after the owner has first acquired it and then dedicated it to the use. The acts of acquisition and of dedication, respectively, are distinct from each other. Technically the latter must follow the former and cannot precede or accompany it. An "appropriation of water" under the Code is therefore not, ipso facto, a dedication or appropriation to public use. The additional act of dedication is as necessary to the creation of a public use in a water right so acquired as it would be if the right was acquired by conveyance or in any other manner, or as in the case of any other property dedicated to public use. * * *

" 'According to the theory of the plaintiff in this case, whenever the owner of a water supply determines to and does sell it for a price agreed on between himself and the purchasers, it immediately becomes subject to public use, and any other person to whom it can be conveniently distributed in the same manner would have the right to a proportionate share of the water on the same terms as the purchasers, and, if the supply is limited, the first purchasers must divide with all others who may come in and claim a share. Under that theory, where a person having a surplus of water parts with a portion of it by sales to others, he thereby appropriates such portion to purposes of sale and dedicates it to public use. This application of the section would destroy private rights in water and convert every sale thereof into a dedication to public use. We do not believe that the Constitution was intended to have such effect or that it should be so construed. Article 14, taken as a whole, shows plainly that it was intended to regulate the use of water appropriated and dedicated generally for sale and distribution among an indefinite number of users. It could not have been intended to declare that a single sale of a part of his water by one having more than he needs would convert the use into a public use in which others could share. If a single sale could not do this, other sales of like character would not accomplish it. The section must be understood to apply to cases where one has appropriated water generally, for sale, rental, or distribution, and not to cases where sales are made to particular persons at a fixed price by ordinary contracts of purchase and sale. To compel such subdivision and distribution of water supplies as this construction would entail would destroy the value of all water rights. In this state the water supply is so small that large areas must go without irrigation entirely. Such water as there is must be applied, as far as it will go, in quantities sufficient to make the lands profitably productive. The principal benefit of irrigation comes from its use in growing vineyards and orchards. These require a large expenditure and a permanent water supply to make them profitable. If those engaging in such enterprises know that they must be ready always to divide their water supply with those in the vicinity who may subsequently choose to engage therein, such enterprises would be discouraged, the development, growth, and progress of the state would be much retarded, and its productive capacity greatly decreased.

" 'This provision of the Constitution has been in force 33 years. It has never been understood that it had the effect here contended for. There have been many instances in which the owners of large tracts of land have acquired water, conducted the same to the land, and sold and conveyed the land in small tracts to actual settlers with a proportionate share of the water appurtenant to the land, coupled with an agreement to continue the water supply at a fixed annual rate. Such a disposition is essentially a matter of private contract, and it shows no intent to create a public use.'

"The quotations above given relieve from the necessity of any further exposition of the matter. This applicant did carry out this declared purpose by dedicating so much of its water to public use as was or might be necessary to supply the town of Hemet. Further than that it has not gone. Further, the articles of incorporation as to the purposes declare that the corporation will acquire its water and water right 'by purchase and appropriation,' both methods being wholly within the purview of private ownership of such rights when acquired. It is not without significance that there is omitted therefrom the declaration of the right to acquire by condemnation, which right runs only with a public service; and of similar significance is the fact that when this applicant, in the course of its activities, needed to acquire, and did acquire, certain rights of way, it did not undertake to do so by condemnation, but effectuated its purpose by purchase.

[7] "To hold that property has been dedicated to a public use is 'not a trivial thing' (San Francisco v. Grote, 120 Cal. 60, 52 Pac. 127, 41 L. R. A. 335, 65 Am. St. Rep. 155), and such dedication is never presumed 'without evidence of unequivocal intention' (Niles v. City of Los Angeles, 125 Cal. 512, 58 Pac. 190). The character of the contracts evidenced by these water right certificates, the restriction upon transfer, the fixing of the acreage quantum, the enormous sum in the aggregate paid by these petitioners for their water rights, establish beyond the need of further discussion that the parties to those contracts believed that they were dealing in their private capacities and selling and receiving water for private use. But one suggestion here is sufficient. Is it conceivable that these landowners would have given Mr. Whittier and his associates a bonus of $438,938.60 for the right to use water, which right the law had given them without the expenditure of one dollar of it?

"Upon this branch of the case, then, the conclusion is inevitable that the applicant was not, as to all of its water and properties, a public service corporation, and that these petitioners entered into their contracts with applicant, both parties to each contract acting as of right in their private capacities. Nothing in the cases relied on by respondents militates against this conclusion. Franscioni v. Soledad Land & Water Co., supra, has already been considered. In that case there was an acquiescence upon the part of the holders of private contracts to change in use from private to public. Here the holders of such contracts are protesting and have protested from the moment that it appeared that their contractual rights might be impaired. Limoneira, etc., v. Railroad Commission, 174 Cal. 232, 162 Pac. 1033, was a case where the company was indisputably a public service corporation, but it had entered into two agreements which were asserted to be private and beyond regulation. It has heretofore been said that such private right cannot be carved out of a public use (Leavitt v. Lassen Irrigation Co., supra), and the decision of this court upholding the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission was based upon this ground, this court recognizing that if a new appropriation had been made by the company, waters from which appropriation were to be devoted to this private use, it might well be held that the contracts were of private character. But, so reads the decision, 'There is nothing to compel the conclusion that there was any new appropriation of water to enable the utility to satisfy the requirements of these contracts.' Palermo Land & Water Co. v. Railroad Comm., 173 Cal. 380, 160 Pac. 228, is of no value to the present consideration, since the contracts there under review in themselves provided for a rate which should be 'fixed by public authority.' And, finally, it may be added upon this matter that in Copeland v. Fairview Land & Water Co., 165 Cal. 148, 131 Pac. 119, this applicant here contended, and successfully contended, against the position which it now takes, the position there taken being that it was not a public service corporation. We do not cite this as being a determinative adjudication upon the question, but it serves at least to illustrate the changeable views which the applicant has entertained of its own activities, functions, and duties. In all respects vital to this consideration these certificates are of the character of those considered in Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 716, 93 Pac. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359. In the Thayer Case, supra, it was decided that the sale in gross by a water company of water to a mutual water company was not a dedication of such waters to public use. In Marin Water & Power Co. v. Town of Sausalito, 168 Cal. 587, 143 Pac. 767, it was decided that a sale and delivery of water by a water company to a municipality owning its own water system, to be sold by the municipality to its inhabitants, was not a dedication of such water so sold in gross to a public use so that the gross rates were subject to municipal regulation. It is not possible to see how, in the light of the principles upon which these adjudications are rested, it can be held that these private contracts with private individuals for a private supply of water upon their private lands was a dedication of such waters to public use.

[8] "2. The second position adopted by respondents, as above outlined, is that this applicant is a public service corporation, without regard to the question of the dedication of its properties to public use, by virtue of the definitions of such public service corporations found in our law. To begin with, the Constitution, art. 12, § 23, declares that every private corporation furnishing water 'either directly or indirectly to or for the public is hereby declared to be a public utility, subject to control and regulation by the Railroad Commission.' Further, this section of the Constitution declares that 'every class of private corporations, individuals, or association of individuals, hereafter declared by the Legislature to be public utilities, shall likewise be subject to such control and regulation.' And, finally, this section provides that the right of the Legislature to confer powers upon the Railroad Commission respecting public utilities is plenary and unlimited by any provisions of the Constitution. Pursuant to this constitutional definition and grant of power, the Legislature in 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 84, c. 80) declared:

"'Whenever any * * * corporation sells, leases, rents or delivers any water to any person, firm, private corporation, municipality, or any other political subdivision of the state whatsoever, except as limited by section 2 hereof, whether under contract or otherwise, such person, firm or private corporation is a public utility, and subject to the provisions of the public utilities act of this state and the jurisdiction, control and regulation of the Railroad Commission of the state of California.'

"And the Public Utilities Act (Stats. 1915, p. 115) defines a water corporation in the following language:

"'The term "water corporation," when used in this act, includes every corporation or person, their lessees, trustees, receivers or trustees appointed by any court whatsoever, owning, controlling, operating or managing any water system for compensation within this state.'

"It must in this be recognized that the Constitution of this state, and the Legislature in pursuance of it, has undertaken to put out of existence any and all private rights in the matter of the rental or sale of water. So far as our Constitution and laws are concerned the state has done this thing. There stands between it and its enforcement, so far as this court is concerned, only the Constitution of the United States, which, as the supreme law of the land, is, whenever it speaks, the supreme law of this state.

[9] "What is a public utility, over which the state may exercise its regulatory control without regard to the private interests which may be affected thereby? In its broadest sense everything upon which man bestows labor for purposes other than those for the benefit of his immediate family is impressed with a public use. No occupation escapes it, no merchant can avoid it, no professional man can deny it. As an illustrative type one may instance the butcher. He deals with the public; he invites and is urgent that the public should deal with him. The character of his business is such that under the police power of the state it may well be subject to regulation, and in many places and instances is so regulated. The preservation of cleanliness, the inspection of meats to see that they are wholesome, all such matters are within the due and reasonable regulatory powers of the state or nation. But these regulatory powers are not called into exercise because the butcher has devoted his property to public service so as to make it a public utility. He still has the unquestioned right to fix his prices; he still has the unquestioned right to say that he will or will not contract with any member of the public. What differentiates all such activities from a true public utility is this, and this only: That the devotion to public use must be of such character that the public generally, or that part of it which has been served and which has accepted the service, has the right to demand that that service shall be conducted, so long as it is continued, with reasonable efficiency under reasonable charges. Public use, then, means the use by the public and by every individual member of it, as a legal right. Such is not only the accepted significance of the phrase by the great weight of authority as expounded by Mr. Lewis (Eminent Domain, sec. 164 et seq.), but is the definition repeatedly announced by this court. Thus, in Pinney & Boyle Co. v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co., 168 Cal. 12, 141 Pac. 620, L. R. A. 1915C, 282, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 471, explaining that it is not the use which the consumer makes of the commodity which constitutes the test as to whether or not the owner or purveyor of that commodity is a public service corporation, it is declared:

"'It is the duty which the purveyor or producer has undertaken to perform on behalf of and so owes to the public generally, or to any defined portion of it, as the purveyor of a commodity, or as an agency in the performance of a service, which stamps the purveyor or the agency as being a public service utility.'

"To the same effect is Thayer v. California Development Co., supra, while in Del Mar Water Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 666, 680, 140 Pac. 591, 596, it is declared that 'even a constitutional declaration cannot transform a private enterprise, or a part thereof, into a public utility and thus take property for public use without condemnation and payment.'

[10] "Our Constitution and our statutory definitions above quoted therefore must be construed as applying only to such properties as have in fact been devoted to a public use, and not as an effort to impress with a public use properties which have not been devoted thereto. For if the latter be the true construction of our Constitution and statutes, then manifestly in their operation they are void wherever they unjustly interfere with private property or private contractual rights by force of article 1, § 10, and of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. If the first alternative be selected, then, for reasons already given, such parts of these properties as are affected by the contracts with these petitioners have not been devoted to public use and their private contractual rights must prevail.

"For these reasons the determination, conclusion, and judgment of the commission that these petitioners' contractual and vested rights are subordinate to the regulatory powers of the commission is in excess of the commission's jurisdiction, and therefore void, and in so far the decree of the commission is annulled."

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

WILBUR, J. I dissent. The main opinion holds that our state Constitution, and laws passed in pursuance thereof, authorizing the Railroad Commission to fix rates for the use of water, are in conflict with the federal Constitution prohibiting the impairment of contracts, and are to that extent void and of no effect. It concedes that the state has exerted to the full all its sovereign powers to regulate and control the rates for the use of water, but holds the state to be impotent in the presence of the private rights to water and its distribution in this case. I concur in the main opinion in so far as it holds that the rights to water (one-eighth inch per acre) is a private right. It was so held in Thayer v. California Development Co., 164 Cal. 117, 128 Pac. 21, and the subsequent constitutional amendment and statute must be held to have been adopted in view of that decision. But the decision of the Railroad Commission does not interfere with that right. To an understanding of the case it is essential that some facts disclosed by the record be stated in addition to those set forth in the main opinion. The contracts under which the petitioners claim, in addition to securing to them a certain amount of water, require the water company to deliver such water "at such points on the pipes or conduits of the party of the first part (water company) as may be nearest the land" of the grantee. The contract thus recognizes that the distributing system belongs to the water company. For this system the water company has expended $447,000, paid in by its stockholders. It has also received $438,938.60 from the sale of its water, a part or all of which was expended in payment of current expenses. It would cost $657,385 to reproduce the distributing system. That the water company has done all in its power to dedicate its water and its distributing system to a public use is held in the main opinion, and that, having conceded and invoked the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission, the water company should be bound by its dedication, is held in Palermo L. & W. Co. v. R. R. Comm., 173 Cal. 380, 384, 160 Pac. 228, 229, where it is said by the court in bank:

"* * * It appears that in December, 1912, the Palermo Company applied to the Railroad Commission to have its rates for water established, and that the commission made its order allowing an increase in the rates theretofore in effect. Opinions and Orders of the Railroad Commission, vol. III, p. 1247. The case, therefore, falls directly within the doctrine of Franscioni v. Soledad Land & Water Co., 170 Cal. 221, 149 Pac. 161, where we held that, as against the water company, such submission to the authority of the regulating body was effective to 'change the use from a private and particular use to a public use so as to make the service and terms of delivery subject to regulation and control by public authority.' No valid distinction can be drawn between the Franscioni Case and the one before us." Palermo L. & W. Co. v. Railroad Commission, supra.

In the instant case the owners of property costing $657,385 to reproduce dedicate the same to a public use, and the state, through its Constitution, its laws, and its duly accredited representatives, accepts and acts upon such dedication. It is held in the main opinion that such dedication of such property is ineffectual. If it is once conceded that the distributing system is, or has been, dedicated to a public use, it follows that the rates to be charged for the use thereof are to be fixed by public authority, and that the inhibition of the federal Constitution against the impairment of contracts does not apply, even though rates in excess of the contract rates are fixed. Limoneira Co. v. Railroad Comm., 174 Cal. 232, 162 Pac. 1033. The main opinion holds that the purchasers of the water contracts not only secured a right to the water, but also secured an easement in the distributing system attaching to the land, and thus have a property right in the pipe lines; citing Stanislaus W. Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 726, 93 Pac. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359; Copeland v. Fairview Co., 165 Cal. 154, 131 Pac. 119; Palermo Co. v. R. R. Comm., 173 Cal. 386, 160 Pac. 228. If we hold that the owners of water certificates have a property right so definite in the pipe lines and distributing system as to prevent the dedication thereof to a public use by the water company, it would seem that such owners should at least bear the corresponding burden of the maintenance thereof, including their proportion of the expense of distribution of the water contained therein, particularly as against the public also served thereby. The Railroad Commission finds that the system has at all times been run at a loss. Neither the public nor the private users of water have paid their proportion of the expense of maintenance. The annual loss, including depreciation, now approximates $30,000. The proportion thereof properly apportioned to the owners of water certificates (94 per cent., according to the main opinion) would be $28,200. If the system is to remain a going concern, this amount, at least, must be assessed upon the public users (the 3 to 6 per cent.), if the private users cannot be required to pay more than the contract rate. The holders of water certificates bought with knowledge that the system was used and to be used to distribute water devoted to a public use. By thus consenting that public waters, mingled with their private waters, could be conveyed through the distributing system in which they have an interest, they assented to the use of their property (the pipe line) for a public use. If they owned the whole pipe line and thus used it, it must be conceded that they thereby dedicated the same to a public use. Why does not their assent to such use of their undivided right therein necessarily constitute such a dedication thereof to a public use? Their rights in the water and in the system can be recognized by the Railroad Commission in fixing rates. A rate proportionately lower than that imposed on those having no property right in the water or distributing system can be fixed. Although it is conceded that the statute authorizes the fixing of rates by the Railroad Commission in this case, if constitutional, it is well to observe that the commingling of public and private waters in a privately owned distributing system is expressly made a basis of the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission. Stats. 1913, p. 84, §§ 2, 3, 4.

"Sec. 2. Whenever any private corporation or association is organized for the purpose solely of delivering water to its stockholders or members at cost, and delivers water to no one except its stockholders or members at cost, such private corporation or association is not a public utility, and is not subject to the jurisdiction, control or regulation of the Railroad Commission of the state of California.

"Sec. 3. Whenever any private corporation or association organized for the purpose of delivering water solely to its stockholders or members at cost does deliver water to others than its stockholders or members for compensation, such private corporation or association becomes a public utility and subject to the terms of the public utilities act and the jurisdiction, control and regulation of the Railroad Commission of the state of California.

"Sec. 4. Whenever any private corporation or association is organized both for the purpose of delivering water to its stockholders or members at cost and to persons, firms, corporations, municipalities or other political subdivisions of the state in addition thereto, such private corporation or association is a public utility and subject to the provisions of the public utilities act and to the jurisdiction, control and regulation of the Railroad Commission of the state of California." Stats. 1913, p. 85.

It is, of course, the duty of the Railroad Commission to recognize private and constitutional rights and fix the rates with reference thereto. In this case, while finding, erroneously, as we hold, that all the water distributed by the water company was dedicated to a public use, it nevertheless refused to consider the value of the water as a basis for fixing the rates, and, although the water company at first sought a reasonable interest upon the alleged value thereof ($494,000), the company abandoned its claim, and the Railroad Commission refused to recognize it. In short, in effect, the water users who had paid $438,000 therefor were recognized as entitled to water claimed to be worth $494,000. The Railroad Commission fixed rates for water that would pay the operating and maintenance expenses and give a revenue to the company on a capitalization of less than one-half of the value of their distributing plant. It seems clear that the water company and the certificate holders, by express dedication and by necessary implication, have consented to the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission in so far as the distributing system is concerned, and that, therefore, it has jurisdiction, and that in the exercise of that jurisdiction it has not violated any rights of petitioners in the water or distributing system, such as would justify our interference. I therefore conclude that the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission may be well predicated upon the consent of the water company and the implied consent of the certificate holders whose property rights are given due consideration by the Railroad Commission. It is also true, I think, that the business of storing, conserving, and distributing water, whether privately owned or dedicated to public use, to large tracts of land for the use of large numbers of persons for domestic and irrigation purposes in an arid state, particularly where such distributor enjoys a monopoly, is so clearly a matter of great public concern as to justify the people in declaring that such business is a public utility. It is unnecessary to give reasons in detail for such an obvious conclusion, but it may be noted that changed labor conditions, increased cost of supplies and materials necessary to maintain such distributing system, bankruptcy, termination of corporate existence, or death of individuals furnishing water, all have a marked effect upon the ability of the distributor to distribute water, and upon the public so furnished with water, and that the ordinary remedies for breach of contract to distribute or deliver water, or equitable actions to protect and enforce such contract rights, would be wholly inadequate to protect the public directly and indirectly affected by such failure and the consequent damage. Many of these considerations, however, do not apply to the corporations excepted from control of the Railroad Commission, for the reason that in such mutual companies the actual cost of maintenance, whether great or small, is distributed among the water owners. As we are dealing with legislation that definitely and clearly authorizes the fixing of the rates for the water company under constitutional provisions, authorizing such legislation and providing for such fixing of rates (article 14, and article 12, § 23) we need only consider whether the federal Constitution prohibits such action, and for that purpose we must look to the Supreme Court of the United States as final and conclusive authority. The question of the limitations upon state legislative power by the federal Constitution has been frequently under consideration by that court. Only a few cases need be noted.

In Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 4 Sup. Ct. 48, 28 L. Ed. 173, the Supreme Court of the United States said:

"That it is within the power of the government to regulate the prices at which water shall be sold by one who enjoys a virtual monopoly of the sale, we do not doubt. That question is settled by what was decided on full consideration in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113 [24 L. Ed. 77]. As was said in that case, such regulations do not deprive a person of his property without due process of law."

In the case of Munn v. Illinois, supra, in passing upon the power of the Legislature of the state of Illinois to declare grain elevators public utilities and regulating rates for the storage and handling of grain, the Supreme Court said:

"This brings us to inquire as to the principles upon which this power of regulation rests, in order that we may determine what is within and what without its operative effect. Looking, then, to the common law, from whence came the right which the Constitution protects, we find that when private property is 'affected with a public interest it ceases to be juris privati only.' This was said by Lord Chief Justice Hale more than 200 years ago, in his treatise De Portibus Maris, 1 Harg. Law Tracts, 78, and has been accepted without objection as an essential element in the law of property ever since. Property does become clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence and affect the community at large. When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he, in effect, grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest he has thus created. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use; but, so long as he maintains the use, he must submit to the control."

In Atlantic Coast Line R. R. Co. v. City of Goldsboro, 232 U. S. 548, 34 Sup. Ct. 364, 58 L. Ed. 721, the rule is thus stated:

"It is settled that neither the 'contract' clause nor the 'due process' clause has the effect of overriding the power of the state to establish all regulations that are reasonably necessary to secure the health, safety, good order, comfort, or general welfare of the community; that this power can neither be abdicated nor bargained away, and is inalienable even by express grant; and that all contract and property rights are held subject to its fair exercise. Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 62 [21 L. Ed. 394]; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 125 [24 L. Ed. 77]; Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 33 [24 L. Ed. 989]; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 665 [8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205]; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 89 [11 Sup. Ct. 13, 34 L. Ed. 620]; New York & R. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 567 [14 Sup. Ct. 437, 38 L. Ed. 269]; Texas & R. R. Co. v. Miller, 221 U. S. 408, 414, 415 [31 Sup. Ct. 534, 55 L. Ed. 789]."

In determining the question whether or not a business is of such public interest and concern as to subject it to regulation as a public utility, the Supreme Court of the United States holds that that question is primarily one for the Legislature. In Munn v. Illinois, supra, it is said:

"For our purposes we must assume that, if a state of facts could exist that would justify such legislation, it actually did exist when the statute now under consideration was passed. For us the question is one of power, not of expediency. If no state of circumstances could exist to justify such a statute, then we may declare this one void, because in excess of the legislative power of the state. But if it could, we must presume it did. Of the propriety of legislative interference within the scope of legislative power, the Legislature is the exclusive judge."

It seems clear from these authorities, upon the facts found by the Railroad Commission, that the state had power to declare the water system a public utility. It finds that—

"The consumers concede that, in so far as the supply of domestic water to persons other than the holders of water certificates is concerned, petitioner is a public utility." That the "petitioner adopted rules and regulations for the sale of water for irrigation and domestic use, which rules were printed and distributed to its consumers and referred to in petitioner's advertisements. Petitioner's business has grown from its initial supply of domestic water to the first inhabitants of what is now the town of Hemet, until in 1915, as shown by petitioner's annual report for the year ending December 31, 1915, on file with the Railroad Commission, petitioner sold water through 85 meters for irrigation, 481 meters for domestic use, 5 meters for manufacturing and power, and 6 meters for public use. During the same year petitioner sold water measured through other devices for the irrigation of 5,554 acres of land. Approximately 2,500 people, including approximately 1,500 in the town of Hemet, rely upon petitioner's system as their sole source of water." That the "petitioner is a water company, incorporated under the laws of this state. It is the only water system in control of water which it sells for compensation. For more than 25 years petitioner has been engaged in the sale of water to the entire public on the land to the service of which petitioner has dedicated its water. Petitioner has fixed and enforced rates, rules, and regulations for the service of water for irrigation and domestic purposes and to the town of Hemet for public purposes. Petitioner's water system consists of watershed lands, the Lake Hemet reservoir on the south fork of the San Jacinto river, diversion works at four points of diversion, transmission mains of riveted steel and wood pipe, wooden flume and lined ditch and a distributing system of wooden and concrete flume, concrete and riveted steel pipe, all used in the delivery of water to wholesale and irrigation consumers. In addition, petitioner owns and operates a separate system with a separate diversion for the distribution of water through riveted steel and standard screw pipe to domestic consumers. In the operation of its system petitioner for more than fifteen years has had the control and use of $^{17}/_{20}$ths of the water of the north fork of the San Jacinto river and Strawberry creek under agreements with Fairview Land & Water Company, the owner of such waters. The safe yield of petitioner's water system is 161,000 miner's inch days annually, or 6,376 acres feet, delivering 725 miner's inches during the irrigating season."

It is also found that the water company had issued:

(a) Contracts covering 69.36 acres at the rate of $5 per acre per year.

(b) Contracts covering 5,874.77 acres at the rate of $2 per acre per year, and that the amount of acres irrigated was 5,554; that "petitioner's total operating expenses to December 31, 1914, was $512,353.87; $93,607.43 was depreciation. Total cost of operation was $418,746.44. Total revenue, after deducting receipts from the sale of water rights, $239,824.47. It thus appears that the result of petitioner's operations under its rates now in effect has been a gross revenue of $178,-921.97, less than bare operating and maintenance expenses."

We are not called to pass upon the reasonableness of the rates fixed by the Railroad Commission, if no constitutional right is invaded.

I therefore conclude that the Railroad Commission had authority to fix rates under the Constitution and law:

First, for the reason that the water company had consented thereto by the express dedication of all its interest in the system, and that the Railroad Commission was empowered and required in fixing rates to fix them with due regard to the private ownership of the water certificate holders in the water and the distributing system.

Second, for the reason that the owners of water certificates had consented to the use of the distributing system, and their interest therein by the public, and had thus jointly with the water company dedicated the distributing system to a public use.

Third, for the reason that the character of the business conducted by the water company and water users authorized the state to declare the same a public utility, and to provide for the fixing of rates by the Railroad Commission, whose duty it was to fix rates in due recognition of the private rights of water certificate holders in such property, and that the intervention of this court is only proper where a clear violation of such rights appears.

CAROTHERS v. CAINE. (Civ. 2469.)

1. BROKERS ⟸32 — ACTING FOR ADVERSE PARTIES—SECRET PROFIT.

Where plaintiff fixed his own terms and employed defendant merely to procure acceptance, defendant being also the agent of the other party to the exchange and known by plaintiff to be such, compensation received by defendant from the other party was not a "secret profit" to which plaintiff was entitled.

2. BROKERS ⟸7—EMPLOYMENT.

That defendant, while acting as agent for B., one of the parties to exchange of realty, promised plaintiff, the other party, that he would get the best price he could from B., did not constitute defendant plaintiff's agent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by E. B. Carothers against C. L. Caine. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

H. E. Barbour and Everts & Ewing, all of Fresno, for appellant. R. G. Retallick and C. K. Bonestell, both of Fresno, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an action to recover the sum of $1,883.30, alleged by plaintiff to be a secret profit made by defendant in a transaction in which the latter was acting as plaintiff's agent. Plaintiff recovered judgment for said amount and interest, and defendant appeals.

[1] Apart from various specifications of error as to the admission of testimony, the main ground urged in support of the appeal is that there is no evidence in the record that the defendant was acting as the plaintiff's agent in negotiating the terms of the contract, or was anything but a middleman between the parties; that the evidence shows that the plaintiff fixed his own terms, and employed defendant merely to procure their acceptance, and the defendant being also the agent of the other party to the exchange of properties out of which the claim arises, and known by plaintiff to be such, was entitled to be compensated by such other party; that consequently the sum received by defendant as such compensation was not a secret profit; and that the trial court erred in holding that it was.

We think the contention of appellant must be sustained. The evidence shows that Caine, the defendant, being a real estate agent, had been authorized by one Breckinridge to find a purchaser for 80 acres of vineyard in Fresno county owned by him, and in pursuance of the authorization offered the property to Carothers, the plaintiff, for a price of $16,000. Carothers declined to pay this price, but said that if he could get it for $15,000 he would make an offer for it, and requested the defendant to see if he could get a better price on it, which the defendant promised he would do, later reporting to the plaintiff that the owner would not abate his demand. The negotiations continued, and finally an agreement was entered into between the plaintiff and Breckinridge by which, instead of paying cash for the 80 acres, the plaintiff agreed to transfer to Breckinridge certain real and personal property owned by him, and the transaction went through in that way. The agreement of exchange was drawn by the defendant, and was in the form of an offer on the part of the plaintiff of the property that he was willing to transfer for the 80 acres, together with an authorization to the defendant to act as plaintiff's agent in negotiating the exchange, and an agreement to pay him a commission of $125 in case he procured an acceptance by Breckinridge of plaintiff's offer. This acceptance was procured by the defendant in writing upon the same day. Before the drawing up and execution of the offer mentioned, and at a time when it appeared to the defendant that he could bring the parties to an understanding, he procured from Breckinridge a contract to receive out of the money or property which Breckinridge should get in the deal all over a certain amount. The difference turned out to be the sum of $1,883.30, which was paid by Breckinridge to the defendant, and is the amount for which the plaintiff sues upon the theory, as we have said, that the defendant was plaintiff's agent in conducting the transaction, and was forbidden by law to make a secret profit therefrom.

[2] We think it clear from the facts as above outlined that the principle of law followed by the court in arriving at its judgment has no application to the case. The only employment of defendant by plaintiff was incorporated in the latter's written offer, up to which time the defendant was acting solely for Breckinridge. His promise to the plaintiff while so acting to get the best price he could from Breckinridge did not constitute him the plaintiff's agent, nor was it intended to, and did not impose upon him any legal duty to use any effort to induce his principal to reduce his price. On the contrary, at that time the defendant's duty was to procure from plaintiff the price at which his principal had authorized him to offer it. That the plaintiff should subsequently have employed the defendant to procure the acceptance of a definite offer on his part could not affect the character of acts already performed. Defendant's agreement with Breckinridge that he should receive all over a certain sum out of the purchase price was made prior to his employment by the plaintiff, and when plaintiff did finally employ him it was not for the purpose of buying the 80 acres at the best possible price—imposing upon the defendant the obligation to use his best skill and efforts to that end—but was solely to procure the acceptance of a definite offer. In addition to this, and above all, the fact that the plaintiff was aware that Caine was acting as the agent of Breckinridge completely deprives the compensation received by him from Breckinridge of the character of a secret profit. The plaintiff could not have supposed that Caine was acting gratuitously; and the amount of his compensation, and whether it took the form of a commission of 5 or 50 per cent. on the purchase price, or whether it was to consist of the excess of such price over a given sum, or both, was no concern of the plaintiff. He therefore was not entitled to receive from the defendant the advantage of the difference in amount between what he paid for the land and what Breckinridge, the other party to the exchange, received.

"If a broker exercises no discretion, but merely brings together the parties to an exchange or the purchase and sale of property, and his employment then terminates, and the parties themselves settle the terms of the transaction, he acts as a mere middleman, and he may accordingly recover a commission from each party if each has agreed to pay him; and it is immaterial in such case that either party was unaware that he was employed by the other." Corpus Juris, vol. 9, p. 576, § 76.

"It is only when the arrangement of a broker is that of an agent with discretionary authority from his principal in the matter of such employment that he cannot accept employment from another whose interests conflict with those of his principal. In such cases the brokers act as mere middlemen without discretion in making any of the terms of the sale or exchange, or to conclude either of them in any other respect, and such terms are fixed and arranged without reliance upon the brokers by the parties themselves." Pollatschek v. Goodwin, 17 Misc. Rep. 587, 40 N. Y. Supp. 682.

"The rule that an agent, acting for both parties and for each without the knowledge of the other, can collect commission from neither, applies only to agents stricti juris, and not to middlemen." Manders v. Craft, 3 Colo. App. 236, 32 Pac. 836.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed.

ROULLARD v. GRAY. (Civ. 2415.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸23½—PURCHASES BY WIFE—LIABILITY OF HUSBAND—RATIFICATION.

Evidence held to show such acceptance by the husband of a transaction by which plaintiff sold the wife an automobile as to render the husband liable for the balance due on the price.

2. NAMES ⟸10—FICTITIOUS NAMES—RIGHT TO MAINTAIN ACTION—SUFFICIENCY OF PUBLICATION OF CERTIFICATE.

Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468, as to publication of certificate by person doing business under fictitious name, as prerequisite to maintaining action, are sufficiently complied with in action for balance due on automobile by publication subsequent to commencement of the action but before the defense of noncompliance was raised by motion for nonsuit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Joel Roullard against Donly C. Gray. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 30 Cal. App. 757, 159 Pac. 457.

Larkins & Bailey, of Visalia, for appellant. Kitt Gould, of Clovis, and C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an action for the recovery of a part of the purchase price of an automobile, brought by the assignee of the vendor. The defendant denied the purchase of the automobile. The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff, and defendant appeals. The appellant sets out numerous alleged errors of law in the admission of testimony, etc., and also contends that the evidence does not support the findings or the judgment.

The evidence shows that the automobile was sold by the plaintiff's assignor to Hazel I. Gray, then the wife of the defendant herein; that an old automobile, the property of the defendant, was traded in at a valuation of $450, a payment of $500 was made by check drawn upon the account of defendant and signed "Donly C. Gray, by Hazel I. Gray," and the personal note of Hazel I. Gray was given for the balance. The defendant, Donly C. Gray, was not present during the transaction, and the account was carried upon the books of the vendor in the name of Hazel I. Gray. The bank paid the check drawn on the defendant's account for a part of the purchase price of the automobile, and defendant did not object to this signature; he did not repudiate the transaction, nor seek to recover his old car, which had been exchanged for the new one; he used the new automobile to some extent and paid for repairs upon it. Shortly after the purchase of the machine, Hazel I. Gray commenced suit for divorce against the defendant, and in that action the defendant filed a verified answer alleging that the automobile in question was his separate property.

[1] It is true the evidence is conflicting as to the general authority given by defendant to Hazel I. Gray to transact his business affairs during his absence, and the fact that the account was carried on the books of the company in the name of Hazel I. Gray is rather strong evidence that the company looked to her for payment. Yet we think the record does furnish sufficient evidence of defendant's acceptance of the entire transaction to sustain the findings and the judgment.

[2] Appellant also urges that the respondent had no legal right to maintain this action and was not entitled to a judgment herein without having proven that prior to the commencement of this action, or at least prior to the filing of the original answer herein, his assignor had complied with sections 2466 and 2468, Civil Code of this state. Section 2466 requires a certificate to be filed by persons doing business in the state under a fictitious name and provides for the publication of such certificate. Section 2468 provides:

"* * * No person * * * or his assignee * * * shall maintain any action upon or on account of any contract * * * until the certificate has been filed and the publication has been made as herein required."

The plaintiff in the trial court offered in evidence in support of the allegation of his complaint that his assignor had complied with the sections above mentioned, and affidavit of publication of the certificate of the assignor, which affidavit showed publication November 3, 10, 17, 24, and December 1, 1916, which dates were subsequent to the time of the commencement of this action. The defendant objected to its introduction and at the close of plaintiff's case filed a motion for nonsuit, upon the ground, among others, that the plaintiff had not shown a compliance with sections 2466 and 2468. The affidavit showed publication at a time before the motion for nonsuit was filed. The trial court ruled that a compliance with the above sections had been shown.

The phraseology of that part of section 2468 above quoted has been construed in the case of Cal. S. & L. Soc. v. Harris, 111 Cal. 133, 43 Pac. 525. The court, in construing another and a similar section of the Code, said:

"At the commencement of this action, the plaintiff had not filed the certified copy with the county clerk of Madera county, but it did file it with that officer several months before the defendant filed his amended answer, setting up this defense, so that at the time this defense was pleaded by the defendant the plaintiff had complied with the statute. * * * Section 299 does not declare that the plaintiff shall not commence an action in any county unless it has filed a certified copy in the office of the county clerk, but merely declares that it shall not maintain an action until it has filed it. To maintain an action is not the same as to commence an action, but implies that the action has already been commenced. 'The verb "maintain" in pleading has a distinct technical signification. It signifies to support what has already been brought into existence.'"

We think that the affidavit offered in evidence showing publication before this defense was raised by the motion proved a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the statute and was properly admitted in evidence.

It is unnecessary to discuss in detail the other alleged errors of law occurring at the trial and enumerated by the appellant, for the reason that, upon an examination of the entire record, it appears that there has been no miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BEASLY, Judge pro tem.; STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem.

SNOOK et al. v. FIELDEN. (Civ. 2522.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1010(1) — DISPOSITION—SUPPORT OF FINDINGS.

Trial court's findings, amply supported by the testimony introduced, will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by James A. Snook and B. H. Nelson against Allie Lorena Fielden. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

South & Ross, of Fresno, for appellant. L. N. Barber, of Fresno, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. The plaintiffs brought this action to foreclose a chattel mortgage executed by defendant as security for the payment of a promissory note given by her as first payment upon a contract for the purchase of 30 acres of land situated in Fresno county, belonging to the Fresno Farms Company, the assignor of plaintiffs. The foreclosure was resisted by the defendant, who set up in her answer that the contract in connection with which the mortgage was given was entered into by her only through and by means of the false representations of the plaintiffs' agents. After trial the court awarded plaintiffs judgment as prayed, and defendant appeals.

The sole ground urged in support of the appeal is that certain findings of the court negativing the claims of defendant as to the falsity of the representations in question are not supported by the evidence.

The representations alleged to be false by defendant's answer were that the land forming the subject of the contract was free from hardpan; that water in abundance was to be had upon it at all times under a water right appurtenant to the land; that the land was well adapted to the growing of vines, trees, and alfalfa; and that it was of the value of $150 per acre—the price which defendant agreed to pay for it.

The court, in its findings 4, 5, and 6—which are the findings attacked by the appellant as unsupported by the evidence—declared that the land was in fact free from hardpan; that there was appurtenant to it a water supply sufficient for all reasonable and necessary irrigation and available for defendant's use; that at the time of making the representations complained of the plaintiffs believed upon reasonable grounds that the land was well adapted to the growing of vines, trees, and alfalfa and was of the value of $150 per acre. The court in the findings attacked also found that the defendant was experienced in farming and familiar with the value and character of land, and that she made an examination of this particular tract before entering into the contract; and, finally, that after entering into the contract she affirmed the same with full knowledge of all the facts concerning the truth or falsity of the representations in question.

It is unnecessary to set out in detail the evidence upon which these findings of the court are based. An attentive study of the record has convinced us that they are amply supported by the testimony introduced, and that therefore there is no merit in this—the sole contention of the appellant.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Ex parte SILVA. (Cr. 818.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃991(3) — IRREGULAR JUDGMENT—SENTENCE.
Where a court having jurisdiction of the person and cause sentenced defendant for first degree burglary "in accordance with" Pen. Code, § 461, thus leaving the term indefinite, when the law then in force required it to be definite, the judgment was not void, but irregular.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1216(1) — AMENDED SENTENCE—WHEN TIME BEGINS TO RUN.
Where an irregular judgment sentencing for crime is corrected by an amended judgment, the latter runs from the date of the former, giving the defendant the benefit of the time served.

Application by Fernaz Silva for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner discharged.

Fernaz Silva, in pro. per. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner was convicted of an offense committed before the taking effect of the so-called Indeterminate Sentence Law. In passing judgment upon him, however, the court sentenced him to imprisonment, to use the language of the judgment, "in accordance with section 461, of the Penal Code," which section provides that the punishment for burglary of the first degree, the offense of which the petitioner was convicted, should be imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than fifteen, thus leaving undetermined the duration of his confinement. Subsequently and after the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Ex parte Lee, 171 Pac. 958, the petitioner was brought before the superior court and resentenced, his punishment this time being fixed at one year's imprisonment. At this time he had already served six months and six days; and if the second sentence dates from the making and entry of the first judgment, as the petitioner contends, he has served the full term imposed when resentenced if account be taken of certain credits for good conduct to which it is admitted he is entitled, and is consequently entitled to be released.

[1] It is conceded that the court had jurisdiction of the cause and of the person of the petitioner, so that it had power to pass upon him a judgment of imprisonment. Such judgment, therefore, was not void, although it did not, as according to the law in force at that time it should have done, provide a definite term of incarceration. Nor has any appeal been taken from said judgment. A similar situation arose in the case above mentioned (Ex parte Lee), where it was held that in such a case a proper procedure to remedy the defect in the judgment was to return the person affected by it to the judge or court that had imposed the irregular sentence and have a proper sentence pronounced, the court finding warrant for such procedure under the terms of section 1493 of the Penal Code.

[2] The question now arises whether the amended judgment should run from its date or the date of the one of which it is amendatory. In Clark v. Dunnam, 46 Cal. 205, it was held that, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, an amended judgment will be held to speak from the date of the original judgment. Whether that principle applies to a criminal case was considered in Burnett v. State, 14 Tex. 455, 65 Am. Dec. 131, where it was held that the rule for the construction of a judgment is the same in a criminal case as in a civil. And in People v. O'Brien, 4 Cal. App. 723, 89 Pac. 438, while this question was not directly discussed or considered, the decision in the case in effect applies the principle.

We think it follows from the foregoing that the sentence imposed upon the petitioner by the amended judgment ran from the date upon which the original judgment was made and entered; and that the term of imprisonment imposed, deduction being made of the credits to which it is admitted the petitioner is entitled, has expired; and that the petitioner is entitled to be discharged from custody.

The petitioner is discharged.

Where exhibition of note to maker in demanding payment was excused because maker stated he was without funds, it was not necessary, to make demand good to charge indorser, that holder should have possession of instrument with ability to exhibit it on demand; it being in nearby safe in custody of holder's agent, who was temporarily out of town.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⊂⊃419—INDORSER'S LIABILITY—NOTICE OF DISHONOR.

Notice from holder to indorser of dishonor of note held to set forth facts, as to demand for payment and refusal for want of funds, necessary to excuse nonpresentment of instrument, from which indorser could draw inference note had been dishonored within statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Action by G. A. Freudenberg against A. J. Lucas and J. G. Jackson. From judgment denying relief against defendant Jackson, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with direction to enter judgment for plaintiff.

Chas. E. Davis and Robert W. Harrison, both of San Francisco, for appellant. A. D. Plaw, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action upon a promissory note arising under the law as it stood prior to the adoption of the Negotiable Instrument Law. The case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, which showed that on August 10, 1912, defendant Lucas executed and delivered to respondent Jackson his promissory note for $2,000 payable to his order one year from date. At the same time Lucas delivered to Jackson as security for the payment of the note a stock certificate of a certain corporation. Thereupon by mutual consent, the note and certificate were both delivered to one A. A. Curtis, with instructions to hold the same until the note matured unless sooner paid, and, if it were paid on the date of maturity, to deliver the note and stock certificate to the then owner of the note. Prior to maturity the note was indorsed by Jackson to one Faraday, and by Faraday to the present plaintiff. On the date of maturity plaintiff went to the office of Curtis to get the note, but was informed by those in charge that Curtis was out of town, that the note was in his safe, and that they did not know when Mr. Curtis would return. These statements were made in the presence of Lucas, of whom plaintiff then demanded payment of the note. Lucas made no demand upon plaintiff that he exhibit to him the note, but stated that he was unable to pay it because he had no funds, and that plaintiff would have to look to the indorsers for the payment thereof. In due time plaintiff served upon Jackson a notice the material part of which is as follows:

"This is to notify you that on August 11th, 1913, payment of that certain promissory note (describing the note and indorsement) was demanded of said A. J. Lucas, but that payment thereof was refused by said Lucas for the reason, as stated by him, that said Lucas has not sufficient funds to pay it, and that therefore, as holder of said note I now look to you for the payment thereof. Yours, etc., G. A. Freudenberg."

Jackson having refused to pay the note, plaintiff brought this action against Lucas, as maker, and Jackson, as indorser, and has taken this appeal from that portion of the judgment denying him relief against respondent Jackson.

Counsel for respondent, in support of the decision of the lower court, contends that

Jackson was discharged from his liability as indorser for two reasons: First, because plaintiff did not have the actual and immediate physical possession of the note at the time he demanded payment of the maker; and, second, because the notice did not set forth either presentment of the note or the fact of nonpresentment, with such facts as might excuse presentment. We are of the opinion, however, that neither of these two contentions can be maintained, for the reasons hereinafter stated.

The following are the provisions of the Code material to the discussion:

"Sec. 3131. Presentment of a negotiable instrument for payment, when necessary, must be made as follows: * * *"

"Sec. 3141. A negotiable instrument is dishonored, when it is either not paid, or not accepted, according to its tenor, on presentment for the purpose, or without presentment where that is excused."

"Sec. 3143. A notice of dishonor may be given in any form which describes the instrument with reasonable certainty, and substantially informs the party receiving it that the instrument has been dishonored."

[1, 2] While there is no statutory expression in California as to what will excuse the presentment of a note, sections 3131 and 3141 above quoted clearly recognize the common-law rule that presentment under certain circumstances is unnecessary and excused. And it is admitted by respondent that where, as in the case at bar, the maker refuses payment on the sole ground that he is without funds to pay, and makes no demand that the note be exhibited to him, actual exhibition of the note to him is excused. But respondent claims that, even though exhibition of the note was excused, plaintiff must have had the actual physical possession thereof, with the ability to exhibit it to Lucas had he demanded it, in order to constitute a valid demand.

The claim is highly technical and, in our opinion, without any support in logic. When, on the date of the note's maturity, Lucas and plaintiff were in Curtis' office, the note was in the same room with them, in the safe where the depository chosen by Lucas and respondent had put it, and it was in the eyes of the law in plaintiff's possession, for it cannot be disputed that Curtis was on that day plaintiff's agent, and his possession was that of his principal. If exhibition of the note had been demanded, it might have taken some time to find Mr. Curtis and to get the safe open; but there was no legal impediment to the production of the note by plaintiff any more than if plaintiff had brought it to Lucas in a strong box the key of which plaintiff had inadvertently left at his home in another town. In either case the law would excuse a reasonable delay in physically producing the note, where such production was demanded; and where, as in the instant case, no such demand was made, it would be carrying technicality to a ridiculous extreme to make the validity of plaintiff's demand turn upon the wholly irrelevant question of his ability or inability to open his agent's safe.

[3] The notice substantially informed respondent of the dishonor of the instrument, as the demand for payment, and the refusal thereof for the assigned reason of want of funds, were the two facts from which nonpresentment was excused; and the notice fully advised respondent of all the necessary facts from which he could draw the legal inference that the note had been dishonored within the meaning of the statute.

Judgment reversed, with direction to the lower court to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff for the unpaid balance of the note as appears from the agreed statement of facts.

MORAND v. HOYERDAHL et al.

HOMESTEAD ⊂⊃43 — DECLARATION — SUFFICIENCY.

A declaration of a homestead under St. 1860, p. 311, made by a married person, must state that he is married, and a statement merely that he is the head of a family is insufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by Alice Morand against Jennie Hoyerdahl and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Mannon & Mannon, of Ukiah, for appellants. J. K. Peirsol, of Ft. Bragg, and G. E. Redwine, of Ukiah, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. Plaintiff sought a judgment quieting her title to an undivided one-half interest in certain real property situate in Mendocino county. The defendants, Jennie Hoyerdahl and C. M. Mannon, appeared and answered, alleging that the defendant Hoyerdahl is the owner of the whole of the property described in the complaint, that defendant Mannon has a first mortgage on all of Mrs. Hoyerdahl's interest, and that the plaintiff has no right whatever in the property. At the trial the parties stipulated to the effect that if a certain declaration of homestead, recorded by one Louis Morand July 26, 1872, was sufficient in form, the title to all of the real property in question belongs to defendant Hoyerdahl subject to a mortgage to defendant Mannon, but that if the said declaration is insufficient in form the title is vested an undivided one half in plaintiff and the other half in Hoyerdahl, subject to the mortgage before mentioned. It was also stipulated by the parties that Louis Morand was married at the time of the execution of the declaration of homestead in question. The lower court held the declaration of homestead insufficient, in that it failed to state that the declarant was married, and accordingly awarded an undivided one-half of the property to the plaintiff. From this judgment defendants appeal.

The declaration of homestead contained the statement:

"And I do hereby declare in writing that I am the head of a family, that I have selected said property as a homestead and that it is my intention to use and claim the same as a homestead, and that I am at the time of making this declaration residing with my family and the persons under my care and maintenance on the premises hereinafore described."

It is contended that the statement in the declaration of homestead, "I am the head of a family," is a sufficient compliance with the statute.

The statute in force at the time of the making and filing of the declaration reads as follows:

"Said selection shall be made by either the husband or wife or both of them, or other head of a family, declaring their intention, in writing, to claim the same as a homestead. Said declaration shall state that they or either of them, are married, or if not married, that he or she is the head of the family; that they or either of them, as the case may be, are, at the time of making such declaration, residing with their family or the person under their care and maintenance on the premises, particularly describing said premises, and that it is their intention to use and claim the same as a homestead." Stats. 1860, p. 311.

The statute names two classes of persons who may select a homestead, (1) the husband and wife or either of them, or (2) any other person who is the head of a family, and the statute makes the requirements as to the contents of the declaration of homestead depend upon which of these two classes the claimant belongs. In this connection it is to be noted that the language of the statute is in the disjunctive. To hold, as contended by appellants, that the requirement is in the alternative and that the statute should be construed to read that the declaration shall state "that they * * * are married or that he or she is the head of a family," would be to reject that portion of the statute "that they or either of them are married, or if unmarried," as surplusage. Courts are not inclined to adopt a construction of a statute which renders some part of it meaningless and of no effect. It is presumed that the Legislature in making this statute intended, as the language imports, that a married person in selecting a homestead should state in the declaration that he is married. The statement in the declaration of homestead, "I am the head of a family," is not a statement that the declarant was married, and, as there was no statement in the declaration which would tend to show that fact, the requirement of the statute has not been met.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. LAMATTINA. (Cr. 429.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 20, 1918. Rehearing Denied Sept. 19, 1918. On Rehearing in Supreme Court, Oct. 18, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸977(3) — SENTENCE—TIME OF IMPOSITION.
Where defendant on conviction applied for probation, and time for passing sentence was continued for 20 days, and upon the twentieth day the defendant consented to a further continuance and his application for probation was denied, whereupon defendant moved for new trial which was denied, the court acted within its rights under Pen. Code, §§ 1191 and 1202, as to the time of pronouncing sentence.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸977(3) — SENTENCE — TIME OF IMPOSITION.
Where accused was convicted of an offense and there had been one continuance to pass on application for probation and the court as required by Pen. Code, § 1202, was about to pass sentence, it was not error for the court to state that unless accused consented the sentence must be passed, and such statement did not establish coercion of accused.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸977(3) — SENTENCE—TIME OF IMPOSITION.
Under Pen. Code, § 1202, as to the time of pronouncing sentence after conviction, where probation is applied for but is finally denied and a new trial thereupon regularly demanded, the court may extend the time for the pronouncement of sentence for a reasonable number of days.

4. STATUTES ⟸87 — LOCAL AND SPECIAL LAWS—TIME OF PRONOUNCING SENTENCE.
Pen. Code, § 1202, as to the time to which pronouncement of sentence may be continued, providing that if it is not so pronounced accused shall be entitled to a new trial, is not violative of Const. art. 4, § 25, as a local or special law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Napoleon Lamattina was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and, from the judgment and an order denying new trial, he appeals. Affirmed. On motion for rehearing. Rehearing denied.

L. J. Schino, of Merced, and Terry W. Ward, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was charged by information filed in the superior court of Merced county by the district attorney of said county with the crime of an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. He was convicted of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, and prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and the order denying him a new trial.

The sole point upon which the defendant relies for a reversal is that judgment of sentence was not pronounced within the time prescribed by the statute, and that therefore, by the terms of the statute, it was the imperative duty of the trial court to grant him a new trial.

The record shows that the verdict of the jury was rendered on the 13th day of September, 1917, at which time the court fixed Monday, the 17th of September, as the time for pronouncing judgment. On the day last named, the defendant made an application for probation, and thereupon the court ordered that the matter of probation be referred to the probation officer of the county. The district attorney then stated that the probation officer thought he would require approximately three weeks within which to make a proper investigation and file his report, and suggested that the matter of pronouncing sentence be postponed three weeks from that day. The court thereupon continued the sentencing of the defendant to October 8, 1917, which would be 20 days after the verdict was rendered and recorded. On October 8th the probation officer reported that he was unable to make a final report at that time and asked for two weeks' additional time within which to do so. The court replied that an order continuing the time for the filing of the report of the probation officer would not be made unless the defendant himself requested it, and counsel for defendant consented to the making of an order giving the additional time requested by the probation officer. The court, however, insisted that the request should come directly from the defendant himself and thereupon asked the latter, addressing him by name, if he desired "to give Mr. Bilman, the probation officer, two weeks more to inquire into your case as to whether he will give you probation." To this question, the defendant replied, speaking through an interpreter, that he "would like to have a shorter time, to get it as soon as possible," whereupon the court said:

"Now, the question is, before I am going to grant it, it must be with his consent, or else he will take the judgment right now, to-day. Just state to him I will make an order sending him to San Quentin to-day unless he consents to it."

This declaration by the court was interpreted to the defendant, who thereupon expressed his consent to the order giving the probation officer the further time requested. The order extending the time was accordingly made and the probation officer reported, on the 22d day of October, 1917 (within the additional time granted him), against the application of the defendant for probation. On the same day, the defendant made a motion for a new trial, one of the grounds being newly discovered evidence, and asked for a continuance of ten days to enable him to file affidavits in support of his motion on said ground. The matter of hearing the motion was accordingly continued until the 5th day of November, 1917, at which time the motion for a new trial was renewed upon the additional ground "that the time for pronouncing sentence has been continued beyond the time specified by the statute." As already stated, the motion was denied and the defendant sentenced to be confined in the state prison at San Quentin. It will thus be observed that, from and after the day upon which the verdict was rendered to the day upon which the defendant was sentenced, 52 days elapsed.

Section 1191 of the Penal Code reads as follows:

"After a plea or verdict of guilty, or after a verdict against the defendant on a plea of former conviction or acquittal, or once in jeopardy, the court must appoint a time for pronouncing judgment, which must not be less than two, nor more than five days after the verdict or plea of guilty; provided, however, that the court may extend the time not more than ten days for the purpose of hearing or determining any motion for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment; and provided, further, that the court may extend the time not more than twenty days in any case where the question of probation is considered in accordance with section one thousand two hundred and three of this Code; provided, however, that upon the request of the defendant such time may be further extended not more than ninety days additional. If in the opinion of the court there is a reasonable ground for believing a defendant insane, the court may extend the time of pronouncing sentence until the question of insanity has been heard and determined, as provided in chapter six, title ten, part two, of this Code."

Section 1202 of said Code provides:

"If no sufficient cause is alleged or appears to the court at the time fixed for pronouncing judgment, as provided in section eleven hundred and ninety-one of this Code, why judgment should not be pronounced, it must thereupon be rendered; and if not rendered or pronounced within the time so fixed or to which it is continued under the provisions of section eleven hundred and ninety-one of this Code, then the defendant shall be entitled to a new trial. If the court shall refuse to hear a defendant's motion for a new trial or when made shall neglect to determine such motion within the time fixed for pronouncing judgment, or within the time to which the same is continued under the provisions of section eleven hundred and ninety-one of this Code then the defendant shall be entitled to a new trial."

As stated, the contention is that, the pronouncing of judgment of sentence having been postponed beyond the time within which section 1191 provides that sentence shall be pronounced, the defendant was entitled to favorable action by the trial court on his motion for a new trial. The following cases are cited in support of the proposition: Rankin v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 189, 106 Pac. 718; People v. Polich, 25 Cal. App. 464, 143 Pac. 1065; People v. Okomoto, 26 Cal. App. 568, 147 Pac. 598; People v. Winner, 31 Cal. App. 352, 160 Pac. 689; People v. Gilbreth, 33 Cal. App. 23, 164 Pac. 18.

In the Rankin Case, the Supreme Court construed sections 1191 and 1202 as mandatory in their terms, and held that where sentence is not pronounced in a criminal case within the time prescribed by section 1191, and the defendant applies for a new trial on that ground, it is the imperative legal duty of the trial court to grant the application. The other cases named necessarily adopted the construction thus placed upon said sections.

Originally, section 1191 limited the time within which sentence might be imposed, where the question of probation is considered, to "not more than twenty days." The Legislature of 1911, however, amended the section by adding thereto, after and following the language limiting the time to twenty days, the following proviso:

"Provided, however, that upon the request of the defendant such time may be further extended not more than ninety days additional."

In People v. Polich, the verdict was rendered March 27, 1914. The defendant at that time applied for probation, and for the purpose of considering that question, the court postponed the sentencing of the prisoner to April 3d, seven days after the verdict was rendered. The request for probation was denied on the last-named day and the defendant sentenced to the penitentiary. The appellate court, affirming the judgment and order, held that, as the statute plainly provides, inasmuch as probation was asked for by the defendant, the trial court pronounced judgment of sentence within due time, since under section 1191, it was within the discretion of the court, under the circumstances, to fix any time within twenty-five days after verdict rendered for the pronouncement of sentence. Rankin v. Superior Court, supra. It furthermore appeared in that case that the defendant made no demand for a new trial on the ground that sentence was pronounced beyond the time specified by the statute.

In People v. Okomoto, the verdict was rendered on September 17, 1914, and, probation having been applied for by the defendant, and the same denied, sentence was pronounced on October 14, 1914, within 25 days from the day on which the verdict was rendered. The court properly held that the sentence was pronounced within due time.

In People v. Gilbreth, the verdict was rendered on the 14th of September, 1916. The defendant thereupon applied to be admitted to probation, and, for the purpose of considering the application, the matter of sentence was by the court of its own motion continued until September 28th. On that day, the defendant requested a further continuance for further consideration of the question of probation, and the court accordingly extended the time to October 5th, on which day a further extension to October 10th was made, at the request of the defendant. On the last-named day, the court, of its own volition and in the absence of a request from or the consent of the defendant, extended the time for pronouncing sentence to October 17th, thus making in all 33 days from the time the verdict was rendered to the time when sentence was pronounced. The defendant moved for a new trial on the ground, among others, that judgment of sentence was pronounced on a day beyond that provided by the statute against his consent. The appellate court sustained his appeal on that ground and reversed the case.

In People v. Boling, 32 Cal. App. 42, 161 Pac. 1169, the trial court postponed the matter of pronouncing sentence from time to time until 116 days elapsed between the date of the verdict and the day upon which the defendant was sentenced, and denied the latter's motion for a new trial made upon the ground that the matter of the pronouncement of sentence had been postponed to a day beyond the time limited by section 1191 for that act to be performed. Obviously, under the circumstances, there was open to the appellate court no other course than to reverse the judgment and order, which was done. This would necessarily have been the result even if the defendant had consented to the postponement to the day upon which the sentence was pronounced, since it appears that the sentence was pronounced one day beyond the 25 and 90 days which, added together, constitute the utmost limit of time to which the court is restricted for the performance of that duty. People v. Winner, supra.

In People v. Winner, the verdict was rendered on March 16, 1916. On the 20th of said month, the defendant presented a motion for a new trial. Seven days thereafter—on the 27th—the court, by consent of counsel on both sides, ordered the case submitted on briefs, to be presented to the court "within five, five and two days." On April 4th, more than 15 days after the defendant's conviction by the jury, the court made an order denying his motion for a new trial. The defendant thereupon made a motion for a new trial upon the ground that more than 15 days had elapsed since the date of the rendition of the verdict, and upon the same ground objected to the pronouncement of judgment of sentence upon the defendant. This motion was denied. There was no question of probation presented to the court, and therefore the 20-day limitation provision of section 1191 had no application. Obviously, the time within which sentence should have been pronounced had passed when that act was performed by the trial court, and, of course, the defendant was entitled to be awarded a new trial.

[1] In the present case the situation is wholly different from those considered in the above cases. Here the trial court acted within its legal rights in postponing the matter of the imposition of sentence. In the first instance, as has been shown, the time to which the matter was continued is expressly allowed by the statute, the question of probation having been presented for consideration, and, in the second instance, the continuance was by the express consent of the defendant himself, the two postponements covering a period less than that to which the matter might have been postponed with the consent of the defendant.

[2] It is argued, however, that the consent of the defendant to the postponement beyond the 25 days was not freely given but coerced by a threat by the court that the defendant would be sentenced the day that the proposition for a further continuance was presented if he did not himself consent to the postponement. This position cannot justly be maintained. The court, having the law in view and conceiving that under its provisions the postponement of the pronouncement of sentence without the express assent of the prisoner himself would require the granting of a new trial on that ground, if it were demanded, merely meant to say, and, indeed, all that its remarks may justly be interpreted to mean was, that, unless the defendant consented to a further continuance for the purpose of giving the probation officer further opportunity to investigate and report on the question of probation, it would be its mandatory duty to pronounce judgment of sentence that day. In other words, the statement by the court was only equivalent to saying: "If the defendant himself does not consent to a further postponement of sentence, it will be the duty of the court to sentence him now." Of course, the court was compelled to pass upon the matter and entitled to give its reasons for the ruling, and this is really all that the remarks of the court amounted to.

It is true the defendant expressed the desire that the time be shortened as much as possible, but he finally consented to the time requested by the probation officer, and, perhaps, if not acting with perfect freedom in doing so, was entirely influenced to give his consent by his attorney's ready approval, expressed in court, of the request for a further continuance.

[3] But there arises the question whether the court lost the right to pronounce judgment of sentence on the 5th day of November, that day being the twelfth day after the date of the order denying probation. Of course, when that order was made, the matter of probation ceased to be a matter before the court. That question, in other words, was then eliminated from the case.

The statute provides, as will be observed, that sentence must be pronounced no later than five days after the rendition of the verdict unless there is a motion submitted for a new trial, in which case the court, for the purpose of hearing and determining such motion, may extend the time not more than ten days. By this we understand the section to mean ten days in addition to the five days, otherwise the language would undoubtedly have been, "extend the time to not more than ten days." The section, however, further provides for further extensions of time where probation is applied for. In this case, the court could not sentence the defendant within the five or fifteen days after verdict because probation was applied for. We therefore conclude that what the statute means is this: That, where probation is applied for, and the matter of sentence is for that reason postponed by the court either upon its own motion or upon the consent of the defendant, and probation is finally denied and a new trial thereupon regularly demanded, the court, then obviously being without the power to impose sentence within either five or fifteen days after verdict, may, with the consent of the defendant, extend the time for the pronouncement of sentence for the purpose of considering the motion for a new trial for a reasonable number of days after the date of the denial of probation, if the exigencies of the proceedings on the motion called for it. This appears to be a just construction of the statute. Indeed, it is the only construction to be given unless we are required to hold that, where a motion for a new trial has been made after probation has been denied upon the consideration of that question beyond the five days limitation, the ten "additional days" within which the court may pronounce sentence where a new trial is demanded begin to run from the date of the denial of probation. But the section does not so provide. The five and ten days' limitation after verdict, having long before gone by or expired, can have no application to that stage of the proceeding where probation has been denied and a new trial thereupon regularly demanded. Therefore it must be held to be within the general spirit of section 1191 that the court has the right in such circumstances to postpone the pronouncement of judgment of sentence, if necessary to do so for a proper and just consideration and disposition of the motion, for any reasonable time after the denial of probation. Of course, it is no reply to say that it is contemplated by the section that the court should pronounce judgment immediately upon making the order denying probation. Such action would be subject to the objection that it might deprive the defendant of a fair and just consideration and determination by the court of his motion for a new trial, and, besides, such a course would come no nearer in legal effect to measuring up to the requirement that, in case of a new trial being demanded and probation not asked for, the court shall dispose of the motion not later than fifteen days after verdict is rendered, than if the matter of pronouncement of judgment were postponed for ten or fifteen days after the denial of probation.

We conclude that the trial court did not transcend its authority or, in other words, lose its right to pass sentence upon the defendant by postponing, under the indicated circumstances, the matter of the pronouncement of judgment of sentence to November 5th.

[4] The Attorney General earnestly contends that section 1202 of the Penal Code is violative of article 4, § 25, of the Constitution. That section of the organic law specifically designates a number of cases as to which local or special legislation is prohibited, and the third subdivision thereof declares against the passage of special laws "regulating the practice of courts of justice." It is this last provision with which it is claimed section 1202 is in conflict. This proposition, it seems, has never been presented to the Supreme or other appellate courts, and therefore has never been directly passed upon by those courts, although, as above shown, many cases involving said section have been considered and decided by them; and, in view of the conclusion at which we have arrived upon the only point made by the appellant, it is not deemed absolutely necessary to consider it here. We may, with no impropriety, say, however, that, while the argument of the Attorney General in support of the point is vigorous, we have not thus been impressed with the conviction that his position is sound. We think that Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 476, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73, plainly negatives the contention of the Attorney General upon the proposition. In that case, Chief Justice Angellotti, in clear language and with what we esteem to be invincible logic, conclusively shows that it does not necessarily follow from the fact that a law is confined in its operation to a certain class of individuals that it involves special legislation within the contemplation of the provision of the Constitution referred to. It is there held, as by the decisions it has uniformly been held, that, if the individuals to whom a law is applicable constitute a class which requires legislation peculiar to itself in the matter covered by the law, then it is a general law within the meaning of that phrase as it is used in the Constitution. Of course, the class upon which the law is intended exclusively to apply must be separated from all other classes of individuals by some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction of such a nature as reasonably to indicate the necessity or propriety of legislation restricted to that class. Rode v. Siebe, 119 Cal. 518, 51 Pac. 869, 39 L. R. A. 342; Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 251, 27 Pac. 604; Darcy v. San Jose, 104 Cal. 642, 38 Pac. 500.

We hardly believe that it will be denied that the class of individuals to whom only section 1202 applies is separated from all other classes of parties to actions by a positive and natural or inherent distinction. Indeed, the section could not in the very nature of the case be applied to parties to civil actions, but of necessity can operate only upon that class of individuals who are charged with and convicted of violating the criminal law. Civil and criminal actions are as different and distinct as are manhood and boyhood and the individuals affected by or coming within either of those classes of actions are equally as different and distinct. Obviously, there can be no doubt that the Legislature has the right under the Constitution to designate the occasions, if they be reasonable, upon which or any one of which a person convicted of a crime by a jury may be entitled to a new trial, and it will not be contended that a certain specified delay by the trial court in pronouncing judgment of sentence after the verdict is rendered shall constitute a ground for a new trial is an unreasonable provision in that regard. Nor (as seems to be the contention) does it constitute a valid reason for holding section 1202 invalid merely because the ground for a new trial therein provided for is not to be found in the section containing the other and long-established grounds for a new trial in criminal cases.

But, as above stated, the Deyoe Case, supra, is, in our opinion, an authority clearly against the position of the Attorney General upon the point under consideration. Indeed, it strikes us that the case here is stronger against the claim of the invalidity of the legislation involved on the ground that it is special within the meaning of the constitutional inhibition than is the Deyoe Case, for the latter case upholds a statute which applies only to a single civil action. It is there held that the statute authorizing interlocutory decrees in divorce actions, which are, of course, civil as contradistinguished from criminal actions, does not involve special legislation contrary to article 4, § 25, subd. 3, of the Constitution, notwithstanding that such decrees are generally not provided for in other actions belonging to the same general class (civil) as divorce actions.

However, the judgment and the order must be affirmed for the reasons first above given, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

On Motion for Rehearing.

In petitioning for a rehearing of this case, counsel for the defendant declares in his petition that in our former opinion we failed to consider and pass upon the point—the principal and controlling point in the case—that where judgment is not pronounced in a criminal case within the time limited by section 1191 of the Penal Code the defendant is entitled to a new trial without regard to whether he has or has not consented to the delay. It is further stated in the petition: "We again point out that in the case at bar a motion for a new trial was made which was not determined within 15 days after verdict of guilty."

We thought that in our original opinion both the above-stated propositions were quite fully considered and a decision thereof arrived at and announced. In the hope of making ourselves clearer to counsel, however, we will here repeat what therein we held, as we still hold, that, under the ruling in the case of Rankin v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 189, 106 Pac. 718, probation having been applied for in this case by the defendant, the trial court was authorized to pronounce judgment of sentence at any time within 25 days after the date of the verdict, without the consent to a postponement by the defendant, said number of days consisting of the 5 days within which time section 1191 provides that the court must impose sentence, where probation is not asked for, and the 20 days additional time to which the court, in the exercise of its discretion, may postpone the pronouncement of sentence, where probation is applied for. We further held that, according to the construction given section 1191 of said Code in the Rankin Case, the language thereof, "not less than two nor more than five days after the verdict or plea of guilty," means that the time so allowed for pronouncing judgment begins to run, not on the day the verdict is rendered or plea entered, but with the day immediately succeeding that upon which the verdict has been rendered or the plea of guilty entered. Under this construction and the facts of this case, the court did not of its own motion extend the time beyond the 25 days within which, under the circumstances, it was authorized to postpone the matter of sentence without the consent of the defendant. The further postponement, as we show in our original opinion, was, according to the record, with the consent of the defendant, and did not extend beyond the time to which the defendant is himself authorized by the statute to give legal consent.

As to the second point above suggested, we have only to say that in our former opinion we disposed of the proposition involved therein to our satisfaction. It would seem to be unnecessary to remark that, under the circumstances of this case, it obviously became, by reason of the application for probation, absolutely impossible for the court to have determined or disposed of the motion for a new trial within 15 days after the date of the verdict. If it were necessary to hold that that provision was in all cases or under all circumstances to be strictly followed, then the whole section would involve the very exemplification of absurdity. So to hold would require it to be held that the question of probation would either have to be considered after a motion for a new trial was determined or not considered at all. Of course, the statute does not contemplate such a situation. The defendant, under the statute, is not only entitled to apply for probation and have that question determined before his motion for a new trial is heard and determined, but is entitled to move for a new trial, if he so chooses, and to have the motion determined, after probation is denied him. Section 1191 prescribes no particular time for disposing of such a motion after probation is denied, and we held in our original opinion, as we now hold, that in that case the court may take any reasonably necessary time for considering and disposing of the motion, and that in this case the time taken for such purpose did not involve an unreasonable delay. Rehearing denied.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

PER CURIAM. In denying the application for a hearing in this court we are not to be understood as holding that the pronouncing of judgment may be postponed beyond the lapse of the time prescribed in section 1191, Penal Code, as amended in 1911. The opinion sufficiently shows that it was not so postponed in this case.

The application for a hearing in this court after decision in the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District is denied.

PEOPLE v. GERMINO. (Cr. 801.)

1. RAPE ⊂=35(4)—TIME OF OFFENSE—VARIANCE.

In prosecution for statutory rape, state having charged an act of April 9th as the one on which it would rely, evidence held to sustain conviction, though prosecutrix almost throughout her testimony referred to the act as occurring on April 11th.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=826—INSTRUCTION—REQUEST—TIME.

It is insufficient, during trial of a case, when the court is ruling on the admissibility of evidence, to request in a general way that the court then instruct the jury on any particular phase of the law.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=828—INSTRUCTION—WRITTEN REQUEST.

If defendant, charged with statutory rape, desired that the jury be instructed, limiting the scope of the testimony as to acts other than the one forming the basis of the charge, he should have submitted to the trial court a written instruction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Louis Germino was convicted of statutory rape, and, from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Harry McKee, of Fresno, and Vincent Surr, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment of conviction of statutory rape, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

During the trial the prosecutrix, without objection, was permitted to testify as to the occurrence of five or six other instances of sexual intercourse between her and the defendant than the one upon which the charge was founded; and the defendant's principal contention upon this appeal is that his rights were substantially prejudiced by reason of the court's refusal to compel the prosecuting officer to elect upon which of the several acts he would rely. The simple answer to this contention is that such officer did make the election required, selecting for that purpose an act occurring on the 9th day of April, 1917.

[1] Granting that, the state having charged the act of that date as the one upon which it would rely for a conviction, it must prove that act, we think the evidence sustains the conviction and that it sufficiently proves the charge as of that date. It is true that almost throughout her testimony the prosecutrix, when detailing the circumstances of this act, referred to it as occurring on the 11th of April; but later and on cross-examination it was made to appear that no act of intercourse between her and the defendant occurred on that date, and that her testimony in fact related to April 9th.

[2, 3] Appellant complains that the court gave no instruction limiting the scope of the testimony as to acts other than the one forming the basis of the charge; but the defendant did not offer one of this character, and, of course, if he desired that the court instruct the jury upon that particular point it was his right and duty to propose such an instruction. It is not sufficient during the trial of a case, and at a time when the court is ruling upon the admissibility of evidence, to request in a general way that the court then instruct the jury upon any particular phase of the law. If he desired that the jury be instructed upon the point in question, he should have submitted to the court a specific written instruction embodying it so that it might be given with the other instructions of the court.

For the reasons given, the rights of the defendant were not prejudicially affected by the matters complained of; and the judgment and order are affirmed.

BARBER ASPHALT PAVING CO. v. ABRAHAMSON et al. (Civ. 2429.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Aug. 28, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 23, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟹414(1)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—LIABILITY OF PROPERTY OWNERS.
Under Vrooman Act, § 20, relating to street improvements, once a street has been accepted, it must thereafter be both repaired and improved by the city, so that subsequently property owners cannot be assessed for constructing therein a new kind of pavement, gutter, or curb.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟹414(1)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT—ACCEPTANCE.
An ordinance whereby a city accepted a roadway was not in contravention of Vrooman Act, § 20, because it excepts therefrom a portion required by law to be kept in repair by a railroad company, when read in connection with Civ. Code, § 498.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟹414(1)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS — ACCEPTANCE—"ROADWAY."
Under Vrooman Act, § 20, relating to street improvements, curb is to be included within the term "roadway," so that acceptance of roadway includes the curbing.
[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Roadway.]

4. EVIDENCE ⟹318(3) — HEARSAY—MAYOR'S VETO—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ACCEPTANCE —CONDITION.
Where a roadway has been accepted by the city under Vrooman Act, § 20, relating to street improvements, the mayor's veto of the ordinance of acceptance and the reasons given therefor are not admissible in a subsequent proceeding to repair such highway, as showing that the street was not in good condition when accepted; such evidence being hearsay.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟹414(1)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—JURISDICTION OF COUNCIL.
Where a city had no authority to lay down at the expense of property owners a new street in place of one accepted under Vrooman Act, § 20, the condition of the street at the time of the adoption of resolution of intention was immaterial to the jurisdiction of the council to order the construction of the new street.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟹568(2)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS — EVIDENCE — JURISDICTION OF COUNCIL.
In a proceeding to enforce an assessment for improving a street which had already been accepted by the city under Vrooman Act, § 20, an offer of testimony held merely to amount to an offer to show the condition of the original street as accepted, and not sufficient to show the lack of jurisdiction in the council to pass the ordinance of acceptance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by the Barber Asphalt Paving Company against Henry Abrahamson and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Snook & Church, of Oakland (J. A. Cooper, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. Mortimer Smith, of Oakland (Chapman & Trefethen, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondents.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. In this case the appellant asserts the validity of the proceedings taken by the officials of the city of Oakland for the improvement of San Pablo avenue, and which were held invalid by the Supreme Court in Barber Asphalt Co. v. Jurgens, 170 Cal. 273, 149 Pac. 560. Most, if not all, of the questions presented in that case and there decided are raised here; the reason given by counsel for appellant for so doing being that new facts developed at the trial of this case, which, regardless of the rules laid down in the Jurgens Case, show the proceedings to have been in fact valid. We think, however, that the record before us does not sustain this contention, although the questions raised in the trial court were presented apparently in somewhat different form than that in which they arose in the decided case.

The proceedings were conducted under the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 160) as it existed before the statute of March 21, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 806), when the resolution of intention to make the improvement now under consideration was adopted by the council. At the trial of this case the plaintiff offered evidence to prove that the contract made and entered into in this proceeding was not for repairs to the street, but was for the construction of an entirely different kind of pavement, curb, and gutter, and bases thereon the contention that the work described in the complaint did not constitute repairing or improving in the sense in which those words were employed in the Vrooman Act (section 20), but was new and original work.

[1] At the time this proceeding was taken, section 20 of that act provided that a street which had been accepted under that section should thereafter be kept in repair and improved by the municipality, the expense thereof to be paid out of a fund to be appropriated by the council for that purpose. The street involved here had been so accepted; and it was held in the Jurgens Case that this proceeding to reimprove the street was invalid, because the street had been previously improved and accepted under section 20. It will be noted that under the terms of this section, once a street has been accepted, it must thereafter be both repaired and improved by the city; from which we think it follows that the city council had no authority in the proceeding giving rise to this action to assess the property owners to pay the cost of improving a street by constructing therein a new kind of pavement, curb, or gutter, any more than it had authority to assess the property for the repair of the street.

[2] Counsel for appellant also contend that the ordinance by which the city council of Oakland accepted the roadway of San Pablo avenue excepted therefrom the portion thereof required by law to be kept in repair by a company having railroad tracks thereon, and that this was in direct contravention of the express provisions of section 20 of the Vrooman Act. But it was held in the Jurgens Case that that section should be read in connection with section 498 of the Civil Code, and that the ordinance was not rendered invalid by the inclusion therein of the exception pointed out.

[3] Counsel also contend that this last-mentioned ordinance was invalid for the further reason that it did not, as they claim, accept the whole of the street, including the curbing. It is true that the ordinance did not specifically include curbing; but the point was presented in the Jurgens Case, and it was there held that section 20 of the Vrooman Act was drawn with an intention of specifying curbing as a part of the roadway, and that curbing, therefore, for the purposes of the act, is included within the definition of the term "roadway," and that acceptance of a roadway in compliance with that section includes the curbing. All these points, and some others argued by counsel, were decided advisedly by the Supreme Court in the Jurgens Case, and there is nothing in the case at bar which presents the legal questions in any different light than that in which they appeared to the Supreme Court in that case.

[4] Counsel, however, offered certain evidence, the exclusion of which by the trial court is here specified as error. For example, to show that the street was not in good condition throughout, as section 20 of the Vrooman Act provided it must be before it could be accepted, counsel offered the mayor's veto of the ordinance of acceptance, in which that official gave his reasons for his veto, and from which it appears that in his opinion the street as improved did not come up to that degree of durability which business streets should possess before being finally accepted. Manifestly the mayor's reasons for vetoing this ordinance are not evidence in this case of the condition of the street at the time when the veto was presented. The mayor was not on the witness stand; he could not be subjected to cross-examination upon the veto; and while the veto itself, as a part of the proceedings, if material, could have been received in evidence without error, nevertheless the statements therein made by the mayor as to his reasons for such action were not evidence in this action of the facts stated in the veto. They might be correct, and they might be untrue. They were hearsay in this case.

In order to prove the condition of San Pablo avenue at the time the improvement was ordered under the contract and proceedings here involved, Frank K. Mott, who was mayor of the city of Oakland at the time these proceedings were instituted, was called by the plaintiff and asked to describe the condition of San Pablo avenue at the point of the improvement on March 31, 1907, the date of the adoption of the resolution of intention upon which these proceedings were based. Counsel also, in connection with this evidence, offered to show the specific condition of San Pablo avenue at that time, namely, that the street had been improved prior to that time with redwood curbs and macadam pavement; that it had not been paved with asphalt, the kind of pavement contemplated by this proceeding; that no concrete curbs nor rock gutters had been constructed thereon—all for the purpose of showing that at the time of the adoption of the resolution of intention, and at the time the contract was entered into for this work, the work did not constitute repairs or improvement, as contemplated by the provisions of section 20 of the Vrooman Act, but that it consisted of an entirely new improvement, with an entirely different character of curbs, gutters, and pavement than that which existed upon the street at the time the resolution of intention was adopted.

[5] As we have seen, it must be held that, because the street had been improved and accepted under this section of the Vrooman Act as it existed at the time of the initiation of this proceeding, the city had no authority to lay down at the expense of the property owners a new street, any more than it had authority to repair the old street by patching it up. The condition of the street at the time of the adoption of the resolution of intention was therefore immaterial to the jurisdiction of the council to order the construction of a new roadway thereon.

In order to show the actual condition of San Pablo avenue at the time of the adoption of the Ordinance No. 1071 by which it was accepted, the plaintiff called J. Ross Morgan and asked him to describe the condition of the avenue at that time. Presumably this offer, although not specific, was for the purpose of showing that the street was either not in good condition throughout, or that some other jurisdictional prerequisite to the adoption of the accepting ordinance was lacking. In connection with this offer, and in order to understand it, the proceedings upon the examination of J. W. Tompkins, another witness called immediately succeeding the sustaining by the court of an objection to the evidence offered by the witness Morgan, must be taken into consideration. Tompkins was the city marshal, superintendent of streets, and tax collector at the time of the acceptance of the street. He was asked if he knew the condition of San Pablo avenue at the point of the improvement at the time the accepting ordinance was adopted. This question was objected to, and the court sustained the objection. Counsel for plaintiff then offered the same evidence which he had sought to introduce by Mayor Mott and Mr. Morgan. Thereupon the following proceedings took place:

The Court: You only asked two or three questions of Mr. Morgan.

Mr. White: I will ask another one.

The Court: This question—you have simply fixed knowledge. Now, go ahead from that. That is all you have fixed.

Mr. White: We offer to show by this witness in the first place the condition of San Pablo avenue on the 4th of February, 1889, to the effect that it had been constructed with redwood curbs, and that it had only been partially or very poorly macadamized through a portion of the roadway.

The Court: In other words, you want to impeach the act of the council in accepting it?

Mr. White: Not necessarily impeach the act of the council, but to show that they had no jurisdiction in doing the things they attempted to do, and also to show that the roadway was improved with an entirely different kind and character of curb, gutters, and pavement from the kind of curb, gutters, and pavement that was required under this contract with the Barber Asphalt Paving Company in 1907. And in view of that offer I now ask Mr. Tompkins what was the condition of the roadway in San Pablo avenue between Twentieth and Thirty-Sixth streets on February 4, 1889?

Mr. Smith: I object to that as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

The Court: The objection may be sustained. (To which ruling the plaintiff then and there excepted.)

Mr. Cooper: The court holds the ruling that no evidence is admissible, no matter what we offer, to show that the city council, at the time they passed the ordinance accepting San Pablo avenue, did not have jurisdiction, or that the fact did not exist which they recited in the ordinance did exist. Your honor holds that we cannot impeach that by parol testimony?

The Court: That is my view of it, Judge, offhand. You cannot show that as an impeaching proposition; their act, so far as that is concerned, so far as this case is concerned, was binding; and it is beyond attack at this late day in a subsequent action, to attack it by parol testimony.

Mr. Cooper: I am not questioning your honor's view, excepting I want to know.

The Court: That is my view of it.

[6] Construing the offer of evidence here in connection with the testimony of Tompkins as the broadest offer which counsel made—and we cannot, in fairness to the trial judge and the parties defendant in this case, otherwise construe it—the trial court was right in sustaining the objection, because under the rule of the Jurgens Case this evidence as offered was not sufficient to "impeach" the accepting ordinance. All that was offered was to show that the roadway was improved with a different kind of curb, gutter, and pavement from that contemplated in the resolution of intention in this case. There was no specific thing in the offer which would have shown a lack of jurisdiction in the council to pass the accepting ordinance, the point at which the evidence was aimed. We cannot broaden counsel's offer. The trial court had the right to assume that counsel was making his statement as inclusive and specific as the facts of his case justified.

It is not necessary, however, to go to the extent of holding that no circumstance could have been shown by parol, if it had existed, which would have shown want of jurisdiction to accept the street. It is sufficient that the offer, as made, was not of facts which, if true, would have done so. As the offer in the case of the witnesses Mott and Morgan was quite general, and as the offer as to the witness Tompkins was so closely connected with it and to the same point, we think that the trial court must have assumed that the plaintiff had no evidence to offer stronger than that sought from the latter witness, and cannot be said to have erred in its ruling on this point.

There is nothing in the case of Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Bennett (Sup.) 171 Pac. 304, at variance with the foregoing views. The remainder of the briefs and argument of counsel is taken up with objections made by respondent's attorneys to the validity of the proceeding involved herein; and, in view of the disposition of the other points presented, the decision of those questions becomes unnecessary.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; ZOOK, Judge pro tem.

FAIRBAIRN v. AMERICAN RIVER ELECTRIC CO. (Sac. 2522.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 7, 1918. Rehearing Denied Nov. 4, 1918.)

1. ELECTRICITY ⟸14(2) — TRANSMISSION OF CURRENT—CARE REQUIRED.

Companies engaged in carrying electricity along the public highway must exercise such care as a careful and prudent person, having in view the dangers to be avoided and likelihood of injury, would exercise under the circumstances, in placing their wires so as not to interfere with traffic.

2. ELECTRICITY ⟸14(2) — TRANSMISSION OF CURRENT—HEIGHT OF WIRES.

An electric company, carrying a high tension wire strung over a public highway, must place it high enough to allow the passage of hay-stacking derricks underneath, where such derricks are properly and frequently moved over the highways in the district.

3. ELECTRICITY ⟸13 — TRANSMISSION OF CURRENT—DEFENSES.

That telephone and high power wires are strung along highways at a less height than those of an electric company does not constitute protection to such company in the case of injury occurring by coming in contact with its wires.

4. ELECTRICITY ⟸19(12) — PERSONAL INJURY—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where a person was injured by receiving a high power electric current through a hay-stacking derrick, brought into close proximity to electric wires from which the current arcked to the derrick, the question of contributory negligence was for the jury.

5. ELECTRICITY ⟸19(13) — PERSONAL INJURY—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injuries from shock from a high power wire coming into proximity with a derrick boom moved across a highway, it was not error to modify instruction that defendant had a right to maintain a pole line along a road by adding to it that this was true if it exercised a high degree of care, as had been explained in other instructions.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by John Fairbairn by J. F. Fairbairn, guardian ad litem, against the American River Electric Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and a denial of a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 170 Cal. 115, 148 Pac. 788.

L. A. Redman and Chickering & Gregory, all of San Francisco, Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, and Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for appellant. Stanley Moore, of San Francisco, and Gibson & Woolner, of Oakland, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. In this action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have occurred through the negligence of the defendant, plaintiff had a verdict and judgment for $25,000 and from that judgment and an order denying a new trial the defendant appeals.

The defendant in 1906 constructed a power line along the public highways through the county of Sacramento, from its power plant in the mountains near Placerville to the city of Stockton, for the purpose of distributing electricity for public use, and in running along the side of the Middle Jackson road in Sacramento county, in the vicinity of what is known as Walsh station, the wires of the defendant crossed a lane connecting the farm of a Mr. Humphrey with the said Middle Jackson road at a height of 27 feet 8¾ inches above the level of the ground. On July 7, 1910, plaintiff, with his father and brother and the hired man, started to haul a hay-stacking derrick, known as the Schmeiser derrick, from the farm of Mr. Humphrey along the lane to the Middle Jackson road. This derrick measured from the ground to the top of its boom 30 feet 4 inches, and was of the stationary type; that is, the boom could not be lowered or taken down for transportation—it had to be moved with the boom erect. A team was hitched to the derrick, and the party proceeded down the lane to the Middle Jackson road. When they were about to pass into the road they looked at the wires which crossed the lane along its side to see whether the derrick would pass freely under them, and reached the conclusion that the top of the boom was a little lower than the power wires. It was suggested, however, by one of the parties moving it, that if the hind wheel of the derrick truck was removed this would lower the boom about 2 feet and allow free passage under the wires. The wheel was accordingly removed, and the derrick moved forward a couple of feet by hand; the horses having been unhitched from it. When so moved forward, but before it was moved under the wires, plaintiff with his father went to the other side of the Middle Jackson road to be assured whether the boom, now dropped by the removal of the wheel, would clear the wires, and, both being of the opinion that it would, they with the others proceeded to run the derrick forward, pulling on an iron cable attached to the boom, so as to swing it clear under the wires. As the boom was being pulled under the first wire (there were three), and without actual contact with any of them, the electricity arcked through the intervening space and passed down the boom cable, which the plaintiff had hold of, into his body, inflicting injuries which necessitated the amputation of his left arm and both legs below the knees.

The claim of the plaintiff in the action was that his injuries were occasioned through the negligence of the defendant in stringing its wires along the highway so low as to interfere with the free passage of the derrick under them. In its answer defendant denied any negligence on its part, and alleged that the injuries of the plaintiff were caused through his own negligence. This is the second time this case is here on appeal. It first came here for consideration in 1915, on an appeal by defendant from a verdict and judgment then also entered against it for $25,000, and the judgment was reversed, on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove any negligence on the part of the defendant in the construction, maintenance, and operation of its power line. Fairbairn v. American River Electric Co., 170 Cal. 115, 148 Pac. 788. We shall refer to this ground for reversal more particularly later.

[1] The law with reference to companies engaged in carrying electricity along the public highway is well settled, and is set forth at considerable length in the opinion on the former appeal. For present purposes we may content ourselves with stating the general rule on the subject as there declared, which is that:

"Owing to the highly destructive power of electricity when carried in quantities sufficient for power purposes, and to the fact that it is not visible to the eye or apparent to the other senses, a person or company maintaining an electric power transmission line along, or over a public or private road, is required to exercise a high degree of care in placing the wires, so as not to interfere with traffic on the ordinary highway, and so as to avoid contact with and injury to any person or object which may reasonably be expected to pass under the wires. * * * The standard to be attained is that of ordinary and reasonable care, and this means such care as a reasonably careful and prudent person, having in view the dangers to be avoided and the likelihood of injury therefrom, would exercise, under the circumstances, in order to prevent injury. Where death may be caused by an agency lawfully in use, ordinary care requires that every means known, or that with reasonable inquiry would be known, must be used to prevent it."

The claim of plaintiff in this action is that defendant, in stringing its wires along the Middle Jackson road and across the Humphrey lane, violated this rule; that it was bound to take notice of farming conditions and customs in the country through which its wires were being placed, and to provide against interfering with them; that at the time defendant constructed its power line there were very many derricks exceeding in height 27 feet 8¾ inches, the height at which the power lines of defendant were strung, used upon farms in stacking and bailing hay and threshing, which every season were being conveyed over the highways and the lanes or roads leading therefrom and upon the farms about for use thereon; that it was the duty of the defendant to ascertain this fact, and to have erected its wires high enough so as to permit free and safe passage of said derricks under them and to prevent danger. There can be no question about the soundness of this contention of plaintiff, and the principal point arising on this appeal is whether the evidence shows a use, upon farms in the locality in which the wires of defendant were strung and the accident happened of derricks exceeding in height the height of its wires, and the custom of moving them at certain seasons along and over the highways and lanes of the county and from farm to farm. The reversal on the former appeal was ordered because the evidence then given on the part of plaintiffs was not deemed sufficient to prove this fact. On the former trial plaintiff appears to have limited himself to proving the use only in the vicinity of Walsh station of the Schmeiser derrick of the stationary pattern similar to the one he was moving when the accident happened, and it further appeared from the evidence that only two such had been sold in the county and that the style had gone out of manufacture, and while it was also proven that homemade stationary derricks were in use at the time the power line was constructed, it was not shown that they were as high as the wires of the defendant. On the second trial, however, plaintiff introduced evidence showing the use quite extensively in Sacramento county when the power line of the defendant was constructed of both patented and homemade derricks 28 feet and over in height which were used in stacking and baling hay and threshing, and their movement over the highways and over the lanes and roads to and from farms. It is, of course, of no moment what the style of derricks or stackers may have been—whether the Schmeiser or other style or homemade derricks—it is enough to have required defendant to place its wires for the passage under of derricks of whatever make at a greater height than that at which they were strung, if derricks taller than the height of said wires were usually used in the county at the time its power line was constructed, and were usually moved over and across the highways, roads, and lanes of the county.

On this trial it was shown by witnesses produced on behalf of plaintiff that there were in use prior to 1906, when the power line of defendant was constructed, in the region where the accident in question happened, stacking derricks of from 28 to 30 feet in height. The two main types of these derricks were the Jackson Eclipse, and later the Schmeiser derricks, and there were also homemade derricks. The testimony of the witnesses referred to is substantially as follows:

L. Carrington, a salesman for the Sacramento branch of Baker & Hamilton from 1896 to 1908, testified that their firm sold the Jackson Eclipse haystacker during that period throughout the Sacramento valley, and that it was one of the most common stackers in use. He identified this stacker in a catalogue of Baker & Hamilton issued in 1902, which showed that its uprights above the axle of the truck on which they rested were 28 feet 8 inches in height. G. W. Hausman, a field man, employed by the same branch of Baker & Hamilton from March, 1901, to March, 1914, testified that in the year 1906, when the power line of defendant was constructed, the Jackson Eclipse stacker was the most common stacker in use in Sacramento county; that this stacker was drawn by horses and moved upright; and that he had never seen one taken down. F. S. Hoffman, an employé of the Byron Jackson Machine Works, the original manufacturer of this type of derricks, also testified that when these stackers were moved from place to place they remained upright.

H. D. Millard, a retired farmer, who had been engaged in farming for many years in that portion of the county of Sacramento near Walsh station, testified that he had used all kinds of stackers; that he used the Jackson stackers on farms where he did threshing in the neighborhood of where the injury occurred as much as 30 years ago; that he also owned a Cooper derrick 31½ feet high, and that he had been accustomed to move such stackers and derricks from place to place along nearly every road in the county in that vicinity, and so used them up to 1908. A. Joseph, a farmer in the Lisbon district of Yolo county, testified that he bought and used a Jackson Eclipse stacker as early as 1903; that he was accustomed to transport it from place to place along the county roads; that he owned two places about 30 miles from where the accident in question occurred, and was accustomed to haul his stacker from one of his ranches to the other along the public highways. O. A. King, a foreman of a ranch near Freeport, in Sacramento county, testified that when he went into the employ of the owners of the ranch in 1910 he found one of the Jackson stackers then in use upon the property, and that it had been in use ever since. George D. Colby, a farmer residing in the vicinity of Clarksburg, Yolo county, testified that he had been using a Jackson stacker since 1902, and used the same on his own place and on places of three or four of his neighbors, and was accustomed in the early years to haul it along the public roads until the telephone wires were strung so low as to prevent him from getting the stacker upon the highways.

M. Madsen, a ranch foreman in Reclamation District 307, in the same region, testified that he used both the Jackson Eclipse and Schmeiser haystackers, and was accustomed to transporting them along or across the public roads under the transmission wires of the Great Western Power Company, which in that region were 35 feet above the highway. J. A. Branscombe, a farmer residing near Freeport for 23 years, and who had previously resided and been engaged in farming in the vicinity of Walsh station, testified that he frequently for years prior to 1906 hauled homemade derricks along the public roads, and that he had also seen the Jackson Eclipse stackers being moved along the highways in that region. Harry Sherwood testified that he had resided at Walsh station for about 24 years; that during the years prior to 1906 that region was more given to hay growing than at present, and that during that period he had seen Jackson stackers and other types of stackers being moved from place to place along the public roads. Ed. Scholfield, whose business was ranching in the vicinity of Walsh station, where he had resided all his life, testified that he had used homemade stackers 25 to 26 feet in height resting on wagons, and had driven along the county roads with these stackers in a stationary and upright position, and that he had seen threshing stationary derricks 2 feet higher—27 to 29—going along the highways. William Wason, who was engaged in farming for about 30 years in the vicinity of Florin, testified that he had hauled derricks built upon wagons along the public roads, which derricks ranged from 20 to 30 feet in height, and that he had seen a dozen or more of the Jackson stackers used in his neighborhood for the stacking of hay.

P. G. Schmeiser testified that he began the manufacturing of the derricks which bore his name in 1904 and 1905 in that region, and that his derricks were approximately 30 feet high, and that prior to his connection with that particular derrick similar derricks had been manufactured by Brown & Donnewith at Davis, from whom he had taken the manufacturing over, and that he had seen derricks in use in that part of the country that he had not sold. Ed. Moranini testified that a stiff boom Schmeiser derrick had been on the Cowell ranch at Perkins, about 3½ miles from the Humphrey place, since 1904, and that he had used it there in 1905, and had driven it back and forth along the highway and under the high power wires of the Great Western Power Company.

[2] All of the testimony showed that the movement of derricks exceeding in height that at which the wires were strung along the highway and across the Humphrey lane was not an infrequent or uncommon occurrence. It was not, it is true, as ordinary and usual a use of the highways as that of wagons, automobiles, and other vehicles; but in the haying and threshing season, when their use was called for, these derricks are shown to have been quite properly and frequently conveyed over the highways, a fact which it was the duty of the defendant to have ascertained before stringing its wires, so as to make provision for the free passage of these derricks under them.

[3] It is in evidence that many telephone and high power wires like those of defendant were strung along the highways at heights the same and even lower than the wires of defendant; but this is of no consequence, and can afford no protection to the defendant in its invasion of the right of those who were entitled to a safe and unobstructed ordinary use of the highways. It only increased the danger and liability to injury of those who had a right to an unobstructed passage under them.

[4] As the evidence justified the verdict we proceed now to a consideration of other points. It is claimed by defendant that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law. We cannot agree with this claim. This is not a case where one had knowledge that electricity would injure and kill if he placed himself in actual contact with it, and who nevertheless carelessly and recklessly does so. Plaintiff at the time of the accident was only 18 years of age, and while he had a general knowledge that electricity was dangerous if one touched the wires over which it was being conducted, he testified that he did not know that the wires of the defendant were high power transmission wires, and was entirely ignorant of the propensity of electricity of that high power, when some conducting material is brought into close proximity to it, though not in actual contact, to arc or leap over the intervening space. It does not appear that any of the parties engaged in moving the derrick were aware of the propensity of electricity to so leap or spark over. Plaintiff and these others thought there was entire safety if the derrick boom should be brought under the wires without coming into actual contact with them, no matter how near to the wires it might otherwise be. In this belief with respect to electricity they took the precaution by actual observation to ascertain whether the boom could be brought under the wires without contact with them, and, being of opinion that it could, made the effort which resulted so disastrously to the plaintiff.

The claim of the defendant was that in fact no precautions were taken to ascertain whether the boom could be brought under the wires or not, and that in attempting it there was an actual contact with the wires, or, if not, there was no precaution taken to keep the boom as far from the wires as possible. On the other hand, there was very substantial evidence that there was no contact between the boom and the wires, and that notwithstanding the ignorance on the part of all engaged in moving the derrick that electricity might by arcking connect with the boom, though not in actual contact with it, they nevertheless used every effort to keep the boom as far from the wires as possible. Under these circumstances it could not be said as matter of law that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. It was a question of fact for the jury, taking into consideration the youth of the plaintiff, his knowledge or ignorance of electricity and its propensities, and the acts which it is claimed were performed in attempting to get the derrick under the wires, to say whether the plaintiff had exercised ordinary care in doing so or was guilty of contributory negligence.

[5] Defendant complains of the refusal of the court to give several instructions asked by it, and of the giving of one with a modification. An inspection of the record shows that the court instructed the jury quite fully as to all matters of law necessary for their enlightenment and instruction in determining the rights of the parties to the action. No complaint is made by it as to any of these instructions. The instructions tendered by defendant and refused by the court were in our judgment proper or pertinent to the case or its consideration by the jury. The instruction that was modified as presented by defendant stated that the defendant had a right to maintain its pole line along the Middle Jackson road. This was not questioned in the case. The modification complained of was in the court adding to it, in effect, that this was true, provided the defendant exercised a high degree of care in placing its pole line, as had been fully explained to them by other instructions. No reasonable exception can be taken to this modification. It is unnecessary to refer particularly to the other three instructions, the refusal to give which is assigned as error. Two of them were properly refused, as going to the weight of evidence, and in so far as any of them contained any legal principles the jury were fully informed as to them by instructions given in the general charge.

Several rulings of the court respecting evidence are assigned as error, but a careful examination satisfies us they have no merit; so we do not discuss them.

Having considered all the points made for a reversal, and finding no reason why the judgment and order should be disturbed, they are both affirmed.

NICKEL et al. v. STATE et al. (S. F. 8537.)

1. QUIETING TITLE ⟸34(1)—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit to quiet title, an allegation of title in plaintiffs, and that defendant's claim is without right, is ordinarily sufficient to require an answer by defendant setting up its title to the property in question.

2. TAXATION ⟸861 — INHERITANCE TAXES — STATUTES.

The inheritance tax law in force at the time of a transfer of corporate shares is controlling as to whether or not there is a tax upon the transfer and the amount thereof.

3. TAXATION ⟸879(2)—INHERITANCE TAXES —PLEADING AND PROOF.

To establish the liability for a tax on transfer of corporate shares, under the Inheritance Tax Law of 1911 the state must allege and prove that the consideration for the transfer was not valuable and adequate.

4. TAXATION ⟸905(1) — TRANSFER TAXES — REMEDY AGAINST ENFORCEMENT—PLEADING.

In a suit to quiet title as against a lien claimed by the state, under the Inheritance Tax Law of 1911, on a transfer of corporate shares, where the conveyance recites a consideration of $10 and other good and valuable considerations, an allegation that the claim of the state is without right sufficiently alleges a valuable and adequate consideration.

5. PLEADING ⟸67—NEGATIVING DEFENSES—NECESSITY.

A pleader need not negative defenses.

6. TAXATION ⟸905(1) — TRANSFER TAXES — REMEDY AGAINST ENFORCEMENT — QUESTIONS OF FACT.

In a suit to quiet title as against claim of state to a lien, under Inheritance Tax Law of 1911, upon a conveyance of corporate shares, the question of whether the transfer was made in contemplation of death is one for the jury.

7. TAXATION ⟸879(2)—INHERITANCE TAXES —TRANSFER OF STOCK—CONSIDERATION.

A conveyance of shares of corporation stock made in contemplation of death is not taxable under the Inheritance Tax Law of 1911, if made for a valuable and adequate consideration.

8. TAXATION ⟸905(1) — INHERITANCE TAX — REMEDY AGAINST ENFORCEMENT—TENDER.

In a suit to quiet title as against a lien by the state for inheritance taxes on transfer of corporation stock, plaintiff need not pay or tender the tax.

9. COURTS ⟸50 — DEPARTMENTS — SUPERIOR COURT.

A suit to quiet title as against the state's claim of lien for taxes under the Inheritance Tax Law of 1911 is properly brought in the superior court, notwithstanding that proceedings in the estate are pending in one of its departments.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Suit by Nellie Miller Nickel and another, as trustees, and others, against the State of California and others. Judgment for defendants on demurrer, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with instructions.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco (Delger Trowbridge, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Charles M. Fickert, Dist. Atty., of San Francisco, Robert A. Waring, Inheritance Tax Atty., of Sacramento, and William A. Sullivan, Asst. Inheritance Tax Atty., and Hartley F. Peart, Special Counsel for State Controller, both of San Francisco, for the State.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal brought by the plaintiffs from judgment against them on demurrer. As authorized by section 18b, Statutes 1913, p. 1066, they brought suit against the state to quiet title as against the claims of the state to a lien for an inheritance tax upon certain shares of stock transferred to them by a trust agreement dated April 17, 1913, and recorded October 20, 1916. The complaint alleges that the plaintiffs were grantees or beneficiaries of a transfer made by Henry Miller to them of 119,839.75 shares of stock in the Miller & Lux Company, a corporation; that on the 14th day of October, 1916, Miller died, leaving estate in the city and county of San Francisco; that he was a resident thereof at the time of his death; and that his estate had been probated in the superior court thereof. It is alleged that the plaintiffs were the owners and holders of said stock; that the state was asserting a right to an inheritance tax thereon under and by virtue of the laws of 1911, 1913, and 1915; that each and every of these claims was without merit; and that the state had no interest in and to the stock in question and no lien thereon; and prayed that plaintiffs' title thereto be quieted. Plaintiffs attached as an exhibit to the complaint the conveyance under which they claim title. The state demurred upon the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the court had no jurisdiction of the case.

[1] The allegation of title on the part of plaintiffs, and that the defendant's claim to the property was without right, would ordinarily be sufficient to require an answer on the part of the defendant setting up its title in and to the property in question. The state claims, however, that, upon the facts alleged in the complaint and the terms of the conveyance under which plaintiffs claim, the complaint affirmatively shows that the state is entitled to an inheritance tax upon the property in question.

[2-5] The law in force at the time of the transfer as alleged was the inheritance tax law of 1911, and that statute controls in determining whether or not there is a tax upon the transfer and the amount thereof. Hunt v. Wicht, 174 Cal. 205, 162 Pac. 639, L. R. A. 1917C, 961; Estate of Felton, 169 Pac. 392; Estate of Gurnsey, 170 Pac. 402. The inheritance tax law of 1911 provides that in order that a transfer should be taxable it must not only be made in "contemplation of death," but also without "a valuable and adequate consideration therefor." Stats. 1911, p. 713, § 1, subd. 3. In order to establish the liability for a tax, it is essential that the state should allege and prove that the consideration for such a transfer was not "valuable and adequate." McDougald v. Boyd, 172 Cal. 753, 159 Pac. 168. The conveyance in question contains a recital that the transfer is made "in consideration of ten dollars and other good and valuable considerations." Respondent claims that, in default of an allegation to the contrary, it must be presumed that "the consideration was not valuable and adequate." But the allegation that the claim of the state is "without right" is in effect an allegation that there was "a valuable and adequate consideration" for the transfer. The consideration recited in the conveyance includes "other good and valuable considerations" not specifically mentioned, and does not negative the claim that the conveyance was for a valuable and adequate consideration. The pleader is not required to negative a defense. Jaffe v. Lilienthal, 86 Cal. 91, 24 Pac. 835; Jacobson v. Oakland, etc., Co., 161 Cal. 432, 119 Pac. 653, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1194; Woodroof v. Howes, 88 Cal. 184, 194, 26 Pac. 111. Hence the complaint is not defeated by reason of failure to affirmatively allege the existence of "a valuable and adequate consideration."

[6, 7] Upon the question of whether or not the complaint by inference and presumption affirmatively shows that the transfer was made "in contemplation of death," it is sufficient to say that it is conceded by both parties that ordinarily the question of whether or not a gift is made "in contemplation of death," and for that reason liable to tax, is one of fact to be determined by the trial court from the nature and character of the instrument of conveyance and from all the circumstances surrounding its execution, and, even if we should hold from the face of the instrument in question that it conclusively appears that the transfer was made "in contemplation of death," if it was made for a "valuable and adequate consideration," the transfer would not be taxable under the law of 1911. McDougald v. Boyd, supra.

[8] Defendant claims that the demurrer should have been sustained for the reason that the plaintiff has failed to pay or tender any tax, citing Trippet v. State, 149 Cal. 530, 86 Pac. 1084, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1210. That was an action to quiet title against a valid tax, on the ground that the repeal of the law providing for its collection, in effect, defeated the accrued and still existing right of the state to the tax. It was properly held there that under the circumstances the plaintiff could not invoke the assistance of a court of equity to remove the lien for the tax, without paying or offering to pay the same. In the instant case the plaintiff's claim is that the state has no right to a tax and no lien therefor. It is not necessary in such a case to tender anything. The complaint therefore states a cause of action.

[9] Jurisdiction: The statute under which the action is brought (section 15) determines what superior court shall have jurisdiction thereof. The respondent contends that, inasmuch as the proceedings in the estate are pending in one of the departments of that court in probate, this fact, under the law, deprives the other departments of that superior court of jurisdiction. The statute expressly places the jurisdiction in the superior court of the county in which the estate is being administered, namely, the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, in the instant case. This action is separate and distinct from the probate proceeding and is in the same court, there being no probate court and no distinction in law between the several departments of the superior court. The action was therefore brought in the proper court. If it shall be determined in this action that the estate is subject to an inheritance tax, it is not necessary to fix the amount of the tax in the judgment; but it may be fixed in the manner and form provided by law in the probate proceedings. The purpose of this action is, not to have the tax fixed, but to have it adjudged that no lien therefor exists upon the property. If the state, as alleged, claims that the property is liable for an inheritance tax, the necessary facts to establish that claim should be alleged in the answer.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and allow the defendant to answer the complaint.

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 4, 1918.)

CRIMINAL LAW ⇐1192 — APPLICATION FOR SUSPENDED SENTENCE—TIME FOR MAKING.

After judgment of conviction has been affirmed on appeal, the trial court has no power, under Pen. Code, § 1203, to suspend execution of sentence, since its power to suspend under such section expires, in view of section 1191, with pronouncement of judgment followed or accompanied by no order of suspension, and does not attach anew after affirmance on appeal in view of sections 1263 and 1265.

Richards, Judge pro tem., and Lorigan, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Application by Will M. Beggs for a writ of mandate against the Superior Court of Santa Clara County and J. R. Welch, Judge thereof. Petition for peremptory writ denied, and alternative writ dismissed.

A. H. Jarman and R. P. Henshall, both of San Francisco, and R. C. McComish and James P. Sex, both of San Jose, for petitioner. Arthur M. Free and C. C. Coolidge, both of San Jose, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. An alternative writ of mandate was issued to the superior court upon application of petitioner, who had made a request to the superior court for the suspension of the execution of sentence; such request having been denied upon the ground of lack of jurisdiction in that court to entertain it.

The sole question before this court relates to the power of the superior court to act upon a petition for suspension of sentence pronounced upon a convicted person after affirmance of the judgment of conviction upon appeal.

Petitioner was convicted of the crime of extortion. Upon appeal the judgment was affirmed. Upon the going down of the remittitur he made application, under section 1203 of the Penal Code, for suspension of the execution of the sentence, and his counsel here contend that under the terms of that section the superior court has jurisdiction to determine, upon the merits, whether or not sentence shall be suspended at any time between the conviction of a defendant and his surrender by the sheriff to the warden of the penitentiary in which the commitment as originally made directed his imprisonment.

Section 1203 of the Penal Code, by reason of which, as petitioner asserts, he is entitled to the relief for which he prays, was traced in its historical development by the learned judge of the superior court to whom application for suspension of judgment was made. He pointed out the following facts: As originally enacted in 1872, the section provided that a court in its discretion could consider, before pronouncing judgment, any facts or circumstances in aggravation or mitigation of the punishment about to be imposed. As amended in 1903, the law empowered the court to suspend the imposing of sentence where the punishment was imprisonment alone and to suspend execution of the sentence of imprisonment and to place the defendant on probation, to the end that he might earn the money with which to pay his fine where the punishment for the offense was both fine and imprisonment. By the amendment of 1911, the court was authorized in any case not only to suspend sentence but to suspend the execution of sentence. But the section does not confer an unrestrained and unlimited power upon the trial court. It deals with and provides machinery for probation of a defendant where the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, decides to suspend the imposing or the execution of sentence. The learned judge of the superior court upon consideration of the history and development of this part of the law therefore correctly concluded that the section under analysis is one dealing with the subject of probation; that it is limited accordingly by any other provision relating to the time in which, after conviction, a defendant may seek probation; and that section 1191 of the Penal Code contains such a limitation. Section 1191, so far as pertinent to this question, is as follows:

"After a plea or verdict of guilty, or after a verdict against the defendant on a plea of former conviction or acquittal, or once in jeopardy, the court must appoint a time for pronouncing judgment, which must not be less than two, nor more than five days after the verdict or plea of guilty; provided, however, that the court may extend the time not more than ten days for the purpose of hearing or determining any motion for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment; and provided, further, that the court may extend the time not more than twenty days in any case where the question of probation is considered in accordance with section twelve hundred and three of this code; provided, however, that upon the request of the defendant such time may be further extended not more than ninety days additional."

It is clear from the foregoing that probation is a subject which must be considered during the brief period after conviction, which is limited by the section from which the above quotation is taken, and that the court's power to suspend the execution of sentence under section 1203 of the Penal Code expires with the pronouncing of a judgment followed or accompanied by no order of suspension. It is to be noted that each of these two sections opens with the phrase "after a plea or verdict of guilty." In the earlier section this expression, undoubtedly, refers to the time before judgment, and in the latter the same words in our opinion indicate the same period.

That the authority of the court under said section 1203 does not attach anew to the judgment after affirmance thereof on appeal is evident from the language of sections 1263 and 1265 of the Penal Code which are mandatory in their terms. The former provides that, "If a judgment against the defendant is affirmed, the original judgment must be enforced," and the latter is as follows:

"After the certificate of the judgment has been remitted to the court below, the appellate court has no further jurisdiction of the appeal or of the proceedings thereon, and all orders necessary to carry the judgment into effect must be made by the court to which the certificate is remitted."

It is clear, from a reading of these provisions, that after a judgment of conviction in a criminal case has been affirmed by an appellate tribunal judicial power to alter or suspend it has ceased.

The petition for a peremptory writ of mandate is denied, and the alternative writ is dismissed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

WILBUR, J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment on the ground that the express provisions of section 1263, Penal Code, require, in the event of an affirmance, that "the original judgment be enforced." The judgment required that the petitioner be imprisoned in the state's prison. The purpose of suspending the execution and granting probation would be to secure the reform of the petitioner, and the consequent dismissal of the charge against him. Section 1203, sub. 5. In that event he would never have the judgment enforced against him.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. I dissent. I cannot agree with the conclusion arrived at by Mr. Justice MELVIN, that proceedings for probation must be initiated by or on behalf of the convicted person before the time of pronouncing judgment and must be acted upon by the trial court prior to or at the time of pronouncing such judgment; and that its jurisdiction to extend the merciful intent and provisions of section 1203 of the Penal Code to a defendant ceases at the time such judgment is pronounced. Section 1203 does not expressly so declare. The opening paragraph of said section empowers the trial court "of its own motion," and at any time after plea or verdict of guilty so long as it retains jurisdiction of the case and whenever there are circumstances in mitigation of the punishment either by the report of the probation officer or otherwise which show that the ends of justice would be subserved thereby, to place the defendant upon probation. The foregoing is the plain intent of this section of the Penal Code as expressed in its opening paragraph, and this intent should be given effect in harmony with the beneficent purpose for which the probation law was enacted, unless this intent and the time of its operation is limited either by the succeeding clauses of the section itself or by other and controlling provisions of the Penal Code. That it is not limited by the succeeding clauses of the section, but, on the contrary, is enlarged and expanded so as to be expressly and definitely extended to a period subsequent to the pronouncement of judgment, is made plain by what follows in the section itself, and by the history of its amendment so as to give expression to this enlarged intent. The second subdivision of the section begins with the statement that "the court, judge, or justice thereof may suspend the imposing" or the execution of sentence, etc.; and continues that "in case of such suspension of imposition or execution of sentence the court shall place such person on probation," etc.; and further provides that, "where the maximum possible term of such sentence is less than two years, then such period of suspension of imposition or execution of sentence may continue for not over two years," but that where the offense consists in a violation of certain other sections of the Penal Code "such suspension of imposition or execution of sentence may in the discretion of the court continue for not over five years." The phrase in the above-quoted portion of this section, "or execution of sentence," as the section read prior to its amendment in 1911, was limited to cases where the punishment was both fine and imprisonment, the reason being to give a defendant the opportunity, when occasion afforded, to work out his fine; but in the year 1911 the Legislature broadened this provision of the section so as to give it application to every case wherein the discretion of the court to grant probation might be exercised. The obvious reason for this enlargement of the power of the trial court after the pronouncement of judgment in every case to suspend "the execution of sentence" was to enable it to act in granting probation in every case whenever it appeared that "the ends of justice should be subserved thereby," so long as it retained jurisdiction over the case. The succeeding subdivisions of the section in question further disclose and illustrate this intent; subdivision 3 thereof, under the title "Rearrest," provides that the person admitted to probation may be brought before the court upon the charge of violating the terms or the spirit and purpose of such probation and the court may thereupon revoke and terminate such probation; and in such case the court may, "if the sentence has been suspended, pronounce judgment after the said suspension of the sentence for any time within the longest period for which the defendant might have been sentenced, but if the judgment has been pronounced and the execution thereof has been suspended, the court may revoke such suspension, whereupon the judgment shall be in full force and effect." Subdivision 4 of the section provides that—

"The court shall have power at any time during the term of probation to revoke or modify its order of suspension, of imposition or execution of sentence. It may, at any time, when the ends of justice will be subserved thereby, and when the good conduct and reform of the person so held on probation shall warrant it, terminate the period of probation and discharge the person so held."

It would seem to be an irresistible conclusion to be drawn from the foregoing provisions of section 1203 of the Penal Code that it was the intent of the Legislature in the phrasing of the section in its present form to empower trial courts to grant probation to convicted persons at any time before or after pronouncing judgment and to change its order made in that respect, whenever the ends of justice would be subserved by either making or modifying such orders so long as it had jurisdiction of the case. Ex parte Sizelove, 158 Cal. 493, 111 Pac. 527. It is insisted, however, that the time within which the trial court must act in the exercise of its original power to grant probation under the provisions of section 1203 of the Penal Code is limited by the terms of section 1191 of said Code. This last-named section of the Code has reference solely to the time within which judgment must be pronounced. As section 1191 read at the time of its original inclusion in the Penal Code in 1872, it provided in substance that after a plea or verdict of guilty the court should appoint a time for pronouncing judgment which should be at least two days after the verdict. With some slight amendment the section stood in the above substantial form until the year 1909. Prior to this latter date, however, and as early as 1903, the probation plan of dealing with offenders deserving its application, embodying the main features and provisions of the statute in its present form, was ingrafted upon section 1203 of the Penal Code. It is thus plain that section 1191 and section 1203 had originally no correlation as to their terms or as to the changes made or to be made in either section. Under these two sections of the Penal Code, as they stood between the years 1903 and 1909, the trial court could, under section 1191, take its own time in the matter of pronouncing judgment after the expiration of two days from the date of the verdict; and the trial court could also, under section 1203, deal with the subject of probation at its own time and even on its own motion, either before or after pronouncing judgment, so long as it had jurisdiction of the case. The argument that this view as to the powers of the trial court under the latter section would invest it with power to take offenders from the state prison at any time after the execution of their sentence had begun and grant such persons probation has no force for the reason that the jurisdiction of the trial court over the case ends when the execution of its sentence begins; and a reasonable reading of section 1203 of the Penal Code gives to the trial court the power only to suspend the operation of its judgment before the defendant has been removed from its presence and custody in the course of its execution.

It being thus seen that the changes made in these two sections of the Code had no original connection, the inquiry arises as to why section 1191 was changed to the form it took in the year 1909 and was later changed again to its present form. The reason for the change in section 1191 of the Penal Code in 1909 is not far to seek. It is a matter of well-remembered public history that this section was then amended for the sole purpose of shortening the time within which trial courts must pronounce their judgments on account of the delays in so doing which had in some instances become a public scandal. It was then for the first time provided that the trial court must pronounce its judgment within 5 days after a verdict or plea of guilty, or, in any event, within not more than 20 days beyond said time; and that this, the sole intent of said amendment of the section, might be more effective, section 1202 of the Penal Code was at the same time adopted, which provides that the defendant should be entitled to a new trial unless judgment was pronounced upon him in conformity with the requirements of time embraced in section 1191. That portion of the provisions of section 1191 which refers to the subject of probation, and which provides for the slight extension in the time for pronouncing judgment where the question of probation is under consideration, was obviously included for the purpose of giving the trial court a brief period within which to determine a pending inquiry upon that subject, but was not designed or inserted with a view to affecting, and certainly not with a view to limiting, the already existing provisions of section 1203. To hold otherwise is to place the Legislature of 1909 in the inconsistent position of expanding the merciful features of section 1203 by its amendment at that session in other respects, and yet at the same time, and by indirection, contracting and limiting the time within which the trial court might act in the exercise of these expanded benefactions. Had the Legislature intended to limit the power of the trial court in the matter of probation to a time not later than the moment of pronouncing its judgment, it would have said so; it would have stricken from section 1203 its repeated phrases respecting the power of the court to suspend "the execution of the judgment" and also the power of the court to alter from time to time its orders made in that regard. The Legislature not having done so, this court should not do so, since so to do would be to take a backward step in the direction of restricting the power of trial courts to extend the merciful provisions of the probation law to all cases where "the ends of justice shall be subserved thereby." It is true that in the year 1911 the Legislature amended both of these sections of the Penal Code in certain particulars. The changes then made in section 1203 were along the line of a further expansion of its beneficent provisions. The amendment then made to section 1191 simply added the provision that extension in the time of pronouncing judgment should not exceed 90 days. My conclusion therefore is that the Legislature did not intend to limit the full powers conferred upon trial courts by virtue of section 1203 by anything later inserted in section 1191 with obviously a different purpose in view. It is, however, insisted that there are certain other sections of the Penal Code which finally conclude this matter. These are sections 1263 and 1265, the former of which provides that, "If the judgment against the defendant is affirmed, the original judgment must be enforced" and the latter of which provides for the transmission of the judgment of the appellate tribunal to the clerk of the trial court upon the affirmance of its judgment. Both of these latter sections of the Penal Code were inserted therein at the time of its adoption in 1872 and have remained unchanged ever since. It cannot therefore be claimed that either of them was intended to have application to conditions arising out of the operation of probation laws which were as yet unborn, and a simple illustration will serve to show the absurdity of such attempted application. Suppose that a defendant is convicted and a judgment pronounced confining him in state prison for a term of years, but the court, at the time of pronouncing such judgment, suspends its execution, as it is conceded, under the strictest construction of sections 1191 and 1203 of the Penal Code in their present form, the trial court has power to do. Suppose the defendant nevertheless appeals from the judgment of conviction, and that, within a time long before the term fixed for his probation has expired, the judgment of conviction is affirmed, what effect would section 1263 of the Penal Code have upon such a state of facts? Obviously none. The order of suspension of the execution of the judgment is no part of the judgment, no more than an order staying execution in any case is a part of the judgment. Yet how could section 1263 of the Penal Code be given effect in the way of compelling the enforcement of a judgment which had been suspended as to its execution by a valid order of court under section 1203 of the Penal Code?

The sole question is as to when the power of the trial court ends in the matter of granting probation. Is it reasonable, is it in harmony with the pronounced advance during recent years in our more merciful methods of dealing with persons convicted of crime, to require such persons to immediately apply for probation before the ink is dry upon the verdict, no matter how unjust or how illegal they may deem that verdict to be; and to make such application before the court shall have pronounced its judgment and hence before the defendant can have been made aware as to its terms or as to how severe its penalties are to be? If he shall not make this application under the strict ruling of Mr. Justice MELVIN'S opinion, before he takes his appeal, his chance for obtaining probation is gone forever. Such a ruling seems to me to be utterly inconsistent with the trend of modern thought and theory in the treatment of persons accused or convicted of crime. An appeal from a judgment does not operate to deprive the trial court of all jurisdiction over the case pending the appeal, but only over so much of it as is directly affected by the appeal. Bliss v. Superior Court, 62 Cal. 543; Durbrow v. Chesley, 23 Cal. App. 627, 138 Pac. 917. The trial court still has power to correct clerical errors, to supply lost records, to discharge receivers, or dispose of attached property, and the like. Buckman v. Whitney, 24 Cal. 267; Fay v. Stubenrauch, 141 Cal. 573, 75 Pac. 174; Pease v. Fink, 3 Cal. App. 371, 85 Pac. 657; Baughman v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. 572, 14 Pac. 207; Loveland v. Alvord, 76 Cal. 565, 18 Pac. 682; Broder v. Conklin, 121 Cal. 289, 53 Pac. 797. The trial court has also in criminal cases the power to grant a writ of probable cause after an appeal has been taken and even after a sentence has been partly executed. Pen. Code, §§ 1243, 1244, 1245. The effect of an order of probable cause by the trial court is to suspend the execution of a judgment pending an appeal. Why should not the trial court, which has jurisdiction to issue a writ of probable cause at any time pending an appeal, be held to have been also given jurisdiction to place a defendant upon probation at any time subsequent to the taking of an appeal and prior to the execution of the judgment, whenever it shall be made to appear that the interests of justice will be subserved thereby?

There are numerous criminal cases wherein the persons are not criminals by nature and have not acted with criminal intent in the violation of a particular law, but have acted in good faith in so doing, believing the law to be unjust or unconstitutional or not to have application to their conduct in the doing of the act. Upon being convicted they may still in good faith retain this belief and take an appeal in full confidence that the law will be declared unjust, or unconstitutional or inapplicable to their case by the court of last resort. Why in reason should such a person be compelled to seek probation with its certain humiliating features under a judgment which he is honestly, though it may be mistakenly, appealing from as founded upon an unjust or illegal statute? Why should not such a person be permitted to go free and hold his head erect under his appeal bond while this appeal is pending; and why should not such a person, when the appellate tribunal has finally declared that his view of the injustice or illegality of the statute is a mistaken one, be permitted to apply for probation? And why should not the trial court in such a case and at any time before the execution of the sentence has begun have power, on application of the defendant or on its own motion, to suspend the execution of such sentence in the interests of justice, in preference to sending to jail one who is not a criminal at heart or in intent, and whose further punishment or disgrace would be violative of the very essential ends and objects of the laws relating to probation? It is claimed by the petitioner that this is such a case, and, whether or not this be true, the rule now to be laid down would apply to all such cases, and this appears to me to furnish the best possible reason why the rule asserted in the opinion of Mr. Justice MELVIN should not receive the approval of this court.

(Civ. 2571.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 5, 1918.)

1. MORTGAGES ⟸295(1) — ASSIGNMENT TO MORTGAGOR—CANCELLATION OF INTEREST IN MORTGAGE.

Assignment of a half interest in note and mortgage to owner of equity of redemption cancels such interest in the mortgage by merging it in the fee.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸324—LIABILITY OF SELLER.

Where vendor has sold and received benefit of purchase-money note, secured by mortgage, which later, on discovery of fraud of vendor's agent, which induced execution, the vendor and vendee agree to rescind, the vendor is obligated on the note and mortgage, precisely as if she had made the note and executed the mortgage, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 3517, 3521, 3543.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸167—NEGOTIABILITY—NOTE SECURED BY MORTGAGE—ACCELERATION OF MATURITY.

A note, containing an acceleration of maturity clause and secured by mortgage, is nonnegotiable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Emma V. Mathews and others against Frank O. Wilson, Nelle Bromley, as administratrix of Maud T. Taylor, and Thomas Ball. Judgment for defendants. From an order denying motion for new trial, plaintiffs Mathews and Page appeal. Reversed as to defendants Bromley and Ball; affirmed as to defendant Wilson.

C. F. Holland, of Los Angeles, for appellants. Avery & French, W. A. Martin, and Charles Thompson, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. In this action plaintiffs sought a decree foreclosing a mortgage made and executed by Frank O. Wilson to secure the payment of a promissory note in the sum of $10,000 given by him to Maud T. Taylor and Minna Jantzen. Judgment went for defendants, whereupon plaintiffs moved for a new trial, which the court denied, and they appeal from such order.

[1] Stripped of surplusage and matter which can have no bearing upon the merits of the case, the complicated record discloses the following facts which in considering the appeal we deem pertinent to the controversy: On May 5, 1909, Mrs. Taylor, since deceased, and for whom, as defendant, Nelle Bromley, her administratrix, has been substituted, was the owner of the land thereafter made the subject of the mortgage, and, desiring to sell or exchange it, she appointed Christian Jantzen as agent to negotiate such sale or exchange, and at his request conveyed the land to his wife, Minna Jantzen, as trustee. Thereupon Christian Jantzen effected an exchange of the property with Frank O. Wilson, to whom he caused it to be conveyed by Minna Jantzen, and as a part of the consideration therefor said Wilson executed his note to Maud T. Taylor and Minna Jantzen for the sum of $10,000, and as security for the payment thereof executed the mortgage in question covering the land conveyed to him by Minna Jantzen. In consummating the transaction Christian Jantzen was guilty of fraud and deceit practiced upon Wilson, as a result of which the latter was thereby induced to execute the note and mortgage. Upon discovering that he had been defrauded he, in May, 1911, notified Mrs. Taylor of such fact, and she repudiated the acts of Christian Jantzen. Thereupon it was agreed by Mrs. Taylor and Wilson that the transaction should be rescinded. In order to effect such rescission, Wilson, at Mrs. Taylor's request, conveyed the land to Thomas Ball in trust for her, and at the same time she caused Minna Jantzen's one-half interest in the note and mortgage to be assigned to Ball, the effect of which was to cancel such interest in the mortgage by merging the same in the fee. Prior to the rescission, however, to wit on October 31, 1910, as found by the court, Mrs. Taylor assigned her one-half interest in the note and mortgage to one George Jude, from whom, by mesne transfers and assignments, these plaintiffs, in consideration of $2,500 paid therefor, acquired it. As to this last transaction, it appears from the findings that Mrs. Taylor, before learning of the fraud and deceit practiced by Jantzen as her agent upon Wilson in negotiating the exchange, agreed, in consideration of $5,000, to sell her interest in the note to Christian Jantzen, or Jude, as his assignee, $500 of which sum was to be paid within 30 days, upon the making of which payment an assignment placed in escrow was to be delivered to Jude, and the balance of $4,500 was to be paid by Jantzen when his profits from certain property should enable him to liquidate the same. The conveyance of the land by Wilson to Ball was in express terms made subject to the mortgage, the existence of which was thus recognized.

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[2] Briefly stated, it appears that Mrs. Taylor, through her trustee, conveyed the land to Wilson, who, by means of fraud practiced by Jantzen, the grantor's agent, was induced to give his note secured by a mortgage upon the land for $10,000, a one-half interest in which note was owned by Mrs. Taylor; that after Mrs. Taylor had for a valuable consideration sold and transferred her interest in the note and mortgage, the fraud was discovered, and it was agreed by Mrs. Taylor and Wilson that the transaction should be rescinded, to effect which Wilson reconveyed the land, subject to the existing mortgage given to secure the note, one-half of which Mrs. Taylor had theretofore, by mesne assignments, transferred to plaintiffs. Conceding, as claimed by respondents, that the interest in the note acquired by plaintiffs was not the interest assigned by Mrs. Taylor to Jude, but that originally vested in Minna Jantzen as a dummy for Christian Jantzen, and who throughout the entire transaction acted in bad faith with all parties concerned, we must nevertheless hold that as to plaintiffs Mrs. Taylor's position was precisely the same as though she had made the note to the former and executed the mortgage securing the same. She, through Jantzen as her agent, must be deemed to have received the benefits of the transaction and her estate must bear the burden. Section 3521, Civ. Code. Under the circumstances, to hold otherwise would not only be a monstrous doctrine, but would violate fundamental maxims of justice, among which are: "No one can take advantage of his own wrong." Section 3517, Civ. Code. And "where one of two innocent persons [as plaintiffs are conceded to be] must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer." Section 3543, Civ. Code. Assuming as true all that respondents claim as to the wrongs committed by Jantzen, both as to Mrs. Taylor and others, it was due solely to her acts that he was clothed with the powers under which he acted. As to Mrs. Taylor's administratrix, Nelle Bromley, and defendant Ball, her trustee, the order must be reversed.

[3] Not so, however, as to defendant Wilson, against whom, as maker of the note, a deficiency judgment is asked. As we have seen, Wilson was induced to make the note by means of fraud. It contained a clause under which the maturity thereof might be accelerated, which fact and the fact that it was secured by mortgage rendered it nonnegotiable (Smiley v. Watson, 23 Cal. App. 409, 138 Pac. 367; Meyer v. Weber, 133 Cal. 681, 65 Pac. 1110; Briggs v. Crawford, 162 Cal. 129, 121 Pac. 381); and hence, notwithstanding the sale and transfer thereof before maturity, it was subject to the defense based upon the fraud and deceit practiced upon Wilson in procuring it.

As to defendant Wilson, the order appealed from is affirmed; as to the other defendants, the same is reversed.

LUGIANI v. LANDAU ECONOMIC SYPHON CO. (Civ. 2405.)

1. PLEADING ⊂⊃403(3)—DEFICIENCY IN COMPLAINT—SUPPLY BY ANSWER.
In action for price of automobile, any defect in complaint, for insufficiency of allegation of nonpayment, which was that amount claimed had been demanded and refused, and that whole was due from defendant to plaintiff, was supplied in defendant's answer, which alleged amount of demand had been paid in full.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃171(3)—THEORY OF CASE BELOW—PLEADING.
Where case was tried on theory that nonpayment of price of automobile sued for was in issue, defendant on appeal cannot be heard successfully to question sufficiency of plaintiff's allegation of nonpayment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by Henry Lugiani against the Landau Economic Syphon Company. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Louis H. Brownstone, of San Francisco, for appellant. Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action for the sum of $450, the agreed price of a certain automobile.

[1, 2] With respect to the appellant's contention that the complaint contains no sufficient allegation of nonpayment, the allegation criticized is that the amount claimed has been demanded and refused, and that "the whole thereof is now due and owing from said defendant to said plaintiff." Standing alone this perhaps is not a sufficient allegation of nonpayment (Ryan v. Holliday, 110 Cal. 337, 42 Pac. 891); but the defendant in its answer supplied the defect in the complaint by specifically alleging that the amount of plaintiff's demand had been paid in full. Aside from this, however, the case was tried upon the theory that such nonpayment was an issue in the case. For these reasons the defendant cannot now be heard to successfully question the sufficiency of the allegation of nonpayment. Schwind v. Hall, 129 Cal. 40, 43, 61 Pac. 573.

On the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of the trial court, it is sufficient to say that we have carefully read the record, and find appellant's contention in this regard to be without merit. It is true that the bill of sale of the automobile was taken in the name of one Udall. Still he was the manager of the defendant corporation, and the automobile was at once put into use by Udall in the business of the defendant, and was so used for ten months and until it was wrecked in a collision. Repairs thereto at the instance of Udall were charged to and paid by the defendant. Much of the testimony introduced on behalf of the defendant failed for obvious reasons to commend itself to the favorable consideration of the court and was of a character which tended in effect to support the plaintiff's case.

STATE BANK OF RAMONA v. CLELLAND et al. (Civ. 2181.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 3, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 31, 1918.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⟸11 — PROPERTY SUBJECT TO MORTGAGE—POTENTIAL EXISTENCE.

Civ. Code, § 2955, permits the mortgaging of any personal property which may have only a potential existence at the time of the creation of the mortgage.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸766 — BRIEFS — ALTERNATIVE METHOD OF APPEAL.

Where, on appeal brought under the alternative method, the briefs do not contain a sufficient transcript of the testimony to illustrate the point to be decided, the judgment may for that reason alone be affirmed.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸837(8) — REVIEW — EVIDENCE.

Affidavits on motion for new trial cannot be considered, as far as the presentation of the evidence is concerned, in aid of the case made at the trial and upon which the judgment is based, although they contain evidence of essential facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by the State Bank of Ramona against F. G. Clelland and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bischoff & Thompson, of Escondido, for appellant. Wirt Francis, of San Diego, for respondents.

JAMES, J. This appeal is taken by the plaintiff from an adverse judgment and is presented by the alternative method of appeal.

Defendant Clelland resided in the county of San Diego and was engaged in the business of farming and bee keeping. Being indebted to the plaintiff bank, he executed a chattel mortgage covering a number of animals and various kinds of machinery and implements, including those connected with his business as bee keeper. Among the property described was the following:

"All my bees, bee material, and implements, and hives and produce of bees."

In the year 1915 a quantity of honey in excess of the value of $300 was sold by Clelland to the defendant Produce Company. Plaintiff, contending that this honey was subject to the lien of the chattel mortgage, brought this action to recover the value of the honey and incidental damages. The trial judge, in determining the facts, made the following finding:

"That the defendant F. G. Clelland, during the months of June, July, August, and September, 1915, sold to the defendant Coast Produce Company honey of the market value of $374.07; that the evidence fails to show that said honey was honey previously mortgaged by the chattel mortgage herein mentioned; that said sale was without the knowledge and consent of plaintiff, but that said plaintiff was not damaged in the sum of $375, or any other sum, or at all by said sale. * * *"

[1] Counsel for appellant first contend that by this finding it was the purpose of the court to determine that honey to be produced by the mortgagor after the date of the mortgage was not, under the statute, included under the lien of the mortgage. We agree with the appellant that the statute does permit the mortgaging of any personal property which may have a potential existence at the time of the creation of the mortgage. Arques et al. v. Wasson, 51 Cal. 620, 21 Am. Rep. 718; Wilkerson et al. v. Thorp et al., 128 Cal. 221, 60 Pac. 679. The statute (section 2955, Civ. Code) formerly contained an enumeration of various kinds of property which might be made the subject of a chattel mortgage, and this list was added to at various sessions of the Legislature. However, by the last amendment made, the terms of the statute were entirely changed, and as it now reads it provides that mortgages may be made upon growing crops and upon "any and all kinds of personal property," except certain things not necessary here to be enumerated. Passing the point first presented, it will be noted that by the finding the court determined that "the evidence fails to show that said honey was honey previously mortgaged"—in other words, the finding is that the plaintiff failed to show that the honey sold to the Produce Company defendant was honey covered by the chattel mortgage. In the absence of any showing to the contrary, we must assume that the evidence supported the finding of the trial judge.

[2] Under the alternative method of appeal the parties are required to print in their briefs such portions of the testimony as they desire to call attention to. We find no sufficient transcript of the testimony in the briefs to illustrate the point, and for that reason alone would be justified in affirming the judgment. Barker Bros. v. Joos, 171 Pac. 1085. However, without any obligation so to do, we have examined to some extent the transcript of the testimony on file in typewritten form, and are of the opinion that the plaintiff did not sustain the burden of proof and show that the particular honey purchased by the Produce Company was honey which had been produced by Clelland from the bees and apiary stock included in the mortgage. For aught that is shown by the testimony expressed in the record, Clelland may have purchased all or a part of the honey which he sold to the Produce Company, and if such was the case plaintiff would have had no lien thereon.

[3] The affidavits used on the motion for a new trial, which present evidence as to this essential fact, cannot be here considered in aid of the case as made out at the trial and upon which the judgment of the court was based.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

D. SAMUELS REALTY CO. v. NUNAN et al.

(Civ. 2419.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 7, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 4, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1010(1)—FINDINGS—REVIEW.

There being some evidence to sustain finding of trial court, the court on appeal will not interfere, although reasonable minds might differ.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the D. Samuels Realty Company against Frank Nunan and others. Judgment for defendants. From an order denying motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles W. Slack, of San Francisco, for appellant. Garret W. McEnerney, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action on a written guaranty executed to secure the performance of the terms of a written lease. The defendants had judgment in the trial court. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, the motion was denied, and from the order denying said motion the plaintiff appealed, and has brought up the evidence in a bill of exceptions.

If there was a surrender of the lease by the original lessees, and an acceptance of the premises by the landlord, it is conceded that the judgment should be affirmed. The defendants in their answer pleaded a surrender and acceptance, and the trial court made findings sustaining the defense. The question, as presented to this court, is solely as to whether such findings are sustained by the evidence. It is not contended that there is any direct evidence in the record on this issue; but the defendants contend that the record contains evidence from which the only fair inference to be drawn is the inference that a surrender took place. They further contend that the function of determining what inferences might be drawn from the evidence was with the trial court, and that an appellate court may not disturb such finding, unless it appears that there is no evidence to support it, or that the evidence is so clearly preponderating against the finding as to amount, in legal effect, to a want of substantial evidence (Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 Pac. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703), and that the powers of this court are also limited where opposing inferences may be reasonably drawn from disputed facts (Rice v. Carey, 170 Cal. 748, 754, 151 Pac. 135). The plaintiff does not controvert these contentions, but maintains that the record does not disclose any evidence supporting, or tending to support, the inference which the trial court drew. To solve the problem, there is little evidence in the record. August 15, 1906, Maurice V. Samuels, as owner, leased to F. J. Bonney and J. V. Owens the southeast corner of Eighth and Clementina streets. Said lease had attached to it a written guaranty signed by Matthew Nunan; the lease was for a term of five years from October 1, 1906. The lessee entered and held possession till February 20, 1907. Speaking of about that date the lessor testified:

"I know that a man named Michel was in possession of the premises after Owens and Bonney left. One of my brothers, as I remember it, wrote to me in New York that Owens and Bonney wanted to get out, and that Matthew Nunan was willing to guarantee another man named Michel. I don't know whether Owens and Bonney were quarreling, or didn't pay, or something. I think the letter giving me this information was received by me some time around February 20, 1907. Q. Prior to the execution of this letter you were advised by one of your brothers, or one of your relatives out here, that Owens and Bonney wished to go out, and that there was a man named Michel who wished to go in? A. That is my impression. Q. And Mr. Nunan was willing to guarantee the payment of the rent by Michel if you were agreeable to that course; is that correct? A. That is my impression. Q. You stated that you were? A. I was quite willing, certainly, as long as Mr. Nunan, who was responsible, was there. I didn't care who was in there. Q. And Messrs. Owens and Bonney did leave the premises at or about that time did they not? A. I think so, because the reports received in New York read 'Michel.'"

On February 20, 1907, Nunan wrote to the owner's brother:

"Confirming my phone message to you of yesterday, beg to state that I will allow my name to remain on the bond of M. Michel, Suc. to James V. Owens & Co., corner 8th and Clementina St."

There is no evidence that any bond except the guaranty was signed by Nunan. Thereupon the original lessees vacated the premises and Michel entered. He remained a tenant till September, 1907, at which time he and Marchand went to J. L. Samuels, and Marchand says:

⟹For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

"Michel presented me to Mr. Samuels, and asked Mr. Samuels if he wanted me for a tenant. Mr. Samuels said, 'Yes; so long as I paid the rent.'"

In June or July, 1908, Marchand sold to Berton, and at that time the two called on J. L. Samuels and Marchand says:

"When I went to see Mr. Samuels at the store, I told him I had sold out the place to Berton, and asked him if he wanted that man for his tenant. He said, 'Yes; so long as he pays the rent.'"

The rent was paid to J. L. Samuels. The receipts were made out in different ways; some receipting to Michel, some to Berton, and at least one to J. B. Johnson, who had backed Berton. While it will be conceded that the story, as gathered from the foregoing recitals, contains but very little touching the subject of surrender, yet we think it cannot be successfully maintained that there was no evidence on the subject. While reasonable minds may differ as to whether a surrender was intended, this court is not entitled to interfere. Williams v. Kidd, Rice v. Carey, supra.

The judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

JAMES, J. Action to quiet title. Defendant appeals from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiffs.

[1, 2] At about the year 1889 plaintiffs' predecessor in interest was the owner of two parcels of land; one parcel being described as lots 3, 6 and 7, and the other parcel being a certain 40 acres immediately adjoining thereto, a portion of which is involved in this suit. Plaintiffs' predecessor with his family lived upon the property; his dwelling house being mainly located upon lot 7, but a portion of the house extended over upon the adjacent 40 acres. An inclosed yard extended also upon the 40 acres immediately surrounding, as we understand it to be, the rear of the house. At about the year 1894 plaintiffs' predecessor moved from the house and took his family away, and did not thereafter reside in that vicinity. A creditor of plaintiffs' predecessor obtained a judgment against him and levied upon lots 3, 6, and 7, before mentioned, which lots were later sold under execution. Defendant's intestate was the purchaser at the execution sale. This purchaser was at the time occupying the house located as we have described it, and at the time he purchased the property under the execution sale he was aware of the fact that the house stood partly upon lot 7 and partly upon the adjacent 40 acres, title to which latter remained undisturbed in plaintiffs' predecessor. There is nothing in the record presented which tends to show that by the execution sale any property in excess of lots 3, 6, and 7, was pretended to be sold to the defendant's intestate. However, at a later date defendant's intestate set up a claim of title to all of that portion of the 40 acres included within the inclosed yard at the rear of the house which he was occupying. During the early part of his occupancy of this house, and continuing down until after the year 1906, defendant's intestate farmed portions of the 40 acres belonging to plaintiffs' predecessor, with the consent of plaintiffs' predecessor expressed in communications by letter. In letters written by defendant's intestate to plaintiffs' predecessor, such intestate referred to the ground as the ranch of plaintiffs' predecessor, and it is very clear from the correspondence which is exhibited by the record that the entire 40 acres belonging to plaintiffs' predecessor was included in the term "ranch." The trial judge found that defendant's intestate had occupied the land continuously and that his possession had been open and notorious, but determined that such possession not been adverse to plaintiffs' predecessor. It was further found that plaintiffs and their predecessor had paid all taxes levied and assessed against the property.

It is appellant's contention that the evidence does not justify the finding of the court as to either of these propositions. We cannot agree with this contention, especially as to the first question presented. Admittedly the possession by defendant's intestate of the 40 acres of land was at all times in the nature of a tenancy with the consent of plaintiffs' predecessor. No showing was made indicating that defendant's intestate ever notified plaintiffs' predecessor that he disclaimed any relation of landlord and tenant as to the ground included within the fence. The only hint of such a contention is found in the statement of defendant's intestate to the effect that, when at one time plaintiffs' predecessor wrote him suggesting that the house should be painted, he replied that he would paint it when he thought it needed it, as he claimed it as his own. As the larger portion of the building was located upon lot 7, which defendant's intestate had purchased under the execution sale, his notification of alleged ownership to plaintiffs' predecessor was wholly consistent with his occupation of the 40 acres as a tenant. As to the second proposition, assuming that the evidence did not show that plaintiffs and their predecessor had paid all taxes levied and assessed against the property, it does not appear that defendant's intestate had made such payments; and we think that it was essential in support of the claim of title by prescription that it be shown that all taxes levied and assessed against the property had been paid by the adverse claimant, as required by the provisions of section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Reynolds v. Williard, 80 Cal. 605, 22 Pac. 262; McGrath v. Wallace, 85 Cal. 622, 629, 24 Pac. 793. The claim of prescriptive title made by defendant's intestate was not founded upon a written instrument, judgment, or decree.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=931(1) — ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR—ABSENCE OF FINDINGS—PRESUMPTION.

Where error is claimed because of the absence of a finding on a material issue, it must affirmatively appear that evidence was presented from which the trial judge would be required in writing to determine the fact, and in the absence of such showing it will be presumed there was no evidence.

2. PLEDGES ⊂=33 — PLEDGOR'S CROSS-COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action on a promissory note for printing, which was secured by the retention by plaintiff of certain books, and defendant cross-complained that such books had never been delivered to it, the burden was on plaintiff to show facts in excuse of its refusal to deliver the books on demand.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by E. D. Engebritsen and H. White, doing business under the name of the Standard Printing Company, against the Latin-American Publishing Company and others. Judgment for defendants on their cross-complaint, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Tyrrell, Abrahams & Brown and Chas. W. Fricke, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. Milton K. Young and W. D. Finch, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Prior to September, 1913, plaintiff copartnership contracted with defendant copartnership to print and bind a certain lot of text-books for defendant. When the work was completed defendant copartnership was unable to pay the full amount due to the plaintiff on the contract, and a supplemental agreement was thereupon entered into, whereunder the defendant executed to the plaintiff its promissory note in the sum of $300, and it was agreed between the parties that 3,000 copies of the book then ready for delivery should be held by the plaintiff as security for the payment of the promissory note. In this action plaintiff sought to recover judgment on the $300 promissory note. The defendant, by answer and cross-complaint, pleaded that the 3,000 books had never been delivered to it. Answering the cross-complaint, the plaintiff set up that the 3,000 books had been destroyed by fire while in its hands. Affirmative judgment for the sum of $200 damages was entered in favor of the defendant. This appeal is taken from that judgment, and is presented on the judgment roll alone.

In the supplemental agreement hereinbefore referred to the plaintiff agreed as to the 3,000 books held as security that it would "store and keep the same safely at its own risk, except as to conditions beyond its control, and will deliver the same to the Latin-American Publishing Company, or its order. * * *" Referring to the destruction of the books, the plaintiff in its answer to the cross-complaint alleged:

"That said fire was caused by matters and things without and beyond the control of cross-defendants, and was wholly without any negligence or fault of cross-defendants."

Touching this issue, the court in its findings of fact determined as follows:

"That while said 3,000 books were still in the possession of said plaintiff and being stored at its own risk, except as to conditions beyond its control, the said books were destroyed by fire, on the 1st day of February, 1914; that said fire took place at the printing house of the plaintiff and cross-defendant, but that the destruction of said books by said fire was not a condition beyond the control of said Standard Printing Company."

It is argued on behalf of appellant that this finding is insufficient to support the judgment, first, because the court neglected and omitted to affirmatively find upon the allegation contained in the plaintiff's answer to defendant's cross-complaint, wherein the plaintiff alleged that the fire was caused without any negligence on its part. The case being presented on the bare judgment roll, we have no means of knowing whether there was evidence heard in the trial court upon that question.

[1] It is well settled that, where error is claimed because of the absence of a finding on a material issue, it must affirmatively appear that evidence was presented from which the trial judge would be required in writing to determine the fact; and in the absence of such a showing it will be presumed that there was no such evidence. Coats v. Coats, 160 Cal. 671, 118 Pac. 441, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 844; Mohr v. North Rawhide Mining, etc., Co. et al. (Cal.) 170 Pac. 600. But, argue counsel for appellant, it was incumbent on the defendant to show, not only a failure to deliver the books on demand, but also that such failure was not excusable —citing Wilson v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 62 Cal. 164. In the opinion in that case it is said that a prima facie case of negligence is made out against a warehouseman who refuses to deliver property stored with him upon proof of demand and refusal. And the opinion continues:

"But if it appears that the property, when demanded, was consumed by fire, the burden of proof is then on the bailor to show that the fire was the result of the negligence of the warehouseman."

In this case, there being an absence of any showing as to what the evidence was, and therefore no showing of the time when the property was destroyed, and it appearing by the answer of the plaintiff to the defendant's cross-complaint that the former assumed the burden of showing why it refused to deliver the books, a different situation is presented from that considered in the Wilson suit, supra.

[2] We have not found it necessary to determine whether, under the agreement of the plaintiff to store the books at its own risk, it assumed a larger responsibility than that of using ordinary care in their safekeeping. For the purposes of this decision, we have adopted the view of the appellant that, if the destruction of the books was brought about without any negligence on the part of the plaintiff, it might be excused. However, as already indicated, we are of the view that the burden was upon the plaintiff to show facts in excuse of its refusal to deliver the books upon the demand of the defendant. Our duty being to construe the findings of the trial judge in such a way as will support the judgment, we think, for reasons stated, that the judgment should be affirmed.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MIRANDI. (Cr. 606.)

CRIMINAL LAW ⊂=721(2) — ARGUMENTS OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

In prosecution for unlawfully maintaining place where intoxicating liquors are sold, it was misconduct for the prosecuting attorney, after defendant had testified, to argue to the jury that accused's counsel wisely refrained from asking her about any illegal sales of liquor, in view of Pen. Code, § 1323.

Appeal from Superior Court, County of San Bernardino; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Sari Mirandi was convicted of unlawfully maintaining a place where intoxicating liquors were sold, and she appeals. Reversed.

J. Vincent Hannon, of Los Angeles, and A. S. Maloney, of San Bernardino, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

CONREY, P. J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of misdemeanor committed by willfully and unlawfully maintaining and carrying on a place in the county of San Bernardino where intoxicating liquors were sold, etc., contrary to an ordinance of that county. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

At the trial the defendant was sworn as a witness in her own behalf, but did not testify concerning any illegal sales of liquor at the winery, which was owned by her and conducted by her son-in-law, one Jean Fages. In the course of his address to the jury, the district attorney made the following statement:

"I wish to call your attention to a remarkable thing. The defendant was placed upon the stand, but she was not asked regarding any illegal sales of liquor. Mr. Hannon did not ask her a question concerning this matter. He was too good a lawyer, and I give him credit for having too much respect for his client's feelings than to have placed her in an embarrassing position by asking her such questions."

Defendant's attorney thereupon objected to the statement so made, and asked the court to instruct the jury that it was not incumbent upon the defendant to make any denial of anything pertaining to the matter mentioned by the district attorney. To this the court replied:

"The law don't require the defendant to take the stand at all; but, when the defendant has taken the stand, I don't think she is protected after that. I think the district attorney is within his rights."

The district attorney then continued his address, amplifying and emphasizing his previous remarks upon the failure of the defendant to testify about illegal sales of liquor at her place of business.

We have no doubt that in making said statements to the jury the district attorney was guilty of misconduct, and that the court erred in overruling defendant's exceptions thereto. Section 1323 of the Penal Code provides that the neglect or refusal of a defendant in a criminal action to be a witness "cannot in any manner prejudice him nor be used against him on the trial or proceeding." This section has been held to protect a defendant against adverse comment upon his failure to testify, not only where the defendant was not a witness, but also where the defendant was a witness, but omitted to testify concerning some of the elements of fact at issue in the case. People v. McGungill, 41 Cal. 429; People v. Sanders, 114 Cal. 216, 231, 46 Pac. 153; People v. Morris, 3 Cal. App. 1, 84 Pac. 463.

We think that this misconduct and error was so far prejudicial to the defendant that justice requires a reversal of the judgment. The evidence in the record fails to show that defendant had any knowledge of the illegal sale of liquor which constituted the principal item of evidence on the part of the prosecution until after that transaction had been completed, and also fails to show that she had knowledge of any previous violations of the law by her agent until after they had occurred. There is no direct evidence that she ever advised or approved of those illegal acts. She did not reside at, and was not usually present at, said place of business. In effect, the evidence against her is circumstantial, and is not so far conclusive that we are warranted in using section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution as a ground for affirming the judgment.

Some other questions of importance are discussed in the briefs, but they probably will not arise in connection with a second trial of the case.

The judgment is reversed.

CALIFORNIA ADJUSTMENT CO. v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. RY. CO.

(Sac. 2584.)

1. CARRIERS ⊜202 — VIOLATION OF RATE REGULATIONS—REMEDY OF SHIPPER.

Public Utilities Act, § 71, providing for due reparation by the Railroad Commission for the imposition of excess freight charges, applies only where an examination of evidence as to a disputed matter of fact is necessary to determine whether the public utility has imposed excessive charges, and does not give the commission jurisdiction to the exclusion of the courts of violations of the long and short haul clause of the Constitution.

2. COMMERCE ⊜61(3)—RATE REGULATION—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Const. art. 12, § 21, respecting freight charges for long and short hauls, is not unconstitutional, as being in conflict with the commerce clause of the federal Constitution (article 1, § 8, cl. 3).

3. CARRIERS ⊜202 — RATES — OVERCHARGE—RIGHT OF ACTION.

In view of St. 1909, p. 511, § 34, St. 1911, pp. 24, 36, §§ 22, 41, and Public Utilities Act 1911, any person injured by discrimination through a violation of the long and short haul clause of the Constitution (article 12, § 21) has a right of action whether such right existed at common law or not.

4. CARRIERS ⊜12(1) — RATE REGULATION —RAILROAD COMMISSION.

Under the constitutional provisions as to rate regulation as they existed prior to October 10, 1911, the Railroad Commission was authorized to fix reasonable rates, so that rates relating to long and short hauls in violation of constitutional provisions were void, although fixed by the commission, and afford no defense in an action by a shipper for the exaction by a carrier of illegal rates.

5. CARRIERS ⊜12(6½)—RATE REGULATION —RAILROAD COMMISSION.

Under Const. art. 12, § 21, as amended, relating to freight rates, the Railroad Commission can relieve a carrier from the prohibition of the long and short haul clause only on application by the carrier after investigation.

6. CARRIERS ⊜202—EXCESS CHARGES—RECOVERY—PAYMENT WITHOUT PROTEST.

Where a consignee is compelled to pay exorbitant freight charges to obtain a shipment, he may bring an action to recover the excess charges without having tendered payment, or having made payment under protest; payment so made not being voluntary.

7. CARRIERS ⊜202—EXCESSIVE RATES—RECOVERY OF PAYMENT—PLEADING.

Where a consignee seeks to recover from the carrier excess freight charges exacted in violation of the long and short haul clause of the Constitution, he need not show that, when shipments to intermediate points were made, there were contemporaneous shipments made to more distant points.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by the California Adjustment Company against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. W. Camp, U. T. Clotfelter, and M. W. Reed, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Hoefler, Cook, Harwood & Morris and Alfred J. Harwood, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment against it for $34,242.31. The complaint set up 15,207 causes of action, each based on the alleged violation by defendant of the long and short haul clause of the Constitution of this state and representing an alleged illegal overcharge collected by defendant from shippers of freight over its road; the claim for damages thereon against the defendant having been by said shippers assigned to plaintiff. The freight shipment in each instance was over the road of the defendant from San Francisco to some point or station along the line between San Francisco and Los Angeles and the allegation was that the rate charged, demanded, and paid on each shipment to said intermediate point exceeded the rate contemporaneously charged for like shipment from San Francisco to Los Angeles. The demand in each cause was for the difference between the through rate from San Francisco to Los Angeles and the rate paid and the total amount of these excessive charges on the 15,207 shipments amounted to about $25,000, with interest. Many of these freight shipments were made before October 10, 1911, and the rest after that date and up to June 12, 1912. The significance of the date of October 10, 1911, it may be mentioned here, is that on that date the long and short haul clause of the state Constitution was amended. As it stood before October 10, 1911, that clause (section 21, art. 12) read:

"No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or other transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of the same classes of freight or passengers within this state, or coming from or going to any other state. Persons and property transported over any railroad, or by any other transportation company or individual, shall be delivered at any station, landing, or port, at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class, in the same direction, to any more distant station, port, or landing. Excursion and commutation tickets may be issued at special rates."

As amended October 10, 1911, said section 21 reads:

"No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made by any railroad or other transportation company between places or persons, or in the facilities for the transportation of the same classes of freight or passengers within this state. It shall be unlawful for any railroad or other transportation company to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or to charge any greater compensation as a through rate than the aggregate of the intermediate rates: Provided, however, that upon application to the Railroad Commission provided for in this Constitution such company may, in special cases, after investigation, be authorized by such Commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of persons or property, and the Railroad Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such company may be relieved from the prohibition to charge less for the longer than for the shorter haul. * * *"

Another section amended at the same time and applicable to the matter under consideration here is section 22 of said article 12, which, as amended, is as follows:

"* * * No provision of this Constitution shall be construed as a limitation upon the authority of the Legislature to confer upon the Railroad Commission additional powers of the same kind or different from those conferred herein which are not inconsistent with the powers conferred upon the Railroad Commission in this Constitution, and the authority of the Legislature to confer such additional powers is expressly declared to be plenary and unlimited by any provision of this Constitution. The provisions of this section shall not be construed to repeal in whole or in part any existing law not inconsistent herewith, and the 'Railroad Commission Act' of this state, approved February 10, 1911, shall be construed with reference to this constitutional provision and any other constitutional provision becoming operative concurrently herewith. And the said act shall have the same force and effect as if the same had been passed after the adoption of this provision of the Constitution and of all other provisions adopted concurrently herewith, except that the three commissioners referred to in said act shall be held and construed to be the five commissioners provided for herein."

Defendant in its answer, among other things, set up several defenses, one of which was that all rates collected for transportation of each and all shipments described in the causes of action were rates fixed by the Railroad Commission of the state pursuant to section 22, article 12, of the Constitution as it stood from the year 1879 up to October 10, 1911, and that such rates were at the time of their collection and are now conclusively just and reasonable and the only lawful rates. As a further separate defense defendant set up that on or about October 26, 1911, it applied to the Railroad Commission of the state under section 21, article 12, as amended October 10, 1911, for permission to maintain the higher rates at intermediate points and to maintain lower rates from San Francisco to Los Angeles for all shipments moving after October 26, 1911, and that on or about February 15, 1912, the Railroad Commission, after investigation, made its order permitting the defendant to maintain such higher and lower rates and that such order has ever since been in full force and effect. As to these defenses the findings of the court were against them.

Preliminarily to considering the points presented by appellant for a reversal, it may be stated that an action—California Adjustment Co. v. Southern Pacific Co. (D. C.) 226 Fed. 349, practically identical with this but against another transportation company for similar overcharges—was commenced in the District Court of the United States about the time this suit was instituted and judgment there went for plaintiff. That judgment was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals (Southern Pacific Co. v. California Adjustment Co., 237 Fed. 954, 150 C. C. A. 604), and on writ of certiorari the cause is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. All the points made here for a reversal were likewise urged in the United States District and Circuit Courts, and determined adversely to the defendant there.

Proceeding now to a consideration of the grounds urged for a reversal:

[1] 1. It is insisted first that the court had no jurisdiction of this action. The specific point made under this general objection is that jurisdiction to award any reparation for deviation from the long and short haul clause is with the Railroad Commission in the first instance and not with the courts. In this regard it is urged that since March 23, 1911, when the Public Utilities Act (St. 1911 [Ex. Sess.] p. 18) went into effect a shipper who had been compelled to pay a larger amount for an intermediate or short haul shipment than the carrier is charging for a longer haul and who claims reparation therefor must first apply to the Railroad Commission and have determined by it the amount of reparation to which he is entitled and obtain an order requiring its payment by the carrier, and until this has been done the courts have no jurisdiction in the matter. Section 71 of the Public Utilities Act relied on is as follows:

"When complaint has been made to the commission concerning any rate, fare, * * * or commodity furnished or service performed by any public utility, and the commission has found, after investigation, that the public utility has charged an excessive or discriminatory amount for such product, commodity or service, the commission may order that the public utility make due reparation to the complainant therefor, with interest from the date of collection: Provided, no discrimination will result from such reparation."

It is upon this section that the appellant bases its point. It is quite clear, however, that this section applies only to cases in which an examination or investigation of evidence as to some disputed matter of fact is necessary in order to determine whether the public utility has or has not charged an excessive or discriminatory amount. It could not apply to a situation such as we have here where there is nothing for the Railroad Commission to investigate or examine. When a charge has been paid to a carrier or a demand exacted in violation of the long and short haul clause of the Constitution there is nothing which can call for the action of the Railroad Commission. As the transaction fixes conclusively the liability of the carrier the transaction itself furnishes the measure of damage which the shipper suffered as soon as it occurred and the commission could neither decrease nor enlarge it. The Constitution by prohibiting the discrimination determines conclusively that a violation of it shall be unwarranted and unjustified as matter of law and as this is a legal question the commission can have nothing to do with it. It is a question for the courts as is recognized by the Public Utilities Act itself, and the right of the shipper comes within the terms of section 73, subdivision (a) of that act, which authorizes an aggrieved party to prosecute an action in the courts for any loss or injury arising from a failure of a carrier to do any act or thing required to be done by the Constitution or any law of the state or any order or decision of the commission. Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Abilene, etc., Co., 204 U. S. 426, 27 Sup. Ct. 350, 51 L. Ed. 553, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075; Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. International Coal Co., 230 U. S. 184, 33 Sup. Ct. 893, 57 L. Ed. 1446, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 315; Southern Pacific Co. v. California Adjustment Co., supra; Southern Pacific Co. v. Superior Court of Kern Co., 27 Cal. App. 240, 150 Pac. 397, 404.

[2] 2. It is next claimed that section 21, respecting the long and short haul clause, both as it stood prior to October 10, 1911, and as amended on that date, is unconstitutional, because in conflict with the commerce clause of the federal Constitution (article 1, § 8, cl. 3). This is based, as to section 21, article 12, as it stood prior to the amendment of October 10, 1911, in the opening clause thereof, which refers to transportation of freight or passengers "within this state or coming from or going to any other state," which counsel claims was an attempt on the part of the state to regulate interstate commerce and therefore void. Conceding, without deciding, that this is true, still only the opening clause containing that language would be affected. None of the subsequent clauses of the constitutional provision are so related to or dependent on it as to be affected by the invalidity of this opening clause. On the contrary, they are independent and severable from it. They comprise in themselves a complete scheme of legislative prohibition against discrimination in charges by carriers as to long and short hauls, and this without aid from or connected with the opening clause of the provision at all and with it entirely eliminated. These subsequent clauses contain no reference to interstate commerce and are complete in their prohibition as to long and short hauls. True, they do not limit the prohibition in terms to transportation within the state; but, as that was the sole territorial extent to which they could apply, the construction must be that they were intended only to apply to it. As far as this same point is urged against the constitutional provisions, as amended on October 10, 1911, it is entirely without merit, for the simple reason that there is not the slightest reference anywhere in the constitutional provisions to interstate transportation.

[3] 3. The next point presented is that neither by common law nor statute is an action for damages for a violation of a long and short haul clause given. There is no necessity for discussing both grounds urged by the appellant. If the right of action is conferred either by the common law or by statute, it is immaterial to consider whether it existed under both, and that it is expressly conferred by statute in this state is readily apparent. The statutes conferring it are the acts of 1909 (St. 1909, p. 499), the act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 13), and the Public Utilities Act (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 18). Some of the causes of action sued on here accrued when the statute of 1909 was in force, others while the act of 1911 was in operation, and the remainder while the provision of the Public Utilities Act prevailed. While neither the act of 1909 nor the act of 1911 expressly refers to the constitutional provisions against discrimination, they were both passed in pursuance of the terms of section 22 of article 12 of the Constitution relative thereto, and must be deemed to have reference to the provisions of that instrument upon that subject, and both acts declare discrimination by carriers between persons and localities unlawful and both acts confer a cause of action upon any person damaged by such discrimination. As to the sections of the act upon the subject, section 34 of the act of 1909 declares:

"It shall also be unjust discrimination for any such transportation company to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, * * * or locality, or to any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, * * * or to subject any particular person, * * * or locality, or any particular description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever."

Sections 22 and 41 of the act of 1911 prohibit discrimination in language similar to that quoted from the act of 1909, and in more extended terms; and as to the right of action for a violation of the prohibitory clause arising from such discriminations section 38 of the act of 1909 declares that:

"In case any transportation company subject to this act, or any person or corporation within the provisions hereof, shall do, cause to be done, or permit to be done, * * * any matter, act or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, * * * such transportation company, * * * shall be liable to the penalties hereinbefore provided for, and shall, in addition, be liable to the person or persons, firm or corporation injured by such act or omission for the damages proximately resulting therefrom. * * *"

Section 43 of the act of 1911 declares:

"In case any railroad or other transportation company subject to this act shall do, cause to be done, or permit to be done any matter, act, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or shall omit to do any act, matter or thing herein required to be done by it, such railroad or other transportation company shall be liable to the person or persons, firm or corporation injured thereby for the damages sustained in consequence of such violation."

A charge of more for a short haul than a long one has been decided to be discrimination. It is so held in Southern Pacific Co. v. Superior Court of Kern County, 27 Cal. App. 240, 150 Pac. 397, where it is said:

"It should be kept in mind that section 21 of article 12 of the Constitution, both before and after the amendment of October 10, 1911, contains a prohibition against discrimination in charges between places, and that the so-called long and short haul clause, following the general provision against discriminations, is a particular application of the rule as first stated in general terms."

In addition to these acts declaring discrimination unlawful and providing for an action in case of such discrimination, a right of action is also given by the Public Utilities Act of 1911, heretofore referred to. Section 73 (a) thereof declares as follows:

"In case any public utility shall do, cause to be done or permit to be done any act, matter or thing prohibited, forbidden or declared to be unlawful, * * * either by the Constitution, or any law of this state, * * * such public utility shall be liable to the persons or corporations affected thereby for all loss, damages or injury caused thereby or resulting therefrom. * * * An action to recover for such loss, damage or injury may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction by any corporation, or person."

It is quite apparent, we think, from these provisions of the two acts, respectively of 1909 and 1911, and the Public Utilities Act of 1911, that a right of action is conferred on any person injured by discrimination through a violation of the long and short haul clause of the Constitution and without any regard to whether a right of action existed at common law or not.

4. As we have said, some of the shipments charged were prior to October 10, 1911, and prior to the adoption of the amendments to sections 21 and 22 of the Constitution and the others subsequent thereto. It is insisted by appellant that the rates charged for all shipments prior to October 10, 1911, were established by the Railroad Commission and that those rates, as they existed when the amendments referred to were adopted, were continued in force and effect by such constitutional provisions. This contention is based upon what is known as the Railroad Commission Act of 1911 and section 22 of article 12 of the Constitution, above quoted. Sections 17 and 18 of the Railroad Commission Act (St. 1911, p. 13), mentioned in the constitutional provision, provided:

"All rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight * * * shall remain in effect until changed by the commission." Section 18.

"* * * Until the establishment of such rates and classifications or the establishment of others in lieu thereof, the said railroad or other transportation company filing such schedules or tariffs and classifications, and parties thereto, shall charge and collect the rates and fares in effect at the time of the passage of this act." Section 17.

[4] Now it is quite apparent that as far as the defense is made that the rates charged prior to October 10, 1911, had been established by the Railroad Commission, and were therefore valid and a protection to defendant, it cannot be sustained. While it is true that during the period from 1879 to the time of the amendment of October 10, 1911, the railroads were powerless to fix rates themselves and the only authority to do so was vested under the Constitution in the Railroad Commission, still the latter body could only fix rates which were authorized by the Constitution. Counsel do not pretend to point out where the commission derived the power or authority to fix rates discriminatory as to a short or long haul. As a matter of fact, none existed. All the commission was authorized to do was to fix reasonable rates—legal rates. And as the Constitution absolutely prohibited the charging of rates in contravention of the long and short haul provision thereof, the acts of the commission in attempting to do so were clearly void and afforded no protection to the carrier. The only theory upon which the claim of appellant could be sustained would be that the constitutional provision as it stood prior to October 10, 1911, was void as contravening the commerce clause of the federal Constitution; but, as we have seen that it was not, the defense of appellant vanished with it.

As to the further claim that the said amendments adopted on October 10, 1911, continued in effect existing rates as shown in established tariff lists on file with the commission. This applies to the charges made by appellant subsequent to October 10, 1911. It will be noted that the amendment to section 21, article 12, provides that on application of the transportation company to the Railroad Commission the commission "may, in special cases, after investigation, be authorized by such commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances. * * *" On October 26, 1911, an order was made by the commission on its own initiative requiring railroads or other transportation companies then charging rates not in conformity with the long and short haul clause to file with the commission a schedule of such rates, and if it wished to justify such charges to then file also an application to be relieved from the prohibition of the constitutional provision as to long and short haul charges. On November 20, 1911, and on January 16, 1912, other orders were made by the commission of its own volition in favor of railroads and other transportation companies granting them permission to file with the commission a list of such changes in rates and fares as would occur in the ordinary course of their business "continuing under the present rate basis or adjustment higher rates or fares at intermediate points, provided a discrimination against intermediate points was not greater than it existed October 10, 1911," but expressly declaring "that the commission does not hereby indicate that it will approve any rates and fares that will be filed under this permission or conceding the reasonableness of any higher rates to intermediate points, all of which rates and fares will be investigated at the hearing to be held January 2, 1912."

Now, it appears from the record in this case that the defendant never filed any application pursuant to said orders, or at all, until December 30, 1911, and February 15, 1912, on which dates it filed applications showing deviations by it from the prohibition of the long and short haul clause and asking for relief from the prohibitory constitutional provision. The record, too, affirmatively shows that no investigation was had on these applications, the same being continued from time to time, the last continuance prior to this action being till April 4, 1912, and it does not appear that any order was finally made approving any rates or fares contained in the schedules filed by the defendant. The position of the defendant is that these orders continued in effect the charges existing when the amendments to sections 21 and 22 were adopted; that the commission was given power to establish such as the rates under the permission of section 15 of the Railroad Commission Act, authorizing it to fix rates, which act is referred to in said amendment to section 22 and must be construed in connection with the terms of said section 22, which declares that:

"No provision of this Constitution shall be construed as a limitation upon the authority of the Legislature to confer upon the Railroad Commission additional powers of the same kind or different from those conferred herein which are not inconsistent with the powers conferred upon the Railroad Commission in this Constitution, and the authority of the Legislature to confer such additional powers is expressly declared to be plenary and unlimited by any provision of this Constitution."

These same points which defendant is making here were made by the defendant in the Southern Pacific case in the Circuit Court of Appeals, which we have heretofore referred to and cited. In disposing of these points it is said in that decision:

"But it does not appear that the defendant filed such an application until December 30, 1911, or that an investigation was ever had by the commission, or that it ever made an order finally approving any of said rates or fares. If, indeed, the orders of the commission may be construed as expressly giving by their terms authority to continue in effect until an investigation of the rates then in existence, which deviated from the constitutional provision as to the long and short haul, it is obvious that the commission erroneously assumed that the act of 1911 gave it the power to make such an order. The amendment of 1911 gives the power to authorize a deviation from the prohibition of the Constitution only upon the application of the carrier, and after an investigation by the commission, for it does not, as does the act of Congress giving authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission, authorize the fixing of temporary rates pending investigation. Assuming that under such a temporary order the defendant continued to make charges forbidden by the Constitution, it would be necessary for it to show, in defending an action for the recovery of such charges, that the commission finally approved the rates, and made them valid by an order made after an application and investigation as required by the statute."

And answering the claim as to the power given to the commission under the provisions of section 22 immediately above quoted, the court continues:

"We think it is very clear that an act authorizing the commission to establish rates regardless of the provisions of section 21 of the amended Constitution would be inconsistent with that section. While section 22 declares that the Legislature may confer upon the commission powers additional to those conferred upon it by the Constitution, it erects a barrier which the Legislature cannot pass, in providing that such powers must not be inconsistent with the powers conferred upon the commission by the Constitution. The Constitution specifically points out the method whereby relief can be had from the prohibition as to the long and short haul, and it is clear that any statute which provides a method for obtaining such relief other than the method therein prescribed is inconsistent with it."

of the long and short haul is provided in the Constitution itself. It can be invoked only through an application filed by the railroad or other transportation company. Relief can only be granted after an investigation, which, of course, means an investigation for the purpose of determining what are reasonable rates and by an order finally made on the application approving the rates which constitute the deviation. Its authority to act and the method of procedure to be pursued being thus expressly prescribed by the Constitution, any other method would be inconsistent with the method prescribed and nugatory.

Two other points are made by defendant: First, that as no protest was made against the payment of the freight charges when exacted the payment must be treated as voluntary and no action for their recovery back can be maintained; second, that in order to sustain a claim for discrimination it was necessary for plaintiff to show that when the shipments to intermediate points were made for which the higher rates were charged, there were contemporaneous shipments made to the more distant points. These objections need no extended discussion.

[6] As to the matter of protest: Plaintiff alleged that all plaintiff's assignors, who were the consignees of the shipments, were compelled to pay the charges in order to obtain their consignments and defendant in its answer admitted that if the payments had not been made the consignees could not have obtained the goods. It would have been an idle waste of words to have made a payment under protest and the rule is that money thus paid is not voluntarily paid but may be recovered back without protest. Mobile & Montgomery R. R. Co. v. Steiner et al., 61 Ala. 559; Chicago & Alton R. R. Co. v. C. V. & W. Coal Co., 79 Ill. 121.

[7] Nor do we think it material whether, when the shipments to intermediate points complained of as excessively charged for were made, no contemporaneous shipment to the more distant point was made. Under the constitutional provision the legitimate maximum charge for the shorter haul is the charge the carrier makes for the longer one and it is only necessary to show in proof of an illegal discrimination that the shipper paid a larger sum for the short haul than the defendant would have charged for the longer one. Actual shipment for the longer distance is not required to be shown. All that is required is a showing that the defendant held out and published to the shipping world that it would charge certain rates for the transportation of a certain class of merchandise from San Francisco to Los Angeles. This was shown, and, when shown, for the purpose of determining whether discrimination was practiced or not, the rates so held out to be charged are deemed in law to have been charged.

These are all the points made by defendant, and, as we do not find any of them tenable, the judgment is affirmed.

CHINN v. PENN et al. (L. A. 4612.)

1. GUARANTY ⊂⊃36(3)—CONSTRUCTION—MORTGAGEE'S INDORSEMENT OF NOTE.
The rule that a note and mortgage executed as parts of one transaction constitute one contract, to be construed together, does not render a mortgagee who has guaranteed the note liable for attorney's fees and other charges provided for in the mortgage, but not in the note.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⊂⊃135 — MORTGAGE AS PART OF NOTE.
The words "Note secured by a mortgage," immediately above the body of the note, do not make the additional obligations contained in the mortgage a part of the note.

3. MORTGAGES ⊂⊃401(4) — ACCELERATION OF DUE DATE — NOTICE — COMMENCEMENT OF SUIT.
The commencement of suit to foreclose a mortgage after default of interest payments was an exercise of mortgage provision to declare the whole sum due at holder's option, and no previous notice to defendants was necessary.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Suit by J. B. Chinn against Harry Penn and others for mortgage foreclosure. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant G. L. Crenshaw appeals. Reversed with directions.

Hickcox & Crenshaw, of Los Angeles, for appellant. James, Smith & McCarthy and Herbert Freston, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant Crenshaw appeals from the judgment foreclosing a mortgage executed by the defendant Harry Penn to Crenshaw, and by Crenshaw indorsed to the plaintiff. The note secured by the mortgage contained no obligation except the promise to pay the principal thereof, $3,500, with interest at 7 per cent., payable quarterly, to be compounded if not paid when due, and providing that the whole sum of principal and interest should become due, at the option of the holder, upon failure to pay any installment of the interest when due. The mortgage declared that it was made to secure, not only the principal and interest of the note, but also all advancements made by the holder thereof for taxes and assessments which were liens on the property mortgaged, attorney's fees for foreclosing the same, and fees for searching the title preparatory to such foreclosure. Crenshaw sold and assigned the note and mortgage to the plaintiff. The guaranty of the note by Crenshaw was evidenced by an indorsement on the back of the note in these words:

"Pay J. B. Chinn or order, payment guaranteed, protest waived.

"[Signed] G. L. Crenshaw."

The court below gave judgment of foreclosure for the amount of the note and interest then due, together with $200 as attorney's fees and the amounts advanced by the holder of the note for the payment of taxes and assessments on the property and $15 as a fee for searching the title, amounting in the aggregate to $4,391.03. This sum was made a personal charge against Crenshaw and the judgment provided that if the property did not sell for enough to pay the same, a judgment for the deficiency should thereupon be entered against Crenshaw. In support of his appeal Crenshaw insists that the guaranty upon which alone he was held runs to the note only, and cannot be held to be a guaranty of payment of the attorney's fees and other charges provided for in the mortgage, but not in the note.

[1, 2] We think the appellant's contention must be sustained. It is true that for many purposes a note and mortgage executed as parts of one transaction are to be treated as constituting one contract, and are to be considered and construed together. Meyer v. Weber, 133 Cal. 683, 65 Pac. 1110; Trinity Co. Bank v. Haas, 151 Cal. 555, 91 Pac. 385. But it does not follow from this that one who in terms guarantees payment of the note must also be held to have guaranteed the payment of other and different obligations contained only in the mortgage. The transfer in this case was manifested by an assignment duly executed by Crenshaw. This assignment referred both to the mortgage and the note and purports to transfer the same to the plaintiff, but it contained no guaranty of the payment of the obligations of either instrument. The guaranty was manifested solely by the indorsement on the note, and there is nothing in the language thereof which can be construed as extending it to other obligations not specified in the note. It was not executed at the same time as the note and mortgage, nor as part of the same transaction, but was made afterwards as a part of the sale and transfer of the note from the holder to the plaintiff. The words "Note secured by a mortgage," immediately above the body of the note, do not make the additional obligations contained in the mortgage a part of the note. Crenshaw had the right to sell the note and mortgage on such terms as he chose to make, and to limit his guaranty to a part only of the obligations of the entire contract. His indorsement of the note, guaranteeing that instrument, cannot be extended by implication, so as to cover other obligations contained only in the mortgage. Having thus limited his guaranty by his written contract declaring the same, he is bound only by its terms. The court erred in rendering judgment against Crenshaw for the tax liens and fees provided for only in the mortgage. To this extent the judgment is erroneous.

[3] There is no merit in the appellant's contention that the action was prematurely begun. Installments of interest fell due May 1 and August 1, 1914, and were not paid. Thereupon the holder declared the entire sum due, and on August 9th filed his complaint in foreclosure. The commencement of the action was an exercise of the option to declare the whole sum due, and no previous notice to the defendants was necessary. Hewitt v. Dean, 91 Cal. 5, 27 Pac. 423; Trinity Co. Bank v. Haas, supra.

The contention that the court failed to find on the disputed allegation that the installment of interest falling due on August 1, 1914, had not been paid is not sustained by the record. The findings declare that no part of the interest had been paid, except the installment falling due on February 1, 1914.

The mortgage provided for foreclosure upon nonpayment of interest. At the time the judgment was rendered the note had come due according to its terms, without any acceleration of payment by reason of the nonpayment of the interest and the exercise of the option of the holder to declare it to become due. Under these circumstances the court was authorized to render a judgment foreclosing the mortgage for the entire amount and directing the sale of the property to satisfy the same, even if the payment had not been accelerated as claimed. Orange Growers' Bank v. Duncan, 133 Cal. 256, 65 Pac. 469; Bostwick v. McEvoy, 62 Cal. 502; Code Civ. Proc. § 728. For this reason the point, which the appellant suggests, that the holder of the note, by his indulgence after the nonpayment of the May installment of the interest, had deprived himself of the right to declare the entire principal due, has become immaterial. We may say, however, that we know of no case which would support the point, on the facts found, even if it were important.

A new trial does not appear to be necessary. The findings cover all the issues, and it is clear that there is no defense to the action, except the one above noted in behalf of Crenshaw. The judgment should have declared for a deficiency judgment against Crenshaw only for the amount of the note and interest and costs, without including the other obligations for fees and taxes and liens paid on the property. We are unable to ascertain the manner in which the court made its calculations as to the amounts, and therefore we cannot modify the judgment directly by ordering a deduction from the amount thereof. The error can be rectified by remanding the case to the court below, directing a new judgment to be entered there.

It is ordered that the judgment be reversed, and that the cause be remanded to the court below, and that thereupon that court enter a new judgment of foreclosure in accordance with this opinion.

37 Cal. App. 411

FRAME v. BARNUM, County Auditor.

(S. F. 8804.)

1. COUNTIES ⟸164—WARRANTS—PRESENTATION OF CLAIM.

Under Pol. Code, § 4091, making it duty of county auditor to draw warrant in payment of claims against county, where amounts are fixed by law, claim of copyist in county recorder's office for compensation for work during any month, not fixed by section 4324, subd. 3, must be allowed by supervisors before auditor is authorized to draw warrant for it.

2. REGISTERS OF DEEDS ⟸3—COPYIST—COMPENSATION.

Under Pol. Code, §§ 4130, 4234, subd. 3, copyist in county recorder's office is entitled to be paid only for words actually copied by her into books of record, not for printed words in forms which she fills in.

In Bank. Petition for mandamus by Lillian Frame against Charles E. Barnum, County Auditor of Fresno County, Cal. The writ was discharged by the District Court of Appeal, and petitioner petitions for hearing by the Supreme Court. Judgment of the District Court of Appeal affirmed in part.

The following is the opinion of Kerrigan, J., in the District Court of Appeal, concurred in by Zook and Beasly, Judges pro tem.:

This is a proceeding in mandamus, brought by petitioner, a copyist in the office of the county recorder of Fresno county, against the auditor of that county, for the purpose of compelling said auditor to draw a warrant upon the county treasurer for the payment of $599.10, alleged to be due to her as such copyist for her services during the months of February and March, 1918, the amount of said demand being approved by the county recorder. The auditor justifies his refusal to issue the warrant upon two grounds, namely, that in computing the number of folios covered by the demand the copyist had included a large number of words not actually written by her, but which were printed in the books of record in which her work of copying was done; and, second, that the demand of petitioner had not been presented to nor allowed by the board of supervisors of the county.

As to the first of these points, section 4130 of the Political Code (which relates to the duties of the county recorder of Fresno county) provides that the recorder must procure such books for records as the business of his office requires, and that such books may contain printed forms of deeds or other instruments of general use. Elsewhere it is provided that he shall charge and collect 10 cents per folio for recording in such books papers presented therefor. In subdivision 3 of section 4234 of said Code it is provided that the recorder shall have such copyists as are necessary to perform the duties of the office at a compensation of 6 cents per folio. In the present case the recorder procured books containing such printed forms, and it is admitted that a large number of the folios contained in the petitioner's demand covered these printed words; the documents upon which petitioner's work was done being written upon one of the standard forms thus carried into the recorder's books. It is the contention of the respondent that the petitioner is only entitled to be paid for the words actually copied by her into the books of record.

It appears in paragraph VI of the petition for the writ that for many years last past the recorder has kept in his office such books containing printed forms of instruments of general use, and that the compensation of copyists in his office has, until the time of the refusal of the respondent to honor petitioner's present demand, been calculated upon the basis of computing the printed matter of these forms as a part of the work copied. This is not denied by the respondent, although he disclaims that he had knowledge of the fact. During the time that this practice has been in vogue the law governing the office of the county recorder of Fresno county has been amended by the Legislature on several occasions; and we think it reasonable to infer that in establishing the rate to be paid to the copyist at 6 cents per folio the Legislature had this practice in mind. To any one familiar with this kind of work it is apparent that, if the Legislature had intended that only the words actually written by the copyist in filling in these prepared printed pages should be included in arriving at the amount to be paid therefor, the rate fixed would have been much higher, for the reason that the writing of such insertions must necessarily proceed at a much slower rate than would the writing of an equal number of words where the whole document is copied, the words comprising such insertions being names, dates, quantities, and descriptions—in a word, the most difficult part of the documents, and that requiring the most time to copy. Taking a broad view of this question, and bearing in mind that the county recorder is authorized by the same act to charge and collect from the public for recording an instrument nearly twice the rate per folio paid to the copyist for incorporating it into the records, and that in his charge to the public he treats the printed words as written ones, we are of the opinion that the petitioner was correct in computing her demand as she did.

This brings us to the next question, namely, whether such demand should have been presented to the board of supervisors for allowance. Section 4091 of the Political Code makes it the duty of the county auditor to draw a warrant (1) in payment of claims that have been legally examined, allowed and ordered paid by the board of supervisors; (2) in payment of debts and demands against the county where the amounts are fixed by law; and (3) in payment of debts and demands when approved and allowed, and are such as are authorized by law to be allowed by some person or tribunal other than the board of supervisors. It is not contended by the petitioner that her demand is one that is authorized to be allowed by some person or tribunal other than the board of supervisors; but it is urged that it comes within the category of amounts fixed by law, for the reason, as alleged, that the payments made to copyists are salary or compensation of a county officer, deputy, or assistant. Four cases are cited to the effect that the board of supervisors has no power to pass upon matters concerning salaries or compensation of such persons. An examination of the cases cited discloses that they have no application to the case at bar. Three of them deal with the question of the constitutionality of enactments, either by the Legislature or by the board of supervisors of a county, which purport directly or indirectly to increase the compensation of a county officer during his term, and the fourth, namely, Agard v. Shaffer, 141 Cal. 725, 75 Pac. 343, if applicable to this case, would deprive the petitioner of any compensation at all, at least out of the county treasury.

We think it very clear that the compensation payable to a copyist in the recorder's office for work performed during any one month is not fixed by law, but that the law merely establishes a basis or standard by which the amount due may be determined. Such a claim, therefore, must be presented to and allowed by the board of supervisors before the county auditor is authorized to draw a warrant for its payment. This procedure has been held to be compulsory in paying the compensation of an expert employed by the grand jury under section 928 of the Penal Code, in paying for the services of the coroner on the basis of fees fixed by law, or the fees due to a constable. The present case comes within the authority of Woody v. Peairs, 170 Pac. 660, where the court had under consideration the question as to whether the auditor of Kern county should draw his warrant in favor of a detective who had been employed by the grand jury of that county, and whose claim had been approved by the foreman and secretary of that body. After referring to sections 4307, 4075, 4076, and 4091 of the Political Code, the court said: "There are, it is true, some cases in which claims against a county may be made upon the order of the judge of the superior court, as in a certain instance we have in mind (Pen. Code, § 869; McAllister v. Hamlin, 83 Cal. 361, 23 Pac. 357) by a magistrate. These cases, however, are exceptions to the general rule laid down upon the subject by the Legislature. In such cases the law expressly confers upon the judge or magistrate the power to order the claims to be paid. * * * But, unless there is some provision of law expressly authorizing a different course of procedure, all claims or charges against a county must be presented and filed and approved and allowed as provided by the sections of the Political Code above named, in which cases only is the auditor required to interpose his official approval as a prerequisite to the payment thereof by the treasurer."

For the foregoing reasons the writ is discharged.

Short & Sutherland and Carl E. Lindsay, all of Fresno, for petitioner. M. F. McCormick, Dist. Atty., of Fresno (R. G. Retallick, Deputy Dist. Atty., of Fresno, W. F. Schuermeyer, Dist. Atty., of San Diego, Ezra W. Decoto, Dist. Atty., of Oakland, and A. A. Rogers, Deputy Dist. Atty., of San Leandro, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J., and SHAW and WILBUR, JJ. On petition for hearing by the Supreme Court after decision by the District Court of Appeal:

[1, 2] While all of the justices of this court concur in the judgment of the District Court of Appeal discharging the writ of mandate, and in what is said in the opinion as to the necessity of presenting such a claim as that of petitioner to the board of supervisors for allowance, we are not in accord with the views of that court upon the first question discussed in the opinion. To the contrary, we are clearly satisfied that the contention of respondent that petitioner is entitled to be paid only for the words actually copied by her into the books of record is well based.

In minor's action for injuries when struck by street car, where the issue of the parents' contributory negligence, raised in the trial court, was not urged on appeal, it must be considered as having been abandoned.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. M. Conley, Special Judge.

Action by Harold Mayne, a minor, by George L. Mayne, his guardian ad litem, against the San Diego Electric Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Read G. Dilworth, of Coronado, and E. S. Torrance and E. Swift Torrance, both of San Diego, for appellant. William G. Mirow and Henning & McGee, all of San Diego, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in plaintiff's favor, for the sum of $5,000 damages, in an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. The accident out of which the plaintiff's injuries arose, occurred on Fifth street, about midway between B and C streets, in the business portion of the city of San Diego. The time of its occurrence was about 4:45 o'clock in the afternoon of December 16, 1913. At that time, and for some years prior thereto, the defendant was engaged in operating an electric street railway system in said city, and on and along Fifth street therein, having a double line of tracks on said street, and running cars to and fro frequently thereon. Just prior to the accident the plaintiff, who was then a lad 7 years 8 months old, following another boy of about the same age, undertook to cross from the west to the east side of Fifth street, about midway in the block between B and C streets. The companion of the plaintiff, being in advance of him, succeeded in crossing safely; but the plaintiff was struck by one of the cars of the defendant and seriously injured. He alleges in his complaint that his injuries occurred through the negligence of the defendant's agents and employés in charge of said car, in operating the same at an excessive rate of speed, and in failing to ring a bell or gong, or sound a whistle or other warning of the near and dangerous approach of the car, and that he had no warning thereof. He also alleges that the portion of the pavement of the street lying next to and between the tracks of the defendant, and which it was its duty to keep in repair and flush with the street, under the ordinances of said city and the franchise of said defendant, it had negligently and carelessly permitted to remain out of repair, and to become and be in a dangerous and defective condition, and that the plaintiff, in his attempt to cross said street, caught his foot in a rut or breach in that portion of said pavement thus out of repair, thereby causing him to stumble and fall in front of the approaching car, which ran against and over him with great force, causing the injuries complained of. He further alleges that the defendant was negligent in permitting the fender upon the car which struck him to be in a dangerous and defective condition, which fact further contributed to cause his injuries. The defendant denies that it was guilty of negligence in any of the respects asserted by the plaintiff, and affirmatively avers that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence which was the proximate cause of his injuries, and further alleges that the parents of the plaintiff were negligent in permitting him to go unattended by a proper custodian upon the streets of said city where the cars of the defendant were being operated, and that such negligence on their part proximately contributed to his injuries.

[1, 2] The appellant urges two main contentions upon this appeal: First, that there was no evidence to prove or tend to prove any negligence whatsoever on the part of the defendant or any of its servants or employés; second, that the plaintiff's own contributory negligence was the proximate cause of his injuries. As to the first of these propositions, the record shows that upon the trial of the cause, and at an early stage in the plaintiff's presentation of his case, a witness named W. S. King, who qualified as a civil engineer, was produced on plaintiff's behalf, who testified as to the condition of the pavement along and between the defendant's tracks at and near the place of the accident, stating that the roadway at these points was in bad condition; that there were depressions or holes in the pavement two feet wide, three or four feet long, and two inches deep, the edges of which were rough, where the asphalt was broken off by the wheels of traffic, and that the pavement had been in this condition for many months. He presented a plat of that portion of the street illustrating his evidence in respect to its condition. Another witness for plaintiff, named McCoy, testified that he observed the state of the pavement on the morning after the accident occurred; that it was very rough and uneven; that there were places a foot and a half or so wide, the edges of which were curled up and rough and uneven along the rails; and that he noticed the blood spots upon the rails where the plaintiff had been struck and his arm crushed at the immediate point where these rough and uneven and curled up places were. The plaintiff was about to produce other witnesses to the same effect, when counsel for the defendant offered to admit:

"That for the period of a year before the happening of the accident, and at the time of the accident, Fifth street, in this city, between A street on the north and Broadway or D on the south, was out of repair; that is, the whole roadway was out of repair and in the same general condition described by the witness King, and as shown by this diagram which has been introduced in evidence."

The diagram referred to was one drawn by King, illustrating his evidence as to the condition of the defendant's roadway at the place of the plaintiff's injuries. The foregoing admission was suggested by the defendant and accepted by the plaintiff as obviating the need of further witnesses upon this branch of the plaintiff's case. The plaintiff had already testified that he had stumbled and fallen at the place where he was struck by the car, and that it was the holes along the car track which caused him to stumble and fall. In support of this testimony given by the plaintiff, the witness Washburn testified that he saw the plaintiff at the time he fell, and that he saw his foot go down into one of the holes along the track when he stumbled and fell. It is a conceded fact that the state of the defendant's roadbed at the point of the plaintiff's injury was in violation of the terms of its franchise and of the ordinances of the city requiring it to keep its roadbed in repair. It is not contended that the plaintiff as a pedestrian did not have the right to cross the street at the place of his injury. In this state of the record it is idle to attempt to argue that there was not ample evidence of the defendant's negligence in respect to keeping the roadbed alongside its tracks in repair, and that its negligence in that regard caused the plaintiff to stumble and fall in the path of an approaching car, to have justified the court in submitting that issue under a proper instruction to the jury, and also to have justified the verdict of the jury in plaintiff's favor upon that issue. The defendant's offered instruction that "there is not sufficient evidence in this case to justify you in finding a verdict for the plaintiff; you are therefore directed by the court to return a verdict for the defendant," was therefore properly refused. Upon the other averments of the plaintiff's complaint as to the rate of speed at which the car was going just prior to the accident, and as to whether any warning signals of its approach had been given, and as to whether the cars of the defendant were equipped with suitable fenders, some testimony both ways was elicited, sufficient, in our opinion, to have justified the trial court in submitting these matters to the jury under proper instructions. We have examined the instructions which the trial court gave in respect to these several matters, and find them to have been very full, fair, and clear, and that they more correctly state the law in relation to the matters covered by them than the defendant's offered and rejected instructions do, and hence that the latter were properly refused by the trial court.

[3] The next point upon which the appellant relies is that of the plaintiff's contributory negligence. The appellant argues that upon the undisputed facts in the case contributory negligence is a matter of law to be imputed to the plaintiff, and hence that it was entitled to have its requested instruction given to the jury to return a verdict in the defendant's favor. We have examined the array of cases cited by the appellant in support of this view, and we find that, with the exception of a few scattered cases presenting peculiar and exceptional conditions, they show that as a rule courts upon appeal have not interfered with the discretion of trial courts in referring or in refusing to refer to juries the question as to whether the contributory negligence of children of the age of 14 years or under was such as to prevent their recovery for injuries sustained by them. This court, in the case of Cahill v. Stone & Co., 153 Cal. 571, 96 Pac. 84, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094, after review of the leading cases bearing upon this subject in this and other states, said:

"There is no precise age at which, as a matter of law, a child is to be held accountable for all his actions to the same extent as one of full age. Consolidated, etc., Ry. Co. v. Carlson, 58 Kan. 66 [48 Pac. 635]. In that case it is said: 'The question as to the capacity of a particular child at a particular time to exercise care in avoiding a particular danger is one of fact, falling within the province of a jury to determine.' The child there referred to was ten years of age. In Biggs v. Consolidated, etc., Wire Co., 60 Kan. 223 [56 Pac. 4, 44 L. R. A. 655], the same rule was applied to a boy of fourteen years; the court saying: 'We cannot say, as a matter of law, at what age a boy would be possessed of such intelligence, foresight and judgment as to charge him with contributory negligence in a case like the present.' In the case at bar the question of plaintiff's possession of sufficient intelligence and foresight is foreclosed, so far as the pleading is concerned, by the allegation that 'he was too young and inexperienced to foresee the danger.' It may be conceded that many boys of the age of twelve years would have perceived the danger attending the acts of the plaintiff which led to his injury. There is, however, no conclusive presumption that a twelve year old boy is able to foresee such danger, or that he has sufficient wisdom to avoid it."

The above ruling of the court was upon demurrer; but when the same case was again before this court after a trial and verdict for the plaintiff, wherein the same question was presented upon appeal, the court in commenting upon its former ruling, and upon a further review of cases from other jurisdictions touching the subject, stated that:

"While it is the general rule in regard to an adult or grown person that, to entitle him to recover for an injury resulting from the fault or negligence of another, he must have been free from fault himself, it is not the general rule applied to the conduct of children. Minors, as well as adults, are required to exercise ordinary care; but it is well settled that the ordinary care which a child is required to exercise must be determined by a different rule than is applied in the case of adults. The care which a child is required to exercise is only that degree of care which children of his maturity and capacity under similar circumstances ordinarily exercise; and this, except in a case where there can be no doubt under the evidence that the child not only knew, but at the time realized and appreciated, the danger of his conduct, is to be determined from the circumstances of the particular case in which his conduct is involved, and under the evidence there presented to the jury. The rule is clearly declared by this court on the former appeal in this case heretofore referred to (Cahill v. Stone Co., 153 Cal. 571 [19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094, 96 Pac. 84]), as it has often theretofore been declared. On that appeal it was said: 'There is no precise age at which, as a matter of law, a child is to be held accountable for all his actions to the same extent as one of full age.' Consolidated, etc., Ry. Co. v. Carlson, 58 Kan. 66 [48 Pac. 637]. In that case it is said: 'The question as to the capacity of a particular child at a particular time to exercise care in avoiding a particular danger, is one of fact, falling within the province of a jury to determine.' The child there referred to was ten years of age. In Biggs v. Consolidated, etc., Wire Co., 60 Kan. 223 [44 L. R. A. 655, 56 Pac. 6], the same rule was applied to a boy of fourteen years, the court saying: 'We cannot say, as a matter of law, at what age a boy would be possessed of such intelligence, foresight and judgment as to charge him with contributory negligence in a case like the present.' Laying down the same rule are Barrett v. Southern Pacific Co., 91 Cal. 296 [25 Am. St. Rep. 186, 27 Pac. 666]; Foley v. California Horseshoe Co., 115 Cal. 184 [56 Am. St. Rep. 87, 47 Pac. 42]; Jensen v. Will & Fink Co., 150 Cal. 398 [89 Pac. 113]. As said in the Foley Case: 'These matters, and the further question whether the minor duly exercised such judgment as he possessed, must, therefore, as a rule, be left as considerations of fact for the jury's determination; and it would be an exceptional case which would present them as unmixed questions of law for the determination of the court.' See, also, Pierce v. United Gas & Elec. Co., 161 Cal. 176 [118 Pac. 700]." Cahill v. Stone Co., 167 Cal. 126, 138 Pac. 712.

In the case of Pierce v. United Gas & Elec. Co., 161 Cal. 176, 118 Pac. 700, this court held an instruction of the trial court to be erroneous which took from the jury the question as to whether or not under the circumstances of that case the deceased children of the ages of 13 and 11 years, respectively, were to be held guilty of contributory negligence. In conformity with these rulings we are of the opinion that under the circumstances of the case at bar, the trial court, having before it all of the facts and witnesses in the case and particularly having an opportunity to hear the testimony, observe the actions, and determine the intelligence of the injured boy, did not err in determining that the question of his contributory negligence as a bar to his right of recovery in the action was one which should properly be submitted to the jury.

[4] As to the question whether the parents of the child were guilty of contributory negligence in permitting him to go unattended upon the public streets, this issue, while raised in the defendant's answer, has not been pressed upon appeal, and must therefore be considered as having been abandoned.

No other questions being presented requiring our consideration, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

SAN FRANCISCO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY v. MONTEREY COUNTY GAS & ELECTRIC CO. (S. F. 8149.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 14, 1918. Rehearing Denied Nov. 11, 1918.)

1. GUARANTY ⊂⊃27—CONSTRUCTION OF GUARANTY CONTRACT—LIABILITY.
A guarantor cannot be held beyond the express terms of the contract of guaranty.
2. GUARANTY ⊂⊃47—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—MORTGAGE PROVISION—ACCELERATION OF DUE DATE.
Where bonds referred to the securing mortgage for holders' rights, and terms and conditions of issue, and guarantor contracted to see that the sums named in the bonds were paid in the manner and time therein stated, when the bonds were declared due under a mortgage provision for accelerating due date, the guarantor's liability for the principal of the bonds accrued.
3. GUARANTY ⊂⊃77(1)—CONTRACT—ENFORCING PAYMENT—MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE.
Where obligation of guarantor of bonds is not secured by the mortgage securing the bonds, suit may be maintained on it without reference to any proceeding against the principal debtor or the security.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the San Francisco Theological Seminary, a corporation, against the Monterey County Gas & Electric Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, for appellant. W. F. Williamson and W. H. Conlin, both of San Francisco (R. H. Cross, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This is one of a group of 17 cases, in each of which the defendant appeals from a judgment against it. The several actions were brought by different plaintiffs, as holders of bonds issued by Monterey & Pacific Grove Railway Company (herein called the "Railway Company"), to recover on a written guaranty by the defendant (herein called the "Gas Company") of the payment of such bonds. In each action the plaintiff had judgment for the full amount of the principal of the bonds so held, together with accrued interest. In some of the cases, the defendant failed to answer after the overruling of its demurrer to the complaint, and judgment went against it by default. In others, an answer was filed, and judgment was rendered after trial; the court making findings in substantial accord with the allegations of the several complaints. Notwithstanding this difference, the material facts and the legal questions to be decided are the same in all the cases, and all have been submitted together.

In 1907, the Railway Company took the necessary steps for the creation of a bonded indebtedness in the sum of $300,000, evidenced by 300 bonds, in the sum of $1,000 each. The bonds were issued under date of July 1, 1907, and were made payable July 1, 1937, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually. Coupons for the interest installments were attached. The indebtedness was secured by a mortgage or deed of trust made by the Railway Company to the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco. The Gas Company was the owner of all of the capital stock of the Railway Company. It guaranteed the payment of the bonds by executing a printed form indorsed upon each bond. The guaranty was in these words:

"Guaranty of Payment.

"For value received, Monterey County Gas & Electric Company, a corporation, agrees, to and with the holder of this bond and the attached coupons, that if the several sums of money agreed to be paid hereby are not paid in the manner therein stated, as they severally become due, then and in that event the Monterey County Gas & Electric Company will pay the same. This contract is duly authorized by a resolution of the board of directors of the Monterey County Gas & Electric Company.

"Monterey County Gas & Electric Company.
"By George Heazelton, President.
"Attest: Burke Corbet, Secretary."

Each of the bonds set forth, on its face, a promise by the Railway Company to pay $1,000 on the 1st day of July, 1937, and to pay interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, as per coupons attached, on the 1st days of January and July in each year. It went on to declare that:

"This bond is one of a series of first mortgage 6 per cent. bonds of the Monterey & Pacific Grove Railway Company, of the denomination of one thousand dollars ($1,000) each, * * * issued and to be issued * * * under the provisions of and to be equally secured by a mortgage, dated July 1, 1907, executed by the Monterey & Pacific Grove Railway Company to the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco, as trustee, to which mortgage reference is hereby made for a description of the property, rights and franchises mortgaged, the nature and extent of the security, the rights of holders of bonds under the same, and the terms and conditions upon which the bonds are issued and secured."

Article 5 of the mortgage provided that in case of default by the Railway Company in the payment of interest on any bond, and a continuance of such default for 90 days,

"the trustee may, and upon the written request of the holders of a majority in amount of the bonds hereby secured and then outstanding shall, by notice in writing delivered to the Railway Company, declare the principal of all bonds secured hereby and then outstanding to be forthwith due and payable, and thereupon the same shall become and be immediately due and payable, anything in this indenture or in said bonds contained to the contrary notwithstanding."

Article 5 goes on to provide that after such declaration that the principal is due, if all arrears of interest be paid and all other defaults made good, the holders of a majority in amount of the bonds then outstanding may by written notice waive such default and its consequences. The Railway Company defaulted in the payment of the interest coupons maturing on the 1st day of January, 1915, and no part of the interest then due has been paid. On June 12, 1915, the trustee, exercising the authority conferred upon it by article 5 of the mortgage, declared the principal sum of all the bonds to be immediately due and payable, and demanded payment thereof from said Railway Company, but said Railway Company has failed to pay the same.

[1] The main contention of the appellant is that the action is premature, in so far as it attempts to make the guarantor immediately liable to pay the principal sum of the bonds. The argument is that by its guaranty the Gas Company merely undertook to pay if the sums agreed to be paid on the face of each bond were not "paid in the manner therein stated as they severally become due"; that by the bond the maker's obligation to pay principal matured on July 1, 1937, and that until there had been a default in making the payment then due, the guarantor could not be held liable for principal. It is settled law, as appellant contends, that a guarantor cannot be held beyond the express terms of the contract of guaranty. Postlethwaite v. Minor, 168 Cal. 227, 142 Pac. 55. If the agreement of the appellant went no further than to guarantee that the principal of the bonds should be paid on July 1, 1937, it could not be called upon to pay this amount at any time prior to such due date. The guarantor was not a party to the mortgage, and did not guarantee performance of the obligations imposed upon the Railway Company by the mortgage alone. The principle is well illustrated by the recent decision of Department 1 of this court in Chinn v. Penn (L. A. No. 4612), 175 Pac. 687. There the payee of a note secured by mortgage had assigned the note and mortgage, indorsing upon the note the words "Payment guaranteed." It was sought to hold the guarantor liable for the payment of attorney's fees, taxes, and assessments on the property; the mortgage providing that it secured these items, but the note making no reference to them. The court declared that the payee's—

"indorsement of the note guaranteeing that instrument cannot be extended by implication so as to cover other obligations contained only in the mortgage. Having thus limited his guaranty by his written contract declaring the same, he is bound only by its terms."

[2] But in the present case the undertaking of the Railway Company, expressed on the face of each bond, and guaranteed by the Gas Company, was not so closely limited as the argument of the appellant assumes. The bond not only promises to pay the principal on July 1, 1937, but it makes express reference to the mortgage in such manner as to incorporate the provision of that instrument for accelerating the maturity of the principal upon default in the payment of interest. It is true that the bond refers to the mortgage for specified purposes only, but the terms of the reference are broad enough to include the acceleration provision. Reference to the mortgage is made, so the bond declares, not only for a description of the property mortgaged and the nature and extent of the security, but for "the rights of holders of bonds under the same, and the terms and conditions upon which the bonds are issued and secured." One of the rights of holders of bonds under the mortgage is that the principal may be declared immediately due upon default, sufficiently long continued, in the payment of interest. That the due date of the principal may be so advanced is also one of "the terms and conditions" upon which the bonds are issued. Under any reasonable interpretation of the language of the bonds, the provisions of article 5 of the mortgage must be held to be included in the reference. In effect, the bond does not merely bind its maker to pay the principal upon the 1st day of July 1, 1937. By referring to the provisions of the mortgage, it qualifies the promise to pay, and declares that in certain contingencies the principal may become due at an earlier date. When, then, the guarantor bound itself to pay the several sums of money agreed to be paid by the bond if they were not "paid in the manner therein stated, as they severally became due," it made itself liable for the payment of the principal of the bonds whenever such principal should become due, whether on the 1st day of July, 1937, or at such earlier time as might be fixed under the mortgage provisions incorporated in the bond.

We are unable to see that the provision of the mortgage authorizing the holders of a majority of the bonds to waive past defaults has any bearing upon the question we have been discussing. By the declaration of the trustee, the principal has become due, and the liability of the guarantor has accrued. There is no occasion to consider the effect on such liability of a waiver, if the bondholders should take the necessary steps to effect a waiver. It is not suggested that they have, in fact, done so. The question of the extent of the guarantor's liability is simply one of construction.

The appellant relies upon two decisions of other courts, but we find that each of them is readily distinguishable, in respect to the form of words under consideration, from the case before us. In Union Trust Co. v. Detroit Motor Co., 117 Mich. 631, 76 N. W. 112, the writing provided that the makers "guarantee the prompt payment of the same [the bonds], both principal and interest, at the time and times specified in the bonds, and in each of them." The bonds merely stated that they were secured by a certain mortgage. They contained no reference to the provisions in the mortgage for accelerating the due date, and the decision was, accordingly, that the guarantors could not be held liable until default in payment "at the times specified" in the bonds themselves. In Dougan v. Evansville, etc., Railway Co., 15 App. Div. 483, 44 N. Y. Supp. 503, the court considered two causes of action, based on separate guarantees of different bond issues. The first cause of action was based on an instrument, by which the defendant guaranteed "the payment of the principal and interest mentioned in the within bond according to the tenor and effect thereof." There was a provision in the mortgage with reference to acceleration, but it did not provide that the principal should become due upon default in the payment of interest; it merely provided that upon such default, continuing for six months, the principal should become collectible out of the mortgaged premises. The court held that by this clause of the mortgage the maker of the bonds did not bind itself to pay the principal at any time before the ultimate due date. And it was for this reason that the guarantor was relieved of any liability to pay the principal before such date. In other words, the decision did not go upon the ground that the terms of the mortgage were not incorporated in the bond. The guarantor was not bound because the borrowing corporation itself was not liable for the principal until the expiration of the total period of the loan.

As bearing generally upon the questions discussed, and tending in some degree to sustain the views here announced, we may cite that part of the opinion in the Dougan Case, supra, which deals with the second cause of action, one based upon a bond issue and guaranty executed under conditions more closely analogous to those here presented; also Crump v. J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co., 136 Ky. 60, 123 S. W. 333.

[3] The appellant contends, further, that the liability here sought to be enforced is dependent upon the mortgage, and therefore can only be enforced by means of the action of foreclosure provided for in section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The claim is without merit. The guarantor's obligation rests solely upon its contract of guaranty. The mortgage is looked to merely to interpret and measure the extent of the guaranty. The guarantor's obligation is not secured by the mortgage, and suit may be maintained upon it without reference to any proceeding against the principal debtor or the security. Adams v. Wallace, 119 Cal. 67, 51 Pac. 14; Kinsel v. Ballou, 151 Cal. 754, 91 Pac. 620; Martin v. Becker, 169 Cal. 301, 146 Pac. 665, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 171.

The judgment is affirmed.

HUNTINGTON LAND & IMPROVEMENT CO. v. WALLACE et al. (L. A. 4458.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 18, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐641—FAILURE TO AUTHENTICATE RECORD.

Where record does not contain authentication of trial judge, required by statute to authorize court on appeal to consider affidavits upon which motion for injunction pendente lite was based, appeal from order granting such injunction will, where assailed upon sole ground that affidavits are insufficient to support it, be dismissed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by the Huntington Land & Improvement Company against Jenneth Wallace and others. From an order granting the plaintiff an injunction pendente lite, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Conrad Jensen and Lee Roy E. Keeley, both of Los Angeles, for appellants. Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and O. R. Robinson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from an order granting the plaintiff an injunction pendente lite.

The appellants assail the order upon the sole ground of the insufficiency of the affidavits upon which the motion was based to support said order, but the record as prepared does not contain the authentication by the trial judge required by the statute which would authorize us to consider those affidavits. The order appealed from must therefore be affirmed, for want of a record upon which the alleged error can be considered.

So ordered.

PEOPLE v. SMITH. (Cr. 440.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 10, 1918. Rehearing Denied Oct. 10, 1918; Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 7, 1918.)

PARENT AND CHILD ⊂=17(6)—WILLFUL FAILURE TO SUPPORT—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held insufficient to show that defendant's failure to furnish necessaries for his minor child was willful and without lawful excuse, within Pen. Code, § 270, since defendant was financially unable to support child, voluntarily provided for by others.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

F. J. Smith was convicted for failure to provide for his minor child, and appeals from an order denying his motion for new trial. Order reversed.

R. Platnauer, of Sacramento, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Appellant was convicted of the offense designated as "failure to provide for a minor child." He moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he appealed from said order.

Defendant and one Bessie Worth were married in Alameda county in November, 1909. While they were living together in Yolo county in 1911, and about a month before the birth of the child in question, defendant's wife left him, and they have been living separate and apart ever since. During its entire life the child has been in the custody of its mother. The defendant, at the time of the trial and for six years prior thereto, resided in Sacramento. The mother of the child at the time of the trial and for three years prior thereto resided at Nelson, Butte county. During the first six months of the year 1917 the defendant paid to the wife for the support of the child the sum of $75—$15 per month for January, February, and March, and $10 for each of the remaining months. It appears, also, that the child had a good home with its mother and its wants were amply provided for. It is true that the mother claimed that the child needed some winter clothing, but certainly such need was not very urgent on the 1st of September, when the offense is alleged to have been committed. Indeed, in response to questions on cross-examination, the wife testified that she provided a good home for the child; that it had enough clothes to keep it warm, and plenty to eat; and that "she had all those things during the last year from January on."

Appellant contends:

"First, that the superior court of Butte county has no jurisdiction to try him for the alleged offense, but that, if any offense was committed, it occurred in the county of appellant's residence, namely, Sacramento county. Secondly, appellant was and is under no legal liability to support the child, for the reason that he and his wife are and have been living separate, and the latter has at all times had the custody of the child. Thirdly, that, the child having been voluntarily provided with necessaries by persons other than its father, the latter has committed no crime."

It is further claimed that the prosecution failed to prove the ability of the defendant to support the child, and that the court committed grievous error in permitting the wife to testify against the defendant without his consent. All these propositions are learnedly argued, but we consider it necessary to notice specifically only the one relating to the ability of the father to contribute to the support of his child; and we consider the question as it bears upon and relates to the element of willfulness, which is an essential factor in the crime charged. The offense is defined in section 270 of the Penal Code as follows:

"A parent of either a legitimate or illegitimate minor child who willfully omits, without lawful excuse, to furnish necessary food, clothing, shelter, or medical attendance for his child, is punishable," etc.

It is plain, therefore, that the omission to furnish such necessities must be willful and without lawful excuse to justify a verdict of conviction. A careful reading of the record, however, satisfies us that in this respect the case fails to meet the requirement of the law. The evidence shows that appellant is a laborer owning no property, his work consisting of cleaning house, picking fruit, cutting grass, and doing odd carpenter work. He worked off and on whenever he could find employment until early in June, 1917, at which time he went to the hospital for medical treatment, and remained until July 27. After the care and treatment of the doctor ceased, appellant went to work cutting grass, and as a result he had a relapse and took to his bed with a fever. Upon his recovery he sought and found temporary work at different jobs. This continued during the latter half of the year. He also worked for his mother, at general housework and taking care of the yard, for which he received his board and lodging. It is fair to say that from June to December he earned not more than $60 in money. His hospital and medical bill was $58. A portion of this—but how much does not appear—was furnished by his mother. He still owes the doctor $100 for his services. It is thus apparent that he was financially unable to support his child. Furthermore, the evidence shows that defendant worked whenever he could obtain employment and was able to work, and also that he searched for employment without success. It cannot be said, therefore, that his impecuniousness was chargeable to indolence, nor is there evidence that he was guilty of any misconduct which prevented better results. If a defendant, without fault, is financially unable to support his minor child with the necessaries of life, he cannot, of course, be justly charged with willful failure in that respect. In re McCandless, 17 Cal. App. 222, 119 Pac. 199; People v. Turner, 29 Cal. App. 193, 156 Pac. 381; People v. Forester, 29 Cal. App. 460, 155 Pac. 1022.

The only possible answer to this position is that he should have devoted his meagre income to his child rather than to have used it for the payment of his debts. There would be force in this contention if the child had been in need of the necessaries of life. But as it was receiving from its mother all that it required for its support and comfort, we think the father's conduct under the circumstances should not be characterized and denounced as felonious. It is pleasing to add that when the appeal was taken the appellant was able to give a bond for the payment of $25 per month for the support of his child, and it is to be hoped that he will be willing and able to continue such payment.

The order is reversed.

WILLITS WATER & POWER CO. v. LANDRUM. (Civ. 1763.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 10, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1011(1) — FINDING OF COURT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.
In a suit involving water rights, to which defendant claimed a prescriptive title, where the evidence as to permissive use was conflicting, the finding of the trial court is controlling.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸152(10)—APPROPRIATION OF WATER—SUFFICIENCY OF FINDING.
In a suit involving water rights, to which defendant claimed to have title by prescription, it was error to fail to definitely find what quantity of water, if any, was continuously appropriated by defendant; a finding of an equivalent quantity of water not being sufficient.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸152(8) — APPROPRIATION OF WATER—SUFFICIENCY OF FINDING.
In a suit involving water rights, which defendant claimed by prescription, evidence held not to support a finding that defendant used 2½ inches of water continuously under claim of right.

4. ESTOPPEL ⟸93(7) — APPROPRIATION OF WATER RIGHTS—PERMITTING IMPROVEMENTS.
In a suit by a water company involving water rights, defendant was not estopped to claim title thereto by prescription, because plaintiff was a public service corporation and defendant stood by and made no objection to the construction of its flumes.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸152(8) — APPROPRIATION OF WATER RIGHTS — EVIDENCE.
In a suit by a water company involving water rights, evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant, who claimed title by prescription, had a right to use the ditch and flume for the purpose of conveying water to his premises, notwithstanding an alleged change in the point of diversion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Suit by the Willits Water & Power Company against Joseph Landrum. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Mannon & Mannon, of Ukiah, and Lilienthal, McKinstry & Raymond, of San Francisco, for appellant. Preston & Preston, of Ukiah, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendant, decreeing that he was entitled to divert and devote to beneficial use the natural flow of a stream of water known as Southard creek, in Mendocino county, to the extent of 2½ miner's inches measured under a 4-inch pressure, and also that he was the owner of a certain flume and ditch and a right of way across plaintiff's land for a diverting system for the appropriation of said water.

The main controversy is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the material findings of the court; the claim of respondent being that he proved a prescriptive title. That a quantity of water had been for many years diverted from said creek and conveyed through a ditch and flume across plaintiff's land, and used upon the land of defendant for domestic purposes and for the irrigation of a small tract of land, is abundantly shown, and, indeed, is not disputed by appellant. It is, however, the contention of the latter that the use originated and continued in permission or license, and not under a claim of right, and therefore could not be held to be adverse.

The witness, W. F. Van Bibber, testified that he first became acquainted with the ditch and flume "about 1881," but that he could not tell whether the water ran at that time to the Landrum place, but that it was running in that direction. In 1902, when the plaintiff's water system was constructed and established, the witness was living on the old Southard place, and he testified that—

"We used the water of Southard creek right along all the time. We used the same ditch and flume that is there now. Well, probably it has been overhauled; but then it came from the same direction. * * * When I was on the Southard place, and Mr. Sherman was on the Landrum place, he irrigated the same as we did. We took the water from about, you know, a couple of days apiece. There were four families of us engaged in this. * * * We different people who were using the water at that time had a kind of an agreement between ourselves, simply a neighborly proposition. We tried to make what water we had go as far as it would."

There is nothing in this testimony to show that he asked permission of appellant or of any one to use the water, or that he recognized the authority of any one, either before or after the contention of appellant arose, to question his right to the use of the water. The only fair inference from his testimony is that he used the water as though he owned it, and the only matter of argument was as to its division among the neighbors. It is true he stated:

"During this time that I was on the Williams place, the question arose between me and the company as to whether or not I had the right to take the water."

He was not interrogated, however, any further in reference to it, and we must assume that, when the question arose, he asserted his right, and that it was acquiesced in by the company.

Mr. Eugene McPeak, also, knew something of the situation in early days. His place was about a mile and a half from the Landrum place. He bought it in 1877, and he lived there until 1910. He testified:

"When I moved on my ranch in 1877 there was a ditch or flume from Southard creek running through the Southard ranch. The water was being conveyed to a mill at that time, and the mill was situated on the east side of the road."

After stating that the mill was destroyed some years ago, he proceeded:

"After the mill was destroyed the water was flowing in the flume, run right on, and went past what we call the Landrum place. * * * While the mill was running they used the water on the Landrum place for irrigation. After the mill was destroyed they continued to use the water on the Landrum place. * * * While I was living on the place where I moved in 1877, to 3 years ago, I cannot recall to mind any year the water was not used to some extent on the Landrum place."

Mr. Frank Davis had lived in the neighborhood for 20 years, and he testified:

"The first time I was on the water ditch across the road at the Landrum place was in 1874. The flume and the water, as I remember it, come in the ditch the way it is now, and the flume come out of the ditch and run above the road. * * * After the mill was discontinued, I know that water ran onto the Landrum land east of the house and down north of the house. I do not know whether or not water was used on the Landrum place for domestic purposes, but they were using it for irrigation; that is, using it for irrigating gardens and stuff they had there. * * * Water was always flowing in that ditch, coming out of the creek, to my memory, since I first seen it. * * * I don't remember I was ever there, but what the water was there in that ditch; used the water all through there all summer; don't remember of ever finding it when the water was not there."

A. J. Smith, another pioneer, purchased the Landrum place in 1892, and he testified:

"I moved upon the place that spring after I purchased it, after I fixed it up a little. * * * When I moved on this place there was no mill there, and there was no water ditch on the place. The water ditch was up to the line of the ranch. Water was flowing in the ditch some of the time at that time. * * * I made use of the water when I was on the ranch. I began the summer of 1892. I used the water there all the time in the summer time. There was D. W. Stoddard, and at that time, when I first went on the ranch, there was George Endicott, on the Tibbets place, and J. B. P. Williams, were using the water. * * * They made use of that water at that time in 1892; they used it in the summer time; that is, we used it alternately. * * * We all used the water; generally Mr. Williams and Mr. Endicott, when he was there, and after he left Mr. Orr and myself, and when it came to me to clean the ditch, why we all got together and said, 'Boys, let's go and clean the ditch,' and we set a day for that, and went and done that work. * * * I didn't get permission from anybody to use the water. The ditch was there, and we cleaned it out, and put the water in and used it. * * * When I used the water, I used all I could get through the ditch at that time, and I would have used more if I could have gotten it. While I was not using the water, some of the other neighbors used it. Taken all together, the time I used it and the time my neighbors used it, it consumed mostly all the time during the irrigating season. * * * I took the water out of the ditch at the north end of the ditch. The ditch ended at the end of the Southard ranch and I extended it. I maintained the ditch in that condition all the while I was on the ranch. * * * None of us made any objection to that work; we all did it together. Mr. Southard always consented to it. Mr. Williams never made any objection to my going and cleaning that ditch. * * * The new flume, constructed five years ago, has a better intake than the old flume, and as a matter of fact it is not the same flume."

The defendant testified that he purchased the place in 1906 and—

"on the 20th day of September, 1906, or thereabouts, when I moved on the place, the water was running into the yard, and off over the west side of the house. * * * The irrigation ditch led to the place. The next irrigating season I was there. That was not the same year I went away. I come back down in the fall. In 1907, the second year I was there, corn, alfalfa, potatoes, and blackberries were irrigated. I suppose I irrigated about 10 acres the first year. We used the water for drinking water, all purposes. During the time I was there the water was used by these other residents."

He further testified that he claimed the water right, and that he "did not get or obtain the permission from anybody to use the water," and furthermore:

"I used this water openly, and it was in plain view of everybody that I was taking the water. Mrs. Hamilton took the place when I left, and two Greeks moved on the place when she left. Mrs. Hamilton stayed on the place something like eight months, and the Greeks stayed about the same length of time. Two Italians went on the place next. Some Italians are on the place now."

He testified that these parties all used the water on the place for irrigation and—

"during the time I owned this property I have repaired the flume and ditch each year and I have put in about 640 feet of new flume. I have repaired it every year since I have been there."

Guy Landrum, son of defendant, testified substantially as his father. Among other things, he said:

"We used the water during the greater part of the time during the irrigating season. We kept the flume in repair, and Mr. Willip helped us the first season, and whoever happened to be on the ranch came up and helped us. We repaired it every year. I entered and went over the right of way for the purpose of repairing that flume every year. I asked nobody's permission to go over there, but Dad. When he said for me to go, I went; and if he wasn't there, when it needed repairing, I went. I had no authority to ask the Willits Water & Power Company for permission to go over this right of way, and I never asked them."

[1] There was other testimony of a similar character and it is quite apparent that the lower court was justified in concluding that the water was appropriated, and the ditch and flume were used, under such circumstances and in such manner as to justify the inference that the defendant and his predecessors in interest were thereby claiming and asserting that said privilege was a right appurtenant to said land. This use continued for many years longer that the statute requires to create a title by prescription, and the evidence upon which the lower court acted was amply sufficient to show the presence and operation of all the elements of adverse possession. Even if one concede that there was some evidence that the use was permissive, the most that can be said is that thereby a conflict was created. The rule or principle that applies to a situation like this is stated and discussed in Gurnsey v. Antelope Creek, etc., W. Co., 6 Cal. App. 387, 92 Pac. 326, and it is sufficient to refer to that decision.

We think that there can be no doubt of the legal stability of the court's conclusion as to the right of respondent to the use of the water and of the ditch and flume for the benefit of his land; but we come to a more difficult question when we consider the quantity of water that was awarded. The court decreed that—

"Cross-complainant, Joseph Landrum, is the owner of the right of way to divert and devote to a beneficial use the natural flow of the said stream known as Southard creek, in the following amount, to wit: A continuous flow of 2½ miner's inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure."

The corresponding finding of fact is:

"That the cross-complainant and defendant herein and his predecessors in ownership to the lands described in the cross-complaint and in paragraph III hereof, for a period of more than 5 years continuously next prior to July 15, 1912, to wit, for a period of more than 20 years, continuously next prior thereto, used the waters of said Southard creek to an amount equal to a continuous flow of 24 hours each day of 2½ miner's inches," etc., and that said use "was open, notorious," etc.

[2] It is to be observed that the court thus finds, not the amount of water that was adversely used for this long period, but what the court deemed equivalent to the quantity thus used. In his cross-complaint, defendant alleged that he and his predecessors in interest had used "the waters of said Southard creek" and "had conducted it through said ditch and flume to the full capacity of said flume," etc. In the answer to this pleading, plaintiff denied that the amount of water used by cross-complainant and his predecessors in ownership, or either of them, was the full capacity of said flume, or "any greater amount than a depth of one inch in said flume at infrequent and intermittent intervals," and as to this quantity it was alleged the use was by license and permission of plaintiff. This, of course, was a very important issue in the case, and it would appear that the court should have found definitely what quantity of water, if any, was thus continuously appropriated. Riverside Water Co. v. Sargent, 112 Cal. 230, 44 Pac. 560; Hayes v. Silver Creek Co., 136 Cal. 238, 68 Pac. 704. If the award of a different quantity from that used was deemed advisable, it should at least appear what quantity was used. If the evidence showed that respondent and his predecessors in interest had used 10 inches of water for 6 hours continuously every day would it be sufficient for the court to conclude that this was equivalent to the use of 2½ inches for the whole 24 hours and find accordingly? The title by prescription is measured by the manner and extent of the use (section 806, Civ. Code) and does not attach to something else that may be deemed equivalent.

The case would be no different if the court had concluded that the use of another flume and ditch was equivalent to what was claimed and shown by the evidence, and had decreed that respondent was entitled to the equivalent. In section 581 (3d Ed.) of Weil on Water Rights it is said:

"The principle declared by these authorities is that the rights of a party who has acquired a prescriptive title and the rights of one against whom said title is acquired are mutual, and each is entitled to demand that the prescriptive right be exercised in the same manner that it was exercised while it was being acquired."

Turning, now, to the evidence as to the amount of water which was used adversely, we find it not altogether satisfactory. However, Mr. Donahue, the engineer, testified that a short time before the trial he measured the water flowing in the flume and found it to be 16.8 miner's inches. Mr. Landrum was present when the measurement was made, and in his testimony he declared that this was about the amount in the flume when they were irrigating, and that it was all appropriated for that purpose. There is evidence that this was used on four ranches, and it is contended by respondent that the four ranches divided the 24-hour period about equally. That is probably not an unreasonable inference from the evidence. Assuming, then, that the evidence warranted the conclusion that 16 inches of water were used on defendant's land for 6 hours daily for a sufficient period and under such circumstances as to create a prescriptive right, would that justify the court in determining that the right attached to a continuous flow of 2½ inches? The use was of 16 inches for 6 hours, in other words, and the court finds that respondent is entitled to 2½ inches for 24 hours.

[3] Manifestly, appellant could not complain of the reduction of the quantity, but the time of appropriation might be of considerable moment. It is true that the change might be of advantage to appellant, but we think that the number of hours per day during which the water was used on respondent's land is an important and material element, and that the prescriptive right must correspond in that respect with the evidence. If it be assumed, therefore, that the court found substantially that respondent used 2½ inches of water continuously under a claim of right, etc., we consider it unsupported. At any rate, if the change was to be made, evidence should have been offered that the continuous use of the lesser quantity was equivalent to the intermittent use of the larger and the facts fully found in accordance therewith.

[4] We can see no merit in the claim of appellant that the doctrine of estoppel applied by reason of the fact that plaintiff is a public service corporation, and defendant stood by and made no objection to the construction of its works, and allowed without protest his property to be taken for public use. In support of its contention appellant cites Gurnsey v. Northern Cal. Power Co., 160 Cal. 699, 117 Pac. 906, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185. Therein it was held that when a public service corporation, though it made its original entry upon an owner's land without right, has been permitted without objection to enter thereon and construct its works for which said land was appropriated, and such owner failed to bring any action until public interest by reason of such construction has intervened, the right of the owner to bring ejectment is denied, and he is remitted solely to his action for damages as the measure of his compensation. Said decision was based upon the ground of public policy and is eminently sound as applied to the facts of that case, and, it may be added, that the apparently opposite view advanced in Gurnsey v. Northern Cal. Power Co., 7 Cal. App. 534, 94 Pac. 858, grew out of the effort to state the general rule without particular attention to the well-settled exception. If we concede that there is evidence in the record lending support to appellant's contention in this matter, still, as we are required to view the case from the standpoint of respondent's showing, we must hold that said doctrine has no application herein.

In the first place, respondent did not stand by and allow his property to be taken. The dam and diverting works of appellant were not constructed on the land now owned by respondent. They are on the stream above the intake of the flume of Landrum. Besides, his land was receiving the water at the time said works were constructed and the water system inaugurated, and appellant had notice of the claim to this overflow. This is shown by the reservation in the deed from Samuel Boechtel, a predecessor in interest of respondent, to appellant, as follows:

"Nothing contained herein shall be deemed to waive any rights which I may have in or to any of the waters of Southard creek or to the flume, or water ditch leading from the same."

It is a fair inference, also, that by proper conservation of the water there will be a sufficiency to meet the demands of both parties, and therefore the public interest will suffer no detriment by reason of the claim of the defendant. We may cite as having some relation to the situation the following cases: Burr v. Maclay Rancho Water Co., 160 Cal. 268, 116 Pac. 715; Stevinson v. San Joaquin, etc., Co., 162 Cal. 141, 121 Pac. 398; Southern Pacific Co. v. Spring Valley W. Co., 173 Cal. 291, 159 Pac. 865, L. R. A. 1917E, 680.

It is contended that a change in the location of the flume and the point of diversion of the water has an important bearing upon the question of the right of respondent to conduct the waters along the present course. The right to the use of the water is, manifestly, distinct from a right to convey it along a certain definite channel. As far as the right of way is concerned, it must be shown, of course, that a certain definite line was used under a claim of right for the statutory period. The evidence does show some changes in the flume and ditch, but we think it is a fair inference that said flume and ditch have remained substantially the same since the beginning, and we may add that by the slight variation no greater burden was imposed upon the servient estate. Probably the most serious change was in reference to the point of diversion of the water, but as to this there is nothing to indicate that appellant was injured in the slightest. As to the statutory appropriations, indeed, the statute provides that—

"The person entitled to the use may change the place of diversion if others are not injured by such change and may extend the ditch, flume, pipe or aqueduct by which diversion is made to places beyond that where the first use was made."

It is true that this is not a case of statutory appropriation, but of prescriptive right to the use of the water, but there can be no difference in principle as to a change in the point of diversion. Indeed, in Perry v. Calkins, 159 Cal. 175, 113 Pac. 136, it is said:

"An established right to divert the waters of a stream is not affected by a mere change of the place of diversion if it caused no injury."

[5] The change in the point of diversion in the case is of no importance, except as it involves a change in the location of the flume leading therefrom. The latter consideration might be important as bearing upon the right of way to conduct the water. We think, as already suggested, however, that the conditions remained so essentially similar, while the water was being used, that it might be said the evidence is sufficient to support the finding of the court that the defendant has the right to use the ditch and flume for the purposes stated in the findings.

Some other points are discussed, but we do not deem them of vital importance.

We are of the opinion that by reason of said defect as to the findings the judgment and order should be reversed; and it is so ordered.

PACIFIC COAST CASUALTY CO. v. DAVIS et al. (Civ. 2096.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 6, 1918.)

INDEMNITY ⟸3 — CONSIDERATION OF CONTRACT—PREJUDICE SUFFERED.

Plaintiff's paying bond, without defendants attempting to stop it or then questioning its validity, was sufficient consideration under Civ. Code, § 1605, as prejudice suffered or agreed to be suffered, for defendants' promise, on which plaintiff gave the bond, to indemnify it against loss from executing bond.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Coast Casualty Company against T. E. Davis, Jr., and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Myrick & Deering and James Walter Scott, all of San Francisco, for appellant. James H. Boyer, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action to recover on an express contract for the payment of money. The lower court ordered judgment in favor of the defendants, the plaintiff appealed therefrom, and has brought up the evidence in a bill of exceptions. The board of works of the city and county of San Francisco awarded to the defendants a contract to build a municipal building; the defendants presented to the plaintiff a written application for two indemnity bonds, one, in the sum of $4,000 for the faithful performance of the contract; and one in the sum of $6,700, running to all persons furnishing materials or performing labor, and which was conditioned for the payment of claims of such persons if the contractors should fail to pay the same. In said written application the defendants agreed, if the plaintiff would execute said bonds, that the defendants would indemnify the plaintiff against all loss, costs, damages, liabilities, etc., which the plaintiff might sustain by reason of its having executed said bonds; the plaintiff executed and delivered said bonds. When the contract was completed, the claims outstanding for materials and labor amounted to $6,728.44; and the money due from the city amounted to $5,354.45; the latter sum was collected from the city and the deficiency, $1,328.33, together with certain costs and expenses, was paid by the plaintiff. The validity of either bond was never questioned prior to said payments, and the defendants stood by and saw the money paid, and at no time attempted to stop payment.

The plaintiff has sued on the express promise contained in said written application. The defendants attempt to sustain their position by citing the case of Loop Lumber Co. v. Van Loben Sels, 173 Cal. 228, 159 Pac. 600, and contend that the bond was without consideration and void. That was an action by a third party to enforce a claim on a bond similar to the $6,700 bond above mentioned, but while the promise remained wholly executory. This action is brought to recover on a contract which has been wholly executed by the plaintiff and rests on a different principle. It may be conceded, without deciding, that the plaintiff could not have been compelled to make payments which it made; but, having made the payments, its claim finds full support in section 1605 of the Civil Code, which provides:

"* * * Any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered by such person (the plaintiff) other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor (the defendants) is a good consideration for a promise."

See, also, Knock v. Haizlip, 163 Cal. 146, 153, 124 Pac. 998, and Bacon v. Grosse, 165 Cal. 481, 490, 132 Pac. 1027.

Let us make the situation still clearer: A. and B. are conversing; C. approaches and asks for a contribution for charity; A. asks B. to pay C. $100, and states that he will repay B.; thereupon B. pays $100 to C. as requested by A. No one, we think, would question the liability of A. to B.

It follows that the judgment should be reversed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

HOARE v. GLANN. (Civ. 2434.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸353 — IMPROVEMENT CONTRACT—ASSIGNMENT—RESCISSION.

Where the assignment of a street work contract provided that the assignor might take over the work on notice by the board of trustees that the assignee did not prosecute the work to its satisfaction, such notice did not rescind the contract of assignment; the notice not being broader than the contract expressly provided for.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Action by P. H. Hoare against Merrie A. Glann, as executrix, etc., of Nathaniel P. Glann, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry Conlin, of San Francisco, for appellant. B. D. Marx Greene, of Berkeley, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action for damages for breach of contract. The plaintiff was awarded a judgment against the defendant in the lower court, and the defendant has appealed on the judgment roll.

On the 2d day of January, 1913, the town of Larkspur awarded a contract to the plaintiff, P. H. Hoare, to do certain street work. Later, on the same date, with the consent of the board of trustees of said town, the plaintiff assigned his contract to N. P. Glann. By its terms the contract of assignment was made subject to all the terms, provisions, and conditions contained in the specifications and in the original contract entered into between the town of Larkspur and the plaintiff, P. H. Hoare. In the contract of assignment it was provided that in the event of the failure of Glann to prosecute the work under said contract to the satisfaction of the engineer of the town of Larkspur, or the satisfaction of the board of trustees of the town, then, upon written notice to Hoare from the board of trustees, to the effect that said contract was not being properly carried out, that the interest of Glann under the contract should cease and determine, and that Hoare might take up the work and finish it, and that he would be subrogated to all of the claims and rights of Glann under the contract with the town of Larkspur. The Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland thereupon executed a bond to P. H. Hoare for the faithful performance of Glann's contract. N. P. Glann did not prosecute the work under the contract to the satisfaction of the board of trustees of Larkspur, and on the 18th day of August, 1913, the board of trustees passed a resolution to that effect, and immediately caused the same to be served on Glann and Hoare. P. H. Hoare, upon receipt of the notice, immediately notified the board of trustees that he was willing to take up the work and finish the same, and was authorized by the board of trustees to do so. Thereupon P. H. Hoare entered upon the performance of the work, and completed the work at an extra cost amounting to $2,869.51, the amount for which the plaintiff recovered judgment. Thereafter on the 5th day of November, 1914, N. P. Glann died, and such proceedings were had that the action was tried against the executrix of his estate.

The defendant executrix contends that the notice by the board of trustees, which it gave on the 18th day of August, 1913, constituted a rescission of the contract between Glann and Hoare. This point is presented in several different ways in the brief. We are not inclined to agree with this view. The notice was no broader than the contract expressly provided for, and therefore did not constitute an act of rescission. Oursler v. Thacher, 152 Cal. 739, 93 Pac. 1007.

We are therefore of the opinion that the judgment of the lower court should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

(Civ. 2576.)

1. TAXATION ⟸98—TRUSTS—SITUS OF PROPERTY.

While, as a general rule, the domicile of the owner determines the situs of personalty of which he is possessed, such is not the rule where the property is held by others as trustees.

2. TAXATION ⟸99 — CORPORATION STOCK—TRUSTS—SITUS FOR TAXATION.

Where decedent had created a trust in corporation stock, making nonresidents trustees, and empowering them to sell the stock or handle it as they saw fit, its situs for taxation was not the domicile of decedent, but the domicile of the trustees, and his executor could recover from the county the tax paid under the erroneous assessment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by L. D. Lowry, as executor of the estate of William Morgan, deceased, against the County of Los Angeles. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Jones & Bennett and James S. Bennett, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, and Robert B. Murphey, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. A demurrer to the complaint of plaintiff was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend, judgment followed in favor of the defendant. The appeal is from the judgment so rendered. The facts which we will detail are fully expressed in the complaint:

In January of the year 1912 William Morgan died. He was at that time a resident of the county of Los Angeles. In February, 1912, his last will was duly admitted to probate, and the appointment of plaintiff as executor thereof confirmed. Morgan in his will bequeathed his interest in 2,000 shares of the capital stock of a safety vault company (that being a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Illinois and having its principal place of business at the city of Chicago) to three persons; the interest being divided by apportioning 750 shares to each of two of such persons and 500 shares to the third. The person to whom the interest in 500 shares of the stock was bequeathed at the time of the death of Morgan resided in California. One of the other two was and has continued to be a resident of the state of Illinois, while the third was a resident of the state of Illinois up to the 20th day of November, 1912, and thereafter became a resident of the state of California. On the 3d of March, 1914, the superior court in probate entered its order decreeing that the legacies to the three persons referred to were specific legacies and ordered the distribution thereof. The assessor of the county of Los Angeles made no assessment for the year 1912 as against the interest of Morgan in the shares of stock, but in the year 1913 an assessment was entered against the executor of the estate wherein the total number of shares of stock was assessed at a net valuation of $200,000, and by reason of the stock having been omitted from the assessment in the year 1912 the assessor doubled the valuation for the year 1913, and levied an assessment as for a total value of $400,000 and a total tax of $6,280, which the executor, the plaintiff here, was required to pay. This action is brought to recover from the county that sum of money, on the ground that the assessment was illegal and void, because the property attempted to be assessed was not property having a situs within the state of California, but was property in the hands of trustees all of whom were residents of the state of Illinois.

The further facts appearing by the complaint are: That in the year 1907 William Morgan, being then the owner of the 2,000 shares of stock heretofore mentioned, entered into an agreement by which he transferred to the three trustees in Illinois the shares of stock. Among other terms, the trust agreement contained these provisions:

"This conveyance is made to the grantees as trustees, upon the following uses, purposes and trusts: To have and to hold said stock, to manage and control the same, to vote said stock in their discretion, to collect the dividends thereon, and from said dividends to pay taxes, municipal or other governmental charges, if any, thereon, to pay court and other costs and expenses, and fees of attorneys for services concerning or in connection with litigation, if any, concerning this agreement or the stock herein referred to or the rights and duties of the trustees hereunder, and to pay the net income thereof, and of any share or shares hereof, as and when the said income shall be collected, to the first party or the owner or owners of the beneficial interest or interests in said stock or said share or shares thereof, or the legal representative or representatives of said owner or owners, during the continuance of this trust. The trustees shall have full power to sell, transfer, or otherwise dispose of said stock, or any share or shares thereof, at any time prior to the termination of this trust, upon, but only upon, the joint written agreement of the trustees, on the one side, and the first party or the owner or owners of the beneficial interest or interests in said stock or said share or shares thereof, or the legal representative or representatives of said owner or owners, on the other side. And in the event of a sale, transfer, or other disposition of said stock or of any share or shares thereof, the proceeds of any such sale, transfer, or other disposition shall be by said trustees transferred, set over and delivered to the said first party, or the owner or owners of the beneficial interest or interests in said stock, or in said share or shares thereof, or the legal representative or representatives of said owner or owners, freed from the obligation of this trust. * * * This trust shall continue in force for fifteen (15) years from the date hereof, and until there shall have been made payment by said corporation of its entire bonded indebtedness, and of any extension thereof, and of any renewal thereof, and of any extension of any part thereof, or of any renewal of any part thereof, or of any new bonded indebtedness of said corporation, but not for a longer time than twenty-one (21) years from the date of the death of the last survivor of (the trustees), excepting that this agreement may be terminated at any time as to said stock or any share or shares of said stock by the joint written consent of all the trustees, on the one side, and the first party or the owner or owners of the beneficial interest or interests in said stock or said share or shares thereof, or the legal representative or representatives of said owner or owners, on the other side; and, upon the termination of this trust, as to said stock or any share or shares thereof in reference to which this trust has been terminated, held by the trustees, their successors, successor, survivors or survivor, shall be transferred and set over to the first party or to the owner or owners of the beneficial interest or interests in said stock or in said share or shares of said stock, or to the legal representative or representatives of said owner or owners."

[1] Appellant insists that under the facts stated the legal ownership of the stock was in the trustees, and for purposes of assessment its situs was therefore in the state of Illinois, where the trustees had their residence and where the stock was held. It is clearly expressed by the complaint that the assessment made was upon the whole value of the full number of shares, and was not an assessment upon dividends or upon any contingent or equitable interest of the testator. Respondent supports the right of the county to collect the tax with the argument that as to personalty the presumed situs is always at the domicile of the owner, and that such legal situs is not affected by the fact that the personal property may have its physical location outside the limits of the state. It is true that it is a general rule that the domicile of the owner determines the situs of the personalty of which he may be possessed. This rule has its exceptions. Generally, we think it may properly be said that for the purpose of distributing the estate of a decedent it will be presumed that his personalty or any interest that he may have therein is situated at the domicile maintained by him at the time of his demise. This rule is shown by the decisions not to have invariable application and for purposes of taxation the situs of personalty has been determined under particular facts to be different. In Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 152 (found in Vermont Annotated Reports, book 8, p. 150), the court said:

"It is undoubtedly true that, by the generally acknowledged principles of public law, personal chattels follow the person of the owner, and that, upon his death, they are to be distributed according to the law of his domicile; and in general, any conveyance of chattels, good by the law of his own domicile, will be good elsewhere. But this rule is merely a legal fiction, adopted from considerations of general convenience and policy, for the benefit of commerce and to enable persons to dispose of their property, at their decease, agreeably to their wishes, without being embarrassed by their want of knowledge in relation to the laws of the country, where the same is situated. But even this doctrine is to be received and understood with this limitation, that there is no positive law of the country, where the property is in fact, which contravenes the law of his domicile; for if there is, the law of the owner's domicile must yield to the law of the state, where the property is in fact situate. But we do not consider this doctrine, in relation to the situs of personal chattels and relating to its transfer and distribution, as at all conflicting with the actual jurisdiction of the state, where it is situate, over it, or with their right to subject it, in common with the other property of the state, to share the burthen of the government, by taxation."

The case from which we have quoted is referred to in Stanford v. San Francisco, 131 Cal. 34, 63 Pac. 145, as being a leading case touching the subject of which it treats. The Vermont court held that property of nonresidents, which consisted of notes and choses in action held against individuals of that state, placed in the hands of an agent with power to handle the proceeds, invest and reinvest, was property within the state and subject to the payment of taxes therein. In that case there had been no transfer of the legal title to the agent, but the agent held the same for the purpose of transacting the business of investing the funds for his principal.

In a Rhode Island case, Anthony v. Caswell, 15 R. I. 159, 1 Atl. 290, the question was—

"whether a trustee, resident in another state, who has no property as trustee in this state, is liable to taxation in the town where his cestuis que trustent reside."

The court decided in the negative. Judge Cooley in his work on Taxation, vol. 1, p. 660, thus declares the rule:

"In general, personal property in the hands of a trustee is to be assessed to him at the place of his domicile, and if one of two trustees is a nonresident the trustee living in the state may be taxed in respect to their interests; but such property is often made taxable to the persons beneficially entitled, if they are residents of the state. If the fund is in charge of a court, it is taxable in the jurisdiction having control of it, although personalty having an actual situs elsewhere may be taxed where it is."

In Mackay v. San Francisco, 128 Cal. 678, 61 Pac. 382, the court made its decision in accordance with this rule. There the property consisted of bonds which were kept in the city of New York. They came into the control of two trustees, one of whom resided in Nevada and one in San Francisco, by a distribution of the estate of Theresa Fair. Theresa Fair was a resident of San Francisco at the time she died, and her will was probated there. The assessment was made after distribution, against both trustees for all of the bonds held by them, and the court decided that as to the trustee resident in Nevada the assessment was void. Respondent lays great stress upon the language of the court expressed in its decision, where it is said:

"In Mackay v. San Francisco, 113 Cal. 397 [45 Pac. 696], these plaintiffs, as executors of the will of Theresa Fair, deceased, contended that the bonds upon which the taxes were levied in this case, or a portion of them, were not property within the state, and not taxable to the estate of Theresa Fair, deceased. But it was held that the bonds had their situs in San Francisco, and were there taxable. The court said: 'The bonds in question were held here. Their situs was the city and county of San Francisco. They could not be taxed in Arizona, where the property mortgaged to secure them is situated.' In that case the court followed the general rule sustained by the weight of authority. The rule is that the personal property of decedents is taxed at the domicile of the decedent. As said by law-writers: 'During the settlement of the estate it must have a situs somewhere, and none so appropriate as where the decedent lived.'"

The court goes on to declare that a different situation was shown after the property had been distributed into the hands of the trustees, one of whom was a nonresident, and Judge Cooley's declaration of the general rule is referred to.

[2] We find no difficulty in enforcing an agreement between the holding there made and the contention as advanced by appellant here, and the question may be propounded: Did the fact that the situs of Morgan's interest in the stock for purposes of probate, fixed itself at the place of his domicile, also fix the situs of the stock for the purpose of an assessment at the same place? We do not think that such a legal situation as last suggested follows. We think the situation is no different than had this same assessment been levied against Morgan's stock by the assessor of Los Angeles county during the lifetime of Morgan and while he was domiciled here. There was not a transfer of interest to the trustees by distribution of the estate under the will, for the trustees for a long time prior to the death of Morgan held the legal title and possession of the stock and continued so to hold it after his death and at the time distribution was had. If the assessor could not have assessed Morgan for the stock while he lived, surely then the executor of his estate could not be subjected to a similar assessment. It seems very clear to us that the stock in the hands of the trustees is within the jurisdiction of the taxing power of the state of Illinois. And to hold that it may be assessed in California also would be to subject it to double taxation, which is never favored unless clearly required by the statute of the particular state which claims that right.

"While it is not practicable to formulate a rule, where the cases depend upon the construction of different state statutes and involve their phraseology, both as to what shall constitute taxable property in the state and as to the place in the state where the personalty shall be assessed, it has been frequently held that where bonds, notes and mortgages have had an independent situs given them in another state and have been localized there through a resident agent, or otherwise, so as to become subject to the taxing power of that state, they were not subject to taxation in the state of the domicile, unless expressly made so by statute. In other words, it is a rule of construction, repeatedly recognized by the courts in taxation cases, that double taxation will not be presumed to have been intended, and will only be enforced under express mandate." Judson on Taxation, § 425, p. 543.

The decisions of our own state, the leading ones of which we have made reference to, by fair interpretation support this rule. Our conclusion is that the 2,000 shares of stock held by the Illinois trustees was property having its situs in that state and is not to be considered as within the jurisdiction of the taxing power of California.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

BOOTH et al. v. STOW et al. (Civ. 2442.)

1. QUIETING TITLE ⟸39—PLEADING—NECESSITY OF CROSS-COMPLAINT.

Where the sole question in a suit to quiet title relates to the location of a boundary line between plaintiffs and defendants, a judgment for or against plaintiffs is a judgment against or for defendants, and a cross-complaint is unnecessary.

2. QUIETING TITLE ⟸39—PLEADING—CROSS-COMPLAINTS.

In a suit to quiet title, where the sole dispute is as to the location of the boundary between the parties, a cross-complaint filed by defendant will be treated as an answer containing affirmative matter.

3. BOUNDARIES ⟸46(2) — LOCATION BY AGREEMENT—EFFECT.

If a measurement be made in a boundary dispute, and the line agreed on and acquiesced in, the measurement is binding on and applicable to all parties to the agreement and their successors by subsequent deed.

4. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⟸44—PAROL EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where pleadings put in issue the mutual mistake of the parties in framing and executing reciprocal deeds, parol evidence is admissible under Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, subd. 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by James E. Booth and others against J. M. Stow and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Modified and affirmed.

A. A. Moore, of San Francisco, Wilder Wight, of Oakland, for appellants. J. E. Rodgers and A. F. Bray, both of Martinez, and A. J. Coogan, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action to quiet title. The defendants had judgment in the trial court, and the plaintiffs have appealed. The appellants have brought up the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

From the record before us, it appears that the dispute arose over the location of a boundary line; the plaintiffs filed a complaint in the ordinary form of an action to quiet title; the defendants appeared separately and filed separate answers and at the same time filed cross-complaints; the plaintiffs answered the cross-complaints, and, among other defenses, they pleaded the statute of limitations. Subdivision 4 of section 338, Code Civ. Proc. The case was tried on the issues made by the above-mentioned pleadings. The trial court made findings which included a finding that the plaintiffs were estopped, and one that the defendants were not barred by the statute of limitations. The finding on estoppel is in the general words that the plaintiffs are estopped, but no facts are set forth, and it appears on the face of the finding that the same is a conclusion of law out of place.

[1, 2] As the sole question that is in dispute is the location of the boundary line between the plaintiffs and the defendants, it is patent that a judgment for or against the plaintiffs is, conversely, a judgment against or for the defendants. In such a case a cross-complaint is unnecessary. Wilson v. Madison, 55 Cal. 5, 8; Miller v. Loco, 80 Cal. 257, 261, 22 Pac. 195. When such is the condition of the record, the court will treat a cross-complaint as an answer containing affirmative matter. Pauly v. Rogers, 121 Cal. 294, 53 Pac. 808; Phillips v. Hagart, 113 Cal. 552, 45 Pac. 843, 54 Am. St. Rep. 369. So treating the pleadings, a finding on the plea of the statute of limitations becomes wholly immaterial. The pleadings alleged and the trial court found: That on March 27, 1909, Lillie B. Gardner and T. B. Jenkins were the joint owners of a ranch in Contra Costa county; on that day the grantors agreed to partition the ranch and to have a survey made dividing the uplands and the lowlands into two equal parts; that immediately afterward they executed, each to the other, two deeds, in one of which T. B. Jenkins conveyed to his cotenant his undivided one-half interest in the north half, and in the other deed Lillie B. Gardner granted to him her undivided one-half interest in the south half; immediately thereafter both grantors deeded the south half to these plaintiffs; that both grantors and these plaintiffs agreed that as soon as the survey was made the grantors would again exchange deeds; all of the foregoing deeds were executed and delivered on March 27, 1909. A few weeks later the surveyor made the survey; the plaintiffs accepted the survey and went into possession of the tract as surveyed; the plaintiffs and the owner of the north half, Lillie B. Gardner, immediately erected a fence on the line so run by the surveyor; "upon their acceptance by said plaintiff and said defendant Lillie B. Gardner of the tract of land so set part by the said survey as aforesaid, said plaintiff and said defendant Lillie B. Gardner understood and considered that it was not necessary for them to make new deeds of said tract of land so accepted by them aforesaid"; the plaintiff has made conveyances based on the said surveys, and the defendant Lillie B. Gardner has made conveyances based on the said surveys. The plaintiffs commenced this action by filing their complaint on March 24, 1914.

[3] It is clear from the foregoing statement of facts that all of the parties considered that a measurement was necessary. It likewise appears that a measurement was had. In the case of Young v. Blakeman, 153 Cal. 477, at page 482, 95 Pac. 888, 890, Mr. Justice Shaw, writing the opinion, says:

"If a measurement is made and the line agreed on and acquiesced in as required by this rule, it is binding on and applicable to all parties to the agreement and their successors by subsequent deeds."

Silva v. Azevedo, 173 Pac. 929, affirms the rule in Young v. Blakeman, supra, and the facts in the Silva Case are so closely parallel to the facts in the case in hand that it would seem nothing more is necessary than merely to cite that case.

[4] The pleadings put in issue the mutual mistake of the parties in framing and executing their deeds, and there was no error on the part of the trial court in receiving parol evidence. Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, subd. 1; Capelli v. Dondero, 123 Cal. 324, 330, 55 Pac. 1057. The trial court treated the cross-complaint as such and awarded relief accordingly, and it is necessary to modify its judgment. This can be done by striking from the judgment all matter commencing with the words, "Now, therefore" (where those words first appear in the judgment), and down to and including the words "parties respectively," where those two words last appear in the judgment and inserting instead the following:

"Now, therefore, it is by the court ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiffs are not the owners of or seised in fee simple of all that certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the county of Contra Costa, state of California, and more particularly described in paragraph 5 of the plaintiffs' second amended complaint."

As so modified, the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

OCEAN SHORE DEVELOPMENT CO., Inc., v. HAMMOND. (Civ. 2432.)

1. JUDGMENT ⟸251(1) — CONFORMITY TO PLEADINGS—SCOPE OF RELIEF.
That the relief granted is not as broad as the pleadings is immaterial.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1073(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—JUDGMENT—FORM OF ACTION.
Where court decided that action was for specific performance, and allowed amendment of pleading, after demurrer sustained, but amendment did not specifically pray for specific performance, though broad enough to authorize that relief, defendant was not prejudiced by a judgment not granting that relief, but giving the relief demanded by the facts, which was within the pleadings.

3. JUDGMENT ⟸249 — CONFORMITY WITH PLEADINGS AND EVIDENCE.
In code states courts will render such judgments as the evidence and pleadings warrant, regardless of the form of action.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸273 — CONTRACTS—ACTIONS—TENDER.
Where purchaser of land repudiated the contract, tender of the deed by the seller was not prerequisite to his recovery.

5. JUDGMENT ⟸622(2)—MATTER AVAILABLE AS CROSS-COMPLAINT—FAILURE TO PLEAD.
While the matter of foreclosure of vendor's lien upon land was available as a cross-complaint in the vendee's action to recover amounts paid on account of alleged fraud, failure to interpose the same did not bar foreclosure of the lien, since Code Civ. Proc. § 442, as to cross-complaints, is permissive only.

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸291—VENDOR'S LIEN — DEFICIENCY JUDGMENT — POWERS OF COURT.
Assuming that Code Civ. Proc. § 726, as to deficiency judgments, applies only in case of mortgage foreclosure, the court nevertheless has inherent power, in foreclosing vendor's lien, to render a deficiency judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Geo. H. Buck, Judge.

Action by the Ocean Shore Development Company, Incorporated, against J. P. Hammond. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph K. Hutchinson and Walter Slack, both of San Francisco, and Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, for appellant. Byrne & Lamson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action is based on a contract for the purchase and sale of three lots in San Mateo county. By the terms of the contract the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff the sum of $2,125 as the purchase price of the lots, in installments as follows: Three hundred dollars on the signing of the contract, and the balance at the rate of $35 per month thereafter until paid; the title to the property was to remain in the vendor until the installments were paid. The defendant paid the sum of $300 on the signing of the contract and the first installment of $35. No further installments were paid. At the time of the commencement of this action, 46 installments, amounting to the principal sum of $1,610, had become due under the contract. The balance of the installments, amounting to $180, had not yet become due.

This action was brought to foreclose a lien which the vendor had on the property for the purchase price. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and an amended complaint filed. The plaintiff asked that the property be sold to satisfy the amount then due, namely, $1,821.15, and that, if the proceeds of the sale were insufficient to satisfy the amount of said lien, then that a personal deficiency judgment be docketed against the defendant. The defendant answered the amended complaint, and, after denying certain allegations therein, set up four separate defenses, numbered and referred to as "second," "third," "fourth," and "fifth" defenses, respectively. The "fifth" defense was conceded by the plaintiff, and the contract reformed in accordance therewith, and need not concern us here. The "second" defense recited that, prior to the commencement of this action, the defendant in this action commenced an action in the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Mono against the plaintiff herein, entitled "J. P. Hammond, Plaintiff, v. Ocean Shore Development Company, Incorporated, a Corporation, Defendant," in which said Hammond sought to recover from the said Ocean Shore Development Company, Incorporated, the sum of $335 paid under the said contract upon the ground of fraud and false representations made to him by the said Ocean Shore Development Company, Incorporated, concerning the character and situation of the property; that the Ocean Shore Development Company failed to set up in its answer any counterclaim for damages, or for the purchase price of the property, or any of the installments thereof. The "third" defense set up a failure of consideration, and then set forth as a reason for said failure certain alleged false representations made by Ocean Shore Development Company to the said Hammond, which induced the said Hammond to enter into the said contract, and which said alleged false representations were substantially the same as set forth in the complaint previously filed in Mono county by Hammond. The "fourth" defense simply sets forth the same alleged false representations concerning the property, and the fact of a rescission of the contract by the defendant based upon such alleged misrepresentations.

On April 14, 1916, the balance of the installments under the contract having fallen due, the plaintiff filed a supplemental complaint, setting forth that fact, and an amended supplemental complaint was thereafter filed by permission of the court obtained at the time of trial, and which alleged, by way of excusing a tender of a deed, that defendant had repudiated the contract. At the close of plaintiff's case, the defendant moved for a nonsuit; the motion was denied. The defendant then offered to prove the facts alleged in his "third" and "fourth" defenses concerning the alleged false representations made by plaintiff to defendant about the character of the property. The court sustained the plaintiff's objection thereto, for the reason that the judgment rendered against the defendant herein in the action of Hammond v. Ocean Shore Development Co. operated as an estoppel by judgment with regard to those matters. Judgment was thereafter rendered against the defendant, and in favor of the said plaintiff, by which it was decreed that the plaintiff has a lien upon the real property for the sum of $2,123.41, together with costs that the property be sold to satisfy said lien, and that a personal judgment for the deficiency, if any, then be docketed against the defendant. The defendant appeals, and advances many arguments for a reversal of the judgment.

[1-3] One of the questions raised by defendant is whether this is in effect an action for specific performance, or whether this is an action to foreclose a vendor's lien. We think that this was not an action for specific performance. The original complaint stated an action on contract for the amount of the unpaid installments, and asked for a foreclosure of a vendor's lien upon the land. At the trial the defendant interposed a demurrer and argued that the complaint was analogous to one to enforce specific performance, and that facts sufficient to constitute such a cause of action had not been pleaded. The demurrer was sustained, and the plaintiff amended its complaint by adding an allegation that the price to be paid for the land under the contract was not disproportionate to the value of the land. In support of this allegation, the plaintiff introduced evidence of the market value of the land. The defendant contends that as the trial court, in ruling on the demurrer to the original complaint, determined that the action was substantially one for specific performance, and respondent voluntarily adopted the trial court's theory, and amended its complaint in accordance therewith, it cannot on appeal return to the position that the original complaint was sufficient.

We think a return to such position is not necessary to sustain the judgment. Neither the prayer of the amended complaint nor of the supplemental complaint is for specific performance; the decree was not given for specific performance, and therefore could not have been rendered upon the theory that the plaintiff was entitled to such relief. But admitting that the allegations of the amended complaint were framed to state a case for specific performance, and that the court might have so decreed, yet the plaintiff asked and received of the court a relief that was clearly within the pleadings and therefore the defendant is not prejudiced. In code states, courts will render such judgments as the evidence and pleadings show the parties entitled to regardless of the form of action. Lee v. Coon Rapids Nat. Bank, 166 Iowa, 242, 144 N. W. 630.

In one of the cases relied upon by the defendant in support of his contention (Woodson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 224 Mo. 685, 123 S. W. 820, 30 L. R. A. [N. S.] 931, 20 Ann. Cas. 1039), the court said:

"But, further, an instruction cannot be broader than the pleadings, although the facts may take a wider range; nor, on the other hand, can the instruction be broader than the facts proven, although the pleadings may take a broader range." Degonia v. Railroad Co., 224 Mo. 589, 123 S. W. 807.

If the pleadings take a broader range than the facts proven, the court surely has power to give judgment for any relief to which the proof entitles the plaintiff; and where a party proceeds upon the theory that his relief is in equity, but fails to state sufficient facts to entitle him to equitable relief, he will be given the relief to which he appears to be entitled. If the plaintiff is entitled to a money judgment, a money judgment will be rendered. Donovan v. McDevitt, 36 Mont. 61, 92 Pac. 49.

Therefore, conceding that plaintiff did amend his complaint to state an action for specific performance, the court had power to grant any relief within the pleadings, which we think it has done in the judgment rendered. The cases cited by the defendant are in support of the proposition that where a trial court adopts a certain theory of a case, and renders judgment upon that theory an appellate court will not consider a different theory of the case, in order to sustain or reverse the judgment, and that judgment must stand or fall upon the theory upon which it was rendered. In this case, however, the court did not enter a judgment for specific performance, and we are not called upon either to sustain or reverse such a judgment. The judgment was for the unpaid purchase price of the land and for a foreclosure of the vendor's lien; the facts proven entitled the plaintiff to such a judgment, and that the pleadings may have been somewhat broader, we think, is immaterial.

Whether the action is one for specific performance or not, the judgment in the case of Hammond v. Ocean Shore Development Co. acted as an estoppel upon the defendant so as to prevent him from introducing evidence upon his "third" and "fourth" defenses, and therefore the objection of the plaintiff to the introduction of evidence on these matters was properly sustained.

[4] The defendant contends that the tender of a deed was a condition precedent to plaintiff's right of recovery, and that there is no proof of such tender. We think the failure to tender a deed was excused by defendant's repudiation of the contract, which repudiation and attempted rescission was fully set out in the "fourth" defense of defendant's answer. Ehrhart v. Mahony, 170 Cal. 148, 148 Pac. 934.

[5] The defendant argues, further, that as a portion of the installments under the contract was due at the time when the action for rescission of the contract was filed by defendant herein, in Mono county, the plaintiff herein, as defendant therein, was obliged to set up such installments as a counterclaim or lose his right to sue thereon. The case of Mackenzie v. Hodgkin, 126 Cal. 591, 59 Pac. 36, 77 Am. St. Rep. 209, holds that similar matter is matter for cross-complaint and within the meaning of section 442, Code of Civil Procedure. This section is permissive, and does not require matter of cross-complaint to be set up, under penalty of a forfeiture of the right to sue thereon. However, we think that a discussion of the distinction between counterclaims and cross-complaints becomes unnecessary here, for the reason that the plaintiff was clearly entitled to wait until the entire amount to be paid under the contract was due and payable before suing, and therefore he was not required to set up as a counterclaim the amount due at that time.

[6] Finally, it is defendant's contention that the judgment is erroneous because, if the action is to foreclose a vendor's lien, the court must decree a strict foreclosure, and therefore a deficiency judgment is improper. Admitting, as contended by defendant, that the statutory provisions for the entry of a deficiency judgment in mortgage foreclosures, contained in section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure, do not apply to vendor's liens, yet we think that the court had inherent powers sufficient to enable it to enter such a judgment without any express statutory authority.

The plaintiff clearly had a right under his contract to sue for the full purchase price of the land and he also had a right to foreclose the lien. Under our system of procedure, it cannot be said that, after foreclosing the lien, it would be necessary for him to bring another action at law in order to collect the amount still due him under the contract. The court had general legal and equitable jurisdiction, and had authority thereunder to do full and complete justice in the one action, and we think this has been done by the judgment rendered.

The judgment is affirmed.

VALE v. BOYLE, Auditor of City and County of San Francisco, et al. (S. F. 8771.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=236—PURCHASES—NECESSITY OF BIDS—"OTHER NECESSARY ARTICLES."

San Francisco Charter, giving the board of public works control of public utilities, authorizes it to purchase in conformity with the ordinance of the board of supervisors automobile busses as equipment for extension of a public utility operated by the city, notwithstanding the charter provisions requiring purchases of supplies "and other necessary articles" to be made after competitive bidding.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by Baldwin Vale against Thomas F. Boyle, as Auditor of the City and County of San Francisco, and others. From an order granting an injunction pendente lite, defendants appeal. Reversed.

George Lull, City Attorney, John F. English, John B. Gartland, and Oscar T. Barber, all of San Francisco, for appellants. John L. McNab, of San Francisco, and Byron Coleman, of Los Angeles, for respondent. Robert M. Searles, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from an order granting an injunction pendente lite, restraining the auditor of the city and county of San Francisco from issuing his warrant in payment for certain White automobile busses purchased by the board of public works of said city, after advertisement inviting bids, as directed by ordinance of the board of supervisors of said city. The main point involved in the case is the construction of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco with reference to the acquisition of equipment for the extension of a public utility owned and operated by the city. Respondent contends that the power to purchase such equipment is vested in the board of supervisors and must be exercised under the provisions of section 1, c. 3, art. 2, of the charter (St. 1899, p. 255), and that such charter power cannot be delegated by the supervisors to the board of public works. Appellants contend that by virtue of section 9, subdivision 8 of chapter 1, article 6 of said charter (Stats. 1899, pp. 286, 287) the supervisors had authority to direct the purchase by the board of public works of the automobile busses as equipment to be used as a public utility. That section provides as follows:

"Sec. 9. The board of public works shall have charge, superintendence and control, under such ordinances as may from time to time be adopted by the supervisors: * * * (8) Of any and all public utilities owned, controlled or operated by the city and county, or which may hereafter be so owned, controlled or operated."

The charter, as originally adopted in 1899, provided in article 12 thereof for the acquisition of public utilities. The automobile busses were purchased for the purpose of extending the service of an existing public utility which was expressly authorized by the provisions of article 12, § 16, subd. d, incorporated into the charter by amendment in 1907 (Stats. 1909, Second Extra Session of 1907, p. 37), which reads as follows:

"Sec. 16. (1) Whenever any public utility shall be operated by the city and county * * * the supervisors may, from time to time, make appropriations from such funds for the following purposes: * * * (d) For extensions and improvements."

Section 14 of the same chapter, added by amendment at the same time, provided as follows:

"Power to Acquire Public Utilities.

"Sec. 14. The city and county shall have power to acquire, construct or complete any public utility from funds derived from taxes levied for that purpose, or from funds derived from the sale of bonds issued for that purpose, as is provided in this charter, and may operate, maintain, sell or lease the same, subject to the other provisions and limitations of this charter."

Full power, therefore, is given by the charter to the city "to acquire, construct or complete any public utility" (section 14, supra), and to utilize certain funds for the purpose of purchasing equipment for extensions and improvements. "Charge, supervision and control" of such public utilities are vested by the charter in the board of public works, under such ordinances as may from time to time be adopted by the supervisors." In the absence of any provision to the contrary in the charter, these provisions, no doubt, authorize the purchase by the board of public works of equipment from funds appropriated therefor by the board of supervisors in the manner provided by the ordinances adopted "from time to time" by the said board of supervisors. But respondent contends that the direct and implied authority derived from the provisions of section 9, subdivision 8 of chapter 1, article 6, supra, is controlled by the provisions of the charter, specifically providing for the purchase of supplies and other articles, and directing that the same shall be purchased by contract awarded to the lowest bidder, after advertisement inviting bids therefor. These provisions (section 1, c. 3, art. 2, supra) are as follows:

"Contracts.

"Section 1. All contracts for goods, merchandise, stores, supplies, subsistence or printing for the city and county, as well as for all subsistence, supplies, drugs, and other necessary articles for hospitals, prisons, public institutions and other departments not otherwise specifically provided for in this charter, must be made by the supervisors with the lowest bidder offering adequate security, after publication for not less than ten days in the official newspaper; and no purchase thereof or liability therefor shall be made or created except by contract.

"Except as otherwise provided in this charter, the board must determine annually what goods, merchandise, stores, supplies, drugs, subsistence and other necessary articles will be needed by the city and county for the ensuing year, and it shall have no power to purchase or to pay for the same unless the provisions in this charter provided as to competitive bidding for supplies are strictly followed, and no contract shall be made for any of the same unless upon such competitive bidding."

It is contended that the automobiles in question are "other necessary articles for * * * other departments not otherwise specifically provided for in the charter," and that therefore this section relating to the purchase of such articles controls, for the reason that there is no specific provision in the charter for the purchase of "articles" for the equipment of a public utility. In considering this contention it should be observed that the section deals with the purchase of supplies used by the city in its various departments and institutions by means of annual contracts for such supplies. The duty of the board of supervisors to determine annually in advance "what goods, merchandise, stores, supplies, drugs, subsistence and other necessary articles will be needed by the city for the ensuing year" is as imperative as the duty to purchase from the "lowest bidder" after advertisement unless otherwise provided in the charter. "It shall have no power to purchase or to pay for the same unless the provisions in this charter provided as to competitive bidding for supplies are strictly followed, and no contracts shall be made for any of the same unless upon such competitive bidding." "All contracts * * * must be made by the supervisors with the lowest bidder offering adequate security, after publication for not less than ten days in the official newspaper; and no purchase thereof or liability therefor shall be made or created except by contract." The language of the second sentence of section 1 is almost identical with the first sentence as to the character of goods, etc. Each applies to "goods," "merchandise," "stores," "supplies," "drugs," "subsistence," and "other necessary articles." The first sentence provides for the purchase of such "supplies for hospitals, prisons, public institutions and other departments not otherwise specifically provided for in this charter," while the last sentence uses the shorter form of expression "needed by the city and county for the ensuing year." Under the doctrine ejusdem generis, the words "other necessary articles" used in the second sentence should be construed as applicable only to things of the same general nature or class as those enumerated, namely, supplies of such a general nature used by the city as the board might anticipate and "determine annually in advance" to be so required, and the same words in the first sentence, used in the same connection, should receive the same interpretation. Although this precise question has not been heretofore determined by this court, a similar provision of the Political Code and the County Government Act have been passed upon by the courts of this state. Section 25, subdivision 21 of the County Government Act of 1897 (Stats. 1897, pp. 452, 464) provides as follows (italics ours):

"Sec. 21. The board of supervisors of the several counties shall annually advertise, for at least ten days in a newspaper of general circulation in the county (if there be a newspaper published in the county, otherwise by posting notices in three public places), for sealed bids for furnishing the county with stationery, clothing, bedding, groceries, provisions, drugs, medicines, and all other supplies. All bids shall be on a schedule showing all articles needed in the several offices and departments, prepared by the clerk of the board, shall state separately the price of each article to be furnished, and any person may bid upon any article separately. In considering such bids, the board may accept or reject all or any of them, or may accept or reject a part of any such bid, preference being given, however, to the lowest responsible bidder. All supplies furnished the county, or any officer thereof shall be furnished at a price no greater than is specified in the bid which may be accepted by the board.

"The board shall annually fix the price at which the county shall be supplied with job printing and blank books, from a schedule prepared by the clerk of the board," etc.

It will be observed that this section, literally construed, required the board of supervisors to annually advertise "for all other supplies" furnished the county. In Swasey v. County of Shasta, 141 Cal. 392, 395, 74 Pac. 1031, 1033, in considering the authority of the county to erect a fence, and in analyzing the provisions of the County Government Act, it is said: "Subdivision 21 [requires] that all ordinary county supplies shall be bought after advertisement for sealed bids." This same subdivision was later passed upon by the Appellate Court of the Second District in County of Riverside v. Yawman & Erbe Manufacturing Co., 3 Cal. App. 691, 86 Pac. 900, where it was insisted that the board of supervisors were required to advertise for furnishings for a county courthouse. The court there said:

"It is insisted that furnishings for a courthouse are 'other supplies' within the meaning of the law, and that there being no publication or bids therefor, or schedule prepared as provided, the purchase and payment were therefore without authority of law. We are of opinion that from a reading of the whole subdivision, it is apparent that the term 'other supplies' has reference to ordinary supplies which the board is required to keep for use and replenish annually, if needed, for distribution among the county officers; that furniture for courthouse is not, in the contemplation of such act, ordinary supplies."

It was further said:

"This construction is accentuated by subdivision 8, section 25 of the same act, which confers express authority upon the board to erect, rebuild, or furnish a courthouse, and with reference to which furnishing no publication or competitive bidding is expressly required. (Italics ours.) In addition, the board by virtue of section 4 of the act is given authority, generally, to purchase such personal property as may be necessary in the exercise of its powers."

A similar question was presented in People ex rel. Leonard Merrill v. Nellis et al. and Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles, 14 Cal. App. 250, 111 Pac. 631. It is there said:

"It is averred that the supervisors advertised for bids; that the same were received; that one bidder offered to supply the needed furnishings for $150,000, while another bid therefor $247,700; that the goods so to be furnished under such respective bids were in quality, texture, and workmanship the same. It is further averred that the notice given soliciting such bids, and the specifications in said notice referred to and made part thereof, were uncertain in their terms and provided no data upon which intelligent bids could be made; that it was required of the bidders that they furnish their own plans, and in addition give bonds indemnifying the county against all damages for infringement of patents caused by suit or otherwise, all of which it is averred increased the cost of material and furnishings; that when said bids were received the board awarded the contract to the highest bidder."

It will be observed that the situation described in the complaint in that case is almost identical with the complaint made here; that after advertisement on insufficient specifications bids were received from contractors upon their own plans, and the contract was awarded "to the highest bidder." The court there held that under the provisions of the County Government Act, hereinbefore quoted, "the board of supervisors may in their discretion, go into the open market and purchase furnishings for a public building, where such furnishings form no part of the structure is not disputed. Their authority so to do is determined in Sarver v. County of Los Angeles, 156 Cal. 188 [103 Pac. 917]; Riverside v. Yawman-Erbe Mfg. Co., 3 Cal. App. 691 [86 Pac. 900]." In Sarver v. County of Los Angeles, supra, it was held that the cells of the county jail were a part of the jail furnishings. The court there said:

"In the matter of furnishings, something from the necessities of the case must be left to the sound judgment and honest discretion of the board of supervisors. Desks, chairs, book shelves, carpets, light fixtures, etc., are of different prices and quality. Many of such articles are manufactured under patents and could be procured but from one source. It would be practically impossible to call for the furnishing of a building under pre-adopted plans and specifications adequate to exclude the necessary play of discretion and judgment, and, as we have said, the law has not undertaken so to hamper the boards of supervisors in the performance of this important duty. In the case at bar it may well be, as the appellants plead, that, notwithstanding the Pauly Jail Building Company's bid was higher in terms of money, it was still the lowest and the best in consideration of the quality of work, of material to be used and of patented devices to be employed. That such patented devices may be considered, and, indeed, called for by the board of supervisors, is well settled. Nicholson Pavement Co. v. Painter, 35 Cal. 697; Dunne v. Altschul, 57 Cal. 474."

At the time this decision was rendered, subdivision 21, § 25 (Stats. 1897, p. 464, supra), read substantially as above quoted. In that case the contract had been awarded to the highest bidder, whose bid was alleged to have been over $6,000 in excess of that of the lowest responsible bidder; the supervisors justifying themselves on the ground that the furnishing of cells required the use of patented locking devices, etc., and that therefore they exercised a proper discretion in awarding the contract to the highest bidder. Apparently the attention of the court was not called to the section of the County Government Act requiring "all other supplies" to be purchased after advertisement, and for that reason the case is not direct authority for the precise point involved here. That section 1, supra, was not intended, in the first instance, to apply to the purchase of equipment for the improvement or extension of public utilities, is manifest by the fact that the authority to purchase such equipment and supplies was conferred by amendment to the charter in 1907, while the restrictions of section 1 were embodied in the original charter of 1899, which was a modification of the previous consolidation act adopted and in force in the city and county of San Francisco ever since 1856 (St. 1856, p. 164). This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 69. All contracts for building and printing to be done for the said city and county, and ordinary supplies for subsistence of prisoners must be given by the board of supervisors to the lowest bidder offering adequate security, after due notice published for not less than five days in at least two newspapers in such city and county."

At the time, then, when the charter was adopted, the words, "other necessary articles for * * * other departments * * *" did not include automobile busses purchased for the equipment for an extension or improvement of a public utility. If, however, the amendment of 1907 referred to and incorporated therein by reference the general plan of purchasing of supplies contained in section 1, supra, then, of course, such provision would be controlling. The question, then, is: Do the words "as is provided in this charter," contained in section 14, hereinbefore set forth, relate to the "acquiring, constructing or completing" a public utility, or to the method of acquiring funds for that purpose? It is clear, we think, that they apply to the latter, and not the former. The considerations which led the court to hold that the requirement that contracts for "all other supplies" (section 25, subd. 21, supra) be purchased from the lowest bidder did not limit the power of the county board of supervisors to purchase furniture and jail cells are much more persuasive when applied to the situation presented by the instant case. For, under the charter provisions concerning public utilities, the city and county of San Francisco, through its board of public works, is acting in a proprietary and not in a governmental capacity, and it may well be assumed that, in placing such utilities in charge of one of the boards of the city, it was contemplated that so far as consistent such board should have the usual powers incidental to the operation of such public utility including the power to purchase the necessary supplies and equipment, this power to be exercised under the charter of the city of San Francisco by the board of public works, under such limitations as may from time to time by ordinance be prescribed by the board of supervisors. Section 9, subd. 8, Charter, supra. While it is true that this general consideration alone should not control the express language of section 1, c. 3, art. 2, of the charter, if applicable thereto, it aids us in construing such general provisions of the charter concerning the purchase of supplies, etc., to consider that they were adopted for the purpose of regulating the conduct of the board of supervisors of San Francisco, acting in their governmental capacity. The foregoing considerations and authorities lead to the conclusion that the charter provisions giving the board of public works "charge, superintendence and control" of public utilities authorized them to purchase, in conformity with the ordinance of the board of supervisors, the automobile busses in question, and that the limitations contained in section 1, c. 3, art. 2, do not apply to such purchases.

It is contended, however, that the board of public works did not purchase said automobile busses in the manner directed by the ordinance of the board of supervisors. The ordinance, by reference, incorporated therein the plans and specifications then on file in the office of the board of supervisors. These plans and specifications also provided for the submission by the bidders of their own detailed plans and specifications for automobile busses that would fill the general specifications of the board of supervisors as to power, capacity, etc. The bids were in exact accord with the ordinance of the board of supervisors, and the contract therefore was valid.

The order granting an injunction pendente lite is reversed.

PEOPLE v. WADEMAN. (Cr. 444.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 31, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 29, 1918.)

1. RAPE ⟸52(1) — EVIDENCE — TIME AND PLACE.

In a prosecution for rape on a 14 year old girl, evidence held to fix the time and place of the commission of the offense with sufficient certainty.

2. RAPE ⟸54(1) — UNCORROBORATED TESTIMONY—SUFFICIENCY.

A conviction for rape may be had on the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix, although she may have made contradictory statements as to the person who had committed the crime and otherwise, in which case the testimony should be scrutinized with discriminating care.

3. RAPE ⟸52(1)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a prosecution for rape on a 14 year old girl, evidence held sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty.

4. RAPE ⟸44—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In rape prosecution, evidence of familiarity not amounting to sexual intercourse may be admitted to show the disposition of the parties.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸656(1) — REMARKS OF TRIAL COURT.

In a prosecution for rape, a remark by the court incidentally referring to prosecutrix as of tender years was not prejudicial, where it was undisputed that the girl was only 14 years old, especially in view of cautionary instructions.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸656(2) — REMARKS OF TRIAL COURT.

In a prosecution for rape on a 14 year old girl, a remark by the trial court that the prosecutrix was not overly bright, made in connection with a ruling as to relaxing the rule against leading questions, was not prejudicial, especially in view of cautionary instructions.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1170(1) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for rape, a ruling excluding questions put to prosecutrix by defendant as to whether she had sexual intercourse with any one else than defendant and as to who was the father of the child, it not being intended to exclude proof, was not prejudicial, whether right or wrong.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸772(4)—INSTRUCTIONS—TIME OF COMMISSION OF OFFENSE.

In prosecution for rape, an instruction that it was not necessary to prove that the crime was actually committed on the day charged, but that it was sufficient if it was committed within three years immediately preceding the filing of the information, was error when standing alone, being in conflict with rule requiring the people to select the day.

9. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸823(4)—INSTRUCTIONS—TIME OF COMMISSION OF OFFENSE—CURE OF ERROR.

An instruction in rape case that it was not necessary to prove that the crime was committed on the date charged, if it was committed within three years before suit, was not error, when considered in connection with subsequent instruction requiring proof of the offense on the particular occasion charged.

10. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸782(7)—INSTRUCTIONS —PRESENCE OF CHILD OF PROSECUTRIX—INFERENCES.

In a prosecution for rape, where the child of prosecutrix was brought into the courtroom, a question to prosecutrix by the district attorney as to who was the father did not necessitate the giving of an instruction as to the inferences arising from the presence of the child.

11. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸772(4)—INSTRUCTIONS —VENUE OF CRIME.

In a prosecution for rape, an instruction undertaking to recite the facts contained in the information was not erroneous as failing to definitely state the venue of the crime.

12. RAPE ⟸60—VERDICT—AGE OF PROSECUTRIX.

Pen. Code, § 264, as amended in 1913, requires a jury in a rape case to determine whether punishment shall be imprisonment in county jail or state prison, only where female is between 16 and 18 years old, and the verdict was sufficient without a finding as to age of prosecutrix, where information charged her age to be under 16 and it was undisputed that she was 14 years old.

13. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1130(2)—APPEAL AND ERROR—BRIEFS.

Assignments of error for refusing instructions requested by defendant in a rape case would not be considered, where neither the instructions nor the reason why they should have been given are set out in appellant's brief.

14. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1037(2)—CONDUCT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—OBJECTIONS.

In a prosecution for rape, a question by the district attorney in argument, as to whether "there was any reason to believe that this man is a better man than the Rev. M. S.," was not prejudicial in the absence of a motion to strike out or for a cautionary instruction.

15. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸721(5)—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—DEFENSE—FAILURE TO TESTIFY.

Arguments by the prosecuting attorney in a rape case that the testimony of prosecutrix was not contradicted by a single witness did not violate Pen. Code, § 1323, as to comments on the failure of the defendant to testify.

16. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸925½(1)—NEW TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF JUROR.

In a prosecution for rape, it was not necessary to grant a new trial because a woman juror had incidentally seen the child of prosecutrix during a recess, thereby receiving evidence out of court; it appearing that the baby's eyes were closed and its hair covered and that she looked at it only casually.

17. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1144(17) — APPEAL — PRESUMPTIONS.

In the absence of any showing to the contrary, other than the mere silence of the minutes, it must be presumed that the judgment speaks the truth as to whether defendant was informed of the nature of the charge against him before sentence was pronounced.

18. Criminal Law ⊂⊃1208(9) — Indeterminate Sentence Law.

In passing sentence on defendant in a prosecution for rape, it is error to impose a sentence of imprisonment from 1 to 50 years, there being under the Indeterminate Sentence Law no minimum punishment for rape.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Fred Wademan was convicted of rape. From the judgment and denial of a new trial, he appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Theodore A. Bell, of San Francisco, and Charles W. Thomas and R. B. McMillan, both of Sacramento, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was informed against by the district attorney of Yolo county for the crime of rape. He was found guilty and thereupon moved for a new trial, which was denied, and the court sentenced him to imprisonment in the state prison at San Quentin. The appeal is from the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial.

1. When the information was filed, it charged that the crime was committed within one year prior thereto, upon one Augusta Schwall, a female child of the age of 14 years. Upon demurrer to the information the court permitted the district attorney to amend the information by alleging that the crime was committed "on or about the 20th day of May, 1917," and striking out the words "within one year prior thereto." In his opening statement the district attorney mentioned two different days on which the criminal act was done, the second being a few days after the first. Defendant's attorney thereupon demanded that the district attorney designate the day of the month and hour of the day specifically upon which he relied. The district attorney replied:

"The burden is upon us to elect one particular act of sexual intercourse here, so we elect the first act, the act which I have stated occurred the day that Wademan was there assisting her brother Joe haul hay, while Augusta Schwall's father was over at Wademan's house pumping water and while the brother Joe Schwall went over there to hitch up Wademan's horse and feed the hogs. * * * The Court: Of course, if they can state the date it should be stated, but in the absence or inability to state the date then it could only be stated by circumstances, as I understand it. Mr. McMillan (defendant's attorney): Do we understand that he can state that he relies upon a circumstance occurring in the month of May—as broad as that? Mr. McDonald (district attorney): I have confined it to the noon hour upon the day that they were hauling hay and described that so the defendant could not be prosecuted and convicted of the same crime. I can't state the precise day. Mr. McMillan: It is alleged in the information that this act was committed on or about the 20th day of May. Mr. McDonald: It was some time in that neighborhood, but I could not say that was the day. Mr. McMillan: How close? Mr. McDonald: I don't know."

Defendant's attorney suggested that he might be desirous of proving an alibi in the case. "Such a situation confronting us, we would be entitled to have before us the exact day, the exact hour of this circumstance that the prosecution relies upon." The district attorney stated that at the preliminary hearing the prosecuting witness connected the act in point of time with reference to a picnic which was shown to have been held at Nicholas on May 27th, and that her recollection was that the second act was about three days before that, and the first act about three days before the second. "She could not swear to the precise day at the preliminary, and she has never been able to state it since, and I have described the act as near as I could, so he knows the occasion and I don't see what more could be asked. * * * The Court: Of course, with what there is before the court, the court can do nothing but deny the motion. It might be that the court could cure the situation subsequently if evidence would show to the court that this matter could be more clearly defined, and if it can be I will again insist upon the district attorney more clearly defining it. As the matter stands now, I have nothing before me upon which I could act." Defendant renewed the motion at the close of the testimony in chief of the prosecuting witness. "Mr. McDonald: I think the testimony shows conclusively that I cannot name the date. I have described the date to the best of my ability. The Court: Yes, I think the evidence has not revealed to the court any more than the court had at the outset as to the date, and the statement made by the counsel is that it is as near as he can tie to the date. The motion is denied."

[1] The evidence established with certainty the date of the picnic referred to as May 27th. The prosecuting witness fixed the date as the 24th or 25th of April when she was last "unwell" prior to her alleged sexual intercourse with defendant; the particular circumstances and events immediately surrounding the act, the hour, defendant's presence at the Schwall home on the occasion, were described; defendant's admission that he was there at the particular time when the act was alleged to have been committed under the circumstances as described by the district attorney; all this appeared, and that on no other occasion did the same or similar conditions surround the parties. It might seem strange that neither her father nor her brother could remember or fix the date of these happenings more definitely than they did—that is, prior to the picnic a few days and while defendant was working for them in haying time—but they testified that they could not designate the exact day of the month. Their pay roll, if they had one, would show that defendant worked for them certain days; but would not necessarily make note of any fact connecting the particular circumstances testified to with any particular date. That the prosecutrix failed to remember the date is not surprising. The evidence showed that she offered no resistance and yielded without reluctance; that she did not mention the affair until her pregnancy made concealment of her condition impossible. Considering all the circumstances, and that defendant admitted being alone with her in the house, under the circumstances described, which at no other time is it pretended again occurred, we find ourselves compelled to hold that the time and place were fixed with sufficient certainty, or to hold that this particular character of crime cannot be made out unless the day and hour are selected and definitely shown by direct evidence. We cannot subject the trial courts to so rigid and inflexible a rule as is contended for by defendant. Furthermore, inasmuch as he admitted being present on the only occasion when all these circumstances concurred, an alibi, obviously, could not avail him. His situation would have been no more favorable to him and no different had the day been fixed and he had admitted being there on that day. We must hold that the motion was properly denied.

2. And this brings us to the only ground for reversal open to him, aside from certain further alleged errors of law later to be noticed, namely: That the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. This contention is based upon the alleged inherent improbability of the testimony of the prosecuting witness. Her testimony was: That she was at the time doing the housework of her home. Her mother was dead, and her sister, a year younger than herself, was away. Her father was at defendant's place, about half a mile distant. Her brother Joe was working in the hayfield with defendant helping him. One of the young children was at school, and the other was with its father. At noon her brother, Joe, and defendant came to the house. Joe had occasion to go back to the field, which he did on his bicycle. That the witness was on the back porch near an opening to the cellar, and defendant attempted to have sexual intercourse with her there, but for reasons he explained and because Joe was liable to return any moment, which in fact he did in a few minutes, defendant desisted. That while at dinner defendant complained of having a headache and spoke of some chores to be done at his home and that he had promised to go over and hitch his horse to a buggy for his wife. That Joe told him to lie down on the couch and he would take his wheel and run over and do his chores and hitch up the horses. That defendant lay down on the couch, and Joe went to defendant's house, and witness took a story book, went into the room where defendant was lying, and commenced reading. She testified that defendant said:

" 'Is there a bed in the next room?' and I said, 'No,' and he looked and there was, and he said, 'Won't you go in and lie down on the bed?' and I said, 'No, I have to finish reading this book.' He says, 'You have got time to finish that some other time.' So we lied down on the bed, and he opened his trousers and lifted up my dress, and he asked me if I liked to do this, and I says I didn't know, and he says: 'Well, you ought to know; you might as well say yes.' "

The witness then stated that defendant had sexual intercourse with her. She testified to acts of improper familiarity with her before this time and afterwards, and that two or three days later he had sexual intercourse with her again on the sleeping porch of the house under circumstances described by her and while her little brother aged eight and little sister aged four were playing in the dooryard. She testified that on this occasion defendant came to the house unexpectedly and found her alone; that he accomplished his object and "tiptoed across the porch" and quietly slipped away without the children seeing him.

As to the circumstances surrounding the first act there was corroboration, but as to defendant's connection with the act itself there was no corroboration. The witness was delivered of a child on January 27, 1918, which established the fact that some person had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix, but did not tend to prove that defendant was the father of the child. It is now urged that the story told by the prosecuting witness is inherently improbable; that she first explained her condition by stating that two hunters came along and one of them forced her to submit to his embraces, but it appeared that at the time she made this statement she finally under some pressure said that defendant was the cause of her situation; and, particularly, it is urged that the child appeared to be a full nine months' child as testified by Dr. Fairchild, the physician who officiated at the accouchment, and hence defendant could not be the father, since the testimony did not fix the first act at an earlier date than about May 20th, or 252 days before the birth of the child, whereas the birth of a normal child usually occurs after from 270 to 280 days from the date of conception, and that the evidence was that this child was normal in all respects. The defendant did not testify in his own behalf.

[2] It is well settled by the decisions of the Supreme and appellate courts of this state that a conviction may be had upon the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecuting witness, although she may have made contradictory statements as to the person who had committed the criminal act and had otherwise made contradictory statements. Where there are no corroborating circumstances, in cases of this kind, the reviewing court should scrutinize with discriminating care the testimony given by the prosecuting witness. The defendant may be so placed as to be at the mercy of the prosecutrix and may have no means of disproving her testimony except by convincing the jury that she has committed downright perjury—a last resort not easy of accomplishment. Our Supreme Court, in some of the earlier cases, cited by appellant, has ordered reversals on the ground that the testimony of the prosecuting witness on its face convinced the court that the jury in believing it must have been governed by passion and prejudice. We are unable to discover in the testimony given in the present case by this young girl improbabilities inherent or otherwise. Viewing carefully all the facts and circumstances as narrated by her, as we have done, we can find no motive for falsely accusing defendant; the two families were close neighbors and frequently interchanged visits and were on the most friendly terms; this girl was not shown to have had intimate or dubious relations with any young men. So far as appears, she was a simple, unsophisticated girl of 14 years (the court spoke of her as "of tender years and not overly bright") who apparently did not comprehend the consequences or full meaning of the act to which she seems willingly to have consented. The friendly relations existing between these families should have restrained defendant from bringing this shame and disgrace upon this young girl. So far from the story related by Augusta Schwall being inherently false, it presents to our minds an instance, quite too common, of the power by which some men's sexual passions obtain complete mastery of their conscience and in seeking their gratification no heed is given to the consequences accruing to their victims.

[3] The expert testimony as to the normal period of gestation was not such as conclusively showed that the birth date of the prosecutrix's child was wholly inconsistent with the fact that conception may have taken place at the time fixed by the child's mother as the time when she had sexual intercourse with defendant. The testimony was sufficient to leave with the jury the determination of the fact involved in the point made by defendant. We think the verdict had sufficient support.

[4] 3. Error is claimed in permitting evidence to be introduced of familiarity "not actually amounting to acts of sexual intercourse," defendant contending that any acts short of this are inadmissible. Defendant relies upon People v. Castro, 133 Cal. 12, 65 Pac. 13, citing People v. Soto, 11 Cal. App. 431, 105 Pac. 420, to the effect that no case has extended the rule in the Castro Case. The district attorney cited People v. Koller, 142 Cal. 623, 76 Pac. 500. The view of the question taken by the learned trial judge was that, it being conceded that prior and subsequent acts of sexual intercourse were admissible as showing an adulterous disposition, any lascivious or other acts of familiarity tending to awaken or promote sexual desires were alike admissible. Logically, this seems to be sound reasoning.

[5, 6] 4. It is claimed that the court erred in making statements as to the age of the prosecutrix and in declaring that it would make no difference if half a dozen men had had illicit intercourse with her. During the course of a colloquy in which the court, the district attorney, and defendant's attorney took part, the court incidentally referred to the prosecutrix as of tender years; and in connection with the evidence relating to fixing the date of the act of sexual intercourse the court remarked that "the witness is not overly bright." The undisputed fact was that the prosecutrix was 14 years of age. That the court referred to her as of "tender years" could not have prejudiced defendant's case. The remark that "the witness is not overly bright" was made in connection with a ruling as to relaxing the rule somewhat which forbids leading questions. In the connection used, we do not think the remark was prejudicial. Furthermore, the court immediately directed the jury to pay no attention to the remarks and, in its charge, instructed the jury that they were "not to consider in any manner any remark made by either counsel or by the court, concerning the admissibility of testimony or the striking out of testimony improperly admitted."

[7] The objection made by the defendant to the questions put to the prosecutrix, "Did you ever have an act of sexual intercourse with any one else than Fred Wademan?" and, "Who is the father of that child?" was sustained by the court. Defendant seems to assume that this ruling precluded him from making proof that some other person was the father. He made no such offer during the trial. The ruling was not so intended and had no such effect. The court held that it was not a part of plaintiff's case and was not at that point admissible. Whether right or wrong in the ruling, defendant was not prejudiced by it.

[8] 5. A reversal is demanded because of error in giving people's instruction No. 8, as follows:

"You are instructed that while the crime is alleged, in the information, to have occurred on or about the 20th day of May, 1917, it is not necessary that the prosecution prove that the crime was actually committed by the defendant precisely on the 20th day of May, 1917. It is sufficient to sustain the charge if you be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, from the evidence in the case, that the crime alleged was committed at any time within three years immediately preceding the filing of the information, which filing was had and done on the 27th day of December, 1917."

It is contended that in every substantial part of this instruction it is similar to the one considered as error in People v. Elgar, 171 Pac. 697, and which was held not to be cured by a subsequent instruction. In the Elgar Case there were two acts of rape committed, one about May 6, and the other about May 14, 1917. The district attorney selected the first act as the one relied on for a conviction. After giving the instruction substantially as in the present case, that it is sufficient to show that the crime was committed at any time within three years immediately preceding the filing of the information, the court gave an instruction to the jury that—

"If you believe * * * that the said Jim Elgar, on or about the 6th day of May, 1917, * * * did willfully * * * have and accomplish an act of sexual intercourse with and upon the person of one Clementina Elgar, you should find him guilty as charged in the information."

The court held on appeal that this latter instruction did not obviate the injury done by the other instruction.

It is very plain that, if the rule requiring the people to select the day has any virtue or force, this instruction No. 8, standing alone, would seem to be in conflict with and is in violation of this rule.

[9] The Attorney General does not defend the instruction. His claim is that instruction No. 9 must be read with No. 8, and when so read "it is apparent that the instruction No. 8 is not improper in the case, but only has the effect of showing that the offense of rape stands alive and subject to prosecution for a period of three years after the date of the alleged act."

Instruction No. 9 is as follows:

"You are instructed that in the charge of rape, other acts of sexual intercourse between the accused and the female whom he is accused of having raped occurring both before and after the principal act charged may be introduced in evidence as tending to sustain the act of sexual intercourse charged; that is, the particular act upon which the defendant is being tried. In other words, acts of sexual intercourse between the parties may be shown by the prosecution to prove that the parties are lewdly inclined and that the barriers of modesty have been broken down with reference to each other but not primarily to prove habitual or continuous criminality or other offenses.

"But where several acts of sexual intercourse are claimed, by the prosecution, to have occurred between the defendant and a particular girl under the age of consent, the prosecution is required, at the commencement of the trial, to select some one particular act of sexual intercourse upon which it relies to make good the allegation of the information.

"In the case before us the prosecution has selected one particular act of sexual intercourse which it claims occurred between the defendant and Augusta Schwall. This one particular act is designated and described by the prosecution to be the first act of sexual intercourse which it is alleged was actually accomplished by the defendant with Augusta Schwall. It is further described by the prosecution to be the act which it is alleged was committed during the noon hour at the home of Augusta Schwall, at the time her father was alleged to have been at the home of the defendant for the purpose of pumping water with a gasoline engine and while her brother Joe Schwall went to the home of the defendant during said noon hour for the purpose of hitching up the defendant's horse and attending to his hogs.

"Such being the case, before you can find the defendant guilty you must find that he accomplished an act of sexual intercourse with Augusta Schwall on the particular occasion which the prosecution has selected. If you find that other acts of sexual intercourse or other lewd acts were committed by the defendant with Augusta Schwall, you may consider them for the purpose of determining whether or not he committed the particular act of sexual intercourse with Augusta Schwall which the prosecution has selected. But you can consider such acts for no other purpose."

The Attorney General says:

"A consideration of the last 20 lines of said instruction No. 9 will show that a verdict of guilty could only be had by the jury by reference to the offense charged (made specific by election stated) 'on the particular occasion which the prosecution has selected.'"

There was no evidence of sexual intercourse except upon the two occasions in May, the acts being within five days of each other. The jury were very clearly told that the act relied on must be and was selected by the prosecution, and that the act thus selected must be established to their satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt or they must acquit the defendant, and that evidence of other acts was admissible only for the specific purpose explained by the court. When considered together, as they should be and doubtless were by the jury, no person of ordinary intelligence could fail to understand that conviction must rest entirely, if at all, upon evidence directed to the particular act selected by the prosecution. We cannot doubt that the jury so understood the instructions.

6. Error of the court is assigned for refusing to give an instruction to the jury not to be influenced by the presence of the child, citing People v. Stanley, 33 Cal. App. 624, 629, 166 Pac. 596; and in declining to instruct the jury to disregard the question asked of the prosecutrix by the district attorney, "Who is the father of that child?" citing People v. Soto, 11 Cal. App. 436, 105 Pac. 420.

[10] It appeared that while the prosecutrix was on the witness stand her baby was brought into court from an adjoining room. She testified that it was her child and was born on January 27, 1918. In the course of the examination the district attorney put to her the question, "Who is that father of that child?" Defendant objected to the question and also asked the court to instruct the jury to disregard the question as misconduct of the district attorney in asking it. The court seems to have regarded the matter as rebuttal and not open to the prosecution, unless evidence was introduced tending to show that some man or men other than defendant had had sexual relations with the prosecutrix; that, should the evidence make it admissible for the prosecution to put the question, it would be allowed. The request made by defendant for an instruction to the jury at that time included a request that the jury be instructed "not to be influenced or their sympathies captivated" by the presence of the child; that the child could be exhibited for the sole purpose of proving the corpus delicti, and not to prove that the defendant was its father. The court refused the request, stating that some of the matters he was willing to instruct upon as requested, but that others of them would be error. There was no circumstance connected with the presence of the child having any tendency to show that defendant was its father and that the child was there for any purpose other than to show that it was the child of the prosecutrix. There was no evidence in the case offered by defendant that had any tendency to show that some person other than defendant might have been or was the child's father. We do not think its presence in court alone made it necessary for the court to instruct the jury as to the limit to which inferences might be indulged from such presence.

[11] 7. Error is assigned in giving for the plaintiff instruction No. 11 reading as follows:

"You are instructed that if you find from the evidence in this case beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, Fred Wademan, committed the act of sexual intercourse with the said Augusta Schwall, on the occasion selected by the prosecution at the beginning of the trial, and you further find that said act of sexual intercourse was committed within three years prior to the filing of the information, and that the said Augusta Schwall was a female person under the age of 18 years at the time the act was committed, and you further find that the said Augusta Schwall was not the wife of the said Fred Wademan at the time the act was committed, then you must find the defendant guilty of the crime of rape as charged in the information."

The first error pointed out is that the instruction omits a definite statement of the venue of the crime, and that when the court undertakes to recite the facts contained in the information it must include every element necessary to sustain a conviction. The uncontroverted testimony was that the act was committed in Yolo county, and, while it may be true that the jury were at liberty to find this testimony to be untrue, we think the instruction by its reference to the act as selected by the prosecution sufficiently pointed to the place where the offense was committed.

[12] The point most seriously urged is that the court instructed the jury in effect "that, if they should find that the girl was under the age of 18 years, they must find that she was of the age stated in the information, to wit, 14 years," whereas, under section 261 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1913, "juries are now required not only to find whether or not the prosecutrix was under the age of 18 years, but necessarily they must find whether or not 'the female is over the age of 16 years'"; that, whenever the offense is charged under subdivision 1 of section 261 of the Penal Code, there must be a finding, which the jury alone can make, as to whether or not "the female is over the age of 16 years, and under the age of 18 years."

The Legislature by the amendment of section 264, lodged a discretion with the jury to determine whether the defendant is guilty of a felony or a misdemeanor where, in case of rape, the female is over the age of 16 years and under the age of 18 years. Such, however, being the case, "to take the question of age away from the jury," continues the brief, "certainly works a very substantial injury to a defendant, for it deprives him of an independent finding of the jury which might subject him only to a misdemeanor punishment."

The uncontradicted testimony of John Schwall, father of the prosecutrix, Augusta, and her testimony also, was that she was born March 27, 1903, and her age therefore was 14 years and 2 months at the time the offense was committed. The verdict of the jury was:

"We, the jury impaneled to try the above-entitled cause, find the defendant guilty of rape as charged in the information."

If the information had charged that the rape was committed upon a female under the age of 18, not giving her age, or if it had charged that she was over the age of 16 years and under the age of 18 years, it might be said that the information was laid under this section and that it was thus made applicable. But where the information distinctly charges that the female was under the age of 16 and the uncontroverted evidence so established the fact to be and the jury by their verdict found the defendant guilty as charged in the information, the amended section 264 has no application. If in such a case the question of age was controverted and the evidence conflicting, there would seem to be some force in the contention that the defendant would be entitled to a finding by the jury as to the fact in order that he might enjoy the right to have the jury determine whether he must suffer as being guilty of a misdemeanor or the greater penalty attached to a felony. As we understand section 264, it is only where "the female is over the age of 16 years and under the age of 18 years" that the jury is called upon to "determine by their verdict whether the punishment shall be imprisonment in the county jail or in the state prison." We think the verdict was sufficient without being supported by a separate or other finding as to the age of the prosecutrix.

[13] 8. Error is claimed in refusing defendant's instructions Nos. 21, 28, 29, 32, and 33. These instructions are not set out in appellant's brief and the only comment made upon them respectively is: No. 21 "should have been given," citing a case; "No. 28 should have been given under the rule laid down in" a case cited; "No. 29 was a proper instruction to be given as laid down in" a case cited; "No. 32 should have been given," citing cases; "No. 33 was directly within the rule laid down in" case cited. We do not think we are called upon to test the sufficiency of appellant's assignments of error thus made. We are entitled to know why he believes a particular instruction is violative of some rule or principle of law found in a decided case. Assuming, as we may in the absence of comment by appellant, that the purport of these instructions is correctly stated by the Attorney General, there would appear to be no error in refusing to give them.

[14] 9. Misconduct of the district attorney in his closing argument to the jury is assigned as error. One of the instances relied on is the reference made by the district attorney to the generally well-known Slaughter Case. Stating who Slaughter was and that he was found guilty of rape, the district attorney said: "Is there any reason to believe this man is a better man than the Rev. Madison Slaughter?" The record shows the objection, but appellant made no motion to strike out or request that the remarks be disregarded.

[15] The only other alleged error under this head called to our attention is contained in the following remarks of the district attorney:

"Now, gentlemen of the jury, I had faith when I took you on the jury, I still have faith in you, and I think there is only one thing you can do to do justice in this case, and that is to render a verdict of guilty. Gentlemen of the jury, I believe I am conscientious in saying it. I am not saying it because I want to win this case, because I would not be guilty of sending an innocent man to prison, but as sure as there is a God in heaven, that man is guilty. The officers in this case have done all we can do. The rest remains with you. If you want to do justice in the case, do justice by that girl, do justice by that child that is brought into the world by the defendant, do justice by that girl's family, and do justice to society in general, there is only one thing for you to do, and that is to render a verdict of guilty in this case, notwithstanding that man's position in the community. I would not ask you to do something I would not do myself; but, after I have heard the evidence in the case, there is only one conclusion I have arrived at. If you won't find this man guilty, don't ever sit in a rape case, because that is all the testimony you may get in a case of this kind. You will never find the crime committed with people standing about. You have got to believe the story of the girl in a rape case or you will never render a conviction. The girl's testimony is undisputed. If her story was contradicted, you might be in doubt; but the defense has left the story stand where it is unimpeached and undisputed, and, when you go into the jury room to consider whether the girl was telling the truth, ask yourself this question, 'Is her testimony contradicted by a single witness in this case?' and I say no. Under those circumstances, gentlemen of the jury, you have got to believe that girl; you cannot do anything else. Her story is true, it rings true, and she is telling the truth. I am not going to argue the case further. I am going to submit it to you for your judgment. Gentlemen of the jury, I have all confidence in you that you will do justice in this case and render a verdict of guilty."

The point emphasized is that the district attorney violated the provisions of section 1323 of the Penal Code "by indirection," citing People v. Morris, 3 Cal. App. 1, 84 Pac. 463; People v. Tyler, 36 Cal. 522; People v. McGungill, 41 Cal. 429; People v. Sanders, 114 Cal. 216, 46 Pac. 153. Referring to the district attorney's remarks, appellant says:

"The fact that he cunningly conveyed this thought to the jury, without making a direct reference to the defendant's omission to testify, should not shield him from the rule that has been so frequently laid down."

We do not think appellant's attorney quite justified in referring to the district attorney's remarks as cunningly intended to remind the jury that the defendant had not testified. But it is with the probable effect on the jury the reference to the matter was likely to have which we are to consider. The defendant is not required to testify in a criminal case, and the statute is intended to prevent the prosecuting officer from taking advantage of the defendant by reason of his failure or refusal to testify. The reviewing courts have very properly held it to be prejudicial error for the district attorney to call the attention of the jury to the fact that the defendant has not testified in his own behalf and to comment on the fact as warranting the inference that his silence is evidence of guilt. The district attorney should not be permitted by indirection to accomplish what the law frowns upon when done directly. And where his address to the jury shows on its face that the district attorney intended to invite attention to the failure of the defendant to take the witness stand and deny the charge and had the apparent effect to emphasize such fact and suggest an inference of guilt, such conduct should receive quick condemnation. We do not think, however, it can fairly be claimed that the district attorney intended to invite attention to the fact of defendant's not having testified or to suggest any inference deducible from the fact. In speaking of the testimony of the prosecutrix in the way he did, he had a right to claim that it was uncontradicted and that no witness had been called to impeach her testimony. The only reference to the matter came from the following instruction given at defendant's request:

"The court instructs the jury that, while the statute of this state provides that a person charged with crime may testify in his own behalf, he is under no obligation to do so, and the statute expressly declares that his neglect to testify shall not create any presumption against him. The jury should decide the case with reference alone to testimony actually introduced before them, and without reference to what might, or might not, have been proved, if other persons had testified."

It is impossible to withhold from the jury the fact itself. The most that can be done for the defendant's protection is to instruct the jury as was done and to restrain the district attorney from using the fact to defendant's prejudice. We cannot say that the remarks of the district attorney were so far prejudicial as to justify a reversal.

[16] 10. Appellant urges that the court committed error in denying the motion for new trial, it appearing at the hearing of the motion that one of the jurors, a woman, "examined the prosecutrix's child during a recess of the court," thereby receiving evidence out of court. It appeared from affidavits in support of the motion that a member of the jury, Albertina Graves, entered the witness room during the trial and while the court was at recess, where affiant and other witnesses were congregated; that in the room was Mrs. Metzger, who at the time was holding the prosecutrix's baby; that the juror stopped near Mrs. Metzger and looked at the baby's face for a short time and passed on to make an unimportant inquiry from another person in the room and then left the room. Albertina Graves made affidavit that she went to this room to make inquiry from a Miss Ogden, a waiting witness, as to the address of a person she wanted to see; that she knew Mrs. Metzger, but did not know Miss Ogden, and she asked Mrs. Metzger to point out Miss Ogden; "that at that time the said Mrs. Metzger had the baby referred to in the aforesaid affidavits in her lap; that affiant is informed and believes that said baby was the baby of Augusta Schwall; that said baby was wrapped up in a blanket; that the face of said baby was exposed; that affiant did not throw back the blanket covering the said baby's face; that affiant did not examine the face of said baby, but only looked at it casually, remarking to the said Mrs. Metzger at the time, 'What a nice big baby!' or words to that effect; that to the best of affiant's memory the eyes of said baby were closed; that the hair of said baby and the top of its head were covered; that affiant did not look at said baby for a few minutes, but only looked at it casually for about a half a minute; that in looking at said baby affiant did not do so with any purpose of ascertaining or endeavoring to see whether said baby resembled the defendant in the above-entitled action or for any other purpose concerned in said action; * * * that affiant made no remark of any kind to the said Mrs. Metzger or to the said Miss Hazel Ogden about the features or appearance of said baby, nor to any of the jurors in the case, nor did affiant make any remark to any of the jurors in said case about said baby prior to the verdict; the affiant only looked at said baby casually and not with the purpose of using it as evidence; that affiant rendered her verdict in said case purely and simply upon the evidence introduced into court and before the aforesaid court and jury in said action."

Several jurymen deposed that no mention of having seen the baby was made by the jurywoman Graves in the jury room. We do not think it can be said that she "received evidence out of court" in the sense which the law deems such conduct prejudicial.

[17] 11. When the hour for sentencing the defendant arrived, the court inquired whether he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed. His attorney stated that he desired to move for a new trial and thereupon served and filed his motion stating the grounds. The minutes show that the proceedings thenceforward consisted of argument as to the time when the motion would be heard and other matters pertaining to the motion. Subsequently, on March 6, 1918, the motion came up and was denied. "The Court: There is nothing further to do but to pronounce the ordinary sentence. You may stand up, please, Mr. Wademan. It is the judgment of the court and the sentence of the law that you be taken to state's prison at San Quentin, there to be confined, or to be confined in such prison as the prison directors shall decide, and that you shall there remain for not less than 1 nor more than 50 years, which time is to be fixed by the prison board according to law." On the same day the judgment was entered and read as follows:

"The district attorney, with the defendant and his counsel, Theodore A. Bell, Charles W. Thomas, and R. B. McMillan, came into court. The defendant was duly informed by the court of the information filed against him for the crime of rape on the 27th day of December, 1917, of his arraignment and plea of not guilty to the charge in the information, of his trial by a jury and the verdict of the jury of guilty as charged in the information, of his motion for new trial and the order denying said motion.

"The defendant was then asked if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him. To which he replied that he had none. And no sufficient cause being shown or appearing to the court thereupon, the court renders its judgment: That whereas the said Fred Wademan has been duly convicted in this court of the crime of rape, it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the said Fred Wademan be punished by confinement in the state prison of the state of California, and that the said Fred Wademan be taken to the warden of the state prison at San Quentin. The defendant was then remanded to the custody of the sheriff of the county of Yolo, to be by him delivered into the custody of the warden of said state prison at San Quentin, state of California, to be confined for a period of from one (1) to fifty (50) years."

For the first time in the proceedings the point is made in defendant's brief on appeal that before sentence was pronounced he was not informed of the nature of the charge against him, etc., as required by section 1200 of the Penal Code. In People v. Walker, 132 Cal. 137, 64 Pac. 133, it was held that the provisions of this section are mandatory. In that case the defendant made a motion after judgment that the minutes be corrected and the judgment vacated. The bill of exceptions which the lower court certified to be correct showed that the requirements of this section were not complied with. The motion was denied, and on appeal the Supreme Court reversed the order and directed that the cause be remanded "with directions to the superior court to arraign the defendant for judgment and to proceed thereupon as it may be advised." In the present case no such motion was made; the recitals in the judgment show that the requirements of the section were complied with. In the absence of any showing to the contrary, other than the mere silence of the minutes, we must presume that the judgment speaks the truth. People v. Perez, 87 Cal. 122, 25 Pac. 262; People v. Johnson, 88 Cal. 171, 25 Pac. 1116. Furthermore, every fact mentioned in the section was known to the defendant. He was personally present when sentence was pronounced and made no objection when called upon except to move for a new trial. We think section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution covers the case. If the cause were remanded, there is but one sentence under the indeterminate sentence statute which the court could enter. Upon the record we cannot say there has been a miscarriage of justice. When the Walker Case was decided, section 4½ of article 6 was not in existence. See People v. Tomsky, 20 Cal. App. 672, 130 Pac. 184.

[18] It is finally contended that the sentence is void, under the Indeterminate Sentence Law (St. 1917, p. 665), "as there is no minimum punishment fixed or prescribed for rape." We had this question before us in the case of People v. Rossi, 174 Pac. 916, and, upon the authority of that case, the portion of the judgment in this case which directs that the defendant be imprisoned for a period of from 1 to 50 years is stricken from said judgment, and, as so modified, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

COWAN v. UNION TRUST CO. OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 2444.)

1. TRUSTS ⊂⊃365(4)—SUIT TO ESTABLISH — LACHES—WHAT CONSTITUTES.
Where plaintiff, after having, with full knowledge of all facts, disclaimed any intention of asserting title to a fund, did not attempt to assert any title for over three years, his right to maintain an action to charge defendants as trustees, under Civ. Code, § 2224, as to involuntary trust resulting from gaining a thing by accident, mistake, etc., is barred by laches; there being no excuse for delay.

2. EQUITY ⊂⊃71(2)—LACHES—LAPSE OF TIME.
What length of time will constitute a defense on the ground of laches must be determined by the circumstances of each case, and is addressed to the sound discretion of the chancellor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

Action by W. F. Cowan, as trustee of the estate of Jean Pyatt, bankrupt, against the Union Trust Company of San Francisco and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Fred S. Howell, of Petaluma, for appellant. A. H. Crook, H. F. Peart, and Byrne & Lamson, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff claims this action to be one brought to charge the defendants, as trustees, as provided in section 2224 of the Civil Code, and in this behalf he seeks to recover a money judgment for $2,674. The defendants appeared and answered and a trial was had on the facts. Judgment was ordered for the defendants. The appeal is from the judgment, and is supported by a bill of exceptions.

[1, 2] The answers alleged, and the trial court found, that the plaintiff's claim was barred by the plaintiff's laches. In support of the defense of laches much evidence was introduced. It is not conflicting. It shows that an ever decreasing fund existed from 1896 down to the date of trial; that each defendant, at one time or another, had the handling of some of the moneys; that no defendant profited any sum whatever out of it; that every cent was paid over to Jean Pyatt, the beneficiary; that as early as May 2, 1911, the plaintiff could have legally asserted a claim to the residue; that, with full knowledge of all of the facts, the plaintiff at first disclaimed any intention of asserting title, and did not, till 3 years 4 months and 19 days thereafter, attempt to assert any title. The record does not contain any excuse for this great delay. We think the facts found by the trial court constitute a complete defense. Cahill v. Court, 145 Cal. 42, 44, 78 Pac. 467; Marsh v. Lott, 156 Cal. 643, 105 Pac. 968. The question as to what length of time will constitute a defense on the ground of laches must necessarily be determined by the circumstances of each case, and is addressed to the sound discretion of the chancellor. In the light of the above-mentioned facts, the discretion of the chancellor certainly was not abused.

The judgment is affirmed.

OREE et al. v. GAGE et al. (Civ. 2445.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 17, 1918.)

1. TRUSTS ⊂⊃81(4)—RESULTING TRUST—PAYMENT BY CHILDREN FOR CONVEYANCE TO PARENT.
Mother, who took deed to property, the entire purchase price of which was paid out of the earnings of her daughters, held the property in trust for the daughters.

2. HOMESTEAD ⊂⊃81 — PROPERTY HELD IN TRUST.
Mother could not legally declare property held by her in trust for her daughters a homestead.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by Mary L. Oree and others against Vincent Gage and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

John C. Fleming, of Fresno, Paul Nourse, of Los Angeles, and B. W. Gearhart, of Fresno, for appellant. W. D. Crichton and C. K. Bonestell, both of Fresno, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action to quiet title. The plaintiff had judgment in the trial court, and the defendant Gage has appealed, under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

On June 14, 1895, J. Downing deeded to Clara Gage. On December 21, 1895, Clara Gage deeded to these plaintiffs. The judgment of the trial court was correct, if the property was not community property, and was not affected by a purported declaration of homestead.

[1, 2] The plaintiffs introduced evidence that they were the daughters of Clara Gage by a former marriage; that their mother took and held the property in trust for them; that the purchase price was paid out of the earnings of the daughters; and that the defendant stepfather did not contribute anything to the payments, but during the major portion of the period during which the purchase price was being paid he was living separate and apart from the mother. The trial court evidently believed this testimony, and properly held that Clara Gage merely held the property in trust for her daughters. On trust property she could not legally declare a homestead. Osborne v. Strachan, 32 Kan. 52, 3 Pac. 767; Rice v. Rice, 108 Ill. 199; Gordon v. English, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 640; Shepherd v. White, 11 Tex. 346; Bier v. Leisle, 172 Cal. 432, 435, 156 Pac. 870.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

ROBERT v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2749.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⊂=159(13)—APPEAL—UNDERTAKING—WAIVER.

The giving of an undertaking on appeal from justice court to superior court, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 978, may be waived by respondent, in view of Civ. Code, § 3513, providing that any one may waive the advantage of a law intended solely for his benefit.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=228—REVIEW — WAIVER.

Where respondent, on appeal from justice court to superior court, waived the giving of the undertaking required by Code Civ. Proc. § 978, and interposed no objection to trial without such undertaking, he could not, on appeal to the District Court of Appeal, in view of Civ. Code, § 3517, question superior court's jurisdiction on ground that undertaking was not filed.

Petition for certiorari by J. H. Robert against the Superior Court of Los Angeles County and Charles Monroe, Judge thereof, to review a proceeding wherein petitioner was plaintiff and the Los Angeles Railway Company was defendant. Affirmed.

Fay R. Robertson, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Certiorari. Upon trial had in the justices' court, petitioner, as plaintiff, obtained a judgment against the Los Angeles Railway Company, from which it appealed to the superior court. Within five days after the time of serving and filing the notice of appeal, the parties filed with the justice a written document, duly signed, which, after reciting the service and filing by the Railway Company of its notice of appeal, and its desire to have the undertaking for costs and that for a stay of execution waived, stated:

"Now, therefore, it is hereby stipulated that each and both of said undertakings are hereby expressly waived. It is further stipulated that said appeal shall be deemed perfected for all purposes without the filing of said undertakings."

Thereafter, within due time, a transcript of the record was transmitted to the superior court, where, without any objection at any time interposed by the plaintiff in said action, the case was tried, as a result of which a judgment was rendered in favor of defendant. Notwithstanding the express waiver of the undertaking for costs, petitioner now asks this court, in reviewing the proceeding, to annul the judgment so entered by the superior court, the ground therefor asserted being that upon the facts shown the court had no jurisdiction of the appeal. This contention is based upon section 978, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides:

"An appeal from a justice's or police court is not effectual for any purpose, unless an undertaking be filed with two or more sureties in the sum of one hundred dollars for the payment of the costs on the appeal."

[1] In construing a similar statute the Supreme Court of South Dakota, in Brown v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 10 S. D. 633, 75 N. W. 198, 66 Am. St. Rep. 730, held that an undertaking on appeal is required, not only for the benefit of the adverse party, but on grounds of public policy, and, since it constitutes one of the essential steps in perfecting an appeal, a waiver thereof was insufficient to confer jurisdiction. A like ruling was made in Santom v. Ballard, 133 Mass. 464. Petitioner, in support of this view, also cites several cases in this jurisdiction, among them Thomas v. Hawkins, 12 Cal. App. 327, 107 Pac. 578, and Stimpson v. Superior Court, 12 Cal. App. 536, 107 Pac. 1013, to the effect that the undertaking for the payment of costs on appeal is an essential and indispensable prerequisite to the conferring of jurisdiction of appeals from justices' courts. The California cases, however, do not involve the question of a waiver, and while the South Dakota and Massachusetts cases are in point they are clearly based upon the asserted fact that the undertaking for costs is required upon grounds of public policy and for public reasons, and hence could not be waived. We do not assent to this. The bond runs to the obligee and is clearly for the benefit of the respondent in such action. We are unable to perceive any grounds of public policy upon which it could be based, and since, under the provisions of section 3513 of the Civil Code, "any one may waive the advantage of a law intended solely for his benefit," we are constrained to hold that, since the undertaking was clearly for petitioner's benefit, he, under the provision quoted, had the right to waive the giving of the same.

Moreover, the history of the legislation clearly indicates that such was the intent of the Legislature. The Practice Act of 1860 (St. 1860, p. 298) contained the identical provision here under consideration. In Blair v. Hamilton, 32 Cal. 50, the court had under consideration a case wherein the sureties upon such undertaking were excepted to and upon the hearing the justice, saying that he knew the sureties were good, refused to swear them, to which action the defendant for whom such undertaking was given assented. In the superior court it was insisted that the sureties not having justified, the situation was as though no undertaking had been filed and hence the district court was without jurisdiction. The Supreme Court, in deciding adversely to the contention, said:

"A party may waive the performance of an act intended for his benefit and security. He [petitioner] might have waived a bond altogether, an act which is frequently done, much more a justification of the sureties."

While it may be and is contended that the statement by the court as to the power of one to waive the giving of such undertaking without affecting the jurisdiction of the court was unnecessary to the decision, nevertheless it was germane to the question involved and an interpretation of the statute as it then existed. In the case of In re Li Po Tai, 108 Cal. 484, 41 Pac. 486, the court, in construing the effect of a re-enacted statute which had theretofore been interpreted, said:

The decision so construing the provision "was made many years ago, and has never been overruled or questioned. Meantime, the Legislature has revised the statute, and re-enacted this particular section in its old form, and we are bound to suppose with the intention that it should be construed now as it was construed before the revision."

To the same effect is Dalton v. Lelande, 22 Cal. App. 481, 135 Pac. 54, and State Commission in Lunacy v. Welch, 154 Cal. 775, 99 Pac. 181. So here, after what was said in Blair v. Hamilton, supra, the Legislature re-enacted the provision under consideration, and we must assume that in so doing it had in mind the construction placed upon it by the Supreme Court and as so construed, re-adopted it as a part of the law.

[2] We are further of the opinion that, as provided in section 3517, Civil Code, "no one can take advantage of his own wrong," and that petitioner having waived the undertaking and, without interposing any objection, gone into the trial and taken the chances of obtaining a judgment in his favor, his objection now made comes too late and he should not be heard to question the jurisdiction of the court. The case of Matthews v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 527, 11 Pac. 665, was one wherein the notice of appeal was not served upon the attorney representing the plaintiff, but, through error and inadvertence, upon another attorney; notwithstanding which the proper attorney of record appeared at the trial and, without questioning the sufficiency of the service of the notice of appeal, proceeded with the trial, after which it was claimed that the court had no jurisdiction by reason of want of service of the notice. In its decision the court said:

"Such being the case, the party will not be heard to say that the court had no jurisdiction."

To the same effect are Montgomery v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 407, 9 Pac. 720, Elder v. Crabtree, 59 Ark. 177, 26 S. W. 817, and Moyle v. Landers, 78 Cal. 99, 20 Pac. 241, 12 Am. St. Rep. 22.

The proceedings, the regularity of which is attacked for want of jurisdiction, are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

PEZZONI v. PEZZONI. (Civ. 2447.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 16, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 14, 1918.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂⊃279(6)—SEPARATION AGREEMENTS—"DEPART"—"APPROACH."

Where a separation agreement between a husband and wife provided that the husband was "to depart from California for Switzerland" and never to "approach" the wife against her will, it was a breach for husband, after having received monthly payments stipulated, to return from Switzerland; the word "depart" meaning to go away, and having reference to permanent visits, and the word "approach" meaning to come nearer in space.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Depart.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by Victor Pezzoni against Pia Pezzoni. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff for less than amount claimed, he appeals. Affirmed.

Harry F. Sullivan, of San Francisco, for appellant. S. G. Tompkins, of San Jose, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action on a written contract for the payment of money. The plaintiff had judgment in the lower court for $475; but, contending that his recovery should have been for $625, the full amount claimed in the prayer of his complaint, he has appealed on the judgment roll.

If the defendant is right in her interpretation of the written contract, the judgment should be affirmed. The contract sued on is set forth in the findings, and is as follows:

"This stipulation, entered into by Victor Pezzoni, of Osoflaco, San Luis Obispo county, California, and Pia Pezzoni, his wife, stipulates that, inasmuch as there is an unsurmountable incompatibility of temper and character between the husband and wife, they have herein agreed to a peaceable separation on the following terms and conditions:

"First, that said Victor Pezzoni will leave his wife's abode in Osoflaco and depart for Switzerland, and at no time hereafter will ever molest her or approach her against her will, and that their daughter Ernestina is left in the sole charge and care of the mother.

"Second, that in consideration of Victor keeping to the above agreement, Mrs. Pia Pezzoni agrees to pay immediately and hereafter the following sums as hereinafter stipulated: One hundred dollars for clothing and necessaries; one hundred and seventy-five dollars for first-class passage from Guadalupe to Switzerland; seventy-five dollars for pocket money for incidentals on the trip; a draft of one hundred dollars collectible on his arrival in Switzerland; and to send him thereafter a monthly remittance of twenty-five dollars each month.

"Each of the contracting parties agrees to comply faithfully to his or her agreement in the above stipulation.

"Done in duplicate this twelfth day of January, 1911, that each party may have a copy.

"Victor Pezzoni. [Seal.]
"Pia Pezzoni. [Seal.]

"Witness: S. Campodonio.
"W. F. Lucas."

It was found by the lower court that:

"After the execution of the agreement, and pursuant thereto, and solely by reason thereof, said Victor Pezzoni left his wife's abode and departed for Switzerland. Thereafter said Victor Pezzoni returned to California, and ever since his return he has continued to reside and now resides within the state of California."

The defendant claims that the finding last quoted shows that the plaintiff has breached his contract and may not recover. We think this claim is sound. Under his contract the plaintiff was "to depart for Switzerland." The word "depart" means to go away, and is synonymous with abandon, die, and escape. Standard Dict. Such was its old legal meaning. Burrill's Law Dict. It does not imply temporary visits, but has reference to permanent visits. Blodgett v. Utley, 4 Neb. 29; Venuci v. Cademartori, 59 Mo. 352; Webster v. Bank, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 353, 96 N. W. 118, 119; Lee v. McKoy, 118 N. C. 518, 24 S. E. 210; In re Jack Sen (C. C.) 36 Fed. 441. We think this meaning of the word "depart" is reinforced by the clause that the plaintiff will never "approach her against her will." One of the ordinary meanings of the word "approach" is "to come nearer in space." Stand. Dict. Again, his departure was a sine qua non so far as payments by the defendant were concerned. The plaintiff was to be paid his expenses of going to Switzerland, not the expenses of a round trip; his monthly allowance was not to be paid until "his arrival in Switzerland"; the subsequent payments defendant was "to send him" after plaintiff reached Switzerland.

The judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. WONG BOW. (Cr. 448.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 17, 1918.)

CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1130(4)—FAILURE TO FILE BRIEFS—REVIEW OF TRANSCRIPT.

Where one appealing from a conviction and sentence files no briefs, and his time to do so has not been extended by stipulation or order of District Court of Appeal, that court was not called upon to review the transcript.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Wong Bow was convicted of arson in the second degree, sentence was suspended, and he was ordered committed to a school of industry. From the judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

W. F. Geary and W. N. Vallandigham, both of Santa Rosa, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant, a Chinese boy 19 years of age, was informed against by the district attorney of Sonoma county, Cal., on the charge of arson. Upon trial the jury found said defendant guilty of arson in the second degree, with recommendation for leniency. The court, being of the opinion that said defendant, Wong Bow, was a fit subject for commitment to the Preston School of Industry, at Ione, Cal., suspended judgment (sentence) and ordered said defendant committed to said Preston School of Industry until he reaches the age of 21 years or until legally discharged.

This appeal is from said judgment, and order denying his motion for a new trial. Appellant has filed no briefs herein, nor has his time so to do been extended, either by stipulation or order of this court. Under such circumstances, while we are not called upon to review the transcript, we have carefully perused the same, and are satisfied that the defendant had a full and impartial trial, and was justly convicted of arson. Indeed, the evidence against him is overwhelmingly convincing, and we have perceived no sufficiently prejudicial error in the instructions of the trial court, nor ruling upon the admission or rejection of evidence, to warrant any interference by this court with said judgment or order.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

PEOPLE v. POWER. (Civ. 2641.)

1. HIGHWAYS ⟸158—OBSTRUCTION—ABATEMENT—DISTRICT ATTORNEY.
In view of Pol. Code, § 4156, and Civ. Code, §§ 3479 and 3480, relating to abatement of public nuisances, the district attorney may prosecute an action to abate the construction and maintenance of an earthen embankment on a public highway.

2. HIGHWAYS ⟸158—OBSTRUCTION—ABATEMENT—PLEADING.
A complaint in an action to abate a nuisance by maintaining an earthen embankment on a public highway sufficiently specified the size, height, width, and location of the embankment.

3. HIGHWAYS ⟸1—CREATION—NECESSITY OF FORMAL DEDICATION.
Notwithstanding St. 1855, p. 192, Pol. Code, § 2619, and its amendment (St. 1883, p. 6), and sections 2621 and 2618, relating to opening and dedication of highways, a formal declaration by the board of supervisors is not, under all circumstances, essential to the creation of a public highway; but the public right may arise by prescription or implied dedication.

4. HIGHWAYS ⟸68—OBSTRUCTION—ABATEMENT—EVIDENCE.
In an action to abate a nuisance by maintaining an earthen embankment along a public highway, evidence held to support a finding that the highway existed to a width of 60 feet.

5. HIGHWAYS ⟸158—OBSTRUCTION—ABATEMENT—EVIDENCE.
In a suit to abate a nuisance by maintaining an embankment on a public highway, ranch patents were admissible to show the lines of adjoining ranchos often referred to during the taking of testimony.

6. PUBLIC LANDS ⟸116—PATENTS—CONCLUSIVENESS.
In a suit to abate a nuisance by maintaining an embankment on a public highway, a patent issued to defendant's predecessor in title, referring to the road as a highway was admissible as against the defendant.

7. EVIDENCE ⟸229—ADMISSIONS.
In a suit to abate a nuisance by maintaining an embankment on a public highway, a protest by defendant's predecessor in title, admitting the existence of the road, was admissible to disprove the claim that the highway was not a public one.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by the People against George C. Power. From a judgment for plaintiff, and a denial of a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Barnes, of Ventura, and Edward M. Selby, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Don. G. Bowker, Dist. Atty., Robert M. Sheridan, and H. F. Orr, all of Ventura, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to abate a nuisance, alleged to have been caused by the construction and maintenance of an earthen embankment on a public highway. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The amended complaint contains allegations to the effect that the parcel of land therein described is now, and for more than 46 years prior to the commencement of this action has been, used by the public for the purposes of travel thereon as and for a part of a certain public highway known as the "Old Conejo Road"; that such use was continuous, notorious, and adverse to the claim or right of possession of the defendant and his predecessors in interest, and with their knowledge; that in the month of April, 1908, the defendant without any right whatever erected and constructed, and continues to maintain, a certain earthen embankment upon and along and within the exterior boundaries of said parcel of land for a total length of 3,145 feet, more or less; that by reason of said embankment the free passage and use in the customary manner of said parcel of land has been and is obstructed, and said embankment interferes materially with the right of the public to travel over and along said parcel of land in the usual and customary manner. The defendant's answer raised issues of fact as to the existence of the highway and separately as to the width thereof. Defendant did not deny that he constructed and maintained a certain earthen embankment upon, along, and within said parcel of land, but he denied that he did so without any right whatsoever, or without full legal right.

In the fifth paragraph of his answer the defendant alleged that he is the owner of all portions of said strip of land which lie southwest of the center line thereof and of a large tract of land adjoining said strip on the southwest; that on the land so owned by him he has a lemon orchard and other valuable improvements; that in order to conduct water to his trees for irrigation he has constructed a ditch upon his land about parallel with the center line of said parcel of land described in the amended complaint, and at all points distant more than 30 feet from said center line; that the northeast side or bank of said ditch extends upon the southwesterly portion of said parcel of land, but is at all points more than 20 feet distant from the center line thereof.

In its findings the court declared that the defendant constructed and maintained said earthen embankment within the limits of the parcel of land described, which land is a part of the highway as alleged by plaintiff, and that said embankment is located on the south or southerly portion thereof. As to the other statements above mentioned, as found in the fifth paragraph of the answer, there are no specific findings, but the evidence shows without conflict that they are true, and we shall assume that they are true; this assumption being in harmony with the assumptions made by counsel in their briefs.

We are unable to find any error in the court's finding that the action is not barred by the provisions of certain sections of the Code of Civil Procedure pleaded in the defendant's answer. The amended complaint was filed April 30, 1914, but we do not know when the original complaint was filed. The record on appeal does not show the time when the action was commenced.

[1] The district attorney was authorized to prosecute this action. Pol. Code, § 4156; Civ. Code, §§ 3479 and 3480.

[2] Appellant claims that the court erred in overruling his demurrer to the amended complaint. The points urged are that the complaint is uncertain because it does not specify the size, the height, the width, or the particular location of the alleged earthen embankment, and is further uncertain because it did not show in what manner the free passage and use in the customary manner of said parcel of land was obstructed by reason of the said embankment. We think that the complaint was sufficiently clear and certain as to these matters. The answer of the defendant and the evidence as produced at the trial further show that this part of the controversy was fully presented to the court and that the defendant suffered no prejudice by reason of the claimed uncertainty in the complaint.

Appellant claims that the roadway in question in this action has never become a public highway because it has never been declared such by order of the board of supervisors. In support of this the following statutory provisions are relied upon: Section 1 of "An act concerning roads and highways," found in the Statutes of 1855 at page 192, reads as follows:

"All roads shall be considered as public highways which are now used as such, and have been declared such by order of the court of sessions or board of supervisors, or which may be hereafter so declared by the board of supervisors within their respective counties."

Section 2619 of the Political Code, which became effective on January 1, 1873, as originally enacted, read:

"Roads laid out and recorded as highways, by order of the board of supervisors, and all roads used as such for a period of five years, are highways."

In 1874 section 2619 was amended by striking out the clause, "and all roads used as such for a period of five years." Section 2621 of the Political Code, as enacted in 1883 (St. 1883, p. 6), contained the provision that—

"No route of travel used by one or more persons over another's land, shall hereafter become a public road or byway by use, or until so declared by the board of supervisors or by dedication by the owner of the land affected."

In addition to the foregoing statutory provisions quoted by appellant, we should also take into account section 2618 of the Political Code which, as enacted in 1872, read as follows:

"Highways are roads, streets, or alleys and bridges, laid out and erected by the public, or if laid out or erected by others, dedicated or abandoned to the public."

And as re-enacted in 1883, and still in force, reads as follows:

"In all counties of this state public highways are roads, streets, alleys, lanes, courts, places, trails, and bridges, laid out or erected as such by the public, or if laid out or erected by others, dedicated or abandoned to the public, or made such in actions for the partition of real property."

[3] Notwithstanding the statutory provisions above noted, it does not appear that a formal declaration by the board of supervisors has ever been held to be under all circumstances essential to the creation of a public highway. On the contrary, the Supreme Court, in Hartley v. Vermillion, 141 Cal. 339, 348, 74 Pac. 987, 991, stated the law as follows:

"It is a matter of common knowledge that many roads and highways in this state—starting, perhaps, first as mere trails—became public highways without any formal or express dedication, but by long uninterrupted use and general acquiescence. When, as in this case, the public, or such portion of the public as had occasion to use the road, traveled over the same, with full knowledge of the landowners interested, without asking or receiving any permission and without objection from any one, for a period of time beyond that required by law to bar a right of action, a right in the public to the use of the road arises by prescription or implied dedication. Schwerdtle v. County of Placer, 108 Cal. 589 [41 Pac. 448]. In the opinion in that case a large number of authorities are cited to the effect that a dedication is presumed from long and continued adverse use as a road or highway."

Appellant next contends that the evidence does not justify the finding that the southerly 10 feet of the 60-foot strip is now or ever has been used by the public in general for the purposes of travel thereupon. Appellant's position is stated by his counsel as follows:

"He does not admit the existence of a public highway at all, but he does claim that, if any public highway exists by reason of people having traveled along the strip of land, the width of such highway does not exceed 40 feet, or 20 feet on each side of the center line. If so, the alleged embankment is not in the highway. * * * We are not, therefore, particularly concerned at this time as to the correctness of the findings of the court so far as they relate to the central 40 feet of the strip, but are essentially interested in determining the character of the southerly 10 feet of the 60-foot strip. The findings of the court above referred to relate to the entire width of the 60-foot strip, and the inclusion of the southerly 10 feet is essential to the support of the judgment."

[4] Our examination of the record of the testimony received at the trial satisfies us that there was evidence sufficient to support the court's findings, not only as to the existence of the highway, but also as to the full width of said 60 feet thereof. This may be shown by reference to a very few items of the evidence. The witness Flint, who has resided in Ventura county since May, 1863, stated that the property of the defendant is located on the south side of the Old Conejo road—what used to be the Conejo road, "and it is the same old road now." It must be admitted that there was some uncertainty in the testimony of this witness as to the location of the road. For instance, he says:

"The present road is farther north than the Conejo road was—than the old road. I think about to where his house is, is the same, and from there I think it is a little further south."

He further said that it was just about the same old track all the time until they began to fence it up, and was about 50 or 60 feet wide, or possibly 80 feet.

The witness Frank B. Dennis stated that he had been acquainted with the land now owned by defendant since 1860 or 1861, when the ranch was bought by Dixie Thompson; that in 1868 the Conejo road, from the Telegraph road to the Santa Clara river, ran about the same place it does at the present date; that it ran along the grant line between the San Miguel and the Santa Paula y Saticoy ranches. It may be noted at this point in explanation of the testimony that records were introduced in evidence which showed that defendant's property is in the Rancho San Miguel and in that part thereof adjoining the Rancho Santa Paula y Saticoy. The same witness said:

That "at that time it was all open country; you might say, I guess, it was just simply a main traveled road. It was probably 80 or 100 feet in width at those times, and it might have been less than that; it varied in width." That a fence was placed along that road by Dixie Thompson in 1878 or 1879.

D. D. De Nure testified:

That he became acquainted with the locality in question in 1869. That at that time they traveled on the same road that is there now. "It was just a common country highway. It never had been worked very much; just an ordinary road as you would find anywhere in a new country. I believe they call it the Conejo road." "I have no clear idea now of where Mr. Power's east line is, unless it is along that road. I have seen a lemon orchard there, but I did not notice whether it came up to the road or not." "After this county was set off from Santa Barbara, then that road was worked just about as it is now. I think it was about 1874 that they commenced working, after they got the new county; then we had the road worked, and the road along that fence, along that Montalvo road, to my recollection, was worked up about as wide as it is now, about 50 or 60 feet wide. That was considerably wider than it had been before that time; that is, it was wider after they commenced to work it."

The witness J. L. Crane knew this locality as early as 1862, and knew the Old Conejo road at that time.

"I could not locate absolutely where that road run then, but practically it never seemed to me that there was any change there from then until now; there was only this change, of course, the road was never fenced or laid off on lines, went weaving, as it were curved." "In 1862, and down to 1867, the road was varied in different widths; in some places it was 100 feet wide; in some places maybe it would not be over 60."

He further stated that he is satisfied that the old road from 1868 to 1874, the general location of it, is surely the same as at the present time.

The witness Barnes said:

"I am perfectly familiar with the road now traveled along the property of Mr. Power, known as Old Conejo road; that road has been used and traveled as it is at present from 1881 up to the present time. It never could have been changed, because, as I say, Mr. Mills' land was all fenced, and the Thompson land was all fenced; it could not have been changed. There has been considerable travel along that road during these years. It is probably the most extensively traveled road in the county. Road work has been done off and on during that period of time."

In this connection it should be remembered that Thompson was formerly the owner of property including the property of defendant.

[5, 6] Appellant further insists that certain of his objections to testimony offered by the plaintiff should have been sustained. We have examined that testimony and the objections offered, and are of the opinion that the court's rulings do not contain any errors of sufficient importance to warrant us in setting aside the judgment. The ranch patents were valuable and admissible for the purpose of showing the lines of adjoining ranchos, which lines were often referred to as the testimony was received; and the references to the Old Conejo road in the patent of Rancho San Miguel were admissible as against the defendant, since the patent was issued to a predecessor in title, and under whom the defendant's title came into existence. The objections to certain questions on the ground that they were leading may be disposed of by observing that the answers show that the witnesses did not "lead."

Assuming that the court erred in admitting in evidence certain field notes and plat of a survey made by the witness, John A. Barry, we think that the defendant was not prejudiced seriously thereby, if at all. While the plat shows a width of 60 feet for the road, this witness testified that the portion occupied by travel did not exceed 40 feet. The diagram simply showed a road, and while the field notes indicated that the witness made the measurements as for a 60-foot road, his admissions in testimony show that this was an arbitrary assumption. The documents should have been rejected, but they constitute a very insignificant portion of the evidence upon which the court made its findings as to the existence and width of the road.

[7] The court did not err in overruling the defendant's objections to certain proceedings in the matter of a petition for a road by Stevens and others. This referred to a proposed re-establishment of an important roadway intended to run partly by the route of the Old Conejo road. Defendant's predecessor, Thompson, filed a protest wherein he set forth reasons why the proposed road ought not to be established as a county road. This protest was sustained, and the proceedings were abandoned. The protest as made by Thompson was dated December 16, 1870, and contained numerous references to "the old road." One of these statements was that—

"The old road was many years ago established by competent persons as the county road, and money expended upon it by the state and county, making it a good, easy, safe, and practicable road."

This was an admission of fact concerning the existence of the road, and was admissible in evidence as against the defendant.

The case as a whole was very fully presented and fairly tried, and the court's findings are sufficiently sustained by the evidence.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

STEERE v. FORMILLI. (Civ. 2443.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 13, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 11, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS ⊜171(3) — CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING CONTRACT—ENTIRE CONTRACT.
Owner's agreement to pay contractor, during construction of building, 75 per cent. of value of labor performed and material furnished at end of three-week periods, did not make contract separable, or settlements so made accounts stated.

2. DAMAGES ⊜68—INTEREST—UNLIQUIDATED CLAIM.
In contractor's action against owner for breach of building contract providing for payment by owner, at intervals of three weeks, of 75 per cent. of the value of labor performed and material furnished, interest should not be allowed on such claim prior to date of judgment; the claim being unliquidated.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by J. E. Steere against Cesare Formilli. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas H. Breeze, of San Francisco, for appellant. Walter H. Linforth, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action to recover damages for a breach by the owner of a building contract. A trial on questions of fact was had in the lower court, judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed on the judgment roll. The lower court found: That the contract as pleaded contained a provision to the effect that the defendant would make payments "as follows, seventy-five (75) per cent. of the value of the labor performed and materials incorporated on the premises and in the said buildings and structures, as estimated by the defendant, less previous payments made, every three weeks commencing with the third week after the date of commencement of the plaster work"; that the plaintiff commenced the work on October 23, 1914, and continued to perform till March 2, 1915, when the defendant notified the plaintiff that the said contract was terminated; that the reasonable value of the work and materials was $18,333.50; that the proportion of the value of the work and materials furnished to the value of the work and materials to be done and furnished was $18,333.50. In framing its judgment the lower court allowed interest on the balance found due from the date of discharge, March 2, 1915.

[1] The principal point made by the appellant is that the work done and materials furnished during each three weeks constituted, under the terms of the contract, a separate contract, and the settlements made at the end of the three-week periods became accounts stated. This same point is presented in several ways, but the effect is the same. The point is not new. It has been expressly held that the contract provision in question does not operate to make the contract separable, but is a means provided by the contracting parties for estimating the amounts of the progress payments. American-Hawaiian v. Butler, 17 Cal. App. 764, 770, 121 Pac. 709; Keeling v. Schastey & Vollmer, 18 Cal. App. 764, 768, 124 Pac. 445; Adams v. Burbank, 103 Cal. 646, 650, 37 Pac. 640.

[2] The claim sued on was unliquidated. Until a trial was had the amount was but the pleader's estimate. In such a case, interest should not be allowed prior to the date of the judgment. Edwards v. Arp, 173 Cal. 472, 473, 160 Pac. 551; American-Hawaiian v. Butler, supra. The lower court allowed interest from the date of the breach of the contract. We think the judgment should be modified by deducting therefrom the amount of the interest which was computed as accruing between March 2, 1915 (the date of the breach), and July 17, 1916 (the date of the judgment), and as thus modified, it should be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

GEE CHONG PONG et al. v. HARRIS. (Civ. 1862.)

1. COURTS ⊜125—SUPERIOR COURT—JURISDICTION—AMOUNT.
The superior court would have no jurisdiction of suit against administratrix, where amount of claim sued upon was less than $300, unless the action could be treated as one in equity, on the ground that an equitable lien arose out of an agreement upon which major part of claim was founded.

2. AFFIDAVITS ⊜9—SUFFICIENCY.
The test of the sufficiency of an affidavit is whether it is so clear and certain that an indictment for perjury may be sustained on it, if false.

3. AFFIDAVITS ⟸2—SUFFICIENCY.
Affidavit to claim of partnership against estate of deceased held insufficient, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1494, where it appeared to be made by the partnership (incompetent to make it), and it did not appear that it was sworn to by the partner who signed it.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸227(3) —CLAIM AGAINST ESTATE — AFFIDAVIT TO SUPPORT—SUFFICIENCY.
Where affiant and claimant are the same, it is sufficient if affidavit to claim against estate of deceased person states that there are no offsets to the knowledge of "claimant," though Code Civ. Proc. § 1494, uses the word "affiant."

Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by Gee Chong Pong and others against Margaret Harris, as administratrix of the estate of Aaron Harris, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

L. N. Peter and James A. Nutting, both of Quincy, for appellants. A. R. Tabor and W. T. Phipps, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The second amended complaint sets forth an action in two counts. The first is based upon the sale of two certain gold nuggets, one of the value of $135, and the other of the value of $75, "upon an understanding and agreement between plaintiffs and said Aaron Harris (defendant's intestate) that plaintiffs should have a lien upon said personal property as security for the return thereof to plaintiffs or the payment to plaintiffs of the value thereof." It is alleged "that said Aaron Harris never returned the said personal property, or paid plaintiffs the value thereof, and ever since the said 2d day of September, 1914, said personal property has been held and possessed by said Aaron Harris and his estate," and that at the time of his death said Aaron Harris was indebted to plaintiffs in the sum of $210 for said gold nuggets "and the estate of said deceased is still indebted to plaintiffs therefor."

For a second cause of action it is alleged that, on September 2, 1914, "plaintiffs purchased of said Aaron Harris certain goods, wares, and merchandise, to wit, certain hams, and then and there paid said Aaron Harris cash in the sum of $15 therefor," to be thereafter delivered, but "that said Aaron Harris never delivered the said hams to plaintiffs, and plaintiffs have never received the same"; that at his death the said Harris was indebted to plaintiffs in the sum of $15, no part of which has ever been paid, and said estate is indebted therefor.

The prayer is for judgment for $225; "that $210 thereof be adjudged a lien on the said personal property; that said personal property be decreed to be sold in satisfaction of said lien; that the said claim be allowed and approved, and adjudged to be a valid claim against the said estate; and that said administratrix be directed to pay the same in due course of administration."

The affidavit to the claim, which latter is the basis of the action, reads as follows:

"State of California, County of Plumas—ss. Fook Hing Lung Company, whose foregoing claim is herewith presented to the administratrix of said deceased, being duly sworn, says that the amount thereof, to wit, the sum of two hundred and twenty-five ($225.00) dollars, is justly due to the said claimant; that no payments have been made thereon which are not credited; that there are no offsets to the same to the knowledge of said claimant. Fook Hing Lung Co., by Gee Chong Pong, Member and Clerk of Said Co.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 20th day of September, A. D. 1915. Elizabeth Caya, [Seal] Notary Public in and for Plumas County, State of California. My commission expires Apr. 2, 1916."

Indorsement:

"The within claim rejected this 15th day of October, A. D. 1915. Margaret Harris, Admx. of Estate of Aaron Harris."

Defendant demurred to the complaint on the following grounds:

(1) That the court has not jurisdiction "by reason of the fact that no lien is shown by said complaint and that the amount of the claim sued upon is less than three hundred dollars."

(2) That two causes of action, one for the foreclosure of a lien for a balance due on account of said nuggets and one for cash advanced for certain hams, are improperly united.

(3) That said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The court sustained the demurrer "without leave to amend," and judgment passed for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment.

[1] Clearly the court was without jurisdiction, unless the action relating to the alleged sale of said nuggets can be treated as an action in equity, on the ground that an equitable lien arose out of the alleged agreement. We do not deem it necessary to pass upon this question.

It was necessary to the maintenance of the action that the claim should first be properly presented to the administratrix, as required by section 1494 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and—

"must be supported by the affidavit of the claimant, or some one in his behalf, that the amount is justly due, that no payments have been made thereon which are not credited, and that there are no offsets to the same, to the knowledge of the affiant. * * * When the affidavit is made by a person other than the claimant, he must set forth in the affidavit the reason why it is not made by the claimant."

It will be observed that the affidavit states that the claim was presented by Fook Hing Lung Company and that "Fook Hing Lung Company, * * * being duly sworn, says," etc., and "that there are no offsets to the same to the knowledge of said claimant." The affidavit is signed: "Fook Hing Lung Co., by Gee Chong Pong, Member and Clerk of Said Co."

[2] A test of the sufficiency of an affidavit is whether it is so clear and certain that an indictment for perjury may be sustained on it if false. 2 C. J. 348. It has been held that an affidavit cannot be made by a partnership firm in the firm name, since it would be impossible to convict the individual partners of perjury upon the evidence of such affidavit. 2 C. J. 325.

"An affidavit on behalf of a partnership, therefore, should be sworn to by one of the partners, and where it appears in the body of the affidavit that it was sworn to by one of the partners it is sufficient, although signed with the firm name." Id.

[3] The affidavit states that the partnership was sworn, and it nowhere appears that the affidavit was sworn to by one of the partners. As signed, it imports that Chee Chong Pong signed the name of the firm, but does not import that he was sworn. Nor does it appear from the jurat by whom the affidavit was sworn to. The implication, if any, would be that it was sworn to as stated in the body of the affidavit, to wit, by the partnership. If the affidavit had been properly made by one of the partners, the statement that there are no offsets to the knowledge of "claimant," instead of "affiant," would be immaterial. Warren v. McGill, 103 Cal. 155, 37 Pac. 144. As the affidavit reads, there is no statement that there are no offsets, for the reason that the affidavit purports to be made by one incompetent to make it, to wit, the partnership. That such statement is essential, see Perkins v. Onyett, 86 Cal. 348, 24 Pac. 1024.

In Maier Packing Co. v. Frey, 5 Cal. App. 80, 89 Pac. 875, the affidavit read:

"Maier Packing Co., by Simon Maier, Pres., whose foregoing claim is herewith presented to the administrator of the estate of said deceased, being duly sworn, says," etc. [Signed] Maier Packing Co., Simon Maier, Pres.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 15th day of June, 1904."

It was held "impossible to reconcile the provisions of this affidavit with the requirements of the statute"—citing Perkins v. Onyett, supra.

[4] It is claimed that the Maier Packing Co. Case is not to be followed, citing Scott Stamp & Coin Co., Limited, a Corporation, v. Leake, Adm'r, etc., 9 Cal. App. 513, 99 Pac. 731, and Western States Ins. Co. v. Lockwood, 166 Cal. 185, 135 Pac. 496. In both of these cases the affidavits appeared to have been made by one of the officers of the corporation, and it was held in such case that the requirement of the statute that, where the affidavit is made by a person other than the claimant, the reason therefor must be set forth, does not apply; and also, where the affiant and the claimant are the same, it is sufficient if the affidavit states that there are no offsets to the knowledge of "claimant," though the statute uses the word "affiant." In the present case the affidavit does not show that it was sworn to by any person competent to make it.

We do not think the statute has been sufficiently complied with. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

CHRISTMAN v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.

(Civ. 2575.)

1. RAILROADS ⟸328(5) — INJURIES TO PERSONS — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — CROSSING ACCIDENTS.

Where truck driver was injured when his radiator was struck by gasoline motorcar on railroad he was guilty of contributory negligence, without which the accident would not have occurred, when with full knowledge of the situation, and the time of trains, he approached a crossing the view of which was obstructed at such speed that he could not stop before getting on rails.

2. RAILROADS ⟸335(1) — INJURIES TO PERSONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—EFFECT.

Where truck driver approached railroad crossing the view of trains from which was obstructed at such speed that he could not stop before reaching the rails the fact that the railroad company was also negligent did not aid the plaintiff's case.

3. RAILROADS ⟸324(1)—CARE REQUIRED OF TRAVELERS — CROSSING ACCIDENTS — GASOLINE MOTORCARS.

The care required of persons approaching railroad tracks along which gasoline motorcars are operated is the same as that required when the cars are operated by electric power along interurban lines.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Frank D. Christman against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Hocker, E. E. Morris, and Robert E. Austin, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Henry T. Gage, W. I. Foley, and W. I. Gilbert, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover damages for personal injuries which the plaintiff received by reason of a collision between a motor truck operated by the plaintiff and a gasoline motorcar operated by the defendant. At the close of the plaintiff's evidence defendant moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that the testimony showed that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, which was the proximate cause of the accident. This motion was granted, and the plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

Stating the facts as favorably to the plaintiff as they can be under the evidence, they are as follows: On the 7th day of February, 1914, the defendant was a common carrier of passengers and freight for hire, and operating a line of steam railroad carrying passengers and freight, and running from the city of Los Angeles, through and east of Norwalk, in Los Angeles county. At the town of Norwalk the railroad track runs east and west across a certain public highway running north and south. At about noon of that day the plaintiff was driving an auto truck along the highway, and was moving toward the railroad track, in a southerly direction. At the same time the motorcar of the defendant was approaching the highway crossing from the west. Plaintiff approached the railroad track while traveling at a rate of 8 or 10 miles an hour, and the motorcar was traveling at the rate of 45 or 50 miles an hour. There was a blacksmith shop on the west side of the highway, located about 35 feet from the railroad right of way. When the plaintiff passed the blacksmith shop, he first looked east, and then looked toward the west. Looking toward the west, he saw the gasoline motorcar, which was a passenger car of the defendant, approaching the crossing. When he first saw the motorcar, he was about 30 feet from the crossing. Immediately he put on his brakes, with the result that the auto truck stopped so that its radiator was just over the nearest rail of the railroad track. At that point it was struck by the motorcar. Prior to the day in question the plaintiff had driven over this crossing 8 or 10 times, and knew that the railroad track was there. It was a fact, and the plaintiff knew it to be a fact, that when driving his motor truck at the speed at which he then was driving he could not stop within less than 35 or 40 feet. The plaintiff was aware of the fact, not only that there was a railroad track there, but knew also that trains were being operated over it.

[1, 2] Upon the facts thus shown, all of which were admitted by the plaintiff, it is clearly established that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, without which the accident could not have occurred. With complete knowledge that he was approaching a railroad crossing which he knew to be regularly in use, he drove his auto truck at a rate of speed so great that, as he himself knew, his machine was bound to go upon the track, at all times after the moment of his first opportunity to look for the train. Having thus neglected the most obvious precautions for taking care of his own safety at a time and place where he had ample opportunity to use those precautions, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages for the injuries received. The fact that there was concurrent negligence on the part of the defendant does not, under these circumstances, aid the plaintiff's case.

[3] Counsel for appellant contend that the defendant was unlawfully operating a gasoline motorcar on a steam railroad line, and that under the circumstances here shown the plaintiff was not under obligations to look and listen for a gasoline motorcar. There is in the record no evidence tending to show that the defendant was operating said gasoline motorcar without legal right so to do. We perceive no reason why the requirements of care on the part of a person approaching the tracks on which gasoline motorcars are operated should be held to be any different than the standard established for those seeking to cross the tracks of an electric railway. We are referring, of course, to interurban railroads, and not to city street railways. Loftus v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 464, 467, 137 Pac. 34, and cases there cited.

COSBY v. DANZIGER. (Civ. 2578.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS ⊂⊃7—ESTATE GRANTED—AUTHORITY OF GOVERNMENT.
The government of the United States, in adopting the laws under which it will transfer public lands to private persons, has power to grant such lands in fee, or less than in fee, or on lease for limited terms and limited uses.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂⊃135(1)—UNINCUMBERED TITLE—GOVERNMENT EASEMENTS.
A contract to pass an ordinary clear and unincumbered title is not complied with by offering a title based on a patent from the United States which excepts a right of way for ditches to be constructed by its authority.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by Walter Cosby against J. M. Danziger. From a judgment for plaintiff, and a denial of a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. N. Goodwin, Hunsaker & Britt, and Goodwin & Morgrage, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. H. T. Morrow and Dave F. Smith, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment awarding to the plaintiff a sum representing the unpaid balance of the purchase price found to be due under a contract for the sale by plaintiff to defendant of a tract of land in the county of Kern. There is also an appeal from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial.

The contract was executed on the 28th day of November, 1908. Part of the consideration was paid at that time and the remainder was due six months from the same date. The contract provided that—

"Upon the payment of the balance of the purchase price said seller agrees to deliver to said buyer a good and sufficient deed of grant, bargain and sale, conveying said premises to said buyer free and clear of all incumbrances, and also to deliver to said buyer an abstract of title to said land, showing the title of said seller to said land to be free and clear of all incumbrances. Said buyer hereby agrees to assume and pay the taxes on said property for the fiscal year 1908–09, and shall be entitled to immediate possession of said premises and to remove therefrom any mineral, oil, water, or other property."

The court found that on the 13th day of December, 1911, the plaintiff tendered to defendant, and offered to deliver to defendant, a deed of grant, bargain, and sale, in the form provided in the contract, conveying the real property described in the contract, free and clear of all incumbrances, and at the same time tendered to defendant and offered to deliver to defendant an abstract of title, which abstract of title showed the title of plaintiff in and to said real property free and clear of all incumbrances; that defendant at said time did not specify any objection to the deed, or to the abstract of title, or to the title of said real property; that the plaintiff duly made renewal of the same offer in open court at the time of the trial, upon condition that defendant would pay plaintiff the balance due and unpaid to plaintiff under said contract.

Appellant contends that the evidence does not support the findings of the court to the effect that the plaintiff tendered to defendant a deed accompanied by an abstract showing title to the premises in question vested in the plaintiff free and clear of any and all incumbrances. The abstract of title which was tendered by the plaintiff to the defendants shows that the instrument under which the plaintiff claims that legal title to the premises described in the contract became vested in him is a patent issued by the United States of America to Walter Cosby, dated June 7, 1905. A copy of this patent, exemplified under certificate of the recorder of the General Land Office at Washington, was recorded in the recorder's office of Kern county, Cal., on the 16th day of November, 1910. Besides describing the property as the N. E. ¼ of section 24, etc., (being the same description as in the contract between plaintiff and defendant), the patent designated the property as being "that certain placer mining claim and premises known as the Black Goose placer mining claim." The patent grants "said mining premises," etc., subject, nevertheless, to certain conditions and stipulations, one of which is as follows:

"4. * * * And there is reserved from the lands hereby granted a right of way thereon for ditches or canals constructed by authority of the United States."

The certificates attached by the Kern County Abstract Company to the several sections of the abstract as made by it declare that the same is—

"a full, true, and complete abstract of title to the land hereinafter described, as shown by the records in the county offices of the county of Kern, state of California, except the records and proceedings of the board of supervisors of said Kern county, as also all matters, instruments, and proceedings on file or of record relating to water, water rights, ditches, and canals."

This was not a complete abstract. For all that appears therefrom, there may have been liens or easements of record, covered by said exception, and there may have been actions pending, or judgments existing, in the federal courts of the district in which the land is situated, affecting the plaintiff's title. It may be, however that the defendant's failure to specify any objection to the incomplete condition of the abstract deprives him of the right to insist upon such objections. As to this matter we express no opinion, since upon other grounds we shall hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to prevail in the action.

The right of way reservation contained in the patent to which we have referred was made pursuant to an act of Congress of August 30, 1890, which provided:

"That in all patents for lands hereafter taken up under any of the land laws of the United States or on entries or claims validated by this act west of the one hundredth meridian, it shall be expressed that there is reserved from the lands in said patent described, a right of way thereon for ditches or canals constructed by authority of the United States." 26 Stat. 391, c. 837; 8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d Ed.) p. 802.

The object of this legislation was to save to the government the right to thereafter enter upon land for which patents might be issued, and construct and maintain thereon such canals and ditches as might be deemed necessary in furtherance of the government's policy for the reclamation of arid lands. Green v. Willhite (C. C.) 160 Fed. 755; United States v. Van Horn (D. C.) 197 Fed. 611.

We now have gone far enough to see that the plaintiff agreed to deliver to the defendant a deed conveying said premises to the buyer free and clear of all incumbrances and to deliver to defendant an abstract of title showing the title of the plaintiff to said land to be free and clear of all incumbrances; that the plaintiff claims the right to fulfill that contract by conveying the land to the defendant subject to the right of the United States government at any time to construct and maintain ditches and canals across the land through any part thereof which the government may select.

Counsel for respondent say that appellant had knowledge of the reservations in the title at the time the contract was entered into; that he contracted in the light of that knowledge, and by his conduct construed the contract in a manner inconsistent with his contention here. This claim is not borne out by the record. There is no evidence tending to show that at the time when the contract was made appellant had any knowledge or notice of the source of respondent's title. Even if it could be assumed that appellant must have known that the title rested upon a federal basis, yet there is no evidence that he knew or had notice that the plaintiff's patent was of later date than August 30, 1890, and that therefore it necessarily would contain the reservation to which we have referred.

Thus we are brought to a consideration of the question whether or not said right of way reservation constitutes an incumbrance on the land which the plaintiff agreed to convey. If the plaintiff's property were subject to a right of way granted to some private person to construct ditches thereon, we would not hesitate to hold that such right of way is an incumbrance against the property. It was so determined by this court in Hixson v. Hovey, 18 Cal. App. 230, 122 Pac. 1097. In that case the court also said:

"Under the contract of sale defendant Clara W. Hovey was entitled to receive the property free and clear of all incumbrance. When it was provided that the certificate should show 'title to be vested in seller,' that term necessarily meant a good title, or one which was free from incumbrance."

While agreeing that the deed tendered by respondent to appellant would convey the title subject to the right of way for canals or ditches, as specified in the patent, counsel for respondent insist that, for various reasons, this reservation was not an incumbrance. The gist of this contention seems to be that since the patent was issued in the form provided by law, and contained only a reservation established by public statute, that the reservation itself results from an exercise of sovereign governmental power, and not from an exercise of the proprietary power of the government as owner or the land; that under these circumstances the patentee has obtained the most complete and absolute dominion of the property which a private person can have under the law, and that the reservation therefore does not constitute an incumbrance or a defect of title, but is merely a part of the description of that title, and shows nothing more than that the land is subject to "a power in trust for the benefit of the land and the people."

On this last proposition we are referred to U. S. v. Minidoka R. R. Co. (C. C.) 176 Fed. 762. Adverting to the act of August 30, 1890, in connection with other statutes providing for the construction by the government of ditches and canals for irrigation uses, the court did say that "in a large sense the Secretary of the Interior in building and operating these canals acts as the trustee for the settlers, upon whom primarily rests the burden of their cost, and into whose hands their control will ultimately pass"; but the court did not say or intimate that a reservation like that here in question does not constitute an incumbrance upon the land affected thereby.

[1, 2] The government of the United States, in adopting the laws under which it will transfer public lands to private persons, has power to grant such lands in fee, or less than in fee, or on lease for limited terms and limited uses. So far as the questions presented in the present case are concerned, we think that it is not important that the government, in the enactment of such legislation, may be acting in a sovereign governmental capacity rather than as proprietor of any definite area of land. On any theory, it remains true that in a given case the grant provided for may be a grant of less than an unlimited title in fee. Such is the case at bar. We cannot escape the facts that respondent agreed to pass to appellant an ordinary clear and unincumbered title, and that appellant had no information charging him with notice that he was buying land subject to a right of way for ditches or canals, to be constructed by the government of the United States. Comparing the deed and the evidence of title tendered by respondent with the terms of his contract, the fact glaringly stands forth that he has not complied and apparently cannot comply, with those terms. This being so, he is not entitled to compel performance by the purchaser.

The judgment and order are reversed.

In re PRESCOTT'S ESTATE.

Appeal of FREDRICKS.

(S. F. 8615.)

1. TRUSTS ⟸329—COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEE—AMOUNT—REVIEW.

Allowance of $200 to trustee for 14 months' service in management and control of $200,000 bequest, there being little to do beyond collecting and remitting income, held not so inadequate as to justify interference by appellate court, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1700, confiding allowance of compensation to discretion of trial court.

2. TRUSTS ⟸315(2)—COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEE—STATUTE APPLICABLE.

Civ. Code, § 2274, measuring trustee's compensation by that of an executor or administrator, is inapplicable, where trust estate has not been fully administered.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. C. Denny, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Nellie S. Prescott, deceased, and the trust created by her last will and testament. From part of a decree fixing his compensation George Fredricks, trustee, etc., appeals; Jessie Gray Booth, one of the beneficiaries of the trust, being respondent. Affirmed.

Percy E. Towne, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Augustin C. Keane, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The will of Nellie S. Prescott bequeathed $200,000 to George Fredricks in trust, to manage and invest the same and to pay the income in equal shares to Elizabeth H. Booth and her three daughters during their respective lives. The will was admitted to probate, and thereafter Fredricks, as trustee, applied for and obtained a decree of partial distribution, distributing to him a number of bonds, together with a sum in cash sufficient to make up the full amount of the bequest. His first account, covering a period of 14 months following the partial distribution, was filed, together with a report, and a prayer for compensation to him and his attorney. The account showed that the entire income, less some minor and necessary expenses, had been remitted to the four beneficiaries, each of whom had received $2,090.24. There was no opposition to the account, and the court duly settled it, allowing the sum of $200 each to the trustee and his attorney, incorporating in its decree a finding that these sums constitute a reasonable compensation. The trustee appeals from that part of the decree fixing his compensation.

[1, 2] The only question is whether an allowance of $200 for 14 months' service in the management and control of this trust estate is so inadequate as to justify the interference of an appellate court. The compensation of the trustee is confided to the discretion of the trial court. Code Civ. Proc. § 1700. The provision of section 2274 of the Civil Code for measuring the trustee's compensation by that of an executor is not applicable here. The statutory commissions of an executor or administrator are to be allowed only when the estate has been fully administered. In re Rose, 80 Cal. 166, 180, 22 Pac. 86; Bemmerly v. Woodard, 136 Cal. 326, 331, 68 Pac. 1017. They cannot, therefore, afford the basis for fixing the compensation of a trustee at any earlier stage of the execution of the trust.

The allowance here made was undoubtedly small—probably smaller than we might have thought proper, had the question of compensation come before us for original determination. There is, however, no inflexible rule for measuring the allowance; the question of what is a reasonable compensation depending "largely upon the circumstances of each particular case." 39 Cyc. 492. In the present instance it appears that the trust fund was invested in sound bonds, and, except for the sale of a few of these and the substitution of others, the trustee had little to do beyond collecting and remitting the income. He does not claim that he was put to any personal expense in his trusteeship. Of course, the responsibility of holding and safeguarding a trust fund is an element to be regarded in fixing compensation. But we may fairly assume that the court felt that this feature might more properly be left for consideration upon the final winding up of the trust, or at least at some later stage of its administration. Viewing the record as a whole, we do not feel warranted in saying that the action of the trial court in fixing the amount to be retained by the trustee manifests an abuse of discretion.

The portion of the decree appealed from is affirmed.

In re ESPINOSA'S ESTATE AND GUARDIANSHIP. (S. F. 8737.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 31, 1918.)

1. TIME ⟸9(4)—EXCLUDING FIRST OR LAST DAY—"NOT LESS THAN FIVE DAYS BEFORE."
Service of citation upon alleged incompetent on the 23d gave the court the right to hear the matter on the 28th of the same month, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1763, providing that notice must be given "not less than five days before" the appointed time.
[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Not Less Than.]

2. INSANE PERSONS ⟸13 — PROCEEDING AGAINST INCOMPETENT — CITATION—SUFFICIENCY.
Citation designating a time and place for alleged incompetent person to appear and show cause why a guardian should not be appointed according to "petition on file" sufficiently complied with Code Civ. Proc. § 1707, providing that citations shall contain "a brief statement of the nature of the proceeding."

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸909(1) — PRESUMPTIONS—RECITALS IN ORDER.
Where order appointing guardian of incompetent person recites that matter came on regularly to be heard, the court on appeal is bound, in the absence of a contrary showing, to hold that sufficient notice of hearing was given and that court acquired jurisdiction for all purposes.

4. INSANE PERSONS ⟸33(1)—GUARDIANSHIP PROCEEDING—STATUTES APPLICABLE.
In proceeding for appointment of guardian of an incompetent person, Code Civ. Proc. § 1763 et seq. governs, and jurisdiction of court does not depend upon compliance with section 1747, relating to guardians of minors.

5. INSANE PERSONS ⟸22 — FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.
Recital, in order appointing guardian, that he "is an incompetent person as alleged in the petition and that the allegations of the petition are true," is a sufficient finding of the ultimate fact.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸907(2) — APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN—REGULARITY OF PROCEEDING—PRESUMPTION.
That trial court abused its discretion in appointing another than petitioner guardian of appellant, an alleged incompetent person, could not be established in the absence of a transcript of testimony and proceedings before trial court because all intendments and presumptions are in favor of the regularity and propriety of order appointing guardian.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; J. A. Bardin, Judge.

In the matter of the estate and guardianship of Salvador Espinosa, an incompetent person. From an order and decree adjudging him incompetent, Espinosa appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Hocker and Z. B. Stuart, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. R. C. McComish, of San Jose, and C. F. Lacey, of Salinas, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Upon petition of his brother Salvador Espinosa was adjudged incompetent, and George S. Gould, Jr., was appointed guardian of his person and estate. From the order and decree adjudging him incompetent, Espinosa appeals.

There is neither a reporter's transcript nor a bill of exceptions on file, the record consisting of the clerk's transcript alone. In appellant's brief appears a purported "Statement of the Case," which we must ignore except where it finds support in the clerk's transcript. Appellant makes three contentions in his brief. These are as follows: (1) The court failed to acquire jurisdiction of the matter. (2) There was no formal adjudication of incompetency. (3) The court abused its discretion in appointing Mr. Gould.

[1] Under the first head, appellant contends that service of the citation on February 23, 1918, did not give the court the right to hear the matter on the 28th of the same month. Section 1763 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the alleged incompetent person must be given notice of the time and place of the hearing "not less than five days before" the appointed time. Appellant's counsel assert the rule to be that, where a statute requires an act to be done a given number of days before an event, the time must be reckoned by excluding the day of the act and the day of the event. Whatever may be the law in other jurisdictions, it is settled in California adversely to appellant's contention. Cosgriff v. Board of Election Commissioners, 151 Cal. 407, 91 Pac. 98.

[2] Appellant also denies the court's jurisdiction because of the alleged insufficiency of the citation to inform him of the contents of the petition. The citation designated a time and place for appellant to appear before the court "then and there to show cause" why Manuel Espinosa or some other fit and proper person should not be appointed guardian of his person and estate, according to the "petition on file." This was a sufficient compliance with section 1707, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that the citation shall contain "a brief statement of the nature of the proceeding."

[3] But even if a more formal notice were required under our law, we would be bound to hold that it had been given and that jurisdiction had been obtained for all purposes, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, because in the order appointing a guardian there is a recital that the matter "came on regularly to be heard." Estate of Schulmeyer, 171 Cal. 340, 153 Pac. 233.

[4] There is no merit in the contention that the jurisdiction of the court depends upon compliance with the requirements of section 1747 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section relates to guardians of minors. The law on the subject of guardians of incompetent persons is set forth in sections 1763 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. Matter of Coburn, 165 Cal. 202, 131 Pac. 352; Estate of Schulmeyer, supra.

[5] Appellant's theory that error was committed by the court in omitting to make formal findings is not correct. There is sufficient finding of the ultimate fact in the recital contained in the order appointing the guardian that "said Salvador Espinosa is an incompetent person as alleged in the petition and that the allegations of the petition are true." Authority last cited above is conclusive upon this point.

[6] There is absolutely no support for the appellant's final assertion that the court abused discretion in the appointment of Mr. Gould instead of the petitioner, who was appellant's brother. In the absence of a transcript of the testimony and proceedings before the court, of course, there could be no successful attempt to establish abuse of discretion, because all intendments and presumptions are in favor of the regularity and propriety of the order.

The judgment and the order appointing a guardian are affirmed.

BUMILLER v. BUMILLER. (L. A. 4566.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 4, 1918. On Rehearing, Oct. 31, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃123(7) — PLEDGE OF STOCK—TITLE—CLAIMS OF THIRD PERSONS.
A pledgee of corporation stock cannot assert ownership thereof in any other person than his pledgor, in the absence of any claim of ownership by such third person, or of a demand on his part for delivery of the pledged property to him.

2. CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃123(7) — PLEDGE OF STOCK—OWNERSHIP—PRESUMPTIONS.
A pledgor of corporation stock, shown to have been in possession thereof and exercising acts of ownership over it, will be presumed to have been the owner of the stock, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 11, 12.

3. CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃123(23) — PLEDGE OF STOCK—REDEMPTION—SUBROGATION.
A plaintiff, who has acquired an interest in corporation stock pledged, may redeem it from the lien under Civ. Code, § 2903, by an offer of performance of the obligation of which the stock was security in accordance with section 2904, and title 4, c. 2, and under section 2903 is subrogated to all the benefits of the lien as against all owners of other interests.

4. PLEDGES ⊂⊃48 — RIGHTS OF PLEDGOR — CONVERSION.
One who has acquired an interest in pledged property, and tenders performance of the obligation for which the pledge has been made, may maintain an action against the pledgee for conversion upon his refusal to deliver the pledged property on demand.

On Rehearing.

5. CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃123(16) — PLEDGE OF STOCK—INTEREST OF THIRD PERSONS—JUDGMENT.
Where plaintiff had acquired an interest in three-fifths of corporation stock pledged, it was not error, in a suit for the possession of such stock, to give an alternative judgment that, if defendant failed to deliver his stock and note which it secured, plaintiff was entitled to damages equivalent to three-fifths of the value of the stock.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Eckley B. Bumiller against Arthur W. Bumiller. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for retrial on single issue.

Overton, Lyman & Plumb, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Edwin A. Meserve and Shirley E. Meserve, both of Los Angeles (J. D. Taggart, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an action in which the plaintiff seeks to recover from the defendant the possession of 25 shares of stock of the Western Union Oil Company or its value, with damages for its detention. The plaintiff alleges in her amended complaint that, being the wife of one Joseph F. Bumiller, she commenced on March 14, 1914, an action against him in the county of Los Angeles for divorce and for a division of certain community property, of which the stock in question was alleged to be a portion; that in said action an interlocutory decree was duly entered on June 18, 1914, wherein it was adjudged and decreed that said stock, which was then standing on the books of the corporation in the name of one D. A. McGilvray, was the community property of the parties to that action; that the said stock had been pledged by said Joseph F. Bumiller to Arthur W. Bumiller, the defendant in this case, as security for the payment to him of the sum of $1,000, evidenced by a promissory note for that amount executed by Joseph F. Bumiller to said Arthur W. Bumiller; that a three-fifths interest in said 25 shares of stock was thereby awarded and set apart to said plaintiff as her separate property and estate, and that the said Joseph F. Bumiller be and he was thereby ordered and directed to transfer or cause to be transferred to said plaintiff said three-fifths interest in said stock. The complaint proceeded to allege that the said Joseph F. Bumiller, not having complied with the said direction and order in said interlocutory decree, proceedings for contempt were instituted by said plaintiff against him, in which proceedings the court again ordered said defendant Joseph F. Bumiller to transfer her three-fifths interest in said stock to plaintiff, subject to the pledge of the whole thereof to said Arthur W. Bumiller as security for the said note which the defendant Joseph F. Bumiller was directed to pay; that upon being served with a copy of this latter order said Joseph F. Bumiller made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff an assignment of an undivided three-fifths of said stock; that thereupon and on December 21, 1914, the plaintiff herein made a written tender to said Arthur W. Bumiller of the amount of the principal and interest of the said promissory note as the security for the payment of which the whole of said stock was pledged; that said Arthur W. Bumiller, without objecting to the form or amount of said tender, refused to accept the same, whereupon the plaintiff deposited the amount thereof in the Citizens' National Bank of Los Angeles to the credit of the said defendant herein, Arthur W. Bumiller, and notified him of the fact of said deposit; that thereafter, and at various times prior to the institution of this action the plaintiff made other and similar written tenders of payment in full of said note to the defendant herein, copies of all of which tenders were attached to and made parts of the complaint; that the only objections which said defendant made to any of such tenders were the objection that such tenders did not provide for the protection of the defendant, Arthur W. Bumiller, against any claims which D. A. McGilvray may have to said stock arising out of the fact that it stood in his name upon the books of the corporation, and the further objection that Joseph F. Bumiller had instructed said Arthur W. Bumiller to turn over no property of his to said plaintiff without a written order from him. The plaintiff further avers that the said defendant still holds said stock in his possession and refuses to deliver any portion thereof to the plaintiff, and that the value of the stock is the sum of $3,000. Wherefore the plaintiff prays judgment that she is entitled to the possession of said note and of said stock, and that said defendant be required to deliver the same to her or pay the sum of $3,000, the value of said stock, and for such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

The answer of the defendant admitted the existence of the divorce action and the making and entry of the interlocutory judgment therein, as averred in the plaintiff's complaint, and admitted the execution of the assignment by Joseph F. Bumiller of three-fifths of his interest in the stock in question. It also admitted the execution to the defendant by Joseph F. Bumiller of the promissory note referred to in the complaint and the pledge to him by said Joseph F. Bumiller of the stock in question as security for said note. The defendant also substantially admitted that the several tenders alleged to have been made by the plaintiff were in fact made, but denied that the plaintiff had stated in her complaint all of the defendant's objections thereto, and in that regard he appended to his answer several other specified objections to the sufficiency of such tenders. The defendant denied that D. A. McGilvray had no interest in the stock in question, but nowhere in his answer undertook to aver that said McGilvray had in fact any interest therein, or had ever made any claim thereto. The defendant denied that the stock was of the value of $3,000, or of any greater value than $1,875. Finally the defendant averred that he was willing to turn over to the plaintiff three-fifths of said stock upon the payment by her to him of three-fifths of the amount due upon said promissory note, and upon the further production by plaintiff of a release from D. A. McGilvray of all interest in said three-fifths of said stock.

The case proceeded to trial upon the issues thus framed, and the trial court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law in plaintiff's favor, and by its judgment decreed that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the possession of the promissory note of Joseph F. Bumiller and the 25 shares of stock held by the defendant as the security thereof, upon payment by the plaintiff to said defendant of the sum of $1,060.53, the principal and interest due on said note, and that the plaintiff be thereupon subrogated to the rights of the defendant in and to said note and said stock, and that in the event that said defendant failed to deliver the same to said plaintiff, as in said judgment directed, the said plaintiff have judgment against him for the sum of $1,800, being three-fifths of the value of said stock, in which event she should not be required to pay to the defendant the amount of said note. It is from this judgment that the defendant prosecutes the present appeal.

The defendant's first contention is that there was no evidence to sustain the finding of the trial court that the stock in question was the community property of the plaintiff and J. F. Bumiller prior to the making of said interlocutory decree; his point in support of said objection being that the only evidence of such community ownership of said stock was the interlocutory decree in an action to which this appellant was not a party, and by which, therefore, he was not bound. But this point, even if it had any value, cannot avail the appellant, since the plaintiff did not rest her right to said stock upon the terms of said decree alone, but also upon an assignment of her husband's interest in said stock to her to the extent of an undivided three-fifths thereof, which assignment the defendant expressly admitted in his answer to have been made.

[1, 2] The next point urged by the appellant is that there was no evidence other than that contained in the said interlocutory decree that the certificates of stock were indorsed in blank by D. A. McGilvray, in whose name the stock stood upon the books of the corporation. The point has no merit. The defendant in his answer and throughout the entire case repeatedly asserted that he received and held the stock in question as a pledge from Joseph F. Bumiller to secure the promissory note made by the latter to him. As such pledgee of this stock he cannot be heard to assert ownership thereof in any other person than his pledgor, in the absence of any claim of ownership by such third person or of a demand on the part of the latter for the delivery of the pledged property to him. Palmtag v. Doutrick, 59 Cal. 154, 43 Am. Rep. 245; Wetherly v. Straus, 93 Cal. 283, 28 Pac. 1045. The record in this case shows not only that D. A. McGilvray never claimed or asserted any ownership or interest in the stock in question, but further shows as an undisputed fact in the case that Josseph F. Bumiller was, prior to and at the time of making said pledge, in the possession of the whole of said stock and was exercising acts of ownership over it. The presumption thus arises that he was the owner of the stock. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 11 and 12. This being so, it is quite immaterial whether or not the name of D. A. McGilvray was indorsed in blank on said stock as found by the court; the important finding being that Joseph F. Bumiller was at the time of its pledge to the defendant and of his assignment of an undivided three-fifths thereof to the plaintiff the owner of the stock.

[3] The defendant made several objections to the tenders proffered by the plaintiff as a predicate to this action at the time of such proffer and at the trial of the case. As to the form of these several tenders, we find them to have been in conformity with chapter 2 of title 4 of the Civil Code, relating to the offer of performance of obligations. The plaintiff, having acquired an interest in the shares of stock which were subject to the defendant's lien as the pledgor thereof, was entitled to redeem it from such lien under section 2903 of the Civil Code, and was entitled to do so by an offer of performance of the obligation of which the stock was the security (Civ. Code, § 2904); and, having done this by the method provided by chapter 2 of title 4 of the Civil Code, was entitled to be subrogated to all of the benefits of the lien as against all owners of other interests in the property (Civ. Code, § 2903). The undisputed evidence shows that the plaintiff tendered to the defendant at the place where he was found, or to his duly authorized agent, the full amount due upon the promissory note for which the stock in question was pledged, and that she made such tender good by a deposit of such amount with a proper depository, giving the defendant due notice thereof. The record also shows that when the parties were in court at the trial of the cause the plaintiff renewed these offers to pay said obligation in full.

[4] These repeated tenders and offers of payment of the promissory note of Joseph F. Bumiller were sufficient to have entitled the plaintiff to a delivery of said note with its security to her, and the defendant's refusal to deliver the same upon demand amounted to a conversion of the property which entitled the plaintiff to bring and maintain this form of action. Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250, 14 Pac. 369, 15 Pac. 773, 5 Am. St. Rep. 435. The plaintiff being thus entitled to an undivided three-fifths interest in said stock and having thus offered to pay the entire obligation evidenced by said note, the defendant's offer in his pleadings and at the trial to turn over to her a portion of said stock upon payment of a part of the note did not measure up to her rights in the premises as defined by the foregoing sections of the Civil Code, and was therefore properly refused by her, and was also properly rejected by the trial court in its findings and judgment.

The appellant finally urges that the trial court was in error in that portion of its alternative judgment to the effect that, in the event of the defendant's failure or refusal to deliver the note and stock as directed, the plaintiff should be entitled to recover judgment in the sum of $1,800 for the conversion of the stock, being three-fifths of the value thereof. The appellant insists that, though the plaintiff alleged the stock to be of the value of $3,000, she offered no evidence to sustain such allegation. In this we think the appellant is correct; but in his answer the defendant, while denying that the stock was of the value of $3,000, expressly admitted that its value was the sum of $1,875, and he now contends that the trial court, acting upon such admission, could only have given its alternative judgment for three-fifths of said sum or the sum of $1,125. We think this contention must be sustained. It does not follow, however, that the judgment should be reversed on account of this error. The court having found the plaintiff to be entitled to an alternative judgment against the defendant for a sum equal to three-fifths of the value of the stock, in the event of the failure of the defendant to deliver the same to her, and the value of the stock as an admitted fact in the case being the sum of $1,875, the judgment may be modified, so as to require the defendant to pay to the plaintiff a sum equal to three-fifths of said last-named value, or the sum of $1,125, in the event of his failure to deliver the stock to her as directed in the earlier part of the judgment.

The trial court is directed to make such modification of the judgment in accordance with the views above expressed. In all other respects the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [5] We are of the opinion that the concluding portion of the department decision, reading as follows, namely:

"In this we think the appellant is correct; but in his answer the defendant, while denying that the stock was of the value of $3,000, expressly admitted that its value was the sum of $1,875, and he now contends that the trial court, acting upon such admission, could only have given its alternative judgment for three-fifths of said sum or the sum of $1,125. We think this contention must be sustained. It does not follow, however, that the judgment should be reversed on account of this error. The court having found the plaintiff to be entitled to an alternative judgment against the defendant for a sum equal to three-fifths of the value of the stock, in the event of the failure of the defendant to deliver the same to her, and the value of the stock as an admitted fact in the case being the sum of $1,875, the judgment may be modified, so as to require the defendant to pay to the plaintiff a sum equal to three-fifths of said last-named value, or the sum of $1,125, in the event of his failure to deliver the stock to her as directed in the earlier part of the judgment.

"The trial court is directed to make such modification of the judgment in accordance with the views above expressed. In all other respects the judgment is affirmed" —should be modified, so as to read as follows:

"We think that the trial court was not in error in its conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled in the alternative portion of her judgment to a recovery of an amount of damages equal to three-fifths of the value of the 25 shares of stock in the event of the failure or refusal of the defendant to deliver the whole of the said stock to her in conformity with the terms of the judgment in her favor for the possession thereof; but we think that the appellant is correct in his contention that there was no evidence to support the finding of the trial court upon the issue as to the value of said stock, upon which the amount of its alternative judgment was predicated. It follows that the cause should be remanded for retrial upon this single issue; and it will be so ordered."

The judgment heretofore given is modified to read as follows:

"Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for retrial upon the single issue as to the value of the 25 shares of stock in question; and upon a determination of this issue the trial court is hereby directed to make its finding thereon, and to thereupon enter judgment in plaintiff's favor for the possession of the whole of said stock, or, in the event of the defendant's failure or refusal to deliver the same, an alternative judgment in damages against the defendant for a sum equal to three-fifths of the entire value of said stock, as found by the court upon the retrial of said issue."

COULTER DRY GOODS CO. v. MUNFORD et ux. (Civ. 2258.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸19(7) — NECESSARIES—HUSBAND'S LIABILITY.

One who has sold clothing and other dry goods to a wife and charged to her account cannot collect therefor from the husband without proving that the husband had neglected to make adequate provision for the support of the wife, in view of Civ. Code, § 174.

2. EVIDENCE ⟸271(13)—CONVERSATIONS BETWEEN PLAINTIFF'S AGENTS.

In an action against husband and wife for goods furnished the wife, testimony relating to conversations between plaintiff's general manager and its creditman about the affairs and financial responsibility of defendants, not made in the presence of either defendant or with their knowledge, to prove the account was charged to both, was properly excluded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by the Coulter Dry Goods Company against E. S. Munford and wife. Judgment in favor of E. S. Munford and against wife. From the judgment for named defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. George Beebe and J. M. Wright, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. This action was brought against the defendant E. S. Munford and his wife, Mrs. E. S. Munford, upon an account for goods alleged to have been sold to the defendants at their special instance and request. Judgment was entered in favor of E. S. Munford and against the other defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment in favor of E. S. Munford.

[1] The items of account consisted of clothing and other dry goods furnished to Mrs. Munford while she was residing at Los Angeles. The husband at that time resided elsewhere, but their separation was temporary and the case does not involve any defense on the ground that the defendants were living separate and apart from each other. Mr. Munford testified that he did not know anything of the account until after the articles were furnished and that his wife never informed him of the fact that she had opened the account. He was receiving a salary of $416 per month and was sending to his wife for the support of herself and children the sum of $300 per month. She also had some separate income. Mr. Frank Coulter appears to have been an officer and one of the managers of the plaintiff. Mrs. Munford testified that for some time after she began trading with the plaintiff she paid cash for the articles purchased by her, until after she was urged by Mr. Coulter and by Mr. Baker, the general manager, to open a credit account.

This was done by Mr. Baker, and the account was made in the name of Mrs. Munford. She testified that Mr. Frank Coulter knew that her husband was providing her with $300 a month, and that that sum was sufficient for the support of herself and family. There is no evidence tending to show that the defendant E. S. Munford neglected to make adequate provision for the support of his wife or family.

"If the husband neglect to make adequate provision for the support of his wife, * * * any other person may, in good faith, supply her with articles necessary for her support, and recover the reasonable value thereof from the husband." Civ. Code, § 174.

It will be seen that the Civil Code limits the conditions of liability of a husband for merchandise sold to his wife. In Hoey v. Hechtman, 2 Cal. App. 120, 83 Pac. 85, the complaint alleged that the defendant A. J. Hechtman was indebted to plaintiff's assignor in certain sums for goods, wares, and merchandise sold to Carrie C. Hechtman, wife of the defendant, "and that said goods, wares, and merchandise were common necessaries of life and necessary for the support and maintenance of said Carrie C. Hechtman." In that case it was held by the First District Court of Appeal that defendant's demurrer to the complaint upon the ground that it did not state a cause of action, should have been sustained.

"The complaint does not allege a sale to defendant, and does not allege all the facts necessary under section 174 of the Civil Code, to fix liability upon a husband for a sale to the wife"—citing Simon, Jacobs & Co. v. Scott, 53 Cal. 76, and Nissen v. Bendixsen, 69 Cal. 521, 11 Pac. 29.

The court further said:

"In the complaint before us it is alleged that the goods were necessary for the support of the wife, but it is not alleged that the husband had neglected to make adequate provision for her support. Both are essential. The allegation that the goods were necessary for her support refers to the character of the goods as being suitable to her circumstances and condition in life, and such allegation does not import that the husband had neglected to make adequate provision for her support. Under the statute the articles must be necessary for her support and the husband must have neglected to make adequate provision for her support."

In St. Vincent's Institution, etc., v. Davis, 129 Cal. 17, 61 Pac. 476, the Supreme Court referred to section 174 of the Civil Code and stated that under the provisions of that section whoever supplies necessaries for the support of a wife must, in order to recover therefor against the husband, show that the husband had failed to make adequate provision for the support of his wife. There being no such proof, it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The same rule is applicable to the case at bar, for we must presume that the court believed the testimony of the defendants, notwithstanding that it was inconsistent with some of the testimony presented on behalf of the plaintiff.

Counsel for appellant say in their brief that it is an uncontradicted fact that, when this account was first brought to the attention of Mr. Munford by means of a letter from the plaintiff, he wrote to Mr. Coulter a letter which contained an admission of his liability and a promise to pay the indebtedness when he got in better circumstances. That letter was lost, but one of the plaintiff's witnesses testified concerning its contents. But counsel are wrong in stating that the fact thus shown is uncontradicted, for their brief contains a quotation from the testimony of Mr. Munford in which he directly denies that in any such letter he said that he owed the account or that he would pay it.

[2] Appellant claims that the court erred in excluding testimony offered by the plaintiff for the purpose of proving that the account was opened on the credit of the husband, as well as the wife. This offered testimony related to conversations between the general manager of the plaintiff and its "creditman," and to statements made by the manager to the creditman about the affairs and financial responsibility of the defendants. These statements were not made in the presence of the defendants or either of them, or with their knowledge, and the objections were properly sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

SANDER v. LOS ANGELES RY. CORPORATION. (Civ. 2570.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 19, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 18, 1918.)

1. CARRIERS ⟸316(7) — NEGLIGENCE — PRESUMPTION FROM INJURY.
Where plaintiff showed that she was injured when alighting from defendant's street car through the catching of her skirt upon a knob, an appliance which served as a bumper to intercept sliding iron gate of car, she was entitled under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to presumption of negligence until defendant had excused itself.

2. TRIAL ⟸419 — MOTION FOR NONSUIT — WAIVER OF ERROR.
Error in denying nonsuit at close of plaintiff's evidence is waived by defendant supplementing plaintiff's proof by showing more fully the attendant conditions.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸991 — REVIEW — QUESTIONS OF FACT.
Whether negligence or want of it has been shown in a particular case is generally a question of fact to be determined by the trial court or jury.

4. CARRIERS ⟸318(3)—INJURY TO PASSENGER —NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.
In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff, whose skirt, when she was alighting from defendant's street car, caught upon a knob which served as a bumper to intercept street car gate, evidence held to support trial court's finding of negligence.

5. CARRIERS ⟸292(2)—INJURY TO PASSENGER —DEFENSE.

That defendant street railway company's claim agent had received no report of prior accident due to skirt of passenger catching on knob which served as a bumper to intercept street car gate would not be a complete defense to charge of negligence.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸996 — DETERMINATION BASED ON FACTS.

That different judges sitting at the trial might draw different conclusions upon the facts, as might also different juries, does not authorize interference by appellate court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Sander against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

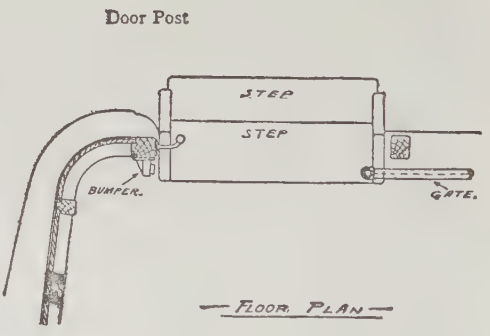
Park & Park and Wheaton A. Gray, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.



JAMES, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The action was to recover damages alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff through the negligence of the defendant. Defendant was a common carrier of passengers, and plaintiff was a passenger on one of its electric cars in the city of Los Angeles when she suffered her alleged injuries. The car upon which plaintiff was riding was at a standstill, having stopped to permit the discharge of passengers. Plaintiff was preceded from the car by her husband. As she reached the exit space opposite the steps (there being two of the latter), she had a package in her right hand and took hold of the handguard with her left. As she stepped downward upon the steps, her skirt was caught on a protruding knob affixed near the floor at the left hand of the exit, and she was thrown to the street, where she struck upon her back. In her complaint the negligence charged against the defendant was that the knob was negligently placed in its position by the defendant and so placed as to constitute a dangerous contrivance. The case was tried before the court sitting without a jury, and by the decision of the trial judge the sum of $2,500 was awarded to the plaintiff. On this appeal the defendant makes no contention against the amount of damages awarded or the extent of plaintiff's injuries. The sole contention is that no negligence whatsoever was shown by reason of which the defendant was chargeable for any amount of damages. The knob upon which plaintiff's skirt caught was a small contrivance which served as a bumper to intercept the sliding iron gate which closed the exit of the car. There were two of these bumpers the one about which complaint is made being located four inches from the floor of the car, and the other near the top of the door, about six feet from the floor. There being no dispute in the evidence as to the location of the bumper or the manner of construction of the car at the place of exit, we may use for purposes of illustration two drawings attached to appellant's brief which it is agreed are correct:

Drawing No. 1 is a view from the interior of the front platform showing the exit door open; also the bumper near the floor, attached to the doorpost. No. 2 gives a view of the steps of the car looking downward immediately over the same. A duplicate of the contrivance, which is termed a "bumper," was submitted under stipulation in this court by the parties, and we have it before us for examination. This bumper consists of an iron plate about 2¾ inches long by 1½ inches wide, with an ell piece which is made to fit on the inside of the doorpost. According to the testimony, this ell piece was set into the doorpost so that the piece was flush with the post on that side. A round iron projection extends above the plate to a height of about an inch and a half, and into this is set a solid rubber piece, cylindrical in shape, designed to receive the jar of the door when closed. This projection above the plate answers in general description to a section of 1½-inch pipe closed on one side and holding the rubber on the other, except that on the opposite side to that holding the rubber, and extending halfway up on the projection, is an iron brace, all a part of the casting. The casting is rough in kind and painted. The testimony introduced on behalf of the plaintiff to show the circumstances of the accident went only to the extent of describing the facts as we have first stated them, not presenting any description of the bumper itself or the way it was applied. Defendant at the conclusion of this testimony moved for a judgment of nonsuit, which motion was denied. Thereupon defendant introduced as a witness its master mechanic. He testified that it was his business to design all attachments for the cars of his employer, and that he had done this for about 12 years. He explained the method of construction of the car platform and bumper, and said:

"I consider that one of the most practical buffers that I could possibly adopt for that. I designed that car, and in studying that out, I had to have something to bump against, and the idea of putting it in that position as that was, throwing it out, in order that when they went to get past between the post and the buffer, the buffer was to keep it back far enough, so that you couldn't get your fingers between the sliding gate and the post, and is the reason why the buffer was placed back beyond the face of the post, so as to get room enough, so if anybody getting out of the car, or were getting in the car while the door was in action it couldn't pinch their fingers, and that is the reason why it is constructed in that manner. A further reason for placing the buffer out of the passageway, making the exit from there, was that we couldn't put one at the top and one at the bottom on account of throwing the gates out of square. It was necessary to put it in that position in order to have sufficient strength to support it. This buffer comes up even with the left-hand post as you get out of the car. I have been engaged in the railway business for about 35 years. I spent about a year and a half designing these cars before they were actually put in operation. We tried other buffers as experiments, but this buffer proved to be the most satisfactory that we have ever gotten out. This buffer is a modification of the original buffer that was put on."

On cross-examination the witness was asked various questions tending to elicit information as to whether the buffer casting could not have been extended all the way back to the front wall of the car (a distance of from twelve to fourteen inches), and he gave his view that it would not be practicable to do so. On further examination he stated that it could be so constructed, although he did not think it would be any better that way, saying:

"I don't think it would be impossible for a woman's garment to catch upon it if it were extended back to the end of the car. Her dress is as liable to be caught in underneath because we can't cover the whole distance from the floor of the car to the bumper."

Asked whether any shields had ever been placed over the bumpers, he replied, "No, sir."

The general claim agent of defendant company testified as follows:

"My duty regarding claims and injuries is to investigate all reports received, and to investigate all injuries, and as to how they occur. That has been my position with the defendant for 23 years. As claim agent of the railroad, I have a report of the number of passengers carried by the cars of the company."

He then stated that, during the year 1913 (it being alleged that the accident in question occurred on the 4th day of September, 1913), there had been carried on cars having the bumper attachments 88,236,273 passengers. He stated that as claim agent of the defendant he did not during the year 1913 receive any report or claim for injury other than the claim of the plaintiff arising out of an accident caused by the bumper, and further stated:

"The claim department watches all equipment on cars. If there is any complaint of anything dangerous, we notify the operating department; and, during that time all these millions of people carried, there has never been a question come up about any question on the cars. We have never received any report of any accident other than the one the plaintiff here received from this bumper or buffer."

Another witness, the assistant superintendent of the defendant, testified that he regarded the bumper as a safe appliance; but the appellant in its brief suggests that possibly this witness was not sufficiently qualified to give that opinion.

[1] Appellant first argues that the judgment of nonsuit should have been granted because there was no proof made by the plaintiff tending to show that the defendant had in any way been negligent. Appellant, under the facts adduced by the plaintiff, denies the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. It is true enough that negligence will not be implied from the mere fact of injury, and it is also true that the plaintiff, at the time she rested her case, had furnished the trial court with no information as to the construction of the bumper, its character, or location upon the car. She did, however, show that she was injured through the catching of her skirt upon an appliance affixed to the car by the defendant, and we are inclined to the view that enough was supplied, under the rule adverted to as affecting carriers of passengers, to entitle her to the presumption of negligence until the defendant had excused itself by evidence. In Steele v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 168 Cal. 375, 143 Pac. 718, the court states that, before negligence will be implied, "it must first be shown that the injury came from the movement of the car by those in charge of it, or from something connected therewith, or in control of the defendant." She did show that her skirt caught upon the bumper and that the bumper was an appliance connected with the car. The rule adverted to is further defined in Fink v. Slade, 66 App. Div. 105, 72 N. Y. Supp. 824, as follows:

The doctrine "relates simply to the probative force of evidence. It does not dispense with the necessity of evidence of the defendant's negligence in any case, but, on the contrary, expressly requires it. * * * Attendant circumstances * * * must be such as will warrant an inference, not of negligence only, but of the defendant's negligence. * * * It is not that, in any case, negligence can be assumed from the mere fact of an accident and injury; but in these cases the surrounding circumstances, which are necessarily brought into view by showing how the accident occurred, contain, without further proof, sufficient evidence of the defendant's duty and of his neglect to perform it."

[2] We think, however, that it becomes immaterial for consideration here as to whether the trial judge erred in denying the motion for judgment of nonsuit. The defendant was not content to rest upon the plaintiff's testimony and its motion for such a judgment, but introduced independent evidence showing fully the description of the bumper, the method of attachment thereof and the general construction of the car in the part concerned in the accident; in other words, the defendant supplemented the proof made by the plaintiff by showing more fully the attendant conditions. It therefore becomes a question as to whether upon the whole evidence the court was justified in concluding that defendant had failed to use that degree of care toward its passenger which the law requires of it. Counsel for appellant, upon this general question, contend that, where the evidence fails to show that an appliance is improperly placed or attached and it has been used for a long period of time without causing an accident, any suggestion of negligence is repelled and it must be concluded that the carrier has done its full duty.

In support of this contention, Morris v. Southern Pacific Co., 168 Cal. 490, 143 Pac. 708, is cited. This case is cited particularly because it quotes approvingly from Holt v. Southwest Missouri Electric Ry. Co., 84 Mo. App. 443, this declaration:

"A carrier of passengers is not obliged to proceed to provide against casualties which have not been known to occur before and which may not reasonably be anticipated. * * * That which never happened before, and which in its character is such as not naturally to occur to prudent men to guard against its happening at all, cannot, when, in the course of years, it does happen, furnish good grounds for charge of negligence in not foreseeing its happening and guarding against that remote contingency."

Morris v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, was a case entirely different in its facts from this and referred to an accident occurring by the undermining of the roadbed of defendant by "unprecedented" high water. The Missouri case was one where the passenger boarding a car was struck by the revolving handle of the brake, which had been set loose by the dislodging of a dog set in a ratchet. The brake handle was caused to revolve through the accidental releasing of the dog, either by the foot of the passenger boarding the car or the jarring of the brake by the passenger, or a jar caused by some other person, the platform being crowded at the time. The Missouri court held that as a matter of law no negligence was shown against the defendant, although it announced in its decision that the conclusion was not reached "without difficulty." There is an Illinois case in which the court, under very similar facts, held that it was a question for the jury to decide as to whether negligence had been shown. Cleveland, etc., Ry. Co. v. McHenry, 47 Ill. App. 301.

[3] The question as to whether negligence or the want of it has been shown in a particular case is generally a matter of fact to be determined by the trial court or jury. In Seller v. Market Street Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 72 Pac. 1006, the court said:

"It has often been said by this court that it is very rare that a set of circumstances is presented which enables a court to say, as a matter of law, that negligence has been shown. As a general rule, it is a question of fact for the jury, an inference to be deduced from the circumstances of each particular case, and it is only where the deduction to be drawn is inevitably that of negligence that the court is authorized to withdraw the question from the jury. This is true, even where there is no conflict in the evidence, if different conclusions upon the subject can be rationally drawn therefrom. If the conceded facts are such that reasonable minds might differ upon the question as to whether or not one was negligent, the question is one of fact for the jury. These rules are so well settled as to render it unnecessary to here do more than state them."

[4, 5] In reviewing the evidence in this case, we are of opinion that to declare as a matter of law that no negligence was shown would be to trespass upon the province of the trial judge and substitute our judgment for his as to the matter of fact upon which there might be different conclusions. So far as the evidence shows, the appliance complained of had only been used during the year 1913. It might be well concluded, from the position in which it was placed and the character of its construction, that a woman's skirt, if it chanced to fall against it as the passenger lowered herself to reach the steps, would catch and hold upon the corners of it. It would be reasonable to conclude, also, that by some very inexpensive means the sharp corners of the bumper could be shielded so that clothing could not catch upon them. If these deductions are allowable, then it must very clearly appear that the high degree of care required of passenger carriers had not been observed and that negligence was therefore shown. Hence the judgment could not here be set aside unless it may be said that the showing made by defendant as to the nonhappening of accidents while many millions of passengers had been carried was a complete answer to the charge. The particular evidence introduced to this point was general and showed only that the claim agent had received no report of accidents due to that cause or claims for damages. This showing does not negative the possibility that a great many skirts of women passengers may have caught upon the bumpers and no complaint made because of the fact. There was no showing that all such occurrences were required to be reported by the operatives of the cars, and we cannot assume that such was the rule. But, aside from all of this, and assuming for the moment that the evidence was complete upon that point, we do not think that under the particular facts here shown the answer of the defendant would be as complete as the case made out by the plaintiff. If such were true, then that defense would be a perfect one, however dangerous the appliance causing an injury to a passenger might appear to be, as shown by the independent facts.

[6] Different judges sitting at the trial might conclude differently upon those facts, as might also different juries; but, having once made a determination, the appellate courts are without power to declare a different judgment.

For the reasons given, the judgment and order are affirmed.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This was an action in which the plaintiffs, who are husband and wife, obtained a judgment against the defendant, Yosemite Transportation Company, for $3,500 for injury to the wife suffered in an accident by which one of the defendant's stages went off the grade between Camp Curry and El Portal in the Merced Canyon in Yosemite Valley on the 10th day of July, 1910. As will be indicated by the length of time since the acccident, the case has a history. This and a companion case by Wright against the company for the injuries to his wife were tried originally before a jury in the superior court of Mariposa county, Judge Trabucco presiding, and resulted in a judgment in favor of the company in the case we are now discussing. The plaintiffs moved for a new trial on various grounds, and the trial judge granted the motions, whereupon an appeal was taken from the order, and the matter was decided in the District Court of Appeal for the Third District in the case entitled as above, and reported in 28 Cal. App. 279, 152 Pac. 54. It was contended on that appeal by the Wrights that the trial court was warranted in granting the new trial upon the ground that from the evidence the jury should have found a verdict in their favor. Necessarily, this involved passing upon the question of whether the evidence was sufficient to warrant such a verdict; and in that case Mr. Justice Hart, in an elaborate opinion, held that the trial court was justified in granting the new trial upon that ground, and therefore sustained the order appealed from. The case was returned to the superior court of Mariposa county for a second trial, and was tried before Judge Trabucco sitting without a jury, and the judgment from which this appeal is taken was in due course given by him.

[1, 2] We have examined the evidence upon the second trial with care. While stated in different language from that of the opinion of Mr. Justice Hart, above referred to, the evidence at the second trial does not in effect differ from the evidence as recited by him, and we are not disposed to quarrel with the conclusion which he reached. The only point insisted upon here is that the findings of negligence on the part of the stage company are not supported by the evidence. "A carrier of persons for reward must use the utmost care and diligence for their safe carriage." Civ. Code, § 2100. The burden of proving itself free from negligence rested upon the defendant in this case after plaintiffs had introduced their evidence showing the circumstances surrounding Mrs. Wright's injury; and, even if we were disposed to question the conclusion reached by the appellate court for the Third district on that point, we are still not convinced that the defendant established its freedom from negligence by a preponderance of the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

BRANDON v. SULLIVAN TRACTOR CO. et al.

(Civ. 2452.)

JUDGMENT ⊂=143(12)—OPENING DEFAULT—GROUNDS.

Where it appears that defendant's attorney labored under mistake of law as to the time necessary to file an answer after a general demurrer had been overruled, and the delay was only for two weeks, it was not error to open a judgment taken by default.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Zar A. Brandon against the Sullivan Tractor Company and others. From an order setting aside a default judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ransey Probasco, of Oakland, and Sapiro & Ehrlich, of San Francisco, for appellant. De Lancey C. Smith, of Oakland, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of Alameda county, setting aside a default judgment which had been entered against the respondents, and permitting them to file an answer.

The plaintiff filed a complaint against the defendants, and on August 17, 1916, the superior court overruled a general demurrer to this complaint, but in doing so granted the defendants permission to file a special demurrer within five days thereafter. On the 28th day of August, 1916, no special demurrer or answer having been filed, the default of the defendant Sullivan Tractor Company, a corporation, was entered by the clerk upon the request of the plaintiff. On the 8th day of September the clerk, upon plaintiff's request, entered the default of the remaining defendants, and on the same day the court ordered judgment as prayed against all of the defendants. Thereafter, and on the 11th day of September, 1916, the defendants gave notice that they would move to set aside their default, and the judgment entered pursuant thereto, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and upon the ground that these proceedings were taken against them by reason of excusable neglect. They supported this notice, and a motion subsequently made and granted pursuant thereto, by certain affidavits.

One of these affidavits was by Hon. Milton T. Farmer, the judge who overruled the general demurrer, in which he stated that, had he been requested, at the time the demurrer was overruled, to grant the defendants time in which to answer he would have granted them at least ten days for such purpose. The other material affidavit is by Mr. De Lancey C. Smith. Mr. Smith deposes that his failure to ask for time in which to answer was due entirely to inadvertence and excusable neglect, by reason of the fact that at the time the general demurrer was overruled it was his intention to demur specially, as suggested by the court, and that, if he had done so, the necessity for filing an answer would not have arisen for some time thereafter; that this neglect of his arose from the fact that it is the common practice and usage in the superior court of Alameda county for the prevailing party at the hearing of the demurrer to serve upon the adverse party notice of the ruling of that court upon such demurrer, and the party served with such notice computes his time to appear next from the service of such notice, and in accordance with this practice he had a conversation with Ransey Probasco, one of the attorneys for the plaintiff, on or about the 26th day of August, during which he discussed with Probasco the fact that up to the time of that conversation plaintiff had not served the defendants with notice of the court's ruling at the hearing of the demurrer held on the 17th of August, and that Probasco during that conversation stated that he thought notice had been served, and, if it had not been, he would serve it immediately. In this affidavit, Mr. Smith admits that he was negligent in not asking the court for time in which to answer, if he should conclude not to file the special demurrer suggested, and states in addition to the foregoing facts that it was due to his excusable neglect in not so requesting the court for time for that purpose, and that he overlooked the necessity of answering within ten days.

The lower court, after hearing the motion, granted it, and the plaintiff appeals from this order, on the ground that the neglect of Mr. Smith was inexcusable under the authorities. The appellant claims that the trial court erred in making its order vacating the default, and the appellant relies in this behalf on the rule as stated in Thornton v. Borland, 12 Cal. 439; Smith v. Yreka Co., 14 Cal. 201; Williamson v. Joyce, 140 Cal. 669, 74 Pac. 290; Barron v. Deleval, 58 Cal. 95; Wall v. Heald, 95 Cal. 365, 30 Pac. 551; Bell v. Thompson, 8 Cal. App. 483, 97 Pac. 158; Estate of Keating, 158 Cal. 109, 110 Pac. 109. Those cases were based on facts that are not closely in point. We think the facts in this case bring it within the rule as stated in O'Brien v. Leach, 139 Cal. 220, 72 Pac. 1004, 96 Am. St. Rep. 105; Berri v. Rogero, 168 Cal. 736, 145 Pac. 95; Hagenkamp v. Equitable, 29 Cal. App. 713, 156 Pac. 520.

The record shows that the defendant's attorney labored under a mistake of law, that his delay was for a period of only two weeks, and that he moved promptly when he discovered that a default had been entered.

The order is affirmed.

Minors who received their allowance through a trustee are entitled to be confronted with proper accounts, vouchers to support them, and to be paid any balance due them, preliminary to the payment of compensation to the trustee.

3. TRUSTS ⊂=315(2) — COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEE—AMOUNT.
A trustee of allowance money for minors, being entitled under Civ. Code, § 2274, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1618, to the same compensation as an executor, was entitled to compensation of about $1,000 for the handling of about $30,000.

4. TRUSTS ⊂=315(3) — COMPENSATION — ACTION TO RECOVER—ACCOUNTING.
The trustee of allowance money for minors should account for all moneys from the beginning of his trust until the bringing of an action for compensation, wherein the minors, by an affirmative defense tantamount to a cross-complaint, sought an accounting.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by D. C. Brown against James A. Lee and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

N. E. Wretman, of San Jose, and Houghton & Houghton, of San Francisco, for appellants. E. S. Bell, of Napa, and Michael Brown, of San Mateo, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action brought by the plaintiff to recover for services rendered. The plaintiff had judgment in the lower court. The defendants appealed therefrom, and have brought up a bill of exceptions containing a part of the evidence. The defendants contend that the services rendered, if any, were the services of a trustee, and that no recovery should have been had till the plaintiff rendered to the defendants an account of his stewardship.

To ascertain the exact questions presented and how they arise, it is necessary to consider the following facts: On February 20, 1908, the Central Trust Company was appointed guardian of the estates of the defendants, who were at that time minor orphans. On May ——, 1910, P. J. Foote was appointed guardian of the persons of the defendants. September ——, 1910, the probate court made a monthly allowance of $75 per month in favor of each minor. Commencing on that date, the plaintiff received for the defendants the allowance money and continued to receive it during the life of the probate order. Both minors attained their majorities October 18, 1911. The Central Trust Company rendered its final account February 19, 1912. The plaintiff thereafter collected, not only the said allowances, but also the rents, profits, and sales moneys; and expended moneys necessary to cover the personal expenses of the defendants and paid the taxes, insurance, and repairs on the properties of the defendants. These relations continued till about April 1, 1914. On that date a disagreement arose between the parties, and this action followed.

The plaintiff framed his complaint into two counts: In the first one he claimed $4,789.38 as a balance upon a mutual, open, and current account for moneys expended between September 1, 1910, and April 1, 1914; and in the second count he claimed $6,000 for services rendered "as fiscal agent for the defendants," within two years prior to June 8, 1914. The defendants answered by interposing proper denials as to each count and by alleging among other things, that the defendants were minors prior to October 18, 1911; that a guardian of their persons was appointed April ——, 1910; that the Central Trust Company was appointed guardian of their estates on February 29, 1912; that before the commencement of this action the plaintiff received for the account of the defendants large sums of money totaling over $50,000; that during the same time the plaintiff had expended large sums in behalf of the defendants; that the defendants had asked an accounting and none had been rendered. The defendants then prayed that the plaintiff be required to make a full and complete accounting of all of his transactions and for general relief. The trial court made findings: (1) Against the plaintiff on his first count; (2) in favor of the plaintiff on his second count; and (3) in favor of the plaintiff on the affirmative defense.

[1, 2] The trial court excluded proof of, and found against the plaintiff on his first count, because an account had been rendered and settled in the probate court on the application of the trust company. At first glance these rulings would seem to be in favor of the appellants. But, on close consideration, we think the rulings had a double effect. The plaintiff was not bound by the account rendered by the trust company. He was not chargeable with the allowance moneys until he received them. Having received moneys for the account of these defendants, the plaintiff should have been charged therewith; later he should have accounted therefor; and he was entitled to be compensated for all moneys for which he had so accounted. And, conversely, these defendants were bound to bear such burdens, but at the same time they were entitled to be confronted with proper accounts, vouchers to support the same, and to be paid any balance that might be ascertained to be due them.

As the record stands, the merits or demerits of plaintiff's first count have not been ascertained from the point of view of either the plaintiff or the defendant.

The second count was tried on the theory that it presented the whole controversy between the parties litigant. But it will be noted that the pleading by its express terms, was limited to the period described as "within two years prior to June 8, 1914." This allegation split the plaintiff's cause of action.

When, prior to October 18, 1911, such moneys were paid by the trust company, it is conceded by both litigants that this plaintiff received and disbursed the same, but that he has not since accounted for the same. Neither has he accounted for moneys received after the trust company rendered its account. He wrote out such a paper, but his counsel told him not to deliver it, and they did not even offer to bring it forward on the trial, although the defendants were constantly demanding the same.

[3] The trial court allowed the plaintiff $2,500 for his services. He was entitled to the same compensation as an executor. Civ. Code, § 2274; Code Civ. Proc. § 1618. He received and can probably account for about $30,000. Measured by the provisions of section 1618, Code of Civil Procedure, his compensation would have been about $1,000. It appears that he has already received $1,800 as compensation, and, as the record now stands, he has apparently been overpaid.

[4] The affirmative defense was tantamount to a cross-complaint for an accounting. 1 Ency. Plead. & Prac. 98, 99; 1 Corpus Juris, pp. 633–635. The accounting should have been had for the whole period from September —, 1910, till April 1, 1914. After the accounting had been had, the account would have shown on its face: (1) Whether the balance for the whole period was in favor of the plaintiff or in favor of the defendants; (2) the ultimate facts on which the trial court could have estimated the plaintiff's claim for services; and (3) the dimensions of the book account relied on by the plaintiff in his first count.

As the case must go back for a new trial, we think it advisable to suggest that each party be allowed to so amend his pleadings as he may be advised.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

KLIMM et al. v. HENRY COWELL LIME & CEMENT CO. (Civ. 2316.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 20, 1918.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟹132(4) — TIME FOR FILING CLAIMS.
Claims filed more than 30, but within 90, days after completion of structure were filed in time under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, where no notice of completion was filed.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1040(10)—ERRONEOUS RULING ON DEMURRER—HARMLESS ERROR.
Where defendant procured stipulation at trial that building was completed November 15, 1914, he was not prejudiced by overruling of demurrer to complaint, which alleged that work was completed on or about such date.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟹161(4)—INTEREST.
Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, does not prohibit the allowance of interest in mechanics' lien cases.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1154—ERRONEOUS JUDGMENT—MODIFICATION.
Where by oversight judgment is entered for $60 more than called for by the findings, direction will be given to trial court to modify judgment by reducing amount of recovery by that amount.

5. COSTS ⟹238(1)—APPEAL TAKEN FOR DELAY—SUCCESSFUL PARTY.
Where appeal appears to be taken for delay only, costs will be allowed a respondent whose judgment is reduced in amount, where appellant would have had relief in trial court, if he had asked therefor.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Consolidated action by Frank J. Klimm and others against the Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Company. Judgment for plaintiffs for the amount of their respective claims with interest, and defendant appeals. Judgment modified by reducing the amount awarded one plaintiff, and in all other respects affirmed.

Hatch & Hatch, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Daniel A. Ryan, Louis P. Dunkley, W. W. Allen, H. K. Eells, E. T. Cooper, Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, Samuel B. Russell, G. R. Perkins, Adams & Adams, Nowlin, Fassett & Little, Lent & Humphrey, and Adolph Cohen, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This is a consolidated action for the foreclosure of certain mechanics' liens against the property of defendant Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Company. It resulted in a judgment in favor of the lien claimants for the amounts of their respective claims, with interest at the legal rate from November 15, 1914, the date found by the court to be the date of completion, and for the foreclosure of the liens as prayed. The defendant appeals.

The liens were all perfected according to law and filed in time. Some outstanding facts of the case are of interest. The defendant Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Company entered into a contract with Day & Sons to erect and complete a building for $70,000. At the trial of this action it was agreed by all the parties that the building was completed on November 15, 1914, and the court found that the building was in fact completed on or about that date. Sufficient funds were due to the contractor from the defendant at the time of the trial to pay all these claims, with the interest allowed by the court. The contractor did not defend against the claims, but defaulted. It was proven at the trial that Day & Sons did not dispute the claims at all, and it does not appear that the Cement Company disputes any of the foregoing facts. It appeared at the trial, also, that Day & Sons gave a general order to the Cement Company to settle all of these claims. At the outset of the trial its attorney stated to the court that he had placed the matter before his client, and advised it that the trial was to he had on that day, and that his client had furnished him with no defense to the action.

[1] In face of this rather extraordinary record, it is now claimed by the Cement Company that the claims of lien were not filed in time, as they were filed more than 30 days after completion; but no notice of completion was filed, so the lien claimants had 90 days after actual completion within which to file their claims, and the claims were on file within this period. Code Civ. Proc. § 1187.

[2] Another ground urged for reversal is that it was averred in the complaints and found by the court that the building was completed on or about the 15th day of November, 1914; and it is contended that this averment is not sufficiently certain, but that the exact date of completion should have been alleged and found. The defendant raised this point by demurrer to the complaints, and cites Cohn v. Wright, 89 Cal. 86, 26 Pac. 643, in support of his position. But in view of the facts above stated, and especially of the stipulation of the defendant as to the time of completion, which stipulation was sought from two of the plaintiffs by defendant's counsel himself at the trial, the defendant cannot be said to have been prejudiced in any substantial right by the ruling on demurrer, nor by the form of the finding, and this case will not be reversed on that ground, although the case of Cohn v. Wright supports the contention of defendant's counsel.

[3] It is also contended by defendant that no interest can be allowed in mechanics' lien cases, and counsel cites section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, in support of this contention; but the point is decided against him in Hubbard v. Jurian, 170 Pac. 1093. It will be noted that it is not contended that any of the several amounts of interest allowed was too large, but only that no interest whatever should have been allowed in the case.

[4] The other points made for reversal here are all equally technical with those to which we have called attention, except that in the case of the plaintiff Klimm judgment was entered for $60 more than called for in the findings. We have no doubt that this excess would have been conceded, had attention been called to it before this appeal was taken; but as it is an undeniable error, though evidently caused by oversight, the judgment must be modified, by reducing the amount awarded to Klimm by the sum of $60, and this the superior court is directed to do.

In all other respects the judgment is affirmed.

[5] We are almost persuaded, from a consideration of this entire record, that the appeal was taken for delay only, and therefore his costs on appeal will be allowed Klimm, as well as the other respondents.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem.

BOND v. WALTERS.

MULLER v. SAME.

(Civ. 2535, 2536.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 23, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 21, 1918.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS ⇐128—PATENTED LANDS—ESTABLISHMENT OF TRUST.

Courts of equity will entertain proceedings to decree that persons who have received patents to land hold them in trust for the true owner.

2. PUBLIC LANDS ⇐128—SUIT TO ESTABLISH TRUST—NECESSARY ALLEGATIONS.

Plaintiff, seeking to enforce a trust as true owner of land held by another under patent, must show by his complaint that he is entitled to the relief sought, that he occupies a status entitling him to control legal title, and that officers who awarded land to defendant, to whom patent was issued, were imposed upon by fraudulent practices of defendant.

3. PUBLIC LANDS ⊂=128—SUIT TO ESTABLISH TRUST—INSUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

In suits to enforce trusts as to land held by defendant under patent from United States, complaints held insufficient, as failing to allege that plaintiffs, in their contests with defendant before land department, introduced any evidence they had complied with regulations of Department of Interior entitling them to lands but for adverse claim of defendant, and as failing to claim defendant practiced any fraud on government.

4. PLEADING ⊂=8(11)—CONCLUSION—SUIT TO ENFORCE TRUST AS TO PATENTED LAND.

In suit to enforce trust as to lands held by defendant under patent from United States, plaintiff's allegation of conclusion that defendant was not entitled to receive land was not sufficient. He must go further, and show he occupied such a status, having complied with rules of Department of Interior, as entitled him to control title.

5. PUBLIC LANDS ⊂=106(1)—LANDS OF UNITED STATES—REVIEW BY COURTS—DEPARTMENTAL DECISIONS.

Decisions of land department on questions of fact, in absence of showing by plaintiff, seeking to enforce trust as to land patented to defendant, that he has complied with rules of Department of Interior, are not subject to review by courts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Suits by Benjamin Bond and by Vera Muller against Augusta E. Walters. From judgments of dismissal, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Charles Kasch, of Ukiah, for appellants.

Preston & Preston, of Ukiah, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. These suits were brought to have a trust declared in certain lands. The complaints are identical in every respect, except the names of the plaintiffs and the description of the real property involved; and from a stipulation contained in the transcript it appears that it is agreed that the decision in one case shall be determinative of the other.

Plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment of dismissal entered by the trial court after the entry of the default of the plaintiffs, which in each instance was for failure on their part to amend the complaint after the sustaining of general demurrers to the same.

In the complaint in the Bond Case plaintiff seeks to obtain a decree adjudging that the defendant, to whom a United States patent for the lands described in the complaint was issued, holds the title to such land in trust for the plaintiff, and prays for a decree directing the defendant to execute a proper conveyance to him of the land in question.

[1-4] While it is true that courts of equity will entertain proceedings to decree that persons who have received and hold patents to land hold the same in trust for the true owner, a plaintiff in such action must show by his complaint that he is entitled to the relief sought; that he occupies such a status as entitles him to control the legal title; that the officers who awarded the land to another, to whom the title was issued pursuant to the judgment, were imposed upon and deceived by the fraudulent practices of him in whose favor the judgment was given. Such facts must be distinctly alleged and proven. Kentfield v. Hayes, 57 Cal. 409; Aurrecoechea v. Sinclair, 60 Cal. 532. No such allegations are here presented. The complaint alleges, among other things, that in a contest for the lands between plaintiff and defendant filed before the land office, and at a hearing had before the land department, the register and receiver of the United States land office filed their decision, holding that the defendant herein had the legal title to the land in question; that after the entry of such opinion plaintiff appealed to the General Land Office, where the action of the register and receiver was affirmed; that thereafter the plaintiff appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, where such action was again affirmed, and the homestead entry of plaintiff was canceled as to the lands in question because of the prior right of defendant thereto and a patent issued to her. As pointed out by defendant, there is no allegation in the complaint that plaintiff in his contest before the land department introduced any evidence whatever showing that he had complied with the rules and regulations of the Department of the Interior entitling him to the lands in question, but for the adverse claim and contest instituted by the defendant. Nor does the plaintiff in his complaint claim that defendant practiced any fraud or misrepresentation on the government in her contest, nor in any of the proceedings had by her in obtaining the patent to the lands in question. The allegation that defendant was not entitled to receive the land does not suffice. Plaintiff must go further and show that he occupied such a status as entitled him to control the legal title. Jameson v. James, 155 Cal. 275, 100 Pac. 700. And mere conclusions on his part to this effect are insufficient for this purpose.

[5] The decisions of the land department, in the absence of such showing, upon questions of fact, are not subject to review by the courts. Powers v. Leith, 53 Cal. 711; Elliott v. Robbins, 33 Cal. App. 577, 165 Pac. 1042.

The judgment in each case is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. FONG SING. (Cr. 435.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 24, 1918. On Petition for Rehearing, Oct. 24, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 21, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸363—EVIDENCE — RES GESTÆ.

Under res gestæ rule by Code Civ. Proc. § 1850, evidence is admissible of extrajudicial declarations tending to explain or show character, motive, purpose, or intent of transaction, itself a fact in dispute, which under ordinary circumstances would be excluded as hearsay or self-serving.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸368(1)—EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ.

In prosecution for murder, testimony that third person requested a codefendant to go to lumber yard and get lumber, of itself, or in absence of some statement by defendant in response indicating intention to accompany codefendant (in which case testimony would have been admissible), was inadmissible under res gestæ rule in support of defendant's alibi.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1186(4) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In prosecution for murder, court's action in excluding testimony admissible under res gestæ rule in support of defendant's alibi held not ground for reversal under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where testimony could have gone no further in support of alibi than that of another witness.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1043(2)—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS.

In prosecution of Chinese for murder, in view of character of objections to line of cross-examination, no specific objection being made, held, that defendant's complaint that questions were improper, as insinuating that defendant's witness was engaged in carrying on an illegal business, could not be reviewed.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1119(4)—APPEAL—RECORD—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

On appeal from conviction of murder, held that, in view of record, the appellate court cannot conclude that the special prosecutor went beyond the record when he pointed out a claimed inconsistency between the testimony of defendant and that of his witness.

6. JURY ⟸103(11) — DISQUALIFICATION — READING NEWSPAPER ARTICLE.

If juror in murder case, before being called, had read newspaper article that defendant intended to change his plea from not guilty to guilty, it would not per se disqualify him from sitting, unless his mind was so affected he could not give defendant a fair trial.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸925½(4)—NEW TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE OUT OF COURT.

A new trial after conviction of murder was properly denied under Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 2, on ground jury received evidence out of court, where it is only shown that newspaper, on withdrawal of defendant's original counsel from case, published article stating defendant intended to change plea of not guilty to guilty, a statement contradicted next day.

On Petition for Rehearing.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸700—DUTY OF PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.

A public prosecutor should be as solicitous of the protection of the rights of a citizen, or other person on trial, as the judge who presides.

9. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸719(1)—TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.

It is improper for public prosecutor to present to jury anything but strictly legal evidence in support of charge, and it is not within sphere of legitimate argument to prejudice defendant's standing by insinuating that some fact bearing strongly against defendant, but not proved by proper evidence, exists in reality.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Fong Sing was convicted of murder in the first degree, and from the judgment, and an order denying new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Samuel M. Shortridge, of San Francisco, and Webster & Blewett, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant and two other Chinese, Charlie Suey and Sam Mie, were jointly charged by information filed in the superior court of San Joaquin county with the crime of murder in the alleged willful, deliberate, and malicious killing of a fellow countryman named Ching Sing. The defendant was given a separate trial, and the jury convicted him of murder of the first degree, fixing his punishment, however, at imprisonment for life. He has brought the case to this court on appeals from the judgment and the order denying him a new trial.

The homicide occurred in the city of Stockton, in the county above named, on the 5th day of March, 1917, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock p. m. There is no claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, but it is vigorously insisted that prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in certain of its rulings whereby certain evidence offered by the defendant was excluded from the record, that the district attorney and the attorney specially employed to assist in the prosecution of the accused were guilty of misconduct at the trial which so seriously prejudiced the rights of the defendant as to have prevented a fair and impartial trial of the question of his guilt or innocence, and that the court erred in denying the accused a new trial upon the ground, predicated upon an affidavit by the defendant, that the jury received out of court evidence the effect of which was greatly to prejudice the jury against the defendant.

The killing of the deceased, by whomsoever done, involved a deliberate and malignant murder. He was either standing on the sidewalk in front of a building situated on one of the streets of what is known as "Chinatown" in the city of Stockton, or had just stepped to the sidewalk from a building, when he was viciously attacked by several young Chinese (some of the witnesses said three and others thought there were four) and shot to death. The attacking Chinese fired upon the deceased simultaneously, thus disclosing a preconcerted arrangement to kill him, and after he fell to the sidewalk, probably lifeless, the murderers or some of them stepped up to where he lay and fired several shots into his body. The physician who held the autopsy at the post mortem examination testified that he found in the body 23 wounds, of which 13 were entrance wounds.

After the shooting ceased, the Chinese committing the crime ran from the scene of the shooting, at least two of them throwing the weapons with which they shot the deceased to the sidewalk near where the homicide occurred and where they were a few minutes after the shooting found and picked up by an officer. The homicide was witnessed by several Chinese and partly seen by some white men. Several of the witnesses, both Chinese and white, positively identified Fong Sing, the defendant, as one of the Chinese who did the shooting.

A short time after the tragedy, Fong Sing and Charlie Suey were apprehended and placed under arrest several blocks from the place at which the deceased was killed. It appears that J. E. McFarland, a constable of Stockton, heard the shooting and thereupon hastened to the street from which direction the sound of the shooting seemed to him to come. On reaching the northeast corner of Washington and Center streets, he looked east or in the direction of the corner of Washington and El Dorado streets, and there observed a large number of people running in different directions. He saw three young Chinese running from the scene of the shooting on Washington street in a westerly direction, going as far as the corner of Washington and Center streets. One of the three Chinese, Sam Mie, disappeared or left the other two, Fong Sing and Charlie Suey, and went in a different direction. McFarland ran after Fong Sing and Charlie Suey, but the Chinese outsprinted the officer and soon got out of his sight. McFarland kept up the pursuit, inquiring of different people he met on the streets whether they had seen the fleeing Chinese, and finally he espied the defendant and Charlie Suey walking together at a point on Madison street near Lafayette and in near proximity to a lumber yard. The officer commanded the men to halt, but they started to separate and go in different directions, when McFarland drew his revolver and threatened to shoot unless they surrendered. The two men thereupon stepped up to the officer, who placed them under arrest. Just as the officer was about to start to jail with his prisoners, one Zuiver (who testified for the people) called out to McFarland and stated to the officer that he saw Fong Sing, just before he started toward the officer, throw some article, the exact character of which he did not then know, into a vacant lot, and at about the same time Zuiver went to the spot where the article was thrown, found a pistol, and delivered the same over to the possession of McFarland. Upon examination, the pistol was found to contain four empty and two loaded shells. McFarland testified that from the condition of the empty shells and the odor from the weapon he was of the opinion that the pistol had been discharged very shortly before it came into his possession.

The defendant claimed that he was not present at the scene of the homicide at the time of the commission thereof, but that when the shooting took place he and Charlie Suey were at the lumber yard of the Stockton Lumber Company, located on the corner of Sonora and Commerce streets, in the city of Stockton, several blocks from where the deceased was slain. Accordingly, the defendant set up and undertook to sustain an alibi, and it is the ruling of the court disallowing certain testimony offered by the defendant in support thereof which constitutes the point first urged in the briefs as a sufficient ground for a reversal, and it arose in this way: The defendant claimed and attempted to prove at the trial that, at about the noon hour on the day of the killing, he went to and was at the laundry of one Gong Sue, a Chinese laundryman, whose place of business was on the easterly side of Center street, between Washington and Lafayette streets; that, when he arrived at the laundry, Gong Sue and Charlie Suey, the defendant's codefendant, were there and then eating lunch; that, after lunch was finished, the three Chinese were engaged in and carried on a conversation for some time; that, very shortly after 1 o'clock, the defendant and Charlie Suey started to go to the lumber yard of the Stockton Lumber Company, which, as above stated, is situated several blocks from the place where the homicide occurred, for the purpose of procuring some lumber for Gong Sue; that they arrived at the lumber yard at about 1:20 or 1:30 p. m., and there met one Alfred Love, a building contractor of the city of Stockton, who spoke to Charlie Suey, with whom he was personally acquainted; that, while they were at the lumber yard, the sounds of shooting, apparently coming from the direction of Chinatown, were heard. The witness Love, above referred to, testified to having seen Charlie Suey and Fong Sing in the street, near the lumber yard, on the day and at about the hour above mentioned, and further testified that he at that time spoke to Charlie Suey. In further support of the alibi, the defendant sought to prove by Gong Sue that, on the day of the homicide, and shortly after 1 o'clock p. m. of that day, he sent Charlie Suey to the lumber yard to get some lumber, and that the defendant was then and had been for some minutes previously at the laundry and started with Charlie Suey to the lumber yard. An attempt was further made to have Gong Sue testify as to whether defendant himself at that time stated that he was going to accompany Charlie Suey to the lumber yard. To all that testimony the people's objections were sustained by the court on the ground that it was immaterial. The theory upon which it is contended that the testimony thus sought to be brought before the jury was competent and proper is that it was a part of the res gestæ; that is to say, that it related to and tended to explain the transaction embracing the alibi of the defendant or the acts and movements on his part at the precise time of the homicide which were inconsistent with and contradictory to the claim that he was present at the place where the deceased was killed at the time he was shot to death and participated in the act of destroying the latter's life.

[1] The doctrine of res gestæ is so well understood that it is hardly necessary to remark that under that rule evidence is admissible of extrajudicial declarations tending to explain or show the character or motive or purpose or intent of a transaction, itself a fact in dispute, which would under other or ordinary circumstances be excluded as hearsay or self-serving. The rule, in other words, recognizes the competency of certain hearsay testimony, and is an exception to the general rule of exclusion as to that class of proof. Our Code of Civil Procedure, § 1850, thus states the rule:

"Where, also, the declaration, act, or omission forms part of a transaction, which is itself the fact in dispute, or evidence of that fact, such declaration, act, or omission is evidence, as part of the transaction."

The propriety of such testimony, and, indeed, the theory upon which it is taken out of the general rule against hearsay testimony, proceeds from the supposition that the declarant without an opportunity deliberately to concoct a false statement or story concerning the transaction for the express purpose of exonerating himself from censure or culpability in connection therewith has spontaneously made some statement which tends to explain the nature, quality, motive, or intent of the transaction. In other words, it is a statement or declaration explanatory of the character of the transaction, its quality, purpose, or motive, given under such circumstances as to preclude the idea that it involved a falsehood deliberately meditated and conceived and given expression for the benefit or advantage of the declarant himself.

There are many cases which have sanctioned testimony of extrajudicial declarations, where a defendant in a criminal case or a party to a civil action has made some statement as to some matter arising in connection with a transaction constituting the principal fact in dispute. Declarations in such cases, however, have generally been admitted, not altogether under the rule of res gestæ, or because they were deemed as strictly a part of the principal transaction in dispute, but because they were regarded as indicative of the frame of mind of the declarant as to some act growing out of the principal transaction, and exhibited under such circumstances or conditions as to make it reasonably certain that it was not the result of a premeditated design to prepare, pro re nata, a statement of the fact; and it is generally upon this latter theory, rather than upon the theory that it is a part of the transaction in dispute, that the declaration of a person as to his destination on leaving his home or some other place is receivable as evidence of his intention or purpose where such declaration has a material bearing upon his connection or want of connection with the principal question in issue.

In his treatise on the Law of Evidence, section 108, Mr. Greenleaf thus states the rule:

"When a person * * * leaves his house, * * * his declarations, made at the time of the transaction, and expressive of its character, motive, or object, are regarded as verbal acts, indicating a present purpose and intention, and are therefore admitted in proof like other material facts."

The rule has been applied, under varying conditions, in many cases, both civil and criminal, and, without examining them in detail herein, we may cite the following cases in which the application of the principle involved in the rule is exemplified: State v. Mortenson, 26 Utah, 312, 73 Pac. 562, 569; State v. Power, 24 Wash. 34, 63 Pac. 1112, 63 L. R. A. 902; State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380; State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 299; United States v. Craig, 25 Fed. Cas. 682; Territory v. Conk, 2 Dak. 188, 47 N. W. 395; Lakeshore & M. S. R. Co. v. Herrick, 49 Ohio St. 25, 29 N. E. 1052; State v. Jones, 64 Iowa, 349, 17 N. W. 911, 20 N. W. 470; D. & R. G. R. Co. v. Spencer, 25 Colo. 9, 52 Pac. 211; Grimes v. State, 68 Ind. 193.

[2] But, since the rule constitutes an exception to the general rule excluding the admission of hearsay testimony, it must, of course, be confined in its application strictly to the circumstances or conditions giving rise to the reason for the recognition of that class of testimony as a legal method of proving a fact, and hence we do not believe that the scope of the rule can reasonably be so far extended as to justify the admission in evidence of the declaration of a third party to the defendant in either a criminal or civil action involving a request by the former that the latter go to some particular place, unless such declaration is accompanied or followed by a declaration by the party himself that he intends to go to such place. Therefore, referring to the present case, the fact that Gong Sue might have requested Charlie Suey to go to the lumber yard and get some lumber, of itself, or in the absence of some statement by the defendant in response to such request indicating his intention to accompany Suey to the lumber yard, would not be admissible. The rule contemplates some utterance by the party to the action himself, and not that of a third party, for the very obvious reason that the declaration is admissible only because it is supposed to be expressive of what is in the declarant's own mind with respect to the intention as to his destination, which, manifestly, could not be determined from what some other person might have said, unconnected with any declaration in that particular by the party himself. If, however, as is the claim here, the witness Gong Sue would have testified that the defendant, upon the request being made by Gong Sue of Charlie Suey that the latter go to the lumber yard for the purpose of getting lumber, declared that he intended to accompany Charlie Suey to the lumber yard, then we think the entire conversation might properly have been given in evidence under the rule above explained. The court below should therefore have admitted the testimony, but we cannot say that the ruling excluding it was prejudicial in view of considerations to which we will now refer.

[3] The witness Alfred Love, an American and a building contractor and a citizen of Stockton, presumably of reputable standing in that community, testified that he saw Charlie Suey and another Chinese in the street, about 40 feet from the lumber yard, on the day of the homicide, near the hour of 1 o'clock, p. m. The precise moment of time when the deceased was shot no witness pretended to state, but it was given as approximately at 1 o'clock; that is, at some point of time between 1 and 1:30 p. m. Nor did Love pretend to be able to fix or state the precise moment of time at which he saw the two Chinese near the lumber yard. His fixing of the time amounted, as must be so in a majority of such cases, to a mere approximation. There is nothing to show that there was any occasion for him to ascertain or fix the exact moment when he saw them.

There was testimony, as seen, that the Chinese committing the act, after doing so, ran from the scene thereof, and that two of them went in the direction of the lumber yard; that is, in that general direction. The defendant and Charlie Suey were arrested near the lumber yard, and in their conversations with the officers after their arrest made no claim that they had been at the lumber yard for the purpose of getting lumber. Thus, it is manifest, Love's statement that he saw Suey and the defendant at the lumber yard at about the hour of 1 o'clock p. m. might have been true, and it might have been also true that the two Chinese stopped where Love saw them in their flight from the scene of the shooting. Either such was the theory upon which the jury decided the question of alibi, or else they entirely repudiated the testimony of Love, which, he not being impeached, is not probable. But, in any event, we cannot see how the declaration of the defendant as to the point of his destination when he left the laundry or the testimony of Gong Sue as to such declaration could have gone any further in support of the alibi than was derived from the testimony of the witness, Love. Testimony of the declaration of the defendant himself, although admissible under the exception to the general rule, was in the fullest sense hearsay and self-serving, and if the jury did not believe Love, a white man, or concluded that he was mistaken as to the part of the day he saw Suey and the defendant near the lumber yard, or if, accepting Love's testimony as to the approximate time he saw the two Chinese near the lumber yard, the jury were persuaded that the circumstance so testified to was not inconsistent with the theory, which is by no means without support from the evidence, that Suey and the defendant were among the perpetrators of the homicide and immediately upon its commission fled to the place where they were seen by Love, then we may safely assume that the jury would have attached no probative value to the testimony of Gong Sue revealing a declaration by the defendant indicating his intention of going to the lumber yard. In other words, and in brief, we cannot perceive how the excluded testimony could have added any more support to the alibi theory than it derived from the testimony of an unimpeached white witness. We think, therefore, that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution applies here.

[4] It is next urged that error prejudicial to the defendant followed from asking Gong Sue, on cross-examination, if it was not a fact that he was engaged in the business of selling lottery tickets; he having on direct examination stated that he was conducting a laundry business. That question was not objected to, and the witness replied that lottery tickets were not sold at his place and that the only business carried on at his place was that of a laundry. He was then asked: "Don't anybody sell lottery tickets in there?" To that question objection was interposed by the defendant and sustained by the court. It is contended that the injury resulting to the defendant from the above questions to his witness by the district attorney was in the insinuation with which they were pregnant that said witness was engaged in carrying on a business prohibited and penalized by the law.

Generally, the purpose which an attorney has in view in asking his witnesses as to the business in which they are engaged is to bolster the reliability of their testimony, and we cannot conceive of any just reason why, in such a case, it is not proper for the party against whom or whose interests a witness testifies to show, on cross-examination, that, as a matter of fact, the witness is not conducting the business in which he has said he is engaged or, if he is, that in connection therewith he is also carrying on a traffic of a less reputable character. But, at any rate, no objection was made to the first of the several questions propounded on that line of cross-examination, and the objection to the last question was sustained, and therefore no review of the complaint in that respect is justified, not even upon the theory that the objection goes to the question of the misconduct of the district attorney, since the objection was solely upon the ground that it was not cross-examination and no specific objection or exception to the alleged misconduct of the prosecuting officer made. Moreover, the witness positively denied that he ever conducted a lottery business, and we are not to assume that the jury concluded that he lied in that particular; no other testimony having been received relating to that matter.

Much that is said in the foregoing applies with equal force to objections to a similar character of questions propounded on cross-examination to defendant's witness Yee Won.

[5] It is next urged that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct seriously militating against the substantial rights of the accused by referring in his argument to a matter which it is claimed was not brought out in the testimony and which tended to show a conflict between the testimony of the witness Love and that of the defendant upon a material fact in connection with the proof received in support of the alibi.

It appears that the stenographic reporter caused it to appear in his notes that Love shook hands with Charlie Suey when they met near the lumber yard, whereas Love testified that Charlie Suey was a distance of some 40 feet from him when he greeted the Chinese and did not say that he shook hands with Suey. Counsel for the defendant interrupted the district attorney when he was making the point arising from the alleged conflict upon that proposition, and called his attention to the alleged fact that, during the progress of the trial, when it developed that the reporter had made the defendant say that Love and Suey had shaken hands on the occasion mentioned, it was shown and agreed between counsel on both sides that, in point of fact, the defendant gave no such testimony, and that its appearance in the reporter's notes of the testimony was solely the result of error on the part of the reporter—that the latter, in other words, misunderstood the testimony of the defendant as it was translated by the interpreter and so made him say that Suey shook hands with Love, when he in fact made no such statement. But the district attorney, in effect, insisted that the defendant did testify that Suey shook hands with Love, and that the record disclosed that he so testified, and said nothing about an understanding or stipulation between counsel that the reporter had erred in so reporting the defendant, nor did he reply to the statement of defendant's counsel that any such an understanding was had or that any correction was made in the particular referred to of defendant's testimony. The court remarked, referring to this controversy between counsel, that "the jury must remember the testimony; they will have to determine what the testimony is."

The above is all that the record discloses relative to the matter under consideration; that is to say, with the exception of the above-explained colloquy between counsel, the record does not show, or at least our attention has not been directed to any part of the record where it is shown, that there was any correction made of the testimony of the defendant in the respect indicated above or agreed to by counsel on both sides, and, in the absence of a proper showing in that regard, this court cannot say upon the record that the special prosecutor was not justified in making the point to which objection is here made. In other words, admittedly the reporter's notes showed that the defendant did testify that Suey shook hands with Love, but the record does not show that the reporter made a mistake in so reporting the defendant's testimony or that it was stipulated at the trial that any such an error was made by the reporter, or that there was any correction of the defendant's testimony in that respect. Therefore, as stated, there is before us no record upon which we can base the conclusion that the special prosecutor went beyond the record when he pointed out the inconsistency between the testimony of Love and that of the defendant as to the manner in which the former met and greeted Charlie Suey.

[6, 7] The last point pressed upon us for a reversal is that the court erred in refusing to grant the defendant a new trial on the ground that the jury "received evidence out of court other than that resulting from a view of the premises." Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 2. The motion for a new trial on said ground was, as above stated, supported by the affidavit of the defendant, setting forth the following facts: That, originally, attorneys Seymour and Eicke represented the defendant as attorneys in the case; that, for some reason, the specific nature of which is not disclosed by the record, Messrs. Seymour and Eicke, after the jury was impaneled and sworn, and before the taking of testimony was proceeded with, asked and were granted permission to withdraw from further participation in the case as representatives of the accused; that, thereafter, the Independent, a daily newspaper published in the city of Stockton, in reporting the withdrawal of Seymour and Eicke from the case, stated, among other things, that it was rumored that the defendant intended to change his plea of not guilty to that of guilty; that the "affiant is informed and believes that the jury so impaneled and sworn to try said cause heard and took cognizance of said common rumor that affiant intended to and was about to plead guilty and read the articles indicated above; and that in this regard the said jurors took evidence out of court in said cause or were biased and prejudiced against the defendant by reason thereof." Attached to said affidavit was the newspaper article referred to therein, and also attached thereto was an article published in the same newspaper the following day, stating that the defendant, through a friend, positively denied any intention of pleading guilty, and containing a statement from Mr. Seymour, one of the attorneys who withdrew from the defense of the defendant, that—

"The Chinese and their friends maintained their absolute innocence of the crime charged, and that, a difference of opinion having arisen in the conduct of the case, the attorneys for the defense had withdrawn in the best interests of their clients; a friendly interest still being maintained."

It will be observed that all that the affidavit contains as showing that the defendant was prejudiced by the publication referred to is the mere inference to be drawn from the statement therein made, on the information and belief of the affiant, that the jurors saw and read the said article. There is no positive showing that the jurors or any of them read the article, or that they were prejudiced against the defendant or influenced to find against him by reason thereof. Even if such a publication had been made before the jury were called to the jury box and it developed that any juror had read the article, it would not, per se, have disqualified him from sitting in the case. To have disqualified him, it would have been necessary further to show that his mind had been by the article so affected relative to the case as that he could not give the defendant a fair and impartial trial, according to law. Moreover, if it may be assumed that the jury read said article, it may with equal propriety be assumed that they also read the subsequent article correcting the statement of the first that the defendant contemplated entering a plea of guilty; and thus it may be assumed (assuming that both articles were read by the jurors) that the effect of the first article was overcome by the last. But, however that may be, without something more positive than is shown here that the jurors read and were affected or influenced against the accused by the first article, it must be assumed that, even if they perused the article, they were intelligent enough to know their sworn duty, and honest enough to have confined themselves in the determination of the very serious question of the guilt or innocence of the accused entirely to a consideration of the evidence as it was allowed to go before them under the rules of law submitted to them by the court for their enlightenment and guidance in the discharge of that all-important function.

We have discovered no legal reason for disturbing the verdict, and, for the reasons herein given, the judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

HART, J. [8, 9] In a characteristically able argument, the senior counsel for the defendant urges a rehearing of this cause. There is nothing we can add to what has been said in the former opinion filed herein, except to express hearty concurrence in the general animadversion of the learned lawyer upon the practice too often resorted to in criminal cases by public prosecutors of lugging into their cases in argument matters having vital bearing upon the case which have not been brought in by evidence and which are calculated to deprive an accused of that fair and impartial trial which is guaranteed to him by the Constitution and the statute laws of the state. A public prosecutor should be equally as solicitous of the protection of the rights of a citizen or other person on trial for his life or his liberty as the judge who presides at the trial, and it is obviously an egregiously erroneous notion if that public officer conceives it to be his duty to convict every person against whom a crime has been charged, regardless of whether he is or is not guilty or of whether the proof he is able to produce against one so accused is or is not sufficient to justify his conviction. And it is equally a mistake for such an officer to suppose that it is proper for him to present to the jury anything but strictly legal evidence in support of the charge, or that it is within the sphere of legitimate argument to prejudice the standing of the accused in the minds of those who are to determine an issue so serious to him by insinuating in the course of his address that some fact bearing strongly against the accused which has not been proved by proper evidence in reality exists. This court has on a number of previous occasions in a number of cases, notably in People v. Hail, 25 Cal. App. 342, 143 Pac. 803, condemned such practice.

In the present case, however, as is stated in the former opinion, there is no such record as justifies us in reviewing the point that the special prosecutor was guilty of misconduct in referring to a matter in his argument which, it is claimed, was not brought into the case through the evidence. As explained in the former opinion, all that the record shows is that a controversy arose during the course of the prosecutor's argument as to whether it was conceded by counsel representing the people that the court reporter had made a mistake in reporting that the defendant had testified that he shook hands with the witness Love at the lumber yard, counsel for the defendant claiming that such concession had been made and that the mistake so made by the reporter had been corrected before the argument of the case was begun. Nowhere else in the record is it made to appear that a correction of the defendant's testimony in the particular referred to was made, or that there was any suggestion by counsel that the reporter had made a mistake in any respect or particular in reporting his testimony. The prosecutor, when interrupted, did not admit that any such mistake had been conceded or that a correction of any such mistake had been made. He simply replied to the interruption, "If you didn't like the record, why didn't you correct it?" from which observation, and from the fact that he did not admit that a mistake in defendant's testimony had been conceded, or that any such mistake had been corrected, we felt justified in declaring, as we did declare in the former opinion, but which declaration counsel say we were not warranted by the record in making, that the special prosecutor "in effect insisted that the defendant did testify that Suey shook hands with Love, and that the record disclosed that he so testified," etc.

As above stated in the outset hereof, the learned attorney, as always he does, makes a forceful plea for a rehearing; but we do not thus feel persuaded that the conclusion we arrived at upon each of the points urged for a reversal, and from which conclusion necessarily followed the final result of the consideration of the record by this court, is erroneous.

The petition is denied.

PEOPLE v. LEE GOW et al. (Cr. 427.)

1. HOMICIDE ⊂⊃234(1) — MURDER — IDENTITY.

In a prosecution for murder in the first degree, evidence held to identify defendants as the murderers.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1035(5) — APPEAL — COMPETENCY OF JURORS—WAIVER.

In a murder trial, where a juror stated that he did not understand the instructions, defendants waived his incompetency by remaining silent, failing to request permission to question the juror or to ask that the jury be polled, and first seriously objecting thereto in the brief.

3. WITNESSES ⊂⊃290—REDIRECT EXAMINATION—REPETITION OF QUESTIONS.

In a prosecution for murder, it was not error to sustain the district attorney's objection to a question, on redirect examination, as to why witness fixed a certain date when such question had been asked and answered on cross-examination.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃304(1)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—DEATH OF COUNSEL.

The appellate court will not take judicial notice of the death of counsel for appellants, subsequent to the trial and before the hearing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Lee Gow and Chow Soon were convicted of murder in the first degree, and, from the judgment and denial of a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

George E. Gardner, of Oroville, George J. McDonough, of Oakland, Danna P. Eicke, of Stockton, and Dion R. Holm, of San Francisco, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. The defendants were convicted of murder in the first degree, and the jury fixed the punishment at imprisonment for life. The appeal is from the judgment and the order denying a motion for a new trial. That a foul murder was committed is not disputed. It was deliberate, premeditated, and malicious. It was one of a series of bloody episodes that attended what is known as a "tong war" between rival societies of Chinese.

[1] The principal contention in the case is in reference to the defense of "alibi," upon which appellants relied. It must be admitted that their claim in that regard was strongly supported. Not only Chinese witnesses, but several Caucasians, including prominent members of the police force of the city of Stockton, testified positively that the defendants were in said city on the very day and at the very hour when the offense was committed near Gridley in the county of Butte. Their testimony was entirely inconsistent with the theory of the guilt of the defendants, as the time of the murder was definitely fixed. But the jury, probably believing that some of the witnesses were mistaken and that others were falsifying, rejected their said statements, and based their verdict upon the evidence offered by the people. We can readily understand how the testimony in support of the "alibi" might have led the jury to acquit the defendants; but, after a careful reading of the entire record, we are compelled to say that there is abundant evidence of the identification of these men as the murderers of the deceased, and that under the familiar rule we are not permitted to hold that the verdict is unsupported. Many witnesses, including white men, testified unreservedly that the defendants were in the vicinity of the scene of the crime at or near the time it was committed, and one Chinese testified unequivocally that he was at the home of the deceased and witnessed the perpetration of the deed. His testimony, if fully credited, compels the conclusion that the crime was deliberate murder and that the defendants committed it. Nor can it be accepted for a moment that the testimony of these witnesses for the people is inherently improbable. Of course, the possibility of a mistake as to the identification of an individual under such circumstances is ever present, and innocent men may be unjustly convicted; but it is hardly necessary to add that the accuracy of the memory of the witnesses as to the identification of the parties, and the disposition of said witnesses to tell the truth, were considerations entirely for the determination of the jury.

Of course, it is plain that, in a criminal case, the verdict must be unanimous; but there is no ground for holding that the requirement was violated herein. Such contention, however, is made in view of a certain colloquy that occurred between the judge and the jurors after the case had been submitted but before a verdict had been reached. A juror, Mr. Beck, asked this question:

"When these jurors swore to try this case by the law and the evidence, did it imply the unwritten law as well?"

The court answered:

"By consent of the defendants I state this: All of the law by which you will be governed in this case is contained in the instructions given you here by the court. The court will now read all the instructions again if you desire."

Mr. Beck then said:

"If I take it right, then, it implied the unwritten law because it did not state that it was only the written law. Is that right, your honor?"

The transcript proceeds:

"The Court (to reporter): 'Read the statement again.' (At this time the reporter reads the statement again.) Mr. Beck. We were asked if we would try the case by the law and the evidence. Why didn't they give us those instructions at the beginning of the case so we could know if the unwritten law was not implied."

The answer clearly implies that his delusion as to the unwritten law had been allayed by the repetition of the statement of the court, but he was disposed to criticize the procedure as to the time of giving the instructions. But, manifestly, his opinion as to that matter is of no moment here, and it does not constitute a cause of complaint by appellants. The court then asked each of the jurors if he desired the instructions to be read again. They all said no, some of them supplementing their answers with the explanation: "I understand them." Mr. Beck, however answered: "No, I don't understand them." Finally, as to this the record shows:

"The Court: 'Do you all understand that these were the instructions that I read to you at the close of the trial? This is the close of the case. You may retire to your room.' (At this time the jurors retire to their jury room.)"

[2] If appellants were dissatisfied with the situation, they should have manifested it in the proper manner. They should have requested permission to question the juror further to ascertain the extent of his misunderstanding of the instructions that he might be enlightened, but they were apparently content and made no objection to the further consideration of the case by said juror. Indeed, when the jury returned with a verdict of conviction, appellants were mute and did not even ask that the jurors be polled. Their conduct signified an acquiescence in the course pursued, and they waived all privilege thereafter to urge the incompetency of the said juror. It may be added that this consideration was not presented at all on the motion for a new trial, and seems not to have been regarded seriously by appellants until they filed their brief in this court.

Moreover, some of the instructions given were quite complicated and contained technical expressions that would not be easily understood by the lay mind. These were not essential to a proper determination of the cause by the jury, and we have a right to assume that such portion of the charge was what the juror had in mind in such statement. Besides, we must presume that the other jurors were able to explain the instructions to the satisfaction of Mr. Beck, and that during the four hours they were deliberating after returning again, they succeeded in removing any misapprehension, at least as to the material portions of law involved.

[3] It is claimed that the court erred in sustaining the district attorney's objection to the question asked on redirect examination of witness Lawrence Moore: "Is there any thing that fixes this particular date in your memory, Mr. Moore?" The witness had testified on direct examination that he saw the defendants on March 6th at about 10 minutes after 12 o'clock noon at 131 South Hunter street, Stockton. On cross-examination, the district attorney asked the witness questions as to his memory of different times and places, when and where he had seen the defendants, the object being, of course, to discredit his testimony as to this particular date, and to leave the impression on the minds of the jury that it was impossible for the witness to be certain that he saw the defendants on March 6th, as he claimed. Appellants indulge in an interesting discussion of the scope and purpose of redirect examination, quoting from section 871 of volume 5 of Jones' Commentaries on Evidence. We agree generally with what is stated by counsel as to the admissibility of such explanation. And it may be added that the court subsequently allowed similar questions addressed to the other witnesses. However, the ruling here was clearly without prejudice, since the witness had answered the question on cross-examination. The district attorney asked him, "How do you fix the time in your mind?" and he answered, "I hired a boat to him on that day." He went on to explain that he hired the boat to Chew Chung, and a memorandum was made of it, and the defendants were present, and "that is why I remember it." If there had been any other circumstance to aid his memory, he had ample opportunity to state it. The repetition of his answer to the question would have added nothing to the force and effect of his testimony.

One of the most singular points made by appellants is stated by them as follows:

"We now approach the third point upon which we claim reversal should be granted. George McDonough, Esq., leading counsel for the defense, was mentally unfit to conduct a trial such as this, or, in fact, any other trial. It is regrettable, indeed, that we are forced to call the court's attention to the fact, but we feel justified in doing so because of the gravity of the offense with which Lee Gow and Chow Soon are charged. George J. McDonough, a man of wide experience in the legal profession, unfortunately met with reverses, and as an officer of this court it is believed your honors will take judicial notice of the fact that he committed suicide about one month after these appellants were convicted."

[4] It can hardly be seriously argued that we can take judicial notice of Mr. McDonough's death. But, aside from that, an insurmountable objection to our attaching any importance to this contention is found in the fact that there is no evidence whatever in the record that Mr. McDonough was incompetent. As far as we can determine from a reading of the transcript, he seemed quite capable of protecting the interest of his clients. We may add that two other attorneys were associated with him, and neither of them nor the judge of the court, apparently, discovered anything in the conduct of said attorney to create an impression that he was mentally unbalanced.

In the foregoing we have covered all the contentions made by appellants, and it must be plain that no sufficient reason has been advanced for an interference with the verdict of the jury.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

WILHELM v. ROBERTSON et al.

(Civ. 2402.)

1. EVIDENCE ⟸353(14)—ADMISSIBILITY—AMBIGUOUS DEEDS.

In action to quiet title to lot numbered "18," where deeds referred to map containing a lot so numbered, the deeds were not inadmissible, as ambiguous, merely because some lots had been subdivided and contained the number "18," followed by a further designation of the original lot.

2. MORTGAGES ⟸354 — NOTICE — EFFECT OF DEATH OF TRUSTEE.

Where the trustees under trust deed gave due notice of sale on default, that one of them died before the sale, which was consummated on the day set, did not invalidate the deed under such sale for insufficient notice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Action by J. H. Wilhelm against May J. Robertson and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Keys & Harlan, of San Rafael, for appellant.

Thomas P. Boyd, of San Rafael, and O. F. Meldon, of Sausalito, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. This is an action to quiet title to a certain parcel of land situated in the county of Marin.

The record discloses the following facts: On June 14, 1904, plaintiff purchased from the Tamalpais Land & Water Company a certain lot of land which is the subject of this controversy. On the 25th day of February, 1915, he executed a deed of trust, conveying the same to A. W. Foster, Jr., and M. T. Freitas, as security for the payment of a certain indebtedness referred to in the deed of trust. In this conveyance the plaintiff used precisely the same description as that contained in the deed under which he acquired the property. Having failed to pay his indebtedness, one of the trustees, under the power conferred in the trust deed, sold the property in question to defendant May J. Robertson. Thereafter the plaintiff brought this action to quiet title to the property. Judgment went for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

As ground for reversal it is the claim of plaintiff that certain deeds offered in evidence to defeat his title were inadmissible for that purpose, for the reason that the description of the property therein recited was ambiguous and should not have been considered in establishing defendant's title. He further claims that the deed signed by one of the trustees which purported to convey this title to defendant, May J. Robertson, was void because of a lack of proper notice of sale.

Under the pleadings it was admitted that plaintiff was the owner and in possession of the property on the 8th day of June, 1915. For the purpose of identifying the property and establishing his case, plaintiff at the trial introduced in evidence a map of the Tamalpais Land & Water Company, from which it appears that the property described in the complaint is designated thereon by the figures "18." After the introduction of this map plaintiff testified that he had not conveyed the property, and rested his case. Thereupon the defendants, for the purpose of establishing their title, offered in evidence a deed of trust from plaintiff and his wife, as grantors, to A. W. Foster, Jr., and M. T. Freitas, given to secure a certain indebtedness. In this deed the property was described as lot 18 as delineated on the map referred to. For the purpose of explaining which lot 18 was meant by the description in the trust deed, the defendants offered in evidence the deed from the Tamalpais Land & Water Company to plaintiff, purporting to convey "lot number eighteen (18)" as laid down on the company's map. Defendants also called the plaintiff, who testified that the parcel of land identified was the only land he owned in that vicinity. Defendants further offered in evidence a deed from M. T. Freitas, as surviving trustee under the trust deed, to defendant May J. Robertson, being the deed under which defendants claim title, wherein the property conveyed is described in the same manner as in the conveyance from the company to plaintiff. The introduction of these various deeds was objected to upon the ground that the description of the property contained therein was ambiguous, for the reason that the map referred to contained four different and distinct lots numbered 18, any one of which, it is claimed, fits the description in the several conveyances.

[1] We are of the opinion that the deeds were properly admitted. From the map of the company, referred to in the several deeds, it appears that a large tract of land had been divided into 33 blocks or parcels, numbered from 1 to 33, inclusive. Six of these parcels, viz. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, were again subdivided into smaller parcels, containing 18 or more small subdivisions, which are designated upon the map by consecutive numbers. Four of these blocks as subdivided contain a lot numbered "18." The remaining blocks, up to and including block 18, are not so subdivided. It is under these conditions that plaintiff contends that the deeds mentioned were improperly introduced to defeat plaintiff's title, for the alleged reason that they all contain a description which is a perfect example of a patent ambiguity, and were, so plaintiff claims, wrongfully considered in establishing defendants' title to the property, and that the findings based thereon that the defendant is the owner are not supported by the evidence. It is conceded by respondents that, where a description in a deed equally applies to two or more parcels, there is a patent ambiguity; but it is insisted that the description here involved does not apply to any other lot shown on the map of the Tamalpais Land & Water Company, and we are of that opinion.

The map to which reference is made contains only one parcel of land designated as "18." The parcels which are subdivided into smaller lots or tracts, and which contain a lot or parcel designated by such number, bear the further and additional designation of the number of the larger parcels as subdivided. The tract in question is designated by the single number (18), and its description by such designation does not apply to any other lot upon the map. Aside from any other question, the description being sufficient to put plaintiff into possession, it ought to be sufficient to dispossess him.

[2] The further contention that the deed purporting to convey title to respondent May J. Robertson is void for lack of proper notice is without merit. When plaintiff failed to pay his indebtedness, a notice of sale was given by both trustees. It is conceded that the notice up to this time was a proper one. Subsequent to the giving of the notice, however, but before sale, one of the trustees died; but the sale was made on the day so fixed, by the surviving trustee, without further notice, and it is for this reason that the deed given thereunder is claimed to be void. The trust deed contained a specific covenant to the effect that in the event of default the trustees or the survivor of them might execute the trust and sell the property. The death of the cotrustee in no manner affected the notice, or prevented the survivor from executing the powers conferred upon him under the covenants of the deed.

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

PATTERSON v. CHAPMAN et al. (two cases).
(S. F. 7900, 7901.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 4, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS ⊜334—PLEADING—COMPLAINT—UNSEALED INSTRUMENT—VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.

Since Civ. Code, § 1614, declares that "a written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration," testator's unsealed agreement evidencing an obligation to pay an amount in money or property after his death may be pleaded, without alleging a valuable consideration.

2. WILLS ⊜89—NOTE OR WILL.

Where an instrument, whether negotiable or not, and whether payable in money or property, acknowledges a present debt to another, it creates a present obligation, and is not a voluntary gift without consideration, and hence testamentary in character, though it contains a provision that it was not to be discharged until after death.

3. CONTRACTS ⊜4 — ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DEBT—IMPLIED PROMISE TO PAY.

Where an instrument by which obligor acknowledged an indebtedness contains no express promise to pay, the law implies such promise.

Wilbur, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. H. Waste, Judge.

Two actions by Etta I. Patterson against M. C. Chapman and others, executors of the estate of Wm. E. Dargie, deceased. Judgments in each case for the defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Judgments reversed.

McClanahan & Derby and Peter F. Dunne, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley and Eugene E. Trefethen, all of Oakland, and Stanley M. Moore, of San Francisco (Edgar D. Peixotto, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In these two appeals from judgments entered in favor of the defendants the plaintiff attacks the rulings of the court sustaining general demurrers to the complaints without leave to amend.

The question involved in each case is the same.

It appears from the complaints that William E. Dargie made, executed and delivered to plaintiff an instrument in writing, a copy of which as set out therein is as follows:

"Oakland, Jan. 16—08.

"For value received I hereby instruct the administrator of my estate to pay to Miss Etta Patterson, formerly of Edgewood, Cal., the sum of fifty thousand dollars, within one year from the date of my death—or two years at the least. Interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum is to be paid on said sum, quarterly, till said amount is paid in full. Said fifty thousand dollars may be paid in real estate or stocks and bonds, which I may own at the time of my death, if cash cannot be paid without sacrificing my estate, but said stocks, bonds or real estate, must be the full value of cash at the date of delivery. I desire this request and order to be carried out promptly and without question of any kind. W. E. Dargie."

Dargie died testate on February 10, 1911, and thereafter plaintiff duly presented her claim based upon said instrument to the executors of his estate, by whom it was rejected.

[1] Some confusion of thought may arise if there is not kept constantly in mind the difference between the question of the sufficiency of the complaint as a pleading and the question of the sufficiency of the instrument as evidence of a valid contract or obligation for the payment of money. At common law a seal was necessary in order to create the presumption that an executory contract was founded upon a valuable consideration, and therefore, if it was not under seal, the rule of pleading was that the complaint or declaration must allege that the contract was executed for a valuable consideration. Our Civil Code declares that "a written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration." Section 1614. Hence it follows that in this state, in an action upon an unsealed written instrument as evidence of an obligation to pay money, the common-law rule applicable to sealed instruments prevails and it is not necessary to make the additional allegation that it was made for a valuable consideration. Henke v. Eureka Endowment Ass'n, 100 Cal. 429, 34 Pac. 1089; Williams v. Hall, 79 Cal. 606, 21 Pac. 965. Hence the complaints are not rendered bad because of the failure to make such allegation.

[2] The sole question presented for determination is whether or not the writing upon which plaintiff relies is in form and character testamentary as held by the trial court, or as claimed by appellant it is a contract by virtue of the execution and delivery of which Dargie in his lifetime created an obligation to be discharged after his death by his executors.

If the instrument created a debitum in præsenti, an obligation existing in the lifetime of the obligor, the fact that it was not to be discharged until after Dargie's death renders it none the less enforceable as a demand against his estate. 8 Cyc. 1007. "Where a testator has not, in a paper payable post mortem, recognized himself either by intendment, or language, as under legal indebtedness to the party in whose favor it is made, such instrument is without consideration, purely voluntary, and testamentary in its character." Kirkpatrick v. Pyle, 6 Houst. (Del.) 569. Any memorandum in writing, however, regardless of its form, and whether payable in money or specific property, whereby a debt is acknowledged by one as owing to another to whom the memorandum is delivered is sufficient to create such obligation. "Any words which prove a man to be a debtor will charge him with the payment of the money." Cover v. Stem, 67 Md. 449, 10 Atl. 231, 1 Am. St. Rep. 406. Hence, conceding the document in question is not a negotiable instrument, draft, check, or bill of exchange, as claimed by respondent, the want of such character is immaterial if terms are employed therein which at the time of its execution created a debitum in præsenti. Banker v. Coons, 40 App. Div. 572, 58 N. Y. Supp. 47; Robbins v. Robbins' Estate, 175 Mo. App. 609, 158 S. W. 400; Kirkpatrick v. Pyle, supra.

[3] It is true the instrument contains no express promise to pay, but where the existence of an indebtedness based upon consideration is acknowledged the law implies a promise to pay it (Ward v. Bush, 59 N. J. Eq. 144, 45 Atl. 534), and the fact that payment is postponed until after the death of the party so acknowledging it is immaterial (Robbins v. Robbins' Estate, supra; Hegeman v. Moon, 131 N. Y. 462, 30 N. E. 487).

The instrument being signed by Dargie, every statement therein must be considered as his declaration and given effect accordingly. In the absence of any defense on the ground of fraud, mistake, or want of consideration, each declaration therein made, or necessarily implied from its language, must be given the full effect that the meaning carries. The instrument, therefore, contains a declaration by Dargie that in his lifetime, and before or at the time of its execution, he had received from the plaintiff something of value, a value which he considered equal to $50,000, and that for that consideration his executors are ordered and directed to pay to the plaintiff that sum in the manner and at the time specified. This precludes the idea of a gift to her. Its meaning is that he is ordering the payment to be made to her as a return for the value which he had received from her. This makes it a payment or recompense, not a gift. Furthermore, as it was an admission by him that in his lifetime he had received from her that value, not as a gift or as payment of any obligation to him, this fact alone, without any order to his executors to pay, would, in law, raise an implied promise by him to pay her for the benefit so received, and would be a sufficient foundation for a claim against the estate for such value. Cover v. Stem, supra. The only effect of the order, it having been accepted by her, is to merge the implied contract, and to modify it, so that she is thereby obliged to accept payment at the time and in the manner therein provided.

An examination of the authorities cited by respondent, chief among which is that of Cover v. Stem, supra, discloses that the instruments under consideration and constituting the subjects of the actions contained no promise and no words which by intendment or otherwise could be construed as acknowledging an indebtedness. Thus, in Cover v. Stem, supra, Moore v. Stephens, 97 Ind. 271, Pena v. New Orleans, 13 La. Ann. 86, 71 Am. Dec. 506, and other like cases, it was held that in the absence of a promise, and without recital or acknowledgment of consideration, an instrument containing a mere direction to the executors to pay the sum mentioned was testamentary in character. And to like effect are the cases in this state, namely, Wisler v. Tomb, 169 Cal. 382, 146 Pac. 876, and Tracy v. Alvord, 118 Cal. 655, 50 Pac. 757, both of which involved notes shown to have been given without consideration, and in the first of which such fact appeared from the complaint. On the other hand, in the cases of Banker v. Coons, supra, Robbins v. Robbins' Estate, supra, Kirkpatrick v. Pyle, supra, Hatch v. Gillette, 8 App. Div. 605, 40 N. Y. Supp. 1016, and Ward v. Bush, supra, where the instruments were executed under seal, but in addition to the fact presumed therefrom, as in the case at bar, contained the words, "For value received," or those of like import, it was held they created a debitum in præsenti, which obligation being established, the law implied a promise to pay it.

The judgments are reversed.

MACDONALD v. ROETH et al. (two cases). (S. F. 7758, 7777.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 4, 1918.)

1. FRAUD ⊂⊃16—SALES OF STOCK—FALSE REPRESENTATIONS—SUMMARY OF REPORT.

Sellers of bank stock held to have practiced deceit in the sale by displaying summary of report to the comptroller, which failed to disclose a large amount of uncollectable debts disclosed by the full report.

2. FRAUD ⊂⊃59(3)—SALES OF STOCK—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—PURCHASE FROM INNOCENT PARTY.

Where defendants misrepresented value of bank stock, and plaintiff, relying on the representations, bought stock from a third person, the measure of damages was the difference between the actual value of the stock and the amount paid, and not the difference between the value of the stock and what its value would have been had it been of the value represented; since, as to such stock, plaintiff had no bargain with defendants to the benefit of which he was entitled.

[1] Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 139 Cal. xix.

In Bank. Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by A. S. Macdonald against George Roeth and George D. Gray. From the judgment rendered, defendants appeal, and plaintiff also appeals. Judgment affirmed on both appeals.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro and A. D. Plaw, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, and W. F. Williamson, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. The case out of which these two appeals arose was before this court upon a previous trial and appeal. Macdonald v. De Fremery et al., 168 Cal. 189, 142 Pac. 73. The judgment of the court upon the first trial of the cause was therein reversed, whereupon the cause was retried and a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff, from which these two appeals were taken to this court; and, the cause having been transferred to the District Court of Appeal, both appeals were therein heard together and a decision rendered wherein the judgment, in so far as it was assailed by the defendants upon their appeal, was affirmed, while as to the appeal prosecuted by the plaintiff the judgment was reversed and the cause remanded to the trial court with directions to enter judgment in plaintiff's favor for a much larger sum than the trial court had awarded him. Upon the defendants' petition for a rehearing, the cause was transferred to this court for decision.

The facts of the case, in so far as they were developed at the first trial thereof, are fully and correctly set forth in our decision upon the former appeal (Macdonald v. De Fremery et al., supra) and need not be restated here; and the law relating to the state of facts as therein set forth was also fully and correctly stated in that decision and hence does not require restatement upon these appeals. This court reversed the judgment of the trial court involved in that appeal on account of the incompleteness, evasiveness, and contradictoriness of some of the material findings as well as the absence of other material findings. The findings thus criticized as found wanting upon the first trial of the cause had special reference to the nature of the deceit and of the false statements and representations alleged to have been made use of by the defendants to induce the plaintiff's purchase of the stock of the bank in question. After certain amendments to the pleadings suggested by the terms of that decision, the cause was retried, at which trial the facts educed at the former trial were again presented, and there was also introduced evidence of certain further facts bearing upon the alleged deceit and false statements and representations which, according to the plaintiff's averments, had induced the purchase by him from the defendants of 54 shares of the stock of said bank and the further purchase by him of 50 shares of a new issue of the stock thereof and which also induced the purchase by him of 270 shares of such stock from one Perine, for all of which stock he was alleged to have paid the par value of $100 per share. The trial court upon these proofs made findings in the plaintiff's favor upon the issue of deceit and of the reliance of the plaintiff upon the false statements of the defendants as to the true condition of the affairs of the bank and value of its stock in respect to his purchases of stock as to both the 104 shares thereof acquired directly from or through the defendants, and for which he paid in money and property the par value of $100 per share, and also as to the transaction whereby the plaintiff acquired 270 shares of such stock from Perine. As to the latter transaction, the court found that the plaintiff had given in exchange for the said Perine stock certain real and personal property upon which at the time of such transfer he had placed a valuation of $27,000, the equivalent of the par value of said stock, but which property the court found to have had at said time an actual value of but $18,000. The court further found that the actual value of the stock of said bank at the time of both of the foregoing transactions was $35 per share. Based upon these findings of fact, the court rendered its judgment wherein it awarded the plaintiff damages as a result of the first of the foregoing transactions in the sum of $6,760, which would be the difference between what the 104 shares of the stock of said bank was actually worth at the time thereof and what the plaintiff actually paid for that stock; and which would also represent the difference between the actual value of said stock and the value which said stock would have had if the statements and representations of the defendants as to the value of said stock had been true. As to the transaction of the plaintiff in respect to the Perine stock, the trial court by its judgment awarded the plaintiff damages in the sum of $8,985, which amount represented the difference between the sum of $9,450, the actual value of the Perine stock, and the sum of $18,435, which the court had found the properties which had been given by said plaintiff to said Perine for said stock to have been actually worth. These two amounts of damage aggregated the sum of $15,745, for which judgment was given by the trial court.

From this judgment these two appeals have been taken to this court, one by the defendants, urging that certain material findings of the trial court, chiefly relating to the element of the defendants' deceit, were unsupported by the evidence and hence that the judgment should be reversed; and one by the plaintiff, insisting that the judgment, while correct in so far as it was founded upon the sufficiency of the evidence, and findings showing deceit, was for an insufficient sum in respect to the plaintiff's damages suffered thereby, and that in that respect the amount of damages awarded by the trial court should be increased upon appeal. These appeals having been transferred to the District Court of Appeal of the First District for hearing and decision, that tribunal affirmed the judgment upon the defendant's appeal, but upon the plaintiff's appeal determined that he was entitled to have the amount of his judgment for damages increased from $15,745 to $24,310, and so concluding returned the case to the trial court with instructions to increase the amount of the judgment accordingly. In its decision the District Court of Appeal sustained the plaintiff's contention as to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence as supporting the findings and judgment showing deceit. With that portion of its decision which deals with that phase of these appeals this court is in accord, and it hereby adopts that portion of the decision of the said court touching that subject, which reads as follows:

"Two material findings—both challenged as unsupported by the evidence—are the basis of the judgment in favor of plaintiff from which this appeal is prosecuted. They are that defendants represented to plaintiff that the stock of the bank when the plaintiff bought it was worth $100 per share, and that the report of the bank's condition made to the 'Comptroller on May 14, 1908,' was a true statement of the bank's condition. The published summary of this report was handed to the plaintiff by the defendants in front of the bank when they were endeavoring to induce him to invest in its stock. It transpired at this trial—as it apparently did not at the first trial—that the report so handed to plaintiff was not the full report made to the comptroller, but only a published summary thereof. This summary showed the amounts at which loans, discounts, bonds, securities, etc., were carried on the bank's books, but did not disclose the bad debts or suspended and overdue paper, nor was the summary required to do so. The report was made on the blanks furnished by the comptroller; and if the whole report had been shown Macdonald he would have found listed therein bad debts and suspended and overdue paper amounting to $194,663.12. When the published summary alone was shown him, he was told that it showed the real condition of the bank at the date of the report, and that the bank's condition had not been changed since that report had been presented. He was also told that this summary was the only report that the defendants had of the bank. They actually had at the time in the bank a copy of the entire report made to the comptroller and the Knight report referred to in the Supreme Court's opinion, and also Gray's estimate of the value of the bank's assets. The Knight report and this estimate showed that the published summary did not indicate the bank's real condition.

[1] "In this state of the case, the appellants contend that they practiced no deceit upon Macdonald by so showing him the summary of this report, because the summary under the law was not required to show anything except the value of the bank's assets as carried on the books of the bank.

"With this contention, under the facts of this case, we are unable to agree. The trial court was justified in finding that, when the summary was presented to Macdonald with the statement that it was the only report of the condition of the bank which the defendants had, he was justified in believing that the fragmentary summary, although strictly legal so far as its publication was concerned, was a statement of the real condition of the bank and not a statement of the showing made by its books. They knew perfectly that this summary did not represent the real financial condition of this bank; and they also knew that Macdonald understood them to represent that the actual value of the bank's stock was $100 a share, and that the actual value of its assets was that shown by the summary. 'The reliance which the plaintiff was entitled to place upon this report, then, was a reliance that the report was a true statement of the bank's financial condition, and not a mere transcript of the condition of the bank as shown upon its books.' This statement of the Supreme Court in the reported case is still applicable to this case, even in view of the additional facts developed at the second trial, as is also the following statement: 'Deceit may be negative as well as affirmative. It may consist in the suppression of that which it is one's duty to declare as well as by the declaration of that which is false. If it be so, that defendants did not believe and could not have believed that the report contained a true statement of the bank's financial condition, their failure to disclose this fact to the plaintiff in handing him the report forms the foundation for an action for deceit under the principle above stated. Civ. Code, § 1710.'

"It seems to us that this statement applies with greater force in view of the fact that had the entire report, which was a few feet away in the bank, been shown Macdonald instead of the published summary the actual financial condition of the institution would have been disclosed to him, or he would at least have been placed upon notice as to its actual financial condition.

"We are satisfied that the evidence sustains the finding as to the misrepresentation by the defendants to the plaintiff of the true condition of the bank; and also as to the fact that they represented the stock to be worth $100 a share when it was worth only about $35 per share.

"As to the question whether the latter representation was one of fact or opinion, we think that point settled by the Supreme Court in its opinion referred to."

The point of departure between the views of this court and those of the District Court of Appeal expressed in that portion of its opinion which is not above quoted is as to the proper rule for the admeasurement of the plaintiff's damages to be applied to each of the two transactions out of which the plaintiff's right to damages arose. As to the transaction directly with the defendants for the purchase by plaintiff of the 54 shares of their stock in said bank and also as to the acquisition by him of 50 additional shares of the new issue of stock therein, it is not necessary to draw the distinction which is drawn in the case of Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 507, 143 Pac. 729, between the rule of damages in this class of cases which has been adopted in this state and that which obtains in the federal courts and in certain other state jurisdictions, for whichever rule was adopted as applicable to that branch of this case the result would be the same, since under either rule the plaintiff would be entitled to a recovery in damages of the difference between what the stock was actually worth and that which it would have been worth if the defendants' representations had been true, since the value which the defendants represented said stock to have and the amount which he paid for it were identical. In the case of Hines v. Brode, supra, this court took pains to state that the rule of damages in actions founded upon deceit which had been theretofore adopted in this state, and by which a wronged plaintiff would be entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of the purchased property and its value had the property been as represented, and that the measure of such recovery was not affected by the price actually paid, "is the extreme rule and one that should only be applied in clear cases and upon just terms." As to the first transaction, therefore, upon which the plaintiff predicates his right of recovery, viz., the transaction directly with the defendants for the purchase from or through them of the 54 shares of their stock and of the 50 shares of the new issue of the stock of said bank, we are of the opinion that, measured by either rule of damages, the judgment of the trial court was correct in affixing the sum of $6,760 as the proper amount of the plaintiff's recovery on account of that transaction.

[2] With respect to the transaction involving the purchase by the plaintiff of the Perine stock, the District Court of Appeal undertook to apply also to that transaction the rule of damages reiterated in the case of Hines v. Brode, supra, and in the earlier cases from which it was taken. In so doing we think the District Court of Appeal was in error, and that its action in so doing had the effect of extending said rule beyond the limits to which, as above shown, it was expressly meant to be confined. In the case of Hines v. Brode, supra, and in certain of the earlier cases referred to therein, the action involved the immediate transaction between the parties with direct inducement to which the false statements and representations were made, and the court in such cases held that the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of his bargain, and hence should recover the difference between what the purchased property was actually worth and what it would have been worth had the false representations as to its value been true, regardless of the price paid. But in the case at bar and with respect to the purchase by plaintiff of the Perine stock the state of facts which would have justified the application of this rule of damages did not exist. The transaction for the purchase of the Perine stock was not one to which the defendants directly or indirectly were parties. They had no knowledge nor any connection as parties with the plaintiff's transaction with Perine, nor does the evidence anywhere disclose, nor do the findings of the court show, that whatever false representations were made by them to the plaintiff were made with any direct intent to induce the purchase by the plaintiff of the Perine stock. As to these defendants, therefore, in respect to this particular transaction, he had no bargain to the benefit of which he was entitled. It is true that in respect to the reports which, under section 5211 of the National Bank Act, are to be made periodically by national banks to the Comptroller of the Currency, it has been held that such reports as to the financial condition of such banks are not made solely for the information of the Comptroller or of the stockholders and depositors of the bank, but are intended also to afford public information to all persons having or contemplating business transactions into which the condition of the bank enters as a material fact (Macdonald v. De Fremery, supra; Stuart v. Staplehurst, 57 Neb. 569, 78 N. W. 298; Gerner v. Yates, 61 Neb. 100, 84 N. W. 596; Hindman v. First Nat. Bank, 112 Fed. 931, 50 C. C. A. 623, 57 L. R. A. 108); and consistent with this holding it has been further held that the directors or other officers of such banks who join in the making of reports of this character by preparing or attesting the same, are liable for any material falsity which they may contain to persons who, in reliance upon such reports, are induced to deposit funds in the bank (Jones Nat. Bank v. Yates, 240 U. S. 541, 36 Sup. Ct. 429, 60 L. Ed. 788), or who purchase its stock (Gerner v. Mosher, 58 Neb. 135, 78 N. W. 384, 46 L. R. A. 244), or who lend money upon such stock as security (Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Thoms, 11 Ohio Dec. [Rep.] 632).

In all of the foregoing cases, however, and in many others in which damages arising out of the falsity of the statements contained in such official reports to the Comptroller of Currency were sought, both the federal and the state courts elsewhere have uniformly held that the rule of damages to be applied to this class of cases is one by which the measure of the plaintiff's damage is the difference between the actual value of the stock and the amount actually paid by him therefore in reliance upon the representation found to be false. In a transaction such as that involved in this phase of the instant case, viz., the purchase by plaintiff of the Perine stock, we are of the opinion that the rule of damages last above stated is the proper and just rule to be applied to that transaction, rather than the more extreme rule adopted in Hines v. Brode, supra, as applicable to the facts of that particular case. The trial court applied the correct rule to each of the transactions out of which the plaintiff's claim of damages arose and thereby reached the proper amount which the plaintiff as to each cause of action was entitled to recover.

As to both appeals, therefore, the judgment is affirmed.

179 Cal. 220

WIENKE et ux. v. SMITH et al. (ASH et al., Interveners). (S. F. 7635.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 4, 1918.)

1. ESTOPPEL ⊜110—WAIVER—NECESSITY OF PLEADING.

Waiver is an affirmative defense requiring the facts on which it claimed to be set up in the answer, and merely making it a ground of motion for nonsuit is not enough.

2. MORTGAGES ⊜408—DEFAULT IN INSTALLMENT—FORECLOSURE FOR ENTIRE AMOUNT—WAIVER OF RIGHT—ACCEPTANCE OF PORTION.

Acceptance, after maturity of an installment of mortgage debt, of a portion thereof, works no waiver of right given by mortgage to foreclose for entire amount on default in installment; the payments being pursuant to agreements collateral to the mortgage, requiring the mortgagors to turn over to the mortgagee all payments on account of sales of lots, and the mortgagee to accept them, and on payment in full for a lot to release it, and such agreements providing that they shall not affect the mortgage.

3. ESTOPPEL ⊜52—"WAIVER."

"Waiver" always rests on intent, and is the intentional relinquishment of a known right after knowledge of the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Waiver.]

4. MORTGAGES ⊜414—FORECLOSURE—CONDITION PRECEDENT — NOTICE—ACCELERATING DUE DATE.

Under provision of mortgage and secured note that on any default in payment of an installment the whole sum secured shall become due at mortgagee's option, prior notice of election is not a prerequisite to commencement of foreclosure suit.

5. MORTGAGES ⊜581(2) — FORECLOSURE—ATTORNEY'S FEES—DEMAND OR NOTICE BEFORE SUIT.

Under provision of mortgage for counsel fee of certain per cent. of debt due, if foreclosure suit be brought any time after default in payment of any installment, demand or notice before suit after default in installment is not necessary to liability for attorney's fees, which arises coincidentally with right to foreclose.

6. MORTGAGES ⊜581(7) — FORECLOSURE — JUDGMENT FOR COUNSEL FEES.

The mortgage providing that mortgagors and mortgaged property are hereby made liable for counsel fees, there is a right, not merely to personal judgment, but to foreclosure therefor.

7. MORTGAGES ⊜415(1) — FORECLOSURE — CONDITION PRECEDENT—COLLATERAL AGREEMENT.

Mortgagee before foreclosure need not collect all payments due on contracts of sale of lots assigned to him by mortgagor by collateral agreement, or terminate such contracts; such agreement providing that nothing in or arising from it shall be defense to foreclosure suit.

8. MORTGAGES ⊜491—FORECLOSURE OF VENDEES' RIGHTS.

All payments under contracts of sale of lots covered by mortgage being due at time of interlocutory decree, giving vendees 90 days in which to make payment, and receive deeds for their respective lots, making decree absolute at end of that time against those not paying is proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Mortgage foreclosure action by J. F. Wienke and wife against C. B. Smith and others. From judgment of foreclosure and an order denying a new trial, the named defendant and another, and William H. Ash and others, interveners, appeal. Affirmed.

J. E. Pemberton, Gavin McNab, and R. P. Henshall, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. N. Young, of Oakland, for appellants interveners.

Daniel A. Ryan, of San Francisco, Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, and J. J. Lermen, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The defendants C. B. and Julia Smith, and a number of persons who appeared as interveners during the pendency of the action, prosecute appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The complaint stated a cause of action to foreclose a mortgage upon lands described therein, given to secure a debt of $43,655.25, evidenced by a note executed by C. B. Smith and George O. Rich. The appellant Julia A. Smith is the wife of her codefendant C. B. Smith and is not otherwise interested in the action. The debt was payable in installments: $5,000 on May 1, 1911; $5,000 on March 1, 1912; $10,000 on March 1, 1913; and $23,655.25 on or before March 1, 1916. The note provided that—

"Upon any default being made in the payment of any installment, or in the payment of any interest, the whole amount of the principal sum then unpaid shall become due at the option of the holder hereof."

The mortgage contained a similar provision.

The first installment, due May 1, 1911, was paid. The action was begun on April 24, 1912. The complaint alleges that $3,112.15 had been paid on the $5,000 due March 1, 1912, and that the balance of that installment remained unpaid. The prayer was for the recovery of judgment for the entire amount of the promissory note remaining unpaid, and for the foreclosure and sale of the property mortgaged. The final judgment was that the plaintiffs recover of Smith and Rich $43,685.28, and for the foreclosure and sale of the property then remaining subject to the mortgage, for the purpose of paying said sum and costs.

In March, 1906, Wienke and wife, being the owners of the land in controversy, made a contract with C. B. Smith, providing that the land should be subdivided into lots, and should be sold by Smith, who, after deducting commissions, should pay the proceeds to Wienke and wife, until they had received $30,000, or that Smith might pay them $30,000 at any time within five years, and that upon the receipt of said sum Wienke and wife should execute a deed to Smith for an undivided one-half of the property remaining unsold. Sales were made by Smith under this contract from time to time, the price being made payable in installments, and the proceeds as collected were paid to Wienke. On January 5, 1911, said contract was canceled. Rich became interested with Smith, and several instruments, including the note and mortgage herein sued upon, were executed for the settlement of the transactions had. The other instruments were as follows: (1) A deed from Wienke and wife, conveying to Smith and Rich all the interest of the grantors in the property described in the contract of March, 1906; (2) an agreement whereby Smith and Rich assigned and transferred to the Wienkes all of the outstanding contracts for the sale of parcels of the land, as additional security for the payment of the mortgage debt. This agreement (described in the record as the "assignment") provided that Smith and Rich should collect the installments due under the contracts of purchase, and pay the amount thereof over to the Wienkes monthly; the sums so collected and turned over to be applied as payments on the note and mortgage. It provided, further, that nothing therein contained should in any way interfere with the terms and conditions of the mortgage, and that, in the event of any suit being brought upon the note to foreclose the mortgage, nothing contained in the agreement "or arising or resulting therefrom shall be any defense whatsoever to any action by said parties of the second part [Wienke and wife] to foreclose said mortgage or said mortgagors' right of redemption. It is further stipulated and agreed that in case of such action this contract, except as otherwise expressly provided herein, shall be considered only for the purpose of ascertaining how much money said parties of the second part received thereby, and in ascertaining the amount due said parties of the second part upon said promissory note." Only one further clause of this writing need here be mentioned, namely, one requiring Smith and Rich to pay all taxes on the land, and providing that, if they should fail so to do, Wienke and wife might pay the same and deduct the amount so paid from the first money afterwards received by them under the outstanding contracts of sale, and that to that extent such payments should not be applied on the mortgage debt. (3) On the same day, January 5, 1911, the Wienkes made a written agreement with Smith and Rich, providing for the release from the lien of the mortgage, upon payment of specified sums, of the various lots embraced in the mortgaged tract. We shall refer to this instrument as the "release agreement."

The answer of the defendants C. B. and Julia Smith does not deny—on the contrary, it expressly admits—the default alleged in the complaint. It sets up certain affirmative matter designed to show that payment of the installment due on March 1, 1912, was prevented by the acts of Wienke. The findings of the court are against this defense, and the appellants have not in their briefs questioned the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings in this regard. There is no plea that the plaintiffs waived the right given to them by the terms of the note and mortgage to declare the entire sum due for default in the payment of any installment. Nevertheless, it is contended that upon the facts shown in evidence the court below should have held that the plaintiffs had waived their right to foreclose for the entire sum named in the note. The evidence is substantially without dispute. The payments made on the mortgage debt consisted of collections made by Smith and Rich under the outstanding contracts for sales of lots, and turned over to the Wienkes in accordance with the provisions of the "assignment." Some of these payments were made by the lot purchasers direct to Wienke, instead of passing through the hands of Smith and Rich. The entire first installment of $5,000, due May 1, 1911, was paid. Of the $3,112.15 paid on the installment due March 1, 1912, the greater part had been paid prior to the date upon which the installment fell due. Between March 1, 1911, and April 24, 1912, the day the action was begun, sums amounting to several hundred dollars were paid to the plaintiffs pursuant to the contracts of purchase and the "assignment." A portion of these sums was properly applicable by the plaintiffs to their reimbursement for taxes which they had paid in October, 1911. There still remained in their hands, however, applicable to the payment of the principal of the note and mortgage, out of the moneys received after March 1, 1912, and before the commencement of the action, a small sum. The respondents maintain that it amounted to $47.50. The department opinion, heretofore filed herein, fixes it at $217.50. It is not important, for the purposes of the present discussion, to determine which of these figures is correct. The contention of the appellants Smith is that by accepting, after the maturity of the installment payable March 1, 1912, a portion of the sum then due, the plaintiffs waived their right to declare the entire sum of the note due for a default in the payment of such installment. They rely upon the rule declared in Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 295, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126, and similar cases, where it was held that under a contract of sale for a price payable in installments, with provision for a forfeiture for failure to pay any installment when due, time being made of the essence of the contract, the acceptance of a part of one installment after its maturity waives the right of the vendor to terminate the contract for that default. We may assume, for present purposes, that the rule is equally applicable to the foreclosure of a mortgage, where the sum due is payable in installments, and the note and mortgage give the payee the right to declare the principal sum due for default in the payment of any installment. But, so assuming, we think the appellants in this case are not entitled to the benefit of the rule for which they contend.

[1] In the first place, there was, as we have already pointed out, no plea of waiver. Waiver is an affirmative defense, and a defendant desiring to take advantage of it must set up in his answer the facts upon which he bases his claim. Hewitt v. Dean, 91 Cal. 5, 27 Pac. 423; Patten v. Pepper Hotel Co., 153 Cal. 460, 469, 96 Pac. 296. It is no answer to this point to say that the defendants made the asserted waiver a ground of motion for nonsuit. Their motion was denied, and we must assume that the court denied it, as it might properly have done, for the very reason that the pleadings laid no foundation for the attempted defense. The appellants Smith and wife did, it is true, offer to file an amended answer, but leave so to do was denied them, and it is not claimed that the court erred in this ruling.

[2, 3] But beyond the mere matter of pleading, we think the acceptance by the respondents of the sums paid them should not, under the circumstances of this case, be held to have worked a waiver of their right to declare the principal sum due. These sums were not paid and received in performance, solely of the obligation embodied in the note and mortgage. They were paid pursuant to the collateral agreement of even date (i. e., the "assignment"), whereby Smith and Rich were bound to turn over to the Wienkes, and the latter were bound to receive, all payments made by purchasers of lots under their contracts. The Wienkes had no right to refuse any such payments. Under the "release agreement," executed contemporaneously with the mortgage and the "assignment," they were required, upon payment in full for any lot, to release that lot from the lien of the mortgage. The holders of contracts were therefore interested in the transmittal to the Wienkes of all installments paid by them. Being under an obligation, arising from transactions outside of the note and mortgage, to receive such payments, the Wienkes cannot by such receipt be held to have waived their right to declare the principal sum due. "Waiver always rests upon intent. Waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right after knowledge of the facts." Alden v. Mayfield, 164 Cal. 6, 11, 127 Pac. 45, 48. It implies "the intentional forbearance to enforce a right" (id.), and necessarily, therefore, assumes the existence of an opportunity for choice between the relinquishment and the enforcement of the right. In this case the Wienkes were not in a position to elect whether to accept the payments or to refuse them. The "assignment" required them to accept the sums collected from lot purchasers, and there is no good ground, in reason and equity, for saying that by so accepting they manifested an intention to surrender the privilege given to them by the note and mortgage of declaring the entire principal sum due for default in the payment of an installment. This conclusion is fortified by the provisions of the contract of "assignment," already quoted, to the effect that nothing therein contained shall in any way affect the terms and conditions of the mortgage, or be any defense to an action of foreclosure, and that the contract shall be considered only for the purpose of ascertaining the amount due by Smith and Rich upon the note. These clauses clearly manifest the intention of the parties that the payments provided to be made under this agreement are not to affect the rights created by the note and mortgage.

The other points made by the appellants Smith are plainly without merit, and require only the briefest notice.

[4, 5] Both the note and the mortgage provided for the acceleration of the due date of the principal on default in the payment of any installment. The payees were not required, as a condition precedent to the institution of the action, to give notice of their election to declare the principal sum due. The commencement of the suit was a sufficient notice. Whitcher v. Webb, 44 Cal. 127; Hewitt v. Dean, 91 Cal. 5, 27 Pac. 423; Trinity Bank v. Haas, 151 Cal. 553, 91 Pac. 385. The mortgage provided for counsel fees of 5 per cent. of the debt due, if suit should be brought for the foreclosure of the mortgage, "at any time after default made in the payment of any of said installments." The liability to pay attorneys' fees arose coincidentally with the right to foreclose, and a prior demand or notice was no more essential with respect to counsel fees than it was with respect to the collection of the principal. The contrary contention is not supported by the cases cited by the appellants, all of which deal with an entirely different state of facts.

[6] It is asserted that there should have been merely a personal judgment for counsel fees, because, as is claimed, the obligation to pay such fees was not secured by the mortgage. The argument has no foundation in fact. The mortgage provides specifically that "the mortgagors and mortgaged property are hereby made liable to the mortgagees for such counsel fees." The instrument is not at all similar to that considered in Klokke v.

Escailler, 124 Cal. 297, 56 Pac. 1113, where, by the express terms of the mortgage, the lien did not cover counsel fees.

[7] The claim that the mortgagees were bound, before foreclosing, to collect all payments due under the contracts of purchase assigned to them, or to terminate such contracts, is sufficiently answered by the provisions of the "assignment" itself, which expressly provided that nothing contained in it or arising from it should be any defense to an action of foreclosure.

[8] The appellants make one further point, which also arises on the appeal of the interveners. The latter were holders of contracts under the agreement above mentioned between the plaintiffs and Smith. Upon the trial of the action their rights were fully investigated, the amount each one still owed upon the contracts was determined, and an interlocutory decree was made, giving those who had not forfeited their contracts the right to make full payment thereon and receive a deed conveying to them, respectively, the particular parcel purchased, free of the said mortgage lien, within 90 days after the date of said decree. This decree was made after all of the installments of the purchase money on said contracts had become due and payable, according to their terms. After the expiration of the 90 days prescribed by said interlocutory decree, a further hearing was had, the rights of those who had paid up in the meantime were adjusted and determined, some of them received deeds for their lots free of the mortgage, and as to the others the decree of foreclosure of the mortgage was made absolute. The decree deprived the interveners (and, a fortiori, the appellants Smith) of no substantial right. It was in effect the usual decree of a strict foreclosure of a vendee's right to purchase upon his failing to make the payments as provided in his contract.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

In re BOSELLY'S ESTATE. (S. F. 8738.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 4, 1918.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⊂=197—ALLOWANCE TO WIDOW—REDUCTION.

The court may from the filing, or at least the service, of application for modification, reduce allowance made to widow pending administration.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Frederic James Boselly, deceased. On petition of Violet Aline Holbo, allowance, pending administration, to Eugenie Susan Boselly, widow, was reduced, and the widow appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 175 Pac. 4.

Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. D. Lederman, of San Francisco (T. E. Powlicki, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Pending the administration of the estate of Frederic James Boselly, and after the return of the inventory, the court, on June 11, 1915, made an order, under section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure, granting the widow an allowance of $350 per month until the final distribution of the estate. On April 28, 1916, Violet Aline Holbo, a daughter of the decedent, and one of the beneficiaries under his will, filed a petition for the termination of the allowance granted by the order of June 11, 1915. The court set the matter for hearing, and directed that notice be given the widow by posting and by service upon her attorneys. Such notice was duly given, and, an amended petition having been filed, the widow, on June 15, 1916, filed her answer.

Hearings were had and continued from time to time and the court finally, on May 25, 1917, made its order reducing the allowance from $350 per month to $150 per month "for the period commencing with the 19th day of October, 1916, and ending with the final distribution of the estate." The widow appeals from this order.

The estate was solvent, and the allowance was not limited in duration to one year from the grant of letters, as it would have been in case of insolvency. Code Civ. Proc. § 1466; Estate of Treat, 162 Cal. 250, 121 Pac. 1003. No appeal was taken from the order of June 11, 1915, granting the allowance during the pendency of the administration, and that order was therefore conclusive in favor of the widow, so long as it remained in force. The court was, however, vested with power to modify the provision theretofore made upon a showing that conditions had so changed as to call for a revision of the prior order. Estate of Nelson, 167 Cal. 321, 139 Pac. 692. The propriety and extent of such alteration are matters committed to the discretion of the trial court. The appellant does not claim that, on the evidence here presented, the court abused its discretion in ordering a reduction of the allowance for the remaining period of the administration. The sole point made is that the court was without authority to cut off or reduce the accruing allowance at or from any time prior to the actual making of the order of reduction on May 25, 1917; or, as appellant puts it, that the court had no power to make its order reducing the family allowance operate retroactively.

What the court did was to make its modification operate from a period prior to the actual making of its second order, but subsequent to the filing and service of the notice of intention to move for such modification. In so doing, the court did not attempt to give to its new order a retroactive effect, or to cut off vested and accrued rights. It is true that an order or judgment takes effect, ordinarily, only from the date of its rendition or entry. But the institution of a proceeding, and the service of process therein, vests in the court jurisdiction to adjudicate every matter embraced within the issues tendered. A judgment frequently, if not usually, determines a status or the existence of a fact as of the time of the commencement of the action. So here, the application for a modification of the existing order for family allowance gave the court authority to fix the future extent of the allowance from the filing, or at least the service of the application. In Estate of Nelson, supra, the very case on which appellant places her main reliance, the court, on the appeal of the widow, affirmed an order reducing her family allowance from the date of the service of the notice of motion for modification. To the same effect is Ford v. Ford, 80 Wis. 565, 50 N. W. 409, where the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, recognizing that the trial court could not give retroactive effect to an order terminating a prior order for family allowance, yet held that the allowance might properly be cut off from the time of the presentation of the petition in that behalf.

It follows that there is no ground shown for disturbing the action of the court below.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

STEWART v. CALIFORNIA MEDICAL MISSIONARY & BENEVOLENT ASS'N.

STEWART et al. v. SAME.

(Sac. 2430.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 19, 1918. Rehearing Denied July 15, 1918.)

1. CHARITIES ⟸45(2)—HOSPITAL—LIABILITY FOR TORT.
In action against corporation owning hospital for negligence of nurse, the question of whether hospital is a charitable institution or is operated for profit is determined, not only from the powers of the owning corporation as defined in its charter, but also by manner of conducting the hospital.

2. CHARITIES ⟸45(2)—HOSPITALS—ACTIONS—NONCHARITABLE CHARACTER.
Where a hospital charged prices similar to those charged by other hospitals being conducted for profit and had operated for 13 years without receiving any charity patients, it was a hospital being conducted for profit and not a charitable institution, though corporation had been organized for charitable purposes.

3. CHARITIES ⟸45(2)—LIABILITY FOR TORTS—HOSPITALS—PAY PATIENTS.
That corporation owning a hospital is a charitable organization does not preclude a patient from recovering for negligence of nurse, where patient paid for accommodations at rate ordinarily charged by hospitals conducted for profit and had no knowledge of charitable character of corporation.

4. CHARITIES ⟸45(2)—LIABILITY FOR TORTS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.
In negligence action against hospital, where defendant claimed exemption from liability because it was a charitable corporation, evidence held sufficient to support finding that hospital was operated for profit.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Actions by D. M. Stewart, and by Lola A. Stewart and another, against the California Medical Missionary & Benevolent Association (a corporation). Judgments for plaintiffs in both actions, and defendant appeals from both judgments; the appeals being consolidated. Affirmed.

Theodore A. Bell, of San Francisco, and Power & McFadzean, of Visalia, for appellant.

Larkin & Bailey, of Visalia, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. The defendant appeals from two judgments, consolidated by stipulation for purposes of appeal, rendered against it for damages suffered by the plaintiffs, who are husband and wife, by reason of personal injuries received by Lola A. Stewart, the wife, hereafter referred to as the plaintiff, caused by the negligence of a nurse in the St. Helena Hospital, operated by the defendant, a nonprofit corporation. Trial was had before the court without a jury. On July 6, 1911, while still unconscious from the anæsthetic administered during an operation, plaintiff was burned by a hot water bag, placed in her bed for the purpose of warming it. The court found that the nurse was negligent in failing to remove the hot water bag from the bed before placing the plaintiff therein, and also found that the defendant was negligent in not providing covers for the hot water bags for use by the nurses. The court found that the nurse was competent. Defendant claims that under the circumstances found it is not liable for the injuries suffered by the plaintiff for the reason that it is a charitable corporation.

The defendant corporation was organized June 10, 1898, and took over the St. Helena Sanitarium, which was founded in 1878. The court found that the defendant had never received any patients for prices less than those ordinarily charged by similar institutions conducted in this state for profit, and that no charity patients would be received or had been received or treated except by previous arrangement. It found that the defendant carried on the business in question under the name of the St. Helena Sanitarium and that all business thereof was transacted in the name of said sanitarium; that there was nothing to indicate to a person applying for treatment that the sanitarium was conducted by the defendant; it was not shown that any property was ever conveyed, transferred in trust, or donated to the defendant for charitable purposes; that plaintiff did not know or believe that the defendant owned the sanitarium in question, or that it was carried on or run as a charitable institution, but that plaintiff believed that she was dealing with the St. Helena Sanitarium, and in all her dealings she had no knowledge that it was or claimed to be a charitable institution; and that she paid the full price for the operation and all treatment and for the room furnished to her, and was not the recipient of any charity. The court also found with reference to the powers and purposes of the corporation and drew legal conclusions therefrom; but, as the articles of incorporation and the by-laws are before this court, we will deal with them rather than with the specific findings of the trial court with reference thereto. The articles of incorporation authorized the defendant:

"To found hospitals or charitable asylums for the care and relief of indigent and other sick or infirm persons, at which institutions may be received also patients and patrons who are able to and do pay for the benefits there received, and which institutions shall devote the funds and property acquired and received by them from time to time from all sources, exclusively to maintaining themselves, improving their conditions and facilities, extending their benefits and usefulness and facilities, and promoting their purpose by such sanitary, dietetic, hygienic, philanthropic, dress and temperance reforms and efforts as are germane or auxiliary thereto, and to oppose the use of tobacco, tea, coffee, and other narcotics, as well as of alcoholic liquors, disseminate the principles of social purity, find homes for homeless children and outcast men and women, and care for the aged and infirm; train and send out missionary physicians and missionary nurses, to engage in the promulgation of the principles of hygiene, temperance reform, and Christian philanthropy, and enter upon various lines of work for the relief and betterment of the ignorant, unfortunate, degraded and suffering, both rich and poor, without distinction to race or creed, and to manufacture and sell hygienic goods and sanitary products, and to promote the objects of said institutions by means of classes, lectures, publications, and other appropriate methods, all of which work and acts shall be done without pecuniary profit or dividend, direct or indirect, to any person or persons, and to acquire and hold by purchase, lease, gift, devise, and bequest, or any lawful means, such real estate, water rights and other privileges, as may be necessary, useful or convenient in entering upon, promoting or maintaining the objects of said incorporation, * * * become a member or stockholder in any other institution having for its object the treatment of invalids or sick people, and to sell, incumber, or otherwise dispose of the same."

[1, 2] The purposes outlined in the articles of incorporation are almost as broad as the field of Christian philanthropy, extending its limits throughout the whole world. It is obvious, however, that the intent of this corporation is to utilize the profits made by one institution in furthering the interests of that and of other institutions, or religious or hygienic propaganda, or for manufacture of hygienic goods, etc. The sanitarium in question had been operated at the time of the injury to the plaintiff for 13 years (1898–1911) without having at any time received any charity patients. Whatever the intent of the organization generally, it was evident that the hospital itself was being used as a money-making institution and should be treated as such, unless the fact that the corporation was a nonprofit making corporation and that all money made in the hospital was ultimately devoted to some charitable purpose would prevent that. The character of the institution is to be determined, not alone by the powers of the corporation as defined in its charter, but also by the manner of conducting the hospital. See Del Mar Water, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 666, 678, 140 Pac. 591, 948. In the case of Vermillion v. Woman's College of Due West, 104 S. C. 197, 88 S. E. 649, the defendant claimed to be exempt from responsibility for a tort on the ground that it was a charitable corporation. The court, in disposing of the contention, said:

"Defendant offered no evidence to prove its relation to the public, but relied upon certain statutes" to prove "its incorporation and association with the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Synod to show that it is a public charity. Careful consideration * * * shows that, while they warrant an inference that defendant is a public charity, they do not prove that fact beyond dispute, for they are not inconsistent with the view that defendant is a private corporation conducted for gain."

And, in reply to the argument that the corporation in question was by law under the control of the Presbyterian Synod, a "public charity corporation," and was therefore of the same character, the court said:

"That may be so, but it is not the only inference of which the facts are susceptible. The synod may be invested with like authority over a private enterprise conducted for gain, on account of the benefit which would probably and naturally inure to such an institution by reason of its association with a great religious organization."

And so we may say here, the declaration in the articles alone are insufficient to establish the character of the St. Helena Hospital as a public charity, and the evidence of the manner it was conducted shows that it was not. The courts of this country have almost unanimously arrived at the conclusion that hospitals organized for charitable purposes are not liable to their patients for injuries arising from the negligence of their employés, where reasonable care is used in the selection and retention of the employé, although the reasons given for this rule vary in the different states. Among the more recent authorities on that subject, in which the decisions from other states are collated, are Morrison v. Henke (Dec. 5, 1916) 165 Wis. 166, 160 N. W. 173; Magnuson v. Swedish Hospital (Wash, Jan. 11, 1918) 169 Pac. 828; Bishop Randall Hospital v. Hartley (Oct. 30, 1916) 24 Wyo. 408, 160 Pac. 385; Loeffler v. Trustees of Sheppard & Enoch Pratt Hospital, 130 Md. 265, 100 Atl. 301, L. R. A. 1917D, 967; Vermillion v. Woman's College of Due

West, supra; Gamble v. Vanderbilt University (Tenn., Feb. 9, 1918) 200 S. W. 510. See, also, 11 Corpus Juris, 374 et seq., §§ 106, 108, 5 R. C. L. 374 et seq., §§ 121, 124, and cases cited. The question was also considered by this court in department (July, 1914) in Thomas v. German Gen., etc., Society, 168 Cal. 183, 188, 141 Pac. 1186. It was there said, without discussing the doctrine, that:

"All of the authorities pro and con have been industriously collated and learnedly reviewed in Basabo v. Salvation Army, 35 R. I. 22 [85 Atl. 120, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1144]. With the conclusion there reached we are in accord. That conclusion is that the true doctrine amounts to this: That where one accepts the benefit of a public or of a private charity, he exempts by implied contract the benefactor from liability for the negligence of the servants in administering the charity, if the benefactor has used due care in the selection of those servants."

In view of the fact that the court had arrived at the conclusion that under the ordinary rules pertaining to corporate liability the defendant in that case was not liable for the injury complained of because of the fact that the proximate cause of the injury was the negligence of a fellow servant, for which the defendant was not in any event liable, and in view of the further fact that the court does not attempt to apply the rules enunciated in Basabo v. Salvation Army, supra, to the facts of that case, the case cannot be considered as having committed this court to any one of the several theories on which the nonliability of charitable corporations is based, or to the doctrine of nonliability. It may be noted, however, that if this rule is followed, the defendant could hardly claim to be thereby relieved of responsibility, for the reason that the plaintiffs had no knowledge whatever of the charitable character of the organization.

[3, 4] The most liberal theory of exemption from liability for the negligence of the servant is that based upon what is known as the "trust fund theory." That is to say, that the exemption is based upon the proposition that the court will not allow funds held in trust for a charitable purpose to be diminished by the payment therefrom of damages due to the negligence of those employed by the trustees in charge of the trust property. This doctrine obtains in South Carolina, and the case of Vermillion v. Woman's College, etc., supra, was decided in view of that rule. A more direct decision to the effect that a corporation organized to conduct a public charity may also conduct an enterprise for gain, and be liable for the negligence of its employés in such enterprise, although the profits derived therefrom are devoted to the general purposes of the charity, is found in Tennessee, one of the most recent states to adopt the trust fund theory of nonliability. That court was asked to apply the rule in the case of Gamble v. Vanderbilt University, supra, in a case where the injury arose by reason of the negligent operation of an elevator in the building held by the university as an endowment. The court in holding the defendant responsible, admitted that a strict application of the trust fund theory to the facts of that case would exempt the defendant from liability, but there said:

"Although this building was lawfully operated by the university as an investment for the purpose of making profits to be used in its educational work, as held in Vanderbilt University v. Cheney, 116 Tenn. 259, 94 S. W. 90, yet it was in our judgment an enterprise sufficiently distinct and remote from the central activities of the charitable organization to make it inadvisable, from the viewpoint of public policy, to extend the exemption from liability thereto. * * * In our opinion as to such a remote enterprise the corporation should be held liable as any other corporation; but such damages as may be adjudged against it for breaches of duty in respect of such management should be charged as expenses of the operation of the particular property, and only the residue of the income should be available for the uses of the charity" —citing Winnemore v. Philadelphia, 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 625; Holder v. Massachusetts Horticultural Society, 211 Mass. 370, 97 N. E. 630.

In reference to the trust fund theory of nonliability in holding the defendant liable, the court said:

"How this shall be applied to particular cases or classes of cases is a matter in the wise discretion of the courts of each jurisdiction, according to their conception of sound policy. We can see no objection to the application of public policy as a ratio decidendi. Every really new question that comes before the courts is, in the last analysis, determined on that theory, when not determined by differentiation of the principle of a prior case or line of cases, or by the aid of analogies furnished by such prior cases. In balancing conflicting solutions, that one is perceived to tip the scales which the court believes will best promote the public welfare in its probable operation as a general rule or principle. But public policy is not a thing inflexible. No court is wise enough to forecast its influence in all possible contingencies. Distinctions must be made from time to time as sound reason and a true sense of justice may dictate."

In the instant case, we hold that the trial court was required to look, not only to the defendant's articles of incorporation and bylaws to determine the character of the hospital conducted by it, but also to the method of transacting the business of the corporation. Its finding that the hospital was in fact operated for profit is supported by the evidence, and we see no good reason for exempting the defendant from the liability incurred by other hospitals conducted for profit. See Williams v. Pomona Valley Hospital Ass'n, 21 Cal. App. 359, 131 Pac. 888. It is therefore unnecessary to pass upon the nonliability of public charities for negligence or the reasons therefor.

With reference to other rulings claimed to be erroneous, it is sufficient to say that the demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled, the motion for nonsuit properly denied (Vermillion v. Woman's College, supra), and that the error, if any, in permitting the plaintiff to cross-examine witnesses concerning the method of conducting the hospital as a charity was not prejudicial.

Judgments affirmed.

PACIFIC TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. v. STANDARD AMERICAN DREDGING CO. et al. (Civ. 2457.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 28, 1918. Rehearing Denied Oct. 28, 1918; Denied by Supreme Court, Nov. 25, 1918.)

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⊂=159(1)—LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL AND AGENT — AUTHORIZED WRONGFUL ACT.

Where dredging company acting through railroad company, both having notice of location of telegraph cable at bottom of bay, severed cable by driving piles, both dredging company and railroad, under Civ. Code, §§ 2338, 2343, subd. 3, were liable; former as having authorized act, latter because it was wrongful.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company against the Standard American Dredging Company and the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. Irving Wright, F. E. Boland, and John Douglas Short, all of San Francisco, for appellant Standard American Dredging Co.

A. A. Moore and Stanley Moore, both of San Francisco, for appellant Southern Pacific Co.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff sued the defendants for damages caused by injury to its cable. The case was tried by the trial court without a jury, a jury having been expressly waived. The plaintiff had judgment. Both defendants appealed and have brought up the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. Each defendant claims that the responsibility for the wrong complained of rests on the other defendant. The trial court made findings which included, among others, findings to the effect that, at the time of the injury complained of, the plaintiff was the owner of a certain telegraph and telephone cable resting on the bottom of San Francisco Bay, parallel with and along the north side of Long Wharf; that it had complied with the provisions of sections 536–540 of the Civil Code as to marking by monuments and giving notice of the locus of said cable; that the defendants at all times had knowledge and notice of the locus of said cable; that on July 14, 1912, the defendants negligently failing to take any precautions or take proper or any care to avoid striking or damaging said cable, drove certain piles upon said cable, and thereby crushed, severed, and damaged the cable. From the bill of exceptions it is clear that on July 14, 1912, one of the defendants, the dredging company, was constructing a platform adjacent to Long Wharf; that it employed the Southern Pacific Company to furnish its servants and appliances to drive the piles at the time and spot designated by the authorized agent of the dredging company; that it further appears that the act complained of was done pursuant to such engagement by the servants and agents of the respective defendants at the times and at the spots so designated.

Under the facts found by the court and the uncontradicted testimony which we have cited, the act complained of was wrongful in its nature.

The defendant the Southern Pacific Company was acting within the scope of its authority in doing what it did, and for its acts its principal is responsible, even though such act is wrongful. Civ. Code, § 2338; Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, §§ 150–175; Stewart v. California Imp. Co., 131 Cal. 125, 63 Pac. 177, 724, 52 L. R. A. 205; Trabing v. Cal. Navigation Co., 121 Cal. 137, 53 Pac. 644; Philadelphia Ry. Co. v. Mitchell, 107 Md. 600, 69 Atl. 422, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 974; Castroville Co. v. Col, 6 Cal. App. 533, 537, 92 Pac. 648.

As the act complained of was wrongful in its nature, the agent, the Southern Pacific Company, was also liable to this plaintiff. Civ. Code, § 2343, subd. 3; Stewart v. California Imp. Co., supra; Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 175; Hodgson v. Plow Co., 78 Minn. 172, 80 N. W. 956, 50 L. R. A. 644, and note.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed as against each defendant, and it is so ordered.

KING v. PAPAZIAN et al. (Civ. 2458.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 2, 1918.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⊂=74(3)—VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE WITHOUT CONSIDERATION—INSOLVENCY OF GRANTOR.

Under Civ. Code, § 3442, a voluntary conveyance by an insolvent grantor without receiving a valuable consideration was void as to creditors.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1011(1)—REVIEW—FINDING—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

An appellate court will not disturb a finding which rests on conflicting evidence.

3. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⊂=156(1)—ACTION TO SET ASIDE CONVEYANCE — BURDEN OF PROOF.

In creditor's action to set aside alleged fraudulent conveyance, creditor need not show that grantee had knowledge of grantor's fraudulent intent, where conveyance was without valuable consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth King against Peter

Papazian and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Ernest Klette, of Fresno, for appellants.

J. P. Bernhard, of Fresno, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. [1-3] This is an action in the nature of a creditor's bill. The plaintiff had judgment in the trial court, and the defendants have appealed from the judgment and the order denying a new trial. The record was brought up under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. The principal point made by the appellants is that certain findings are not supported by the evidence. The findings are general and special. The plaintiff alleged, and, by its general finding, the trial court found, that the transfer under attack was made voluntarily and without a valuable consideration at a time when the grantor was insolvent, and was therefore void. These findings alone fully support the judgment. Civ. Code, § 3442. The plaintiff alleged, and the trial court made a special finding, that the transfer in question was made with intent to defraud the creditors of the grantor and particularly this plaintiff and to prevent this plaintiff from collecting her judgment recovered in the basic suit. The record contains evidence to support each of said findings, and the most that can be said is that there were some conflicts in the evidence. But an appellate court may not disturb a finding which rests on conflicting testimony. As the trial court found that the transfer was not given for a valuable consideration, this case does not come within the rule, stated in Hart v. Church, 126 Cal. 471, 58 Pac. 910, 59 Pac. 296, 77 Am. St. Rep. 195, that the plaintiff must show the grantee's knowledge of the fraudulent intent of the grantor.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

HARBOR CENTER LAND CO. v. COUNCIL OF CITY OF RICHMOND et al. (two cases). (Civ. 2421, 2501.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 30, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟨⟩108—LEGISLATIVE POWERS — REFERENDUM — CHOICE OF SITE FOR CITY HALL.
The city council's choice of a site for a city hall is a legislative act, subject to be set aside by the city voters upon referendum.

2. INJUNCTION ⟨⟩84 — MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—LEGISLATIVE POWERS.
In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 526, subd. 7, an injunction cannot be granted to prevent a legislative act by a municipal corporation within the scope of its powers.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟨⟩57—LEGISLATIVE POWERS—LOCATION OF CITY HALL.
The selection of a location for a city hall is a legislative act clearly within the scope of the powers of a municipal corporation.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟨⟩228 — CONTRACTS BASED ON LEGISLATIVE ACTS—REFERENDUM.
A person making an agreement with the city council concerning the location of a city hall does so in contemplation of the legislative character of the act done, knowing that the city is not bound by the contract if rejected upon referendum.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟨⟩278(7)—DUE PROCESS.
The act of the electors of a municipal corporation in rejecting upon referendum the council's legislative act accepting plaintiff's offer to furnish ground for a city hall is not violative of the constitutional provisions on the subject of due process of law.

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟨⟩121(2) — IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.
Where plaintiff's offer to furnish ground upon which to build a city hall was accepted by the council, the rejection of such legislative act by the voters upon referendum was not an impairment of the obligation of a contract.

7. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟨⟩2(1)—TAKING OF PRIVATE PROPERTY—WHAT CONSTITUTES.
One offering ground to city for the construction of a city hall must know that the city would not be bound by ordinance accepting the gift, if rejected by the electors upon referendum, and such rejection did not constitute a taking or damaging of private property for public use.

Appeals from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Two actions by the Harbor Center Land Company against the Council of City of Richmond and others. Judgments for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Denson, Cooley & Denson and W. H. H. Hart, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

D. J. Hall, of Richmond, and C. S. Hannum, W. T. Kearney and Titus, Creed, Jones & Dall, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. These cases between identical parties involve the same questions, and will be determined together.

The purpose of the actions was to secure an injunction restraining the city of Richmond and its officers from removing the municipal offices from a certain building upon lands which the plaintiff claims were donated to the city by it for use as a city hall, and from entering into a contract for the erection of a city hall for the city of Richmond.

So far as we can find the questions presented for decision are all settled in this state. Most of them were disposed of in the case of Hopping v. Council of the City of Richmond, 170 Cal. 605, 150 Pac. 977, and a case bearing the same titles and reported in 170 Cal. 618, 150 Pac. 982. In those cases the Supreme Court by mandate compelled the city of Richmond to submit to the electors of the city for approval or rejection upon a referendum petition the question of providing for the acquisition from plaintiff by the municipality of the tract of land from which the city now proposes to remove its offices and the construction of a city hall thereon. At the election held pursuant to the mandate of the Supreme Court the resolution by which the city council proposed to enter into an agreement with the plaintiff was rejected; and at the same time the electors of the city seem from the record to have selected another site for the city hall. The facts down to the time the mandate issued appear in the opinion of the Supreme Court in those cases. Following the election the council undertook to remove the municipal offices from the site upon plaintiff's property which the electors had rejected at the referendum election to the other site selected at the same election. The plaintiff seeks in these actions, as above stated, to enjoin this removal, and bases its application upon the contention that such removal would violate several sections of the state and federal Constitutions.

[1] We think it unnecessary to discuss these contentions, for it was held in Hopping v. City of Richmond, supra, that the choice of a site for a city hall by the council was a legislative act; that the act of the council could be set aside upon referendum by the voters of the city, and it follows that the decision of the electors at such election held for said purpose was itself legislative and binding, therefore, upon the city council under our constitutional provisions establishing the referendum.

[2-7] There seems to us to be a very simple reason why this injunction was properly refused by the superior court. An injunction cannot be granted in this state to prevent a legislative act by a municipal corporation within the scope of its powers. Code Civ. Proc. § 526, subd. 7; Glide v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 21, 81 Pac. 225. Of course, no act could be more clearly within the scope of the powers of this municipal corporation than the selection of a location for its city hall. The plaintiff must be taken to have made his so-called agreements with the governing body of the municipality with knowledge and in contemplation of the legislative character of any act done by that body in passing the resolution accepting the proposal made by it—which was to furnish the block of land for this purpose, and of the right of the electors of the city to take the matter out of the hands of the council by referendum, and to reject the agreement which the council proposed to make, and select another site if they saw fit to do so. If the plaintiff contracted obligations and spent money upon the faith of the council's action in passing the resolution accepting its proposal before the municipality had in due course acted directly through the referendum, it simply showed bad legal judgment. It had no binding contract, because the act of selecting the site—a prerequisite to making a contract for its acquisition—was legislative, and could be reviewed and set aside by the electors, and until so reviewed, or until the right of review by referendum was lost by lapse of time or otherwise, no contract based thereon was finally binding upon the city. The act of the electors in rejecting the offer of the plaintiff to furnish the ground for the city hall was, therefore, not violative of the provisions of the Constitution upon the subject either of due process of law, of the impairing of the obligation of contracts, or of protecting property or of taking or damaging private property for public use.

The judgment in each case is affirmed.

MICKEL v. ALTHOUSE et al. (Civ. 2581.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 30, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 29, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸401 — ACCEPTANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT—BURDEN TO PLEAD.

Burden was upon building contractors, in common-law suit against them by a carpenter for personal injuries, to plead in bar that they had elected to accept the provisions of the Employers' Liability Act, if such fact existed.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸279(4)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action against contractors for injuries to carpenter when scaffold fell, evidence held to justify finding that plaintiff's injuries were caused by negligence of contractors, represented by employé who constructed the scaffold, and for whose negligence the employer was liable under the Employers' Liability Act.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸235(4)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—RELIANCE ON CARE OF FELLOW SERVANT.

In view of the Employers' Liability Act, abolishing the fellow servant doctrine, a carpenter held not guilty of negligence in failing to see and know that a fellow workman, who constructed a scaffold, insecurely fastened a ledger thereon.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸330(3) — INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

That owner of house under construction, whereon carpenter was injured, had right to say how work should be done, and apportioned payments to contractors to pay carpenters according to number of men on work, was insufficient, as against terms of written contract for carpentry work, to prove injured carpenter was employé of owner.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸318(1) — INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR — RIGHT TO SELECT AND CONTROL.

When the right to select the servant and to control his work rests on one of two contracting parties to an independent contract, the party excluded from such selection and control is freed from liability for the negligence of the servant.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸318(1)—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—RIGHT TO MAKE ALTERATIONS.

That an employer has the right to make alterations, deviations, additions, and omissions from the contracted work does not change relation of party contracting to do work from that of independent contractor to that of mere servant.

7. CONTRACTS ⟸176(1) — CONSTRUCTION — QUESTION FOR COURT.

Where terms of a contract are clear and certain, its meaning and effect, and the relation of the parties to it thereby created, become a question of law for the court.

8. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸316(2)—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS — CONTRACTORS TO FURNISH CARPENTER LABOR—"SERVANT."

Under Civ. Code, § 2009, defining a "servant," contractors to furnish all carpenter labor for roughing and finishing a house and garage, held not servants of the owner, who could not be termed their master, as they were doing their work in pursuit of an independent calling.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Servant.]

9. EVIDENCE ⟸511 — OPINION — TIME OF SIGNING CONTRACT.

In action for injury, to carpenter employed by contractors to furnish carpenter labor on house, against contractors and owner, objection to question to handwriting expert, after his examination of contract to furnish carpenter labor, as to whether in his opinion signatures of owner and of contractors were made on same day, should have been sustained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by Charles C. Mickel against J. B. Althouse, W. Howard Borden, and Al. Borden. From judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying new trial, defendants appeal. Judgment and order against defendant Althouse reversed; judgment and order against the other defendants affirmed.

Frank Bryant, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank A. McDonald, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The plaintiff obtained judgment against the defendants on account of personal injuries alleged to have resulted from negligence of the defendants. The defendants appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

On the 20th day of February, 1913, the plaintiff was working as carpenter on a house then being constructed for the defendant J. B. Althouse on land owned by Althouse in the city of Los Angeles. In his complaint the plaintiff alleged that he was working under the direction of the defendants Borden, who had supervision over the plaintiff and the right to direct and control his services, and that those defendants were at that time acting for and on behalf of the owner of the property. In their answer the defendants alleged that the defendants Borden were not acting as superintendents for the owner, but that, on the contrary, they were acting as contractors and not otherwise, and that any work done or services performed by defendants Borden was done and performed under contract with the owner, and that the owner did not have the right to direct and control the services of the plaintiff. The defendants denied the allegations charging them with negligence, and alleged facts showing that the accident was due solely to the negligence of the plaintiff; such conduct being without the direction, knowledge, or consent of the defendants.

At the time when this accident occurred there was in force an act approved April 8, 1911, entitled:

"An act relating to the liability of employers for injuries or death sustained by their employés, providing for compensation for the accidental injury of employés, establishing an Industrial Accident Board, making an appropriation therefor, defining its powers and providing for a review of its awards."

According to the provisions of that act the Industrial Accident Board was not authorized to provide compensation for accidental injury to employés of private persons if, at or prior to the time of the accident to the employé, the employer had not, in the manner provided in the act, elected to become subject to the provisions thereof. In the absence of such election, any employé injured by reason of negligence of the employer was entitled to maintain an action at law for damages; but it was provided that in such cases the liability of the employer would be subject to the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of said act. Section 1 of that act reads as follows:

"In any action to recover damages for a personal injury sustained within this state by an employé while engaged in the line of his duty or the course of his employment as such, or for death resulting from personal injury so sustained, in which recovery is sought upon the ground of want of ordinary or reasonable care of the employer, or of any officer, agent or servant of the employer, the fact that such employé may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery therein where his contributory negligence was slight and that of the employer was gross, in comparison, but the damages may be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employé, and it shall be conclusively presumed that such employé was not guilty of contributory negligence in any case where the violation of any statute enacted for the safety of employés contributed to such employé's injury; and it shall not be a defense:

"(1) That the employé either expressly or impliedly assumed the risk of the hazard complained of.

"(2) That the injury or death was caused in whole or in part by the want of ordinary or reasonable care of a fellow servant."

Stats. 1911, p. 796.

[1] Appellants demurred to the amended complaint upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. They claim that the court erred in overruling that demurrer. Their contention is that the complaint was insufficient because it did not allege facts showing gross negligence or willful personal misconduct of the defendants. But we think that the demurrer was properly overruled. The complaint did not allege that the defendants, or either of them, had ever filed with the Industrial Accident Board a written statement to the effect that they accepted the provisions of the act. If such election had been made, the fact would be within the knowledge of the defendants, and we think that the burden was upon them to plead such fact in bar of the action, if the fact existed. The plaintiff was entitled to assume that his ordinary right of action continued to exist. Upon that assumption, the statement of facts showing want of ordinary care on the part of the employer was sufficient to enable the plaintiff to state a cause of action.

[2, 3] Appellants contend that there is no evidence of negligence on the part of them, or of either of them. Appellant J. B. Althouse further contends that there is no evidence tending to prove that the plaintiff was acting as his employé at the time of the accident. The record leaves no doubt that the house on which the accident occurred was the property of the defendant Althouse, and that at the time when he received the injuries the plaintiff was engaged at work as a carpenter in putting on the outside finish of that house. The plaintiff was working in company with another carpenter named Chapman. In order to do their work it was necessary for them to stand on a scaffold. That scaffold was constructed by them out of materials which were on the ground for that purpose. The staging of the scaffold gave way and let the plaintiff fall to the ground whereby he was seriously injured.

It further appears from the testimony introduced on behalf of the plaintiff, that the staging rested upon a crosspiece called a "ledger." This ledger was at one end nailed to a part of the scaffold four feet away from the house, and at the other end was nailed to a piece called a "scab," which in turn was nailed to the side of the house. Instead of notching the scab and resting the ledger on the notch, as it should have been in order to be safe, the ledger was nailed directly to the face of the scab. The scaffolding gave way at the end of the ledger that was fastened to the scab, because the scab was not notched. The scab slipped off from the house. There were several 2x4 studding in the house near that point. The scab was nailed into the siding, and not into the studding. If the scab had been nailed to the studding and the scab notched, and the ledger properly placed on the scab and nailed to it, the accident would not have happened. Chapman built the scaffold, and the plaintiff handed the stuff up to him. Chapman nailed the scab to the house. The plaintiff did not know of the unsafe condition of the scaffold before he went upon it. There were plenty of materials upon the ground, and the men had the privilege of using all that was necessary in the building of the scaffold. When they first started to put up the scaffolding, plaintiff had started to notch the scab, and Borden said that it was not worth while to do so. For that reason the scab was not notched.

From the evidence thus produced the jury was justified in finding that the plaintiff's injuries were caused by negligence of the defendants Borden, represented by their employé, Chapman, and that the plaintiff was not negligent in failing to see and know that Chapman had not securely fastened the scaffolding to the house. Under the provisions above quoted from the statute which was in force at that time, the fact that Chapman was a fellow servant of the plaintiff is not a defense to the action.

[4, 5] It does not necessarily follow, however, that any liability has been established against the defendant Althouse. The plaintiff testified that he was working for Althouse; but the specific facts shown do not support that conclusion. The house was being constructed for Althouse and was his property. But there is no evidence that the plaintiff was hired by Althouse, or that Althouse ever at any time or in any way recognized the plaintiff as his employé. The defendants introduced in evidence a contract in writing in the following terms:

"Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 25, 1913.

"We, the undersigned, agree to furnish all carpenter labor for roughing in and finishing house and garage No. 514 So. Manhattan Pl., for the sum of eleven hundred and twenty-five dollars ($1,125.00). Borden Bros.

"G. H. Borden.

"Accepted January 25, 1913.

"John B. Althouse."

G. H. Borden testified that he signed that contract, and that it was the contract under which he performed all the carpenter work in the construction of the house; that he wrote the contract on the day of its date, and that it was accepted by Althouse on the same day; that G. H. Borden had general supervision over the carpenters and built according to the plans; that he made no changes from the plans, unless he had orders from the owner; that Althouse furnished the plans and the materials, and had the right to say how the work should be done; that Althouse paid him in weekly payments, according to the number of men that Borden had on the work: "Mr. Althouse gave me the money, and I used it in paying off the men."

[6] The facts that, according to the testimony of Borden, the owner had the right to say how the work should be done, and apportioned his installments of payments according to the number of men that Borden had on the work, are not sufficient, as against the terms of the written contract, to prove, and do not tend to prove, that the plaintiff was an employé of the owner. Borden Bros. were under contract to furnish the carpenter labor, and they had the uncontrolled right to employ the carpenters, and to retain or discharge them at will. When the right to select the servant and to control his work rests in one of two contracting parties to an independent contract, the party excluded from such selection and control is freed from liability for the negligence of the servant. Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 598, 45 Pac. 1017. And the fact that the employer has the right to make alterations, deviations, additions, and omissions from the contracted work does not change the relation of the party contracting to do the work from that of an independent contractor to that of a mere servant. Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 99, 78 Pac. 337.

[7, 8] Where the terms of a contract are clear and certain, its meaning and effect and the relation of the parties to it thereby created become a question of law to be decided by the court. Green v. Soule, supra. "A servant is one who is employed to render personal service to his employer, otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who in such service remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter, who is called his master." Civ. Code, § 2009. Tested by this section, Borden Bros. were not servants of Althouse, and Althouse could not be termed their master, as they were doing their work in pursuit of an independent calling.

[9] The only evidence offered by the plaintiff for the purpose of contradicting the fact of existence of the written contract above set forth consisted of the testimony of an expert on handwriting, who, after examining the written contract, answered negatively the question whether in his opinion the signatures thereto "were made on the same day." The defendants' objection to this question should have been sustained. Assuming the law to be that, as some authorities have determined, the comparative ages of documents and of writings is a proper subject of expert testimony, yet as a ground for the admission of such testimony there should be some reasonably extensive length of time involved in the inquiry, or there should be some controversy over the genuineness of the signatures or the order in which they were made, or concerning interlineations or other irregularities discernible in the document. But none of these conditions exist here. It is not easily conceivable that, under the circumstances here shown to have existed any substantial weight should be allowed to the bald statement that the signatures were made "not on the same day." Consistently with the answer, they might have been made on the very next day.

In its trifling nature the question is analogous to one wherein a party sought to show by expert testimony that a cross, placed in attestation of the signature of a person who could not write, was made by somebody else, or that somebody else held the pen. To which the judge replied: "I draw the line there; I can't stand for it." Wolf v. Gall, 169 Pac. 1017. As we view this case, it therefore is established that defendant Althouse was not the employer of the plaintiff, and that the negligence of Borden Bros. is not negligence for which he is responsible.

The judgment and order against appellant J. B. Althouse are reversed. The judgment and order against the defendants W. Howard Borden and Al. Borden are affirmed.

1. PARTNERSHIP ⊂⊃53—EXISTENCE OF AGREEMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action to establish existence of copartnership, evidence held to show that agreement was entered into to form partnership for the purchase of industrial property, the parties thereto to share in profits, and the consideration of which, as to plaintiff, was his knowledge of industrial property, and advice and counsel in the purchase of such property.

2. PARTNERSHIP ⊂⊃76—INTERESTS IN PROPERTY—SHARES—PARTNER.

Where copartnership was entered into for purchase of industrial property, one of the partners contributing his knowledge of industrial property and advice as to property to be purchased, and the others to furnish the capital, the partner who furnished no capital was entitled to his share of property purchased with partnership capital.

3. JOINT ADVENTURES ⊂⊃4(1)—PURCHASE OF PROPERTY—SHARES IN PROFITS.

Where parties entered into agreement to purchase industrial property whereby one was to contribute knowledge of real estate values and advice, and the others to contribute capital, and all to share in the profits, the former was entitled to his share of the profits and in property purchased in name of one of other parties and unsold, whether transaction is regarded as partnership or as a joint venture,

4. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF ⊂⊃56(9)—INTEREST IN PROFITS—SALE OF LAND.

The statute of frauds does not prevent parol proof for the purpose of showing an interest in the profits to be derived from the sale of lands.

5. EVIDENCE ⊂⊃589—DUTY OF COURT—RECONCILING CONFLICTS.

It is the duty of the trial court as far as possible to reconcile inconsistencies and conflicts in the testimony of a party, and in determining the weight thereof it may accept such testimony in part and discredit it in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Robert H. Ingram against D. Johnston and another. From judgment for plaintiff, and from order denying new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Barstow, Beach & Rohe, of Los Angeles (Chester L. Lyman, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Denis & Loewenthal, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff, alleging the existence of an agreement of copartnership between himself and defendants, under and pursuant to which certain described land was purchased by defendants, asked for a decree establishing the existence of such copartnership and for incidental equitable relief.

The court found that the partnership agreement was made as alleged, and that, by virtue of the relationship and agreement so made between the parties, plaintiff was entitled to a one-eleventh interest in the unsold property and in the net proceeds of that which had been sold, subject to certain liens and charges established against the same, and entered a decree in accordance therewith.

The appeal is from the judgment and an order of court denying defendants' motion for a new trial, in support of which a bill of exceptions is presented.

[1-3] Appellants' chief contention, and that to which their voluminous brief is almost entirely devoted, is that the finding that the copartnership agreement was entered into under which the property was acquired and plaintiff entitled to such interest in the land is unsupported by the evidence. While as to this alleged agreement the evidence is sharply conflicting, that given on behalf of plaintiff, and which the court found to be true, clearly tends to show that prior to the acquisition of the property plaintiff and defendants entered into an agreement contemplating the purchase, for resale and speculation therein, of what was known as industrial property; that is, property which by reason of its location with relation to railroads was adapted to manufacturing purposes; that for some time prior to the making of this agreement plaintiff had been engaged in acquiring such property for the Southern Pacific Company, by reason of which fact he was in possession of much valuable expert knowledge and information, on account of which it was agreed that he should not be required to furnish any part of the copartnership capital, but that his knowledge, counsel, and advice should constitute his share thereof. Some months thereafter, and after considering a number of pieces of property and advising with plaintiff, it was finally agreed to purchase the property in question, title to which was to be in the name of Johnston for the benefit of the copartners, who were to share equally in the profits derived therefrom. The first payment made upon the property was $22,000, upon the making of which the title was taken in the name of Johnston, who thereafter, without plaintiff's knowledge, conveyed it to the Title Insurance & Trust Company, in trust, which company, as evidence of the trust and interest therein, issued four certificates, one of which, issued in the name of H. B. Smith, was for a two twenty-seconds interest in the property, which certificate is conceded by defendants to have represented the interest of plaintiff in said property. Notwithstanding plaintiff's contention that he was by the terms of the agreement not required to contribute any money towards carrying out the enterprise, it seems that defendant Johnston, some time after the purchase, called upon him and suggested that inasmuch as Mr. Smith was carrying his part of the burden, the latter desired as an evidence of good faith on his part that he should give him a note for $2,000, at the time stating that he would not be called upon for the payment thereof. Plaintiff gave the note as requested, and this note was at all times retained by defendants and produced at the trial, and defendants at all times retained possession of the certificate for a two twenty-seconds interest in the property for which, according to their testimony, the note was given. At the time of the purchase, real estate of the character purchased was quite active in the vicinity of Los Angeles, and it was believed by all parties concerned that a quick turn thereof would be made at a profit. In 1907, however, there was a cessation of such activity and the carrying of the property became a burden, which it appears was assumed by defendant H. B. Smith. At no time was plaintiff called upon to contribute anything towards the carrying charges, nor the payment of the note. That an agreement was entered into to form a partnership for the purchase of property, the parties thereto to share in the profits, the consideration of which, so far as plaintiff was concerned, was his knowledge, counsel, and advice, and that thereafter the parties joined in selecting for purchase and did, in accordance with the agreement to share in the profits of the joint adventure, acquire in the name of Johnston the property in question, clearly appears from the evidence offered by plaintiff. That the undissolved relationship and transaction had thereunder entitled plaintiff to relief is supported by Koyer v. Willmon, 150 Cal. 785, 90 Pac. 135, Doudell v. Shoo, 20 Cal. App. 424, 129 Pac. 478, Whitley v. Bradley, 13 Cal. App. 721, 110 Pac. 596, Coward v. Clanton, 79 Cal. 26, 21 Pac. 359, Bates v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 484, 30 Pac. 605, 16 L. R. A. 745, 29 Am. St. Rep. 133, and Arnold v. Loomis, 170 Cal. 95, 148 Pac. 518.

Moreover, while conceding that plaintiff acquired such one-eleventh interest in the profits of the deal for which he gave his promissory note, defendants insist that he voluntarily surrendered the same by returning the certificate issued in evidence thereof. But plaintiff's testimony is that the certificate was never delivered to him, nor did he even know of its existence, and hence he could not and did not return it. The fact that defendants retained his note, producing it at the trial, showing that it had never been returned to him, taken in connection with plaintiff's testimony, sufficiently establishes the fact that plaintiff never at any time surrendered the interest conceded by defendants to have been acquired by him, nor agreed to a release of such interest. Hence, if the transaction, as claimed by defendants, he deemed to have created a trust wherein plaintiff to the extent of a one-eleventh interest was a beneficiary in the profits arising therefrom, he was entitled to have an accounting made by defendants as to their management of the property and to receive the interest which the decree awarded him. As we view the record, it is immaterial whether the transaction, in a technical legal sense, constituted a partnership or a trust, since in either case plaintiff was entitled to at least a one-eleventh interest in the net profits derived from the property and for an accounting by defendants of their management thereof. The language used in Bedolla v. Williams, 15 Cal. App. 741, 115 Pac. 748, is peculiarly applicable here. It is there said:

"We think it unnecessary in this case to decide whether or not the agreement between the parties constituted them copartners, or provided for such a joint venture as would entitle either of them to an accounting from the other, because the allegations of the complaint show that the plaintiff is entitled to some remedy, either legal or equitable. In such a case, where, as here, an answer has been filed, the court may grant plaintiff any relief consistent with the case made out by him and embraced within the issues."

The evidence received on behalf of plaintiff and considered in connection with the testimony of defendants, together with the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, clearly shows that as to the property described in the complaint a fiduciary relation, never dissolved, nor, until shortly before the commencement of the action, repudiated, was in fact established, from which it follows that, whatever its technical nature, plaintiff was entitled to an accounting by defendants of their management of the property involved, and, as found by the court, to not less than a one-eleventh interest in the net profits arising therefrom.

[4] Thus viewed, appellants insist that any right of action on the part of plaintiff would be obnoxious, not only to the statute of frauds, but to the statute of limitations. In reply to this we may say that the statute of frauds does not prevent parol proof for the purpose of showing an interest in the profits to be derived from the sale of lands, but declares that an agreement by which an estate or interest in lands is to be created must be in writing. Bates v. Babcock, supra. To the same effect are Doudell v. Shoo, supra, and Bond v. Taylor, 68 W. Va. 317, 69 S. E. 1004. Appellants failed to plead the statute of limitations. However, it sufficiently appears that if the transaction constituted a trust, it was a voluntary trust, against which the statute of limitations could not begin to run until the trustee repudiated it (Arnold v. Loomis, supra), and this from the record appears to have been a short time before the commencement of the action.

[5] We deem it unnecessary to notice a number of alleged errors predicated upon rulings of the court in the admission and rejection of evidence. As appellants in their brief say, these are minor matters, and an examination of them show that, under our view of the case, they could in no event have prejudiced the substantial rights of defendants. In this connection, suffice it to say that the record, taken as a whole, shows the case to be one for the application of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, and, conceding the existence of technical errors, they have not resulted in a miscarriage of justice; and, conceding, further, a conflict in the evidence and inconsistencies in the testimony of plaintiff himself, it was the duty of the court, so far as possible, to reconcile such conflicts and inconsistencies, and in determining the weight thereof it might accept plaintiff's evidence in part and discredit it in part.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

COWARD v. DE CRAY et al. (Civ. 2530.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 27, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1918.)

1. GIFTS ⊂⊃82(2) — CAUSA MORTIS OR INTER VIVOS—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that a deposit of certificates of stock to be delivered at the death of the depositor was a gift inter vivos, and not causa mortis.

2. GIFTS ⊂⊃41, 43—REVOCATION.

Delivery of certificates of stock to a third person, to be delivered to another at the death of the depositor, not in contemplation of speedy death, vests a present title in the donee, subject to a life estate in the depositor, and was irrevocable.

3. GIFTS ⊂⊃81 — PROOF OF INTENT — SUBSEQUENT ACTS OF DEPOSITARY.

Where one deposited deeds and certificates of stock with a third party, to be delivered to various persons at the depositor's death, testimony that depositary, after the death of the depositor, delivered and recorded the deeds, was admissible to throw light on the intent with which the certificates were delivered in a suit by one claiming a revocable gift causa mortis.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃204(1) — MATTERS REVIEWABLE — EVIDENCE — SAVING OBJECTIONS.

Admission of evidence cannot be reviewed where no objection was made upon the trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Benj. K. Knight, Judge.

Action by Mary V. Coward against Agnes De Cray, as executrix of the last will and testament of Catherine A. Wilkins, deceased, Agnes De Cray, and Frank De Cray and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Chas. B. Younger, of Santa Cruz, for appellants.

Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, for respondent Coward.

Emmet C. Rittenhouse and Ralph H. Smith, both of Santa Cruz, for respondents Cody and others.

LENNON, P. J. Catherine A. Wilkins owned certain bank stock, evidenced by two certificates and also owned two tracts of land. On the evening of November 4, 1905, Mrs. Wilkins, who was suffering from a dislocated shoulder at the time, sent for her attorney, one Maher, indorsed the bank stock to the plaintiff, her niece, and made two deeds of the land, one tract to Agnes De Cray, also her niece, and the other tract to Frank De Cray, the husband of Agnes. She delivered the certificates of stock and the deeds to her attorney for the indorsee and grantees, respectively, and directed him to hold them until her death, and then to give them to said indorsee and grantees. About six weeks later Mrs. Wilkins obtained possession of the stock certificates from Maher for the purpose of surrendering the certificates and obtaining new ones, the change being necessary, she claimed, because the bank intended to change from a state to a national bank, and she further stated that when the change was made she would replace the certificates with Maher. She did not do so, but kept them until her death. No question was made, either in the lower court or on this appeal, but that the stock, now the subject of this litigation, is the same stock indorsed to plaintiff on November 4, 1905, although reissued and represented by different certificates. Mrs. Wilkins died testate. By her will she assumed to give plaintiff but a small part of the stock in question, and she further attempted to give plaintiff an interest in the tract of land which had been the subject of the deed to Agnes De Cray. The deeds to the land were delivered by Maher to Mrs. De Cray and her husband after Mrs. Wilkins' death, but he was unable to deliver the certificates of stock because of Mrs. Wilkins' retention of them.

The lower court found in effect that by the indorsement and delivery by Mrs. Wilkins of the stock certificates, title to the stock vested in plaintiff; and the question upon appeal is whether there is sufficient evidence to support that finding.

[1, 2] It is contended that the delivery of the certificates on November 4, 1905, was a gift causa mortis, and that therefore it could be and was afterward revoked. While there is some evidence that Mrs. Wilkins thought that she was seriously ill, there is other evidence which strongly points to the conclusion that she was not acting in fear or contemplation of speedy or immediate death. Her ailment, a dislocated shoulder, was not such as would reasonably cause expectation of death, and, in fact, she soon recovered from it. Although a Catholic, she did not have a priest called. She was not confined to her bed, but sat up throughout the transaction with her attorney. She did not tell the attorney anything about being in fear of death. Her only remark to him about the condition of her health was to the effect, that she was suffering considerably with her shoulder, and that she could not use her hand to write.

Moreover, the evidence shows that Mrs. Wilkins intended to make and did make an absolute gift inter vivos of the stock. She told her attorney that she wanted to give the stock to Mary, her niece, that she wanted her to have it at the time of her death, and that she wanted the delivery made so there would be no administration. Maher, the attorney, testified that he advised her that she could not avoid an administration of her estate unless she made an absolute delivery of the indorsed stock certificates during her lifetime, such delivery to be either to Mary direct, or to Maher for her, with the understanding that the delivery must be beyond recall. She thereupon proceeded with the transaction and made the delivery to Maher for Mary, and directed him to give the certificates to Mary at the time of her (Mrs. Wilkins') death. The effect of such a delivery is to vest a present title in the grantee subject to a life interest in the grantor (Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 Pac. 338, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186; Ruiz v. Dow, 113 Cal. 490, 45 Pac. 867), and no subsequent act of the grantor, such as a retaking of the certificates, can detract from the title which has already vested in the grantee (Ruiz v. Dow, supra; Estate of Cornelius, 151 Cal. 550, 91 Pac. 329; King v. Fragley, 19 Cal. App. 735, 127 Pac. 813).

[3, 4] It was not error to admit in evidence testimony to the effect that the depositary, after the death of Mrs. Wilkins, delivered and recorded the two deeds. The deeds were delivered by Mrs. Wilkins at the same time as, and as a part of the same transaction with, the delivery of the stock certificates. Evidence of subsequent acts of the depositary under such circumstances is admissible as throwing light on the intent with which the original delivery was made. Devlin on Deeds (3d Ed.) vol. 1, § 280a. Moreover, it appears that no objection was made upon the trial to the admission of the evidence in question.

Judgment affirmed.

LA FLEUR v. M. A. BURNS LUMBER CO.

(Civ. 1782.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 26, 1918. On Petition for Rehearing, Oct. 28, 1918; Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 25, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=278(5) — DEFECTIVE MACHINERY—EVIDENCE.
In an action for personal injury, evidence held to sustain a finding that conveying machinery in a sawmill was improperly constructed and dangerous.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=280—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—EVIDENCE.
In an action for personal injuries from defective conveying machinery in sawmill, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that plaintiff informed defendant of its unsafe condition, and that defendant refused to allow him to repair it, but promised to remedy the defects.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=281(6) — DEFECTIVE MACHINERY—DUTY OF SERVANT.
In an action for personal injuries from defective conveying machinery in sawmill, where it was plaintiff's duty to keep machinery in repair, evidence held to sustain a finding that slasher chains were necessary for successful operation, and that plaintiff was not responsible for damages resulting from not removing them.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=276(4)—PERSONAL INJURIES—CAUSE OF INJURIES.
In an action for personal injuries alleged to be due to defective conveying machinery in sawmill, evidence held to sustain a finding that the injury occurred in the manner and at the time and placed alleged.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=281(1)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—PERFORMANCE OF DUTY—EVIDENCE.
In an action by foreman in a sawmill for personal injuries, evidence held to sustain a finding that plaintiff was in the performance of his duties at the time of the injury, although he was doing the work of the slasherman, who was absent.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=101, 102(10)—DUTY TO FURNISH SAFE MACHINERY—KNOWLEDGE OF DEFECTS.
The duty of a master to provide safe machinery is not affected by knowledge of the defect on the part of the servant, under Employers' Liability Act of 1911.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=221(4)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—PROMISE TO REMEDY DEFECT.
Where employé notifies master of defects in machinery and latter promises to remedy them, servant is justified in continuing employment, unless danger arising therefrom is so glaringly obvious that no prudent man would undertake it.

8. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=221(7) — ASSUMPTION OF RISK—PROMISE TO REPAIR.
That rollers in conveying machinery in a sawmill were only 24 inches long and live chains arose above them at right angles, did not render it so obviously perilous that a servant working around the conveyor assumed the risk, where master had promised to remedy defect.

9. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=265(14) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.
In an action by servant for personal injuries, burden is upon the master to establish contributory negligence.

10. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=233(4) — INJURIES TO SERVANT—DEFECTS IN MACHINERY—DUTY OF SERVANT.
A foreman in a sawmill, whose duty it was to keep the machinery running and in repair, is entitled to damages for personal injuries occasioned by improperly constructed machinery, which the master refused to allow him to change.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; J. E. Barber, Judge.

Action by E. La Fleur against the M. A. Burns Lumber Company, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John Ralph Wilson and Gillett & Cutler, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Dean & Carter, of Redding, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. [1] The action was for damages caused by an injury in a lumber mill. The cause was tried without a jury, and the court found in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $3,000. The appeal is from the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial. The only claim for a reversal is that the evidence is insufficient to support certain material findings. Of them, the first one assailed is as follows:

"That at the time aforesaid, to wit, on or about the 15th day of November, 1913, and while plaintiff was employed by defendant as aforesaid, certain machinery in said mill which the plaintiff was required to operate and oversee was imperfectly and improperly constructed and was defective and unsafe; said imperfection and unsafeness was caused by live chains rising above live rollers, which said chains and said rollers were revolving and rotating at right angles with each other; that by reason of said live chains rising above said live rollers said machinery was dangerous and unsafe in this, that said chains would come in contact with and catch upon the lumber and other sawed materials which were rolled out on said live rollers, and said chains would forcibly throw said lumber or other sawed material off of said live rollers, said rollers being too short to properly convey the timbers which were usually rolled out on same."

As to this finding it may be said that it is not disputed that, on said date, plaintiff was employed, as foreman, by defendant, to operate and oversee said machinery. That the said machinery was improperly constructed, and that it was dangerous to operate, as specified in said finding, is abundantly supported by the testimony. There was strong evidence to the contrary, but with that, of course, we cannot be concerned. How is it possible to maintain that the trial court was not legally justified in its conclusion as to the character of the said machinery when we recall the following statements of witnesses? The plaintiff testified:

"Basing my opinion upon my experience as a millwright, I would say that machinery as shown by the model is not properly constructed. The top of these chains ought to be under the surface of these rolls, and the rolls are too short for the timber they saw; they are 24 inches long, and they should be 30 inches, or 3 feet long, anyway. The purpose of having the rolls along there is so you can run anything wide across it. The live skids and chains rise above the live rolls at a point almost halfway across. When the timber is caught by the live chains it pulls it off into the slasher saws. We had to have a man standing there with a bar at the north end of that truss to keep crowding the timbers clear over on this side, in order to get them through, and lots of times they would have to crowd them on and follow them clear through in order to get them over. * * * No mill is properly constructed that has the skids above the surface of the rolls. That skid should be below the surface."

The witness, G. R. Jones, an experienced millwright, also testified that in order to be properly constructed, "the skids must be below the rollers and the rollers ought to be longer."

Witness W. E. Lane testified that the machinery was defective for the same reason and "the rolls that were put into the truss in said mill were 2 feet long. We put in these rolls at the order of Mr. Broadwell. They were furnished to us." Furthermore, that the purpose of these live chains is to "throw the slabs off the live rolls into the edger pits," and that the proper construction of a skid is "to have clearance from the rolls so the timber can pass over without catching. I mean below the live rolls."

W. H. Gusha also testified to the same effect and declared:

"In the operation of the mill, the result would be that timber came along there and would strike these things there like it does there now, that wouldn't go over the thing. That would carry it over here into these saws. Anything—don't make any difference what it is, slabs, boards, timbers or anything else."

We may quote this from Charles Noble's testimony:

"That transfer skid is too high, too high to let your timbers come down," and as to the rolls he said they should be 3 feet long, "so that the machinery won't drop off. They don't always come down the rolls straight. If it is narrow rolls, they drop off."

There is no controversy as to the competency of these witnesses, nor is it pretended that the subject is not a matter of expert testimony. If the foregoing does not justify the court's finding as to the character of the machinery, then we are at a loss to understand what should be required.

[2] Nor is there any more doubt as to the legal support for this finding:

"That said defendant was, shortly prior to the said 15th day of November, 1913, warned by plaintiff of the defective and unsafe condition of the machinery in said sawmill, in the particulars hereinabove, in paragraph 4, set forth, and said defendant had, after being so warned by plaintiff, promised to repair said machinery, and to put the same in good repair and in a safe condition, but defendant despite said warning, and contrary to said promise, did fail and neglect to do so; that plaintiff had, shortly prior to said 15th day of November, 1913, requested of defendant permission to repair said defective machinery, and to put the same in a safe condition and had requested defendant for permission to place and keep the same in good repair, but defendant did at all times refuse to permit plaintiff, and did fail to authorize plaintiff, to put said machinery in a good and safe condition; that at no time was it the duty of plaintiff, nor did plaintiff have the authority or permission, nor had he at any time been delegated by defendant, to put said machinery in good repair or in a perfect condition, nor did plaintiff at any time have in his charge or under his control the assistance or supplies or tools necessary to enable him to keep said machinery in good repair and in a safe and perfect condition or working order."

Every material fact contained therein is asserted by the plaintiff in his testimony. He testified that after becoming foreman he directed the attention of Mr. Danforth, the manager of the company to these defects and asked permission to overhaul the machinery, but Mr. Danforth said: "We might do it some time, but we can't do it now." As to the repairs he desired to make, the plaintiff testified:

"I was to build that truss over, and I wanted to get rolls the same length that came from the head saw right straight through. I wanted to tear that slasher table out and shove it ahead so that when the slab pulls through it won't catch in the conveyor and break the saws; I wanted twelve inch rolls so it would run above those skids, and get longer skids; the chains would run the same way only they would be under the surface of the rolls."

As to his authority to make changes, he testified positively that:

He had no such authority "without receiving orders from the managing officers. I had to make the application to Mr. Danforth; if anything broke I had to go to Mr. Danforth and get an order to get it. I couldn't do any repairs excepting keep the mill moving"; that he couldn't take down anything and put in new machinery without asking. "The change I really wanted to make was to get longer rolls and bigger rolls and make a new truss that would hold up the weight right straight through."

[3] It is, however, contended by appellant that the trouble was with these slasher chains, that they performed no useful function, that they should have been removed by respondent, and, since he failed to do so, he is responsible for any damage resulting from their presence. There is testimony on behalf of appellant supporting this theory, but it is flatly contradicted by respondent's showing. The plaintiff testified:

"There is a man working all of the time here at the end of this truss, whose duty it is to take a pickeroon when slabs come along, and throw them off the truss onto the table. He moves them over so that they catch the chains, and as soon as they catch the chains, then the chains carry them."

It is a fair inference from his testimony and other evidence in the record that these chains, if properly placed, were necessary for the efficient and successful operation of the machinery, and that, without them, the output of the mill would have been impaired. That the chains were useful is also strongly confirmed by the circumstance that the mill was never operated for a day without them. Even while Mr. Burns was foreman, during the summer of 1914, the chains were left on the truss, and they were not removed until after the mill was closed down. Nor is the situation affected by the consideration of the "automatic bumper" that was in use at one time. There is evidence that it did not remedy the said defective construction of the truss, and that it was discontinued before plaintiff took charge of the mill as foreman. As to this he testified:

"Well, we had a lot of trouble with it. Sometimes we would use it; sometimes we couldn't use it. It was simply a spring that was put on there; it was just a common little spring that came off. It would be broken all the time, and it was almost impossible to keep it going and sometimes it was in use and sometimes it wasn't. It wasn't in use when Mr. Broadwell left, I am pretty sure."

It also appears from the testimony of Mr. Broadwell that, when the bumper was in use, it was necessary to keep a man at the north end of the truss to guide the lumber and timbers away from the chains and over said truss. We may therefore regard the bumper as a feature of no moment in the determination of the cause.

The other important points are involved in the consideration of whether plaintiff was engaged in the performance of his duty at the time he claims to have received his injury, whether he was actually injured, and if so, whether it can be said to be the result of the unsafe condition of said machinery.

That he was doing work in the line of what was required of him under the circumstances as detailed by him is not disputed, and therefore we need not quote testimony to support the proposition.

[4, 5] As to the fact of the injury and how it occurred plaintiff testified:

"I was on the slasher table, and there was a timber 16x16 which was 4 pieces of 8x8 which came down the live rolls and the chains on the live rolls truss pulled it off and struck me in the back and crowded me toward the saw, and I swung around the end, and I had to crowd them back against the live chain and shove them clear back on the live chains and let them go through. As I done that I felt like I had been cut open in the groin. I had a pain all the time. I didn't know what it was, until I went and saw the doctor. It was the end of the timber that struck me. * * * When I was struck I was standing some place halfway between the truss and the saws. The blow didn't knock me down because I braced myself. I could not have walked on ahead because I was too close to the saws to walk ahead; it crowded me."

It appears, further, that immediately thereafter he told Mr. Danforth that he had been injured, but the manager walked away and did not answer him. There is testimony, also, that he told his wife about it, but it seems that he mentioned it to no one else. He continued to work for the company, to look after the operation of the mill for two weeks thereafter until it closed down on December 2d. He went to see Dr. Cornish on December 3d following, and on the 8th day of the month he was operated on for hernia. It may be admitted that plaintiff's story appears somewhat strange, singular, and suspicious, but we cannot say that it is inherently improbable. Attention is devoted by appellant to certain circumstances that tend to discredit his account of the occurrence, but they are not of sufficient weight, considered either separately or in the aggregate, to compel the conclusion that plaintiff was either mistaken in any material point or was fabricating any portion of the story. The circumstances surrounding the transaction were, no doubt, carefully considered by the trial judge, who concluded that plaintiff realized and related what happened, and his finding to that effect is not to be overturned here. It would accomplish no good to comment upon his story, as we find no sufficient reason to take it out of the rule that commits the determination of the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses to the trial judge when passing upon questions of fact. It may be said, also, to be a reasonable inference from plaintiff's testimony that the accident would not have occurred had it not been for said defects in the construction and operation of said machinery. The timbers were thrown off by reason of the extension of the chains over the rolls. The circumstance of the width of said rollers was probably, also, a factor in the movement of said timbers. It may be that if the man, whose duty it was to stand near the truss and guide with a "pickeroon" the movement of the lumber, had been in his place, the accident would not have happened, but we must accept the statement of plaintiff that the former was not at his post. Plaintiff was not responsible for this condition, and it does not and cannot weigh in appellant's favor.

[6-8] We may then briefly recapitulate the facts as follows: Plaintiff was employed as foreman by defendant to oversee and keep the mill running; he was furnished with imperfect and unsafe machinery which he had no authority to correct; he asked permission to make the necessary changes, but his request was denied, although he was promised that the defects would be remedied; he was at work in connection with said machinery in discharge of his duty when he received a serious injury by reason of said defective construction.

That these facts warranted the conclusion that defendant was legally responsible for the damage suffered by plaintiff cannot be disputed. The duty of the employer to provide for the employé a safe place and safe machinery for his work is, of course, well settled. This obligation was not neutralized nor affected in any manner by the knowledge of the defects on the part of respondent. At the time of the accident, the "Employers' Liability Act of the State of California" of 1911 was in force. Stats. of 1911, p. 796. That statute changed the rule theretofore existing as to assumption of risk and to contributory negligence. Moreover, in a case where the employé notifies an employer of the defects and the latter promises to remedy them, the former is justified in continuing in the employment upon the faith of the promise; and the employer is deemed to have assumed the risk of the work, unless the danger arising therefrom is so glaringly obvious that no prudent man would undertake it even under the direction and promise of the employer. Anderson v. Seropian, 147 Cal. 201, 81 Pac. 521. It cannot be said that such obvious danger existed in this case. The court below was justified in concluding that by reason of the said defects the danger of the work was augmented, but it would be unreasonable to hold that it was thereby rendered so perilous as to terrify and repel the man of average caution.

[9] In reference to "contributory negligence," it may be said that it was not pleaded, but, if we may consider it, the burden of proof was upon the defendant to establish it, and there is sufficient ground for holding that plaintiff was not so chargeable.

[10] It is, however, strongly urged by appellant that it was the duty of respondent to correct the defects, that he was charged with full responsibility to keep the machinery in repair, that he was authorized to do whatever was necessary for the successful operation of the mill, and that the case is one for the application of the doctrine enunciated in Duffy v. Hobbs, Wall & Co., 166 Cal. 210, 135 Pac. 1093, L. R. A. 1916F, 806. Therein it is said:

"Here it was the duty of Duffy to take care that the railing and posts alongside the conveyor were kept in good order and repair. He had undertaken to perform that obligation for and on behalf of the defendant, who relied on him to see that it was duly performed. The negligence, if any, which caused the injury, was the failure to examine the post to ascertain if it was decayed or had otherwise become incapable of holding nails securely and the failure to replace it with a new one, a thing which Duffy himself was under obligation to do. The neglect was his own. It would be unjust to hold his employer liable for the consequences of his own want of care and circumspection."

But it is only necessary to notice two vital circumstances that distinguish this case from that. Herein, the defect was not hidden or concealed. It was obvious and well known. Again, the court found upon sufficient evidence, as we have already seen, that it was not the duty of plaintiff to correct the defect, and he was not authorized to do so. Manifestly, he could not be chargeable with negligence for his failure to do something not within his authority and which it was the duty of defendant to perform.

Of course, we have considered the case upon the theory supported by the evidence in favor of plaintiff. The mistake made by appellant, one to which appellate courts often have occasion to advert, is in assuming as true the testimony favorable to its contention and ignoring the evidence upon which the findings are based. It is true that certain statements made by respondent, if considered alone, lend some support to appellant's contention, but the whole of his testimony, when fairly regarded, is consistent only with the position that it was not the duty of respondent nor was he authorized to correct said defect.

Some other matters of minor importance are discussed by counsel, but it would not be profitable to notice them further.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The able counsel for appellant in their petition for rehearing lay particular stress upon the point that the plaintiff was not in the discharge of his duty at the time of the alleged accident, but was performing the work of the slasherman, who was absent. Hence the contention is made that the doctrine of the Duffy Case applies to the facts herein. The proposition was not elaborately treated in the opinion, but it was considered by the court, and it was deemed sufficient to make the general statement, based upon the testimony of plaintiff, that he was at work "in discharge of his duty." It was a fair inference, indeed, from his testimony that it was his duty to see that the mill continued to operate, and that, if he observed the work being neglected in any way, it was incumbent upon him to see that it was properly attended to. He was not required to stop the mill and go in search of the slasherman, but he was authorized to take his place during his absence. In determining the matter we must, of course, regard the rule that leaves the credibility of the witnesses to the jury or the trial court.

This case has received our very careful consideration, and, while we are not insensible to the force of appellant's argument, we are constrained to hold that there was a sufficient showing within the established controlling principles of law to warrant a finding upon the merits in favor of plaintiff.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

BEARCE et al. v. DAVIS. (Civ. 1545.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1126—ABANDONMENT OF APPEAL—AFFIRMANCE.

Where, when time for filing opening brief expired, it was extended, no further extension was asked or granted, cause was placed on calendar and notice given attorneys, and at call of calendar there was no appearance by either party, and cause was ordered submitted on record, consisting of clerk's and reporter's transcripts, the appellate court might affirm on assumption appeal has been abandoned.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⊂⊃538(5) — ACTION — INSTRUCTIONS.

In action on note, defendant claiming he signed no note on date alleged, instructions as to date of signing and defendant's liability on note of prior date for like amount, execution of which he admitted, held clearly to present issues to jury.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1002—REVIEW—VERDICT ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

In action on note, where there was substantial evidence to support verdict for defendant based on conflicting evidence as to execution of note, appellate court will not interfere.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by Byron A. Bearce and others against J. M. Davis. From judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

James D. Meredith, of Sacramento, for appellants.

F. W. Henderson, of Merced, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. [1] The transcript on appeal in this case was filed April 30, 1916. The time for filing opening brief by appellants expired May 22, 1916, and on that day the time for filing appellants' brief was extended 30 days. No further extension of time was asked and none granted. The cause was placed upon the September calendar, 1918, and due notice thereof given to the attorneys for the respective parties. At the call of the calendar there was no appearance by either party and the cause was ordered submitted on the record. We have before us nothing but the clerk's transcript, showing the judgment roll, and the reporter's transcript of the proceedings at the trial. We might, with propriety, affirm the judgment on the assumption that the appeal has been abandoned. We have, however, examined the record. The nature of the action and the defense thereto will be seen from the following instruction given by the court:

"This is an action in which plaintiff seeks to recover judgment against defendant J. M. Davis upon a promissory note alleged to have been executed by defendant and thereafterwards indorsed by him and delivered to B. H. Payne, who plaintiff claims subsequently sold and assigned said promissory note to plaintiff. Plaintiff alleges that said promissory note is for the principal sum of $1,000 together with interest on said sum from January 12, 1915, until paid at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. Plaintiff contends that the promissory note sued on herein was executed on the 12th day of January, 1915, by defendant J. M. Davis, and sold and assigned before the maturity thereof by B. H. Payne, defendant's indorsee, to plaintiff for a valuable consideration. Plaintiff alleges that no part of the principal sum nor any of the interest thereon has ever been paid by defendant.

"By way of defense, defendant denies the execution of the note pleaded in plaintiff's complaint, denies that he ever signed the same, or that he ever indorsed it or delivered it to B. H. Payne."

The cause was tried by a jury, and defendant had the verdict, and judgment followed in his favor.

Defendant testified to the circumstances surrounding the execution and delivery to Payne, in 1914, a note for like amount, but positively denied the execution of any other note or of the note in suit. Payne testified quite as positively that this note was executed by defendant and delivered to him by defendant on the day of its date. Upon the question of execution and delivery of the note the evidence was in conflict.

The court instructed the jury as follows:

"Plaintiff alleges that on the 12th day of January, 1915, defendant executed the note pleaded in its complaint, and defendant denies this. I instruct you that the date of said instrument as alleged is material, and you must find, if you find in favor of the plaintiff, that on the 12th day of January, 1915, or thereabouts, defendant executed a note for the principal sum of $1,000, bearing date January 12, 1915, as alleged in plaintiff's complaint.

"Defendant admits that on or about the 25th day of July, 1914, he executed a promissory note for the principal sum of $1,000 bearing date on said day and delivered the same to B. H. Payne. I instruct you that proof of or admission of the execution by defendant of the last-mentioned note is no proof of the execution, if any, of the note sued on in this action.

"In order for plaintiff to recover, among other things, it must be proved that defendant executed and delivered the identical note pleaded in its complaint; proof of the execution of another note will be of no avail."

[2, 3] The issues were thus very clearly placed before the jury. There was testimony as to the circumstances under which Payne received the note given by defendant in 1914 and their subsequent relations which we do not think it necessary to set forth, but which may have influenced the jury in reaching their verdict. However, there was a conflict in the testimony upon the main issue. The jury accepted the defendant's testimony as true, and, having done so, the verdict for defendant necessarily followed. Under the rule, where there is substantial evidence sufficient to support the verdict the reviewing court will not interfere.

The judgment is affirmed.

HENDERSON v. FISHER. (Civ. 1698.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 25, 1918.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⟸262(3)—FORECLOSURE—PURCHASE BY MORTGAGEE—STATUTE.

Where chattel mortgagee, through his agent, conducted foreclosure sale of property, and became purchaser, his position, under Civ. Code, §§ 2967, 3005, and Code Civ. Proc. § 694, was analogous to that of a sheriff in conducting execution sale, and effect of sale as to him was same as if sheriff bid at execution sale, in which case sale would have been voidable, if not void.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⟸262(1)—FRAUDULENT FORECLOSURE SALE.

Finding that sale of plaintiff's property covered by chattel mortgage was unfairly and fraudulently conducted by defendant mortgagee, who purchased the property himself en masse, held justified by facts that plaintiff made reasonable effort to have property sold in lots to suit bidders, and that property was worth $2,500, but sold to defendant for $506.

3. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⟸262(1)—FORECLOSURE SALE—FAIRNESS.

To be effective, foreclosure sale by chattel mortgagee must be fairly and honestly conducted in all respects, and he has no right by any unfairness to sacrifice property for anything less than its fair market value, his conduct, fairness of sale, and rights acquired under it being always open to investigation by mortgagor.

4. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⟸262(3)—FORECLOSURE SALE—PURCHASE BY MORTGAGEE.

As a general rule, a chattel mortgagee cannot purchase at his own foreclosure sale under power, in absence of agreement in mortgage, or of statutory provisions. His purchase may invalidate the sale, and does not bar mortgagor of his equity of redemption.

5. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⟸262(3)—FORECLOSURE SALE—PURCHASE BY MORTGAGEE—LIABILITY.

By purchasing property at sale to foreclose chattel mortgage, mortgagee becomes liable to mortgagor for actual value at sale, without reference to amount bid; his liability being for difference between market and actual value of property sold, though he was not guilty of actual fraud.

6. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⟸262(2)—FORECLOSURE SALE—OFFERING PROPERTY IN LUMP—UNFAIRNESS.

Where property covered by chattel mortgage consists of many parcels, and mortgagee at foreclosure sale offers whole in a lump, instead of in such lots as would suit buyers, the manner of sale is unfair.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; Clarence A. Raker, Judge.

Action by W. R. Henderson against W. F. Fisher. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jamison & Wylie, of Alturas, for appellant.
C. S. Baldwin, of Alturas, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action involved the validity of a sale of certain horses and mules under chattel mortgage of the same given in connection with a real estate mortgage to secure the payment of a promissory note of $4,000 and interest. The sale of said personal property was set aside by the court by reason of irregularity in the proceedings connected with said sale, and also because the court found that said sale was unfairly and fraudulently conducted by the defendant with the—

"intent and design on his part to foreclose plaintiff's equity of redemption in and to the mortgaged personal property and to purchase the same thereat for himself and for his own use and benefit at a sum far less than the actual value thereof."

The irregularity in said sale consisted in the fact that the defendant was a purchaser of the property and that he disregarded the directions of plaintiff as to the order in which the property should be sold.

There can be no doubt that the findings of the court in these particulars are amply supported by the evidence, and that the said findings warrant the judgment that was entered in favor of plaintiff for the recovery of the sum of $1,941.66.

As to the sale, the law provides that it must be had at—

"public auction, in the manner and upon the notice of sale of personal property under execution." Civ. Code, §§ 2967, 3005.

Section 694 of the Code of Civil Procedure prescribes the manner of sale under execution, and the portions of this section particularly applicable to the case at bar are as follows:

"Neither the officer holding the execution nor his deputy can become a purchaser, or be interested in any purchase, at such sale. When the sale is of personal property, capable of manual delivery, it must be within view of those who attend the sale, and be sold in such parcels as are likely to bring the highest price."

Furthermore:

"The judgment debtor, if present at the sale, may also direct the order in which the property, real or personal, shall be sold, when such property consists of several known lots or parcels, or of articles which can be sold to advantage separately, and the sheriff must follow such directions."

[1] Since it appears, both from the pleadings and the evidence, that the mortgagee, through his agent, conducted the sale and became a purchaser of the mortgaged property at such sale the position of appellant was analogous to the sheriff in conducting an execution sale; and hence the effect as to appellant of said sale would be the same as if the sheriff had bid at an execution sale. But in the latter instance, under the decisions, there can be no doubt that the sale would be at least voidable, if not void. Wickliff v. Robinson, 18 Ill. 145; Price v. Thompson, 84 Ky. 219, 1 S. W. 408; Carr v. Houser, 46 Ga. 477.

The case of Wright v. Ross, 36 Cal. 442, is cited by appellant in support of the position that the mortgagee may become a purchaser of the mortgaged property. It is to be observed, however, that this case related to a judicial sale, and was had before section 3005 of the Civil Code was amended in 1909. That decision is not in point upon the proposition before us.

As to the manner of sale the court found:

"That at said sale all of said property was sold en masse; that plaintiff was present at said sale and made a reasonable effort to have said property sold in parcels to suit the convenience of bidders present at said sale and that his efforts in that behalf were ignored by defendant and his agent who conducted said sale; that bidders present at said sale offered to defendant and to his agent who conducted said sale to bid reasonable sums for certain portions of said property less than the whole, but that said offers were ignored by defendant and his agent who conducted the sale; and that the character of said personal property is such that it would probably bring more if sold in parcels than if sold en masse."

[2] As before stated, this finding is supported by the evidence. It further appears from the evidence and the court found that the value of said mortgaged property was at the time of said sale and ever since has been of the amount of $2,500. It was all sold, however, for the sum of $506. It was upon that fact in connection with the manner in which the sale was conducted that the court based its decision that this sale was unfairly and fraudulently conducted by defendant, which finding we have hereinbefore sufficiently recited. We think that this finding was justified by the facts to which we have hereinbefore alluded.

As to the principles of law applicable to the facts of the case there can be little dispute and we may briefly state them.

[3-5] To be effective a sale by a mortgagee must in all respects be fairly and honestly conducted, and he has no right by any unfairness to sacrifice the property for anything less than its fair market value. The conduct and fairness of a sale of chattels by a mortgagee, and the rights acquired under such sale will always be open to investigation at the instance of the mortgagor. As a general rule, the mortgagee cannot purchase at his own sale under the power in the mortgage in the absence of an agreement in the mortgage or of statutory provisions to that effect. His purchase may invalidate the sale and does not bar the mortgagor of his equity of redemption. By such act, a mortgagee becomes liable to the mortgagor for the actual value of the property at the time of the sale without reference to the amount bid. His liability, in such cases, is for the difference between the market and the actual value of the property sold, notwithstanding he was not guilty of actual fraud.

[6] Where the mortgaged property consists of many parcels, and the mortgagee offers the whole for sale in a lump, instead of offering it in such lots as would suit the convenience of buyers, this is considered an unfair manner of sale.

The foregoing principles of law applicable to the situation are enunciated in a note to the case of Wygal v. Bigelow, 16 Am. St. Rep. 495, to which we may refer for a comprehensive discussion of the whole subject. Many cases are therein considered which have an important bearing upon the position of respondent herein and are in harmony with the decision of the trial court.

It may be remarked in conclusion that the court allowed appellant credit for the balance due on his note, and gave plaintiff judgment for the difference between that and the actual value of the stock as shown by the evidence. We can see no merit in the claim of appellant, and presume he probably concluded that there was no valid answer to respondent's contention, as he has filed no final brief in the case and did not appear for oral argument.

The judgment is affirmed.

WALDTEUFEL v. JONES. (Civ. 2456.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 26, 1918.)

BROKERS ⊜86(6) — ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION — IDENTITY OF CONTRACT AUTHORIZED WITH THAT CONSUMMATED.

In broker's action for commission, evidence held to sustain finding that the broker had not proved that contract entered into was the same as that which he was authorized to negotiate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by J. A. Waldteufel against C. H. Jones. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. D. L. Held, of Ukiah, for appellant.
Robert Duncan, of Ukiah, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action to recover broker's commissions for obtaining interests in certain real estate. The defendant had judgment in the trial court, the plaintiff has appealed, and has brought up the record under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. In his complaint the plaintiff alleged that the defendant employed him "to acquire for and on behalf of said defendant, an option to purchase said property and to lease the same." The trial court made a negative finding on the above allegation. The appellant claims such finding is not supported by the evidence.

The allegation is not clear, but the plaintiff tried the case on the theory that the allegation of his complaint was to the effect that he was employed to obtain an agreement for a lease containing an option to purchase. Taking plaintiff's theory as to the meaning of his pleading, we think the finding complained of is sustained by the record. It is an admitted fact that at San Francisco, in the absence of the plaintiff, the defendant leased from J. A. Ridemeyer the property known as Vichy Springs; that the lease commenced June 1, 1914, and was to expire March 1, 1917; the rental was fixed at $2,500 per year, payable, June 1, 1914, March 1, 1915, and March 1, 1916; the property leased was described (partly by government subdivisions and partly by metes and bounds) as "containing in the neighborhood of 900 acres," also the equipment of the hotel, consisting of kitchen range, kitchen and dining room and bedroom furniture, and linen; the lease contained an option to purchase for the sum of $55,000 the above-mentioned real and personal property, or to purchase for $70,000 that property and adjacent lands, 1,400 acres in all. The plaintiff did not produce any evidence that he ever obtained an agreement for a contract containing such terms. The lessor, J. A. Ridemeyer, testified positively that he never gave to the plaintiff any agreement for any lease. The record shows a conflict in the evidence on the quoted finding, if not a failure of proof.

The judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

HOWARD v. STEPHENS. (Civ. 1871.)

1. GIFTS ⟸49(4) — GIFTS OF LAND INTER VIVOS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.
In a suit to quiet title to land claimed by plaintiff under a parol gift as against a subsequent deed to another by the donor, evidence held to sustain a finding that the fee to the land was given to plaintiff outright instead of merely the use of the land for life.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1010(1)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.
If there is substantial evidence to support a conclusion reached by the trial court as to sufficiency of the evidence, the finding will not be reviewed, even where the law requires proof of the fact to be clear and convincing.

In a suit to quiet title to land held by plaintiff under a parol gift as against a subsequent deed by the donor, evidence held to show improvements made by the plaintiff with the donor's knowledge sufficient to take the case out of the statute of frauds under the doctrine of estoppel.

4. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF ⟸129(7) — PAROL GIFT OF LAND—VALIDITY.
A verbal gift of land may be taken out of the statute of frauds by the construction of improvements thereon by the donee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Suit by Eliza Howard against L. H. Stephens to quiet title to realty. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed and rehearing denied.

Elmer W. Armfield and Arthur B. Eddy, both of Woodland, for appellant.

Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The action is to quiet plaintiff's title to a certain 40-acre tract of land situated in Yolo county, to wit, the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter section 20, township 10 north, range 2 east, M. D. B. and M., and to have canceled a certain deed to the same land under which defendant claims title. The cause was tried by the court, and plaintiff had findings and judgment in her favor. Defendant appeals from the judgment under the alternative method.

It is alleged in the complaint that on February 22, 1875, Rhoda S. Bonynge was the owner of said land, and that on said day she—

"made a parol gift of the said tract of land to the said plaintiff herein, and stated to the said plaintiff that the said land should then and there be her property, and that she should immediately occupy the same; that, acting upon the said gift as aforesaid, the said plaintiff immediately took possession of the said tract of land, and ever since said date has been and now is in the exclusive possession thereof; that the said plaintiff so entered into and has ever since remained in the possession of the said premises with the knowledge, consent, and concurrence of the said Bonynge, and has made lasting and valuable improvements thereon, and paid the state and county taxes thereon; that during all of said times herein referred to said plaintiff has been in the open, notorious, and exclusive possession of the said land; that while said plaintiff was in such possession, to wit, on the 7th day of March, 1914, the said Rhoda S. Bonynge conveyed the same to the defendant, L. H. Stephens; that the said Stephens knew that said plaintiff was in possession of the said premises at the time of said conveyance, and also knew that the said plaintiff had been in the possession thereof for many years previous to such conveyance to him; that said Stephens accepted said conveyance with full notice of all the legal and equitable rights of the said plaintiff in and to said premises and in subordination to those rights; that said deed to said Stephens was made without any consideration."

As a second cause of action plaintiff claims ownership by adverse possession.

A general and special demurrer was overruled, and defendant answered specifically denying the averments of the complaint as to plaintiff's alleged ownership and means of acquiring the same.

It is alleged in the answer as follows:

"That said Rhoda S. Bonynge never at any time gave to said plaintiff the title to said property or any interest therein, and never at any time promised to give to said plaintiff the said title to said property or the title to any interest therein, and that the right of said plaintiff in said premises was a mere tenancy at will, and disposition thereof was at all times subject to the right of said Rhoda S. Bonynge to terminate the same; that said conveyance was made to this defendant for the purposes expressed by said Rhoda S. Bonynge at the time said conveyance was made, to wit, that the legal title to said premises should be conveyed to this defendant, that this defendant should permit the plaintiff in this action to retain the possession thereof or the right to the use of the rents, issues, incomes, and profits thereof for and during the term of her natural life, and that upon her death this defendant should sell the said premises and dispose of the proceeds thereof by distribution to certain persons named by the said Rhoda S. Bonynge at the time the conveyance was so made to this defendant as aforesaid."

The court made the following findings of fact:

"(1) That all of the allegations of the said complaint are true.

"(2) That all of the allegations of the first cause of action of said complaint are true.

"(3) That all of the allegations of the second cause of action of the said complaint are true.

"(4) It is not true that during all of the time mentioned in the plaintiff's complaint said Rhoda S. Bonynge did permit said plaintiff to occupy said premises and to collect, retain, and keep the rents, issues, and profits thereof for the support and maintenance of the plaintiff. It is not true that said Rhoda S. Bonynge never, at any time, gave to said plaintiff the title to said property or any interest therein. It is not true that the said Rhoda S. Bonynge never, at any time, promised to give to said plaintiff the said title to said property or the title to any interest therein. It is not true that the right of plaintiff in said premises was or is a mere tenancy at will. It is not true that the control and disposition thereof was at all times, or at any time, subject to the right of the said Rhoda S. Bonynge to terminate the same. It is true that, at the time of the conveyance from Rhoda S. Bonynge to the defendant, she stated to him that the purpose of said conveyance was to convey the legal title to said premises, and that said Stephens should permit the plaintiff to retain possession thereof, or the right to the use of the rents, issues, income, and profits thereof for and during the term of her natural life; that said Bonynge also expressed said purpose at the time of the making of the said conveyance to the said defendant; that upon her death the defendant should sell the said premises and dispose of the proceeds thereof by distribution to certain persons named by said Rhoda S. Bonynge at the time the said conveyance was made to said defendant. However, in this respect, the court finds that at the time of the conveyance of said property by said Rhoda S. Bonynge to the said defendant herein she was not the owner thereof, had no interest whatever in the same, and had no right, title, or interest of any kind or character, either in law or in equity, in or to the said property or any part thereof; that at said time the said plaintiff herein was the owner of said property.

"(5) That the defendant, L. H. Stephens, did not acquire any right, title, or interest in and to said property by virtue of the said conveyance made to him by the said Rhoda S. Bonynge or otherwise; that the said defendant, Stephens, is not, and never has been, the owner of any right, title, or interest in and to said property, or any part or parcel thereof; that the said plaintiff, Eliza Howard, is the owner of the said lands and premises described in said complaint, and the whole thereof, and is entitled to the possession thereof."

As conclusions of law the court found that plaintiff is the owner of said land, and that the deed executed and delivered to defendant be annulled and canceled.

In his opening statement counsel for defendant said:

"And so that your honor may understand the situation as we see it, we at this time, and at all times during the trial of this case, will admit that so far as Mrs. Bonynge is concerned, that she did intend that Mrs. Howard, the plaintiff in this case, should have a life estate in the property, or the right to the use of the rents, issues, incomes, and profits for and during her natural life, but the remainder was absolutely subject to the control of Mrs. Bonynge, and has been conveyed to Mr. Stephens."

The sole question in the case is thus presented.

Defendant makes the following contentions: (1) That the finding that a parol gift was made by Mrs. Bonynge to plaintiff in 1875 is not supported by the evidence. (2) Assuming a parol gift to have been established, "the same is absolutely void and unenforceable under the statute of frauds," as the proof of the alleged valuable improvements on the premises "does not measure up to the requirements of the decided cases." (3) That the judgment, so far as it is founded upon adverse possession, is not supported by the findings.

It appeared that plaintiff and her husband, Stephen A. Howard, came to California in 1861, and took up their residence in Yolo county, in a neighborhood called Buckeye, some 20 miles distant from the town of Woodland, and were engaged in farming. Mrs. Rhoda Bonynge, then Rhoda Stephens, plaintiff's sister, came to the state in 1862. She was then unmarried, and made her home with her sister, Mrs. Howard. About three years later she married C. W. Bonynge, and thereafter, and until her husband removed to London, England, resided in San Francisco. Mrs. Bonynge made frequent and protracted visits to her sister, Mrs. Howard, their relations being of the most affectionate character, so remaining until Mrs. Bonynge's death at her home in London in June, 1914, except for an incident which occurred in relation to some property in Yolo county belonging to Mrs. Bonynge and which had been looked after and managed by plaintiff and her husband for a long period of years. This incident will be referred to later. Mrs. Bonynge was a very warm-hearted and generous woman, and very fond of her relatives, several of whom resided in California. This generosity manifested itself by gifts of money and property. To one of her sisters, Mrs. Hawxhurst, she gave a dwelling house in San Francisco. It was during one of her visits at the home of her sister that Mrs. Bonynge announced her intention of purchasing a more suitable home for her sister Mrs. Howard.

Plaintiff's deposition was taken prior to the trial (October, 1915), in which the foregoing facts appear. She testified that her sister Rhoda, before her marriage to Mr. Bonynge, "made her headquarters" with witness for about three years; that her family lived at Buckeye about ten or twelve years before moving to the land in question, to which she testified they moved "about 40 years ago." She testified:

"Q. Now, how did you come to move on this tract of land that we are having this suit about? A. Well, she bought the place and give it to me. Q. By 'she' you mean whom? A. My sister, Mrs. Bonynge. Q. Well, now, what did she say to you in regard to this place before you moved there? A. Well, she bought it and made it a present to me. Q. Made you a present of it? A. Yes, sir. Q. This conversation occurred before you moved on the ranch, did it? A. Of course it did. Q. Now, after the conversation occurred, did you and Mr. Howard and your family move on the ranch? A. Well, Mr. Howard went down first and fixed it up, you know, and made a home, I guess, for a month or six weeks before we moved there. Q. What was the condition of the property at the time you went on it—did it have any buildings on it? A. No, nothing to speak of, worth speaking of. Q. Did it have any barn? A. No, sir. Q. What kind of a house or dwelling? A. Oh, just a shack like, so we went down there and had it all fixed up in good shape. Q. Was it fenced at that time? A. No, sir; that is, it was fenced, but you know how the fencing they used was 40 years ago, old acorn wood—I mean — Q. Oak trees? A. Oak trees, they sawed down and made posts of; they all rotted down. The first thing we done was to make new fence, build a new barn, and put up a windmill. Q. Did you build a dwelling? A. Yes. Q. Now, subsequent to the putting up of that barn, was it destroyed by fire? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you rebuild it again? A. Yes. Q. Were any of the other buildings on the lands ever destroyed by fire outside of the barn? A. No, sir. Q. About what kind of barn did you put there the first time? A. $450 barn, the first one. Q. Do you know how much you spent on the house? A. Oh, laws, no; I used to keep account and did for years. Q. I mean, Mrs. Howard, how much you spent right at the first time, when you put the house on the place? A. I don't know that I could tell you that; my husband was living then, he attended to all such business; didn't bother me. I didn't know what business was. Q. After you moved on the place involved in this action, how long did you live, actually live, on the place before you left it? A. Well, I must have lived there 20 years or more. Q. To put it in another way, were you living there at the time of Mr. Howard's death? A. Oh, yes, yes. Q. For how many years after Mr. Howard's death did you remain on the place? A. I guess for about five years. Q. And then when you did leave the premises, did you lease them to anybody? A. Yes, I rented it out. Q. In whose name did you rent it? A. My own. Q. Who collected the rents? A. I did. Q. And kept them? A. Yes, sir. Q. During all of the time following your occupation of the land after Mrs. Bonynge told you she would give it to you and to the present time, who has paid the taxes on the property? A. Well, indeed, I have. Q. You have paid them all the time? A. Always. Q. Now, going back, Mrs. Howard, at the time you moved on the premises, was Mrs. Bonynge then living in California when you went out on the ranch? A. When I first moved there? Q. Yes, when you first moved there. A. Yes, she was here then." She testified that after moving to their new home Mrs. Bonynge visited her many times—"come and stay a month and bring her children"—before she made her home in England. "Q. After you moved on the place, did you have any conversation with Mrs. Bonynge in regard to her giving you a deed to the place? A. Well, the last time she was over here we were talking about it; she was so glad to see how we had improved everything and made such a lovely home; that I says, 'Well, that is all right, of course; why don't you deed me the place?' I had no deed to it, but it was a gift. She says, 'Well, if I deed it to you, you would do just like Sister Kate'—she gave her a home in San Francisco and deeded it to her, and as soon as her husband needed the money she mortgaged it and she lost the home; so she says to me, 'The way it is, it is yours, and if you die first it will go to your children;' and so I never gave it a thought any more, just went ahead as though it was all right. Q. Well, do you remember about the year that she paid her last visit here? A. No, sir, I don't; but her daughter, her oldest daughter, was a grown young lady then. Q. That was after she had removed to England? A. Yes, after they were located there. Q. Subsequent to her last visit to you on the ranch, when this conversation occurred, did you ever have any correspondence with her? A. Always. Q. How long did the correspondence continue? A. Until her death."

She testified that after Mr. Bonynge moved to England many letters passed between them, in none of which, "until the dispute arose over the deeding of this property," did Mrs. Bonynge say anything in regard to plaintiff's ownership of this property; that witness and her husband managed and attended to the leasing of the Esparto ranch for Mrs. Bonynge, collecting and accounting for the rents from year to year for many years, and at no time did Mrs. Bonynge ask for any accounting of rents for the land in question. It was the sale of this Esparto ranch to Mr. Clowe (Mrs. Howard's son-in-law, we infer) at a price Mrs. Bonynge thought too low, though previously agreed to by her, that caused some criticism by Mrs. Bonynge. She claimed that she was not informed of his purpose to put water on the land, thus enhancing its value, which had she known she would not have sold the ranch at the price agreed upon. Mrs. Howard seems to have been blamed somewhat for this, and by her it is claimed, not without some show of reason, that the incident had something to do with Mrs. Bonynge's making the deed to the property in question to defendant. At the trial Mrs. Howard was called as a witness and testified to the circumstances connected with the gift. She was asked again to state what was said by Mrs. Bonynge "in regard to her making a deed to this property to her," and answered:

"Well, she gave Mrs. Hawxhurst a home, and she had mortgaged it, you know, for money for her husband to spend in his business, so they lost it, and that was why, now, she says, 'Your home will be yours and your children's;' but she says, 'I'll not give you a deed to it until later.' Q. Until later? A. Yes, sir; and so Mrs. Clowe wanted to buy the place. I asked for the deed, you know. I didn't know there was any trouble. Q. How do you mean, you didn't know there was any trouble? A. Well, of course Mrs. Bonynge didn't give me the deed as she promised to; I didn't know what the trouble was. * * * The Court: In one of the answers in the deposition, this one thing I wanted to have Mrs. Howard speak about. On page 6—it is in about the same relation that you were just questioning. You made part of this answer, Mrs. Howard: 'The way it is'—this is in response to this matter in regard to her giving you a deed: 'The way it is, it is yours, and if you die first it will go to your children.' Now, is that the exact language, or is that substantially the language, that she used? A. Yes, sir. Q. And what did you understand by that, that she was yet to give you a deed or something before it would go to your children? A. Well, the understanding was that if—we didn't think but what I would die first, I was ten years older than she was—that she would see that it went to my children. Mr. Huston: What the judge is trying to get at, Mrs. Howard, is whether or not, as I understand it—is whether or not Mrs. Bonynge told you that the property was to be yours outright, or whether you were to have it, and at your death it would go to your children. That's what you have in mind? The Court: Yes. Mr. Huston: In other words, whether it was an absolute gift to you, or then to your children?

A. Yes. Q. Which was it? A. It was to me and then to my children, and if I wanted to sell the place—you see, now, Mrs. Clowe said she would take it. The Court: The only thing that bothered me was whether something else was to be done. Mr. Huston: All right. Q. Explain whether it was to be your place outright, or whether it was to go to you and then to your children. A. It was my place outright. Mr. Huston: I'll read you so you can get the connection. This is a talk after you moved on the place, you will notice: 'Did you have any conversation with Mrs. Bonynge in regard to her giving you a deed?' Now that's after you got out there. Answer: 'The last time she was over here we were talking about it; she was so glad to see how we had improved everything and made such a lovely home that I says, "Well, that's all right, of course; why don't you deed me the place?" I had no deed to it, but it was a gift. She says, "Well, if I deed it to you, you would do just like Sister Kate." She gave her a home in San Francisco and deeded it to her, and as soon as her husband needed the money she mortgaged it and she lost the home; so she says to me, "The way it is, it is yours, and if you die first it will go to your children," so I never give it a thought any more; just went ahead and thought it was all right.' A. Well, that's all right, too. Q. And that was the talk you had with her afterward? A. Yes, sir. Q. Before you moved on the place was there anything said that you were to only have it for your life, or whether you were to have it outright? A. No, I was to have it outright, or I wouldn't moved there any other way. Q. Before you moved there, as I understand your testimony, you and Mr. Howard were living over there near Buckeye, farming it there? A. Yes; my children was old enough to be in college. She thought I ought to move down there, so I did. Q. Then, as I understand you, she said it would be yours outright, and she held this deed back so Mr. Howard could not mortgage it? A. Yes; that's what she said, because he was trading all the time, and she says, 'You would do like Sister Kate,' and I said, 'I guess I would.' Q. Can you state whether Mrs. Bonynge ever at any time prior to her deeding this property to Mr. Stephens made any claim in your presence or to your knowledge that you were only to have this as long as you lived? A. Never did. Mr. Huston: I think that's all I have. Mr. Armfield: Is that all, Judge? The Court: Yes, that's all; but of course there are remarks in there to which you could give two interpretations. Q. You felt, did you, Mrs. Howard, at the time the property was purchased, that it was purchased for you absolutely? A. Yes, sir; absolutely. Q. And in your conversation with Mrs. Bonynge she indicated to you the same whenever you spoke of it? A. Yes, sir."

Mrs. Howard testified that she first learned of the deed to defendant when she saw it mentioned in a local newspaper; that she shortly afterwards had a conversation with defendant about it at her home when Mrs. Clowe was present.

"Q. Can you state just what was said between you and Lawrence Stephens at that time in regard to this property, substantially as you remember it, stating what you said and what he said, and what, if anything, Mrs. Clowe said? A. I said, 'Why Lawrence, I see you have got a deed to my home.' He says, 'Yes.' I says, 'How did it happen, what is the cause of it?' He says, 'I don't know, Aunt Liza, it is a mystery to me; I didn't know Aunt Rhoda—never had a letter from her'— Q. He never had a letter from her? A. Not until she wrote to him that she wanted to give him a deed to my home; so I says, 'Why, Lawrence, the best thing you can do to save trouble is to deed it back to me.' Q. What did he say to that? A. He says, 'I can't unless I had her consent,' you see, so he said then. I says, 'Well, you write to her then and see the cause.' I says, 'I don't understand what it is done for; it is undermining work, that is a mystery to me.' Q. What did he say in regard to writing to her? A. He said he would. Q. Then after that conversation did you have any other talk with him—a second one? A. No, sir; I never did. Q. Never heard anything more about it? A. No, sir; nothing at all."

J. C. Maxwell testified that he had lived in Yolo county for 60 years, and in the Buckeye neighborhood when plaintiff's family resided there; that he knew the Howards, and had known Mrs. Bonynge "all of her life nearly"; that he remembered the fact of the Howards moving to the land in question.

"Q. Now, before Mr. and Mrs. Howard moved on to this place north of Woodland, or about that time, did you meet Mrs. Bonynge anywhere? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where? A. Several times. Q. Now, did you ever have any conversation with Mrs. Bonynge in regard to Mrs. Howard coming on to this place? A. Well, twice; yes, sir. Q. And where was your first conversation? A. At Mr. Howard's. Q. At Buckeye or Woodland? A. Yes, sir. Q. And where was your second conversation? A. At Mr. Joe Stephens' at Madison. Q. And on what place? A. Madison. Q. At Madison? A. Yes, sir. Q. And was it before or after Mrs. Howard came to Woodland? A. It was before. Q. Both conversations were before? A. Yes, sir. Q. Can you tell the court, as near as you can recollect, what was said between you and Mrs. Bonynge upon this subject, giving us substantially the conversation? A. Which conversation? Q. The first one. A. Mrs. Bonynge was unwell and was lying on a couch, and I came in and was talking, and in the conversation, during the time, the children came in from school. Q. Mrs. Howard's children? A. Yes; and she looked at them and she said, 'It's too far for the children to walk;' but she said she was looking at a place to buy for her sister—she always called Mrs. Howard her sister; that's about all—she said she was looking at a place at that time. Q. What did she say in the second conversation you had with her? A. The second time I don't remember anything more than she said she had bought the place, when Mr. Stephens and Mrs. Stephens, Mr. Stephens' first wife, and I were talking to her; she said she had bought it, and we all spoke about the place. * * * Q. Can you think of anything else she said in regard to this property? A. No, sir; I can't. Q. And that was before Mrs. Howard moved over here? A. Well, yes, sir; that was before Mrs. Howard came to Woodland. Q. Now, I want to ask you what, if anything, was said as to the education of the Howard children—was there anything said? A. Well, she said she was—in our first conversation she said that it was too far for the children to walk. They were walking to the Union schoolhouse; it was about 2 or 3 miles. She said she was looking at a place near Woodland to buy for her sister so that the children would be nearer school. Q. And in the next conversation she informed you that she had bought it? A. That she had bought the place. I don't remember anything else she said about it, only that she had bought the place, in the conversation."

Mrs. Kate Hawxhurst, sister of Mrs. Bonynge and of plaintiff, a witness for defendant, testified that Mrs. Howard moved to the land north of Woodland in 1875.

"Q. Did you at about the time, or at the time in 1875, when the Howards moved to this place north of Woodland, did you have any conversation with Mrs. Bonynge relative to that place? A. Yes. Q. Where? A. In San Francisco. Q.

And at your house, or her house, if you know? A. Oh, I don't know. The conversation was what she told me—of course I know nothing except what she told me. Q. Was any one else present? A. That I don't know. Q. And what did she say to you? Mr. Huston: Just a minute. Was Mrs. Howard present? Mr. Armfield: No. Mr. Huston: Object on the ground it is incompetent; any declaration or statement of Mrs. Bonynge in the absence or out of the presence of Mrs. Howard cannot bind her, is self-serving, and for the purpose of establishing any fact in this case is hearsay, irrelevant, and immaterial. Mr. Armfield: Even under the doctrine of Bury against Young this would be admissible. It is a statement made by Mrs. Bonynge against her own interest; and, further, under the later doctrine laid down in Williams against Kidd and Rice against Carey it is admissible, in any event, whether it had been against Mrs. Bonynge's interest or not." After some further discussion: "The Court: I will admit the testimony; objection overruled. I understand the evidence will be short? Mr. Armfield: One question only, I think, on this particular point. The Witness: She said that she had bought this ranch and given Mrs. Howard the use of it for her lifetime, so that her children might have better advantages in Woodland than they had out at Buckeye. Mr. Huston: I move to strike it out on the grounds contained in our objection. The Court: Objection overruled."

She also testified to having received a letter from Mrs. Bonynge, bearing date February 28, 1914, which was introduced in evidence, over plaintiff's objection, on the grounds previously stated, and particularly that it was the declaration of Mrs. Bonynge 40 years after the event of which she speaks. Among other things the letter stated:

"I am sorry I can do nothing more for you now. I have written to Lawrence Stephens, Brother Larry's eldest son. I have told him that when Sister Eliza dies he can sell the forty acres of land which I own outside of Woodland and divide the proceeds between you, Laura Marshall, Bunce Stephens, Mary Birch, his (Bunce's) sister, and himself. Nothing can be done before Sister Eliza's death, for we loaned this place to her for her life, and the rent of it is what she lives on. It will not be much, but it is all that I can give. I am sending you two parcels of my best and newest dresses. I don't think I shall ever be well enough to wear them again. With best love, yours affectionately,

"Rhoda Bonynge."

She also testified that in a conversation with Mrs. Howard "two or three years ago," Mrs. Howard said to her, "Mrs. Clowe has always wanted to own that place (the land in suit) and wanted to buy it from the Bonynge's." Mrs. Howard testified that no such conversation occurred.

L. H. Stephens testified in his own behalf. He is the son of L. D. Stephens—Mrs. Howard and Mrs. Bonynge's brother, and nephew of Mrs. Bonynge. Witness testified that he was born in 1881, some years after Mrs. Howard had moved to this property, and that he knew Mrs. Howard was living on the place. He testified that the title to the property stood in the name of Rhoda Bonynge. Over objection, he testified that it was always understood by the Stephens family that this 40 acres "belonged to Mrs. Bonynge and that Aunt Eliza (plaintiff) had the use of it for her lifetime"; that the first time he knew of Mrs. Bonynge's desire to convey the property to him was when she wrote to him, the letter being dated February 13, 1913. In this letter a request is made to collect the amount due on a certain insurance policy on the life of Mr. Bonynge, who had recently died in London. Of this 40-acre tract she wrote:

"I hope you or brother Larry are attending to the taxes on the forty acres I have there, which after Aunt Eliza's death must be sold, and the money equally divided between Aunt Kate, Laura Marshall, Bunce Stephens, Mary Birch, his sister, and yourself, so you will understand what I want done in case of my death. Unless I change my mind in the meantime I have thought of putting this land in the name of the bank so as to escape death duties, but I don't know if it would be wise to do so. With best love, yours affectionately,

"Rhodie S. Bonynge."

The next letter received by him was dated February 20, 1914, in which she speaks of several matters she desired attended to, and, among others, certain bonds which had been sold: "You will find out from my dear brother Larry, your father, whose memory is as bad as my own—he sold the bonds for me." She also speaks of the money paid for the Esparto ranch, stating that the money belonged to Virginia Deerhurst, her daughter. She wrote:

"I want you to have a deed made out there and sent to me at once, of the forty acres of land which Aunt Eliza has the use of for her life, situated just out of Woodland, and I will deed it to you. Then I want, after Aunt Eliza's death, you to sell it for me and divide the money equally between Kate Hawxhurst, Laura Marshall, Bunce Stephens, Mary Birch, his sister, and yourself. Now, Lawrence, don't neglect these things. There is no time to be lost, and if you can't attend to it I must get Walter Bonynge to do it for me. I don't want to leave anything in my name in America, after the trouble and worry of the few things Mr. Bonynge left there. With best love to you, your affectionate Aunt, Rhodie Bonynge."

A letter written by Mrs. Bonynge to defendant's father, L. D. Stephens, dated September 4, 1912, was introduced. In this letter, among other things, she said:

"Write me what I ought to get for the place I have near Woodland, 40 acres and a little house on it. I have always left it to Eliza, but I don't think she cares for it now. I would prefer giving her something in the way of the rent she gets for it."

Some other letters followed in which this 40-acre tract was mentioned as previously, and, finally, March 24, 1914, she writes, as we understand the letter, sending the deed to defendant. The deed is dated March 7, 1914, and was recorded April 8, 1914. The date of its actual execution and acknowledgment does not appear. These letters went in, over plaintiff's objection, as tending to show Mrs. Bonynge's intention. There was some evidence, taken from the books of the Bank of Woodland, that for certain years payment of certain high school taxes on this land had been charged to Mrs. Bonynge's account, of which plaintiff testified she knew nothing. There was also evidence, taken from the Bank of Woodland books showing that a credit of $1 per year as rent had been credited to Mrs. Bonynge's account for certain years, as to which Mrs. Howard testified she had no knowledge of any payments made for rent, and never made any or authorized any to be made. The knowledge of such credits was not brought home to Mrs. Howard.

Virginia Deerhurst, married daughter of Mrs. Bonynge, in a deposition taken in London, testified to conversations she heard between Mrs. Bonynge and her husband at the time the Esparto ranch was sold to Mr. Clowe, as to which she said her mother was very much annoyed. The sale was made in June, 1912.

"Q. What did Mrs. Bonynge say about the ranch in question; that is, the one there is the dispute about? A. I heard over again that my aunt was to live there for her life. I mean that is one of the dates when I heard it again. * * * Q. Do you remember having any conversation at all as to what was to happen after your aunt died? A. What was to happen was that my aunt was to be left in full possession and never disturbed in any way; but at that time I believe that my sister and I would have had the property. It would simply have come with her other property. * * * Q. Try and give us, as nearly as you can recollect, what was said. Did she say anything as to what was to happen with regard to your aunt living at the ranch? A. That she was to be left absolutely as she always had been. Mrs. Bonynge thought of that very often, and always thought of how to arrange it. Q. You say 'absolutely.' Do you mean she was to be left without being interfered with? A. Without being disturbed in any possible way. Q. For how long? A. For her life."

The witness identified certain five or six books of account in which certain entries are found referring to the land in question. These books bear different dates, in 1880, 1881, 1883, 1884, 1885, and in 1891. The entries called to the attention of the court speak of this land as "Ranch occupied by Howard," "Dep. by Howard, $250.00," "Rent paid by Howard, $1.00," of which latter there were three similar entries of different dates. No explanation of these entries was made, and they went in under objection.

With the exception of the declarations made to Mrs. Hawxhurst, as she testified, about the time plaintiff's family moved to the land in question, there were none shown until in the letter written by Mrs. Bonynge to her brother, L. D. Stephens, in 1912, and in subsequent letters to different members of the Stephens family. But at no time during all these years did Mrs. Bonynge inform plaintiff that her intention in giving her the land for a home was that she should have only a life estate in it. The land, in 1875, unimproved as it was, could not have been of much value and in its then condition was uninhabitable. To occupy it as a home the Howards were compelled to build a dwelling, to fence the land, and to erect a barn and other conveniences suitable for the enjoyment of the premises. Plaintiff testified that unless she had been given absolute ownership of the land her family would not have taken possession and they would not have made the improvements necessary to its use. Considering the generous nature of Mrs. Bonynge, her relations to the Howard family at the time, and her avowed affection for her sister, as well as the motive she had in making the gift, we think the court was justified in accepting the testimony of Mrs. Howard as true.

[1] We are aware of the rule, relied upon by appellant, that in such a case as this, where gifts are first asserted after the death of the donor, they must be established by clear and convincing proof, and that it has even been held that gifts of this character are regarded with suspicion by the courts (Humble v. Gay, 168 Cal. 516, 143 Pac. 778); still, a careful reading of the testimony of Mrs. Howard, corroborated as it is in considerable degree by that of witness Maxwell, convinces us, as it manifestly convinced the learned trial judge, that Mrs. Howard's account of the transaction bears evidence of sincerity, honesty, and truthfulness.

Whether or not the court erred in admitting proof that it was generally understood among the Stephens family that the gift was only a life estate, as to which the testimony was both ways, and in admitting the declarations of Mrs. Bonynge made, with the one exception above noted, 40 years after the transaction, are questions we need not consider. If it was error, as to which we express no opinion, the error is not available to respondent, since she had judgment. But in considering this class of evidence the court, no doubt, deemed it of less value than the positive testimony as to the nature of the gift, and therefore insufficient to overcome the force and effect of such direct and positive testimony.

[2] Whether the evidence in a given case is clear and convincing is a question in the first instance to be determined by the trial court, and its conclusion is not to be disturbed unless the reviewing court can say, after an examination of the entire record and all the circumstances surrounding the transaction as there disclosed, that such conclusion is clearly unwarranted by the evidence. "If there is substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached below, the finding is not open to review on appeal," even where the law requires proof of the fact to be clear and convincing. Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 502, 24 Pac. 930; Steinberger v. Young, 175 Cal. 81, 165 Pac. 432.

[3] It is contended that the proof of the improvements made is entirely insufficient to bring the case within the rule as enunciated in Burris v. Landers, 114 Cal. 310, 46 Pac. 162, and other cases. We think the facts in this case much stronger and more persuasive than those shown in the Burris Case. Here the property was unimproved, and so far as appears nonproductive. To convert it into a home such as must have been in the minds of the parties it was necessary to expend considerable money to make it habitable even for the simple life of those early days. The improvements were not temporary nor trivial, but substantial and commensurate to the uses contemplated, and, we think, were sufficient to bring the case within the rule.

[4] The point is made that the gift was void because the improvements were insufficient to take the case out of the statute of frauds. "The doctrine that verbal contracts for the sale of land, if part performed by the party seeking the remedy, may be specifically enforced," was said, in Kinsell v. Thomas, 18 Cal. App. 683, 695, 124 Pac. 220, 225, to be "an elementary principle in equity jurisprudence and of universal application throughout the American states." Justice Hart in the opinion takes occasion to give the origin and philosophy of the rule.

It may be conceded that the evidence did not support the finding as to plaintiff's second cause of action. The judgment is fully supported by the findings upon the first cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Appellant seeks a rehearing upon the single proposition stated thus:

"Assuming a parol gift has been established, the same is absolutely void and unenforceable, as the plaintiff's proof is not of that character which justifies a court of equity in invoking the equitable rule of estoppel in order to take the case out of the operation of the statute of frauds."

Reliance is placed upon the reasoning in the case of Burris v. Landers, 114 Cal. 310. In that case "plaintiff's real claim was that he entered with knowledge and approval of Landers, and under Landers' promise that he would thereafter, upon demand, make him a deed, and that, relying upon that promise, he made lasting and valuable improvements upon the property."

Appellant concedes that a present gift was established from Mrs. Bonynge to Mrs. Howard, which, though defective in form, equity will perfect. Such was not the case of Burris v. Landers, of which the court said: "It is an effort simply to enforce a promise to make a gift, the execution of which was never attempted to be completed by deceased in his lifetime." After stating the nature of the action, the court said: "This, it will be noted, is a different action from one to compel the perfection of a gift presently but incompletely made." In the case cited the property consisted of a dwelling and lot in the city of San Francisco, and was occupied by plaintiff about three years when the donor died. The court held that, even in such a case as this, the donor can be compelled to make his promise good where "the donor by promises induces the donee to change his position to his detriment." In summing up the case the court said:

"The evidence, then, in support of the findings, shows that the total expenditure of the plaintiff did not equal the rental value of the property during the time of his occupancy, and that the so-called permanent improvements were rather expenditures made to suit the convenience and taste of the occupant, and were not such as the law contemplates, of a character to enhance the value of the realty."

We need not stop to inquire whether the rule as to the quantity and character of evidence is the same in both executed and executory gifts. Assuming that the rule is the same in both classes of cases, appellant relies upon certain testimony given to the effect that the property had a rental value of $400 per year for the five years preceding the commencement of the action, and that Mrs. Howard testified that it was worth that less taxes and expenditures, which she fixed at $150 per year, and that her family had made more than that out of it. Conceding this much, the evidence was that when the gift was made the property was practically unimproved, and to make it habitable and of any value as a home they built a dwelling, barn, and convenient outhouses and fenced the land. There was no evidence that it had any rental value prior to the making of these improvements. On the contrary, the only rental value shown was of the property after the Howards had improved it. Such was not the case in Burris v. Landers. The Howards lived upon the premises after making them suitable as a residence for 30 years under the belief that the property had been given to Mrs. Howard. The donor, Mrs. Bonynge, visited them frequently, and, of course, knew of their expending the money required to make the place capable of supporting the family. The gift having been satisfactorily established, we do not think the donee should be precluded from perfecting her title because the gross rental value for all these years would greatly exceed the cost of the improvements made by the donee, especially as this rental value is the result of these very expenditures.

"The rule may be considered as well settled," said Mr. Justice Henshaw in the case cited, "that where a parol gift of real estate is made in præsenti, and the donee has entered under the gift, and has made permanent and valuable improvements upon the realty, and the circumstances are such that it would be unjust to the donee if he were thereafter to be deprived of the property by reason of imperfections in the gift, equity will treat the acts of the donor, together with the acts of the donee, as being such performance of the gift as will relieve the contract from the operation of the statute of frauds, and it will, under such circumstances, lend its assistance to the perfection of the donee's title." The evidence, we think, fully met the requirements of the rule as thus stated. The fact that the permanent and valuable improvements spoken of have given to the property a rental value it did not hitherto have is a false quantity. Otherwise the very thing equity requires to be done would defeat its object.

The petition is denied.

SLOSS v. HOLLAND et al. (Civ. 1890.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 30, 1918.)

1. EVIDENCE ⊂=437—PAROL EVIDENCE—NOTE—ILLEGALITY OF CONSIDERATION.

In action on note alleged to have been given to secure money to be used, by agreement between the parties, for an unlawful purpose, the law will permit an inquiry into the intention of the parties as to how such money was to be used.

2. LOTTERIES ⊂=12—ILLEGALITY OF CONSIDERATION—PROMOTION OF LOTTERY SCHEME.

Note given to secure money to be used, by agreement between parties, for promotion of lottery scheme, was unenforceable, being based on illegal consideration, under Civ. Code, §§ 1607, 1667.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=907(2) — REVIEW — PRESUMPTIONS.

Where maker, being sued on note, resisted payment on ground that it was the intention of the parties that the money was to be used for unlawful purpose, the court on appeal having no evidence before it will presume that such was the intention of the parties; the trial court having found for defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by Ferd A. Sloss against J. A. Holland and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. N. Mitchell, of Sacramento, and H. N. De Wolfe, of San Mateo, for appellant.

Martin I. Welsh and Ralph H. Lewis, both of Sacramento, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought upon a promissory note. Among the allegations found in the answer is this:

"That the consideration if any for said instrument" (referring to said promissory note) "was and is contrary to the policy of law and contrary to good morals, in this: That the said $2,500 was on the date aforesaid invested by plaintiff in said lottery business with the express understanding and intention and purpose that said money was to be used in operating said business for the joint benefit of defendant Holland and the plaintiff herein. That the said plaintiff well knew at the time he so invested the said $2,500 that he was investing the said sum in a business that was contrary to law and contrary to good morals."

A motion was made by plaintiff to strike out the answer and also for a judgment on the pleadings; but each was denied by the court, and the appeal is from a final judgment in favor of the defendants. While the answer is somewhat open to criticism, and some averments are framed upon the erroneous theory that defendants could dispute the obvious character of the written instrument upon which the action is based, yet it does appear from said answer that the said $2,500 was advanced by plaintiff to defendants with the understanding and purpose of all the parties that it should be used for an unlawful purpose, namely, the promotion of a lottery scheme, and that it was so used.

[1, 2] In such case, the law permits an inquiry into the intention of the parties as to how the money shall be used, and, if it be found that a violation of the law is contemplated, the process of the court is not open to either party to enforce any pecuniary obligation that may seem to arise out of the transaction. Each must be content to rely upon the other's sense of honor and responsibility for the enforcement of any promise or supposed obligation. Of course, in ordinary transactions, it is of no concern of the courts what disposition is made of money borrowed; but not so when it is loaned for the express purpose of aiding in the violation of the criminal law. Such intention vitiates the whole transaction, and the contract is regarded as utterly without legal efficacy. Many cases might be cited to the point, but it is sufficient to refer to a few decisions of our Supreme Court.

In Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 523, 70 Am. Dec. 746, the validity of a check given for a gambling debt was in controversy. The court said:

"As to all persons except a bona fide holder without notice, the check is void. The statute so expressly declares, and such would be the rule of law independent of the statute. * * * With checks, as with promissory notes, the presumption is that they are given upon a valid consideration; but, this presumption being rebutted, the necessity is thrown upon the holder of proving that he received it in good faith, without notice of the illegality of the consideration."

Mills & Lumber Co. v. Hayes, 76 Cal. 387, 18 Pac. 391, 9 Am. St. Rep. 211, involved a contract for the manufacture and sale of lumber executed for the purpose of increasing the price of lumber, limiting its supply, etc. It was said:

"The general rule is that an illegal contract is absolutely void and cannot form the basis of judicial proceedings. This is equally so in law and equity. The illegality vitiates the contract between the immediate parties, as well as in respect to third parties. A contract tainted with the vice of illegality creates no obligation, not because of the rights of the parties to it, but because the public is interested."

In Chateau v. Singla, 114 Cal. 91, 45 Pac. 1015, 33 L. R. A. 750, 55 Am. St. Rep. 63, the action was for the dissolution of a partnership and for an accounting. The partnership was formed to carry on the business of letting furnished apartments for the purpose of prostitution. The court declared:

"If this contract of copartnership had for its purpose the letting of apartments for purposes of prostitution, and if the business of the copartnership, as pleaded by the answer, was the doing of this precise thing, then the copartnership contract was illegal, against good morals, against public policy, and against the express mandate of the statute, and equity would no more entertain an action founded upon such contract for the relief of either of the parties to it, than it would entertain an action between two thieves for an equitable division of their plunder. A void contract, a contract against public policy or against the mandate of the statute, may not be made the foundation of any action, either in law or in equity."

Union Collection Co. v. Buckman, 150 Cal. 159, 88 Pac. 708, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568, 119 Am. St. Rep. 164, 11 Ann. Cas. 609, involved a promissory note given for a gambling debt. The court said:

"At the outset, therefore, it may be stated that it is clear that under the settled law of this state the consideration for such notes was contra bonos mores and unlawful (Civ. Code, §§ 1607, 1667), and that McMahon (the payee) could not have recovered thereon."

It was further held in that case that a renewal note given in place of the original note and also a compromise of the claim based upon said illegal consideration were both tainted by the same illegality, and that the courts would not entertain any action to enforce the same, but would, even against the express consent of the parties, withhold all relief if the illegality of the consideration is made to appear.

We have a similar situation here. The case would be no different in principle if the action were for an accounting or for money had and received. The unlawful purpose for which the money was loaned to defendants is an inseparable part of the consideration for the note and renders the contract against public policy and void under the plain provisions of the statute. Accepting the theory either of a loan or of an investment, the result is the same.

[3] In the absence of the evidence we must assume, of course, that the intention of the parties as to the use of the money was as contended for by respondents.

The judgment is affirmed.

REGOLI v. STEVENSON. (L. A. 4589.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 14, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=694(1)—SCOPE OF REVIEW—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

The argument on appeal that the findings on which the judgment is based are not supported by the evidence cannot be reviewed, where the bill of exceptions wholly fails to specify the particulars wherein the evidence is insufficient.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by B. Regoli against H. J. Stevenson. Judgment for defendant and order denying motion for new trial, and plaintiff appeals. Appeal from judgment denying motion for new trial dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

Winslow P. Hyatt and Henry G. Bodkin, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

F. J. Spring, J. S. Roche, and J. H. Welsh, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff sued defendant for the breach of a written contract whereby it is alleged the latter, for a specified sum per foot, agreed to bore a well on plaintiff's land in section 22, to a depth of 250 feet. Defendant denied the allegations of the complaint essential to plaintiff's recovery, and, by a separate pleading, alleged the making of an oral contract with plaintiff to bore a well on land other than that owned by plaintiff in section 22, for which plaintiff agreed to pay him the reasonable value of his services, alleged to be $350, and upon which defendant admitted the payment of $150.

The court found that plaintiff and defendant entered into a written contract, copy of which was attached to the complaint, under which it was plaintiff's duty to designate a point on the northeast quarter of said section, in which plaintiff held a qualified interest and to which the contract related, as the place where defendant should bore said well; but that plaintiff never at any time designated such point where defendant should bore the well, which fact rendered it impossible for defendant to perform his said contract. The court further found as a fact that defendant, at the special instance and request of plaintiff, performed 14 days' work in boring a well on the northwest quarter of said section, in which plaintiff had no interest, for which he agreed to pay the defendant the reasonable value thereof, found to be $350, and on account of which $150 was paid.

In accordance therewith judgment was entered, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff, on December 10, 1915, appealed.

Under section 963, Code of Civil Procedure, no appeal lies from the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, but the alleged erroneous ruling is reviewable upon a proper record on appeal from the judgment as provided in section 956, Code of Civil Procedure.

That the findings support the judgment must be conceded; indeed, we do not understand appellant to raise any question upon this point.

In his brief, counsel argues that certain of the findings upon which the judgment is based are not supported by the evidence, but the bill of exceptions wholly fails to specify the particulars wherein the evidence is insufficient to support such findings; nor, indeed, are any errors specified therein.

In the absence of such specifications of the particulars wherein the evidence is insufficient to support the findings, the question cannot be reviewed on appeal. Adams v. Hopkins, 144 Cal. 19, 77 Pac. 712; Citizens' Bank v. Jones, 121 Cal. 32, 53 Pac. 354. However, we may say that, notwithstanding such defect in the record, we have examined the evidence upon which the findings are based, and the most that can be claimed is that a substantial conflict is presented.

The affidavits claimed to have been used on the motion for new trial are not included in the bill of exceptions, nor, indeed, authenticated in any manner entitling them to be considered in reviewing the ruling of the court in denying the motion.

The appeal from the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial is dismissed, and the judgment is affirmed.

DRIPS v. MOORE et al. (L. A. 4461.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 14, 1918.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂=95(2)—FORFEITURE FOR NONPAYMENT—WAIVER.
Demands for payment of a past-due installment of interest, or forbearance to exercise the right of forfeiture, under a contract of sale of land, did not constitute a waiver of such right.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂=95(2)—FORFEITURE—WAIVER.
Where vendor under contract of sale of land by his acts of forbearance led the vendee to believe that further leniency in making the payment would be granted, grounds for entertaining such belief were destroyed by a notice in writing on November 4th that unless said payment was made by December 1st the vendee's rights would be forfeited.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂=214(6)—ASSIGNMENT OF CONTRACT—LIABILITY OF ASSIGNEE.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

Suit to quiet title by Thomas G. Drips against A. Moore and others. From a decree for plaintiff, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

George H. Woodruff and Clyde C. Shoemaker, both of Los Angeles, and A. Moore, of Whittier, for appellant.

Carter, Kirby & Henderson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. In this action plaintiff, by a complaint in the usual form in such cases, sought a decree quieting his title to a tract of land.

Judgment went for plaintiff, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant Moore appeals. By answer Moore denied the material allegations of the complaint, and as a separate defense alleged: That on October 18, 1913, plaintiff was the owner of the land in question, at which time he and his wife entered into a contract with James F. and Pearl I. McKinney, whereby they agreed to sell, and the McKinneys agreed to buy, the property in accordance with the terms of such contract. That on December 31, 1913, the McKinneys, for a valuable consideration, duly assigned all their right, title, and interest in said contract to defendant Moore, who entered into possession of the property, which consisted of an orange grove, in the care of which Moore employed plaintiff, paying him wages for the service rendered. That said contract contained a provision as follows: "It is understood and agreed that time is of the essence of this contract, and in the event of a failure to comply with the terms thereof by the buyer, then the seller shall be released from all obligations in law and equity to convey said property, and the buyer shall forfeit all right thereto and to all moneys theretofore paid under this contract." That all the terms of the contract required to be performed on the part of the McKinneys and their assignee have been duly performed, except that an installment of interest, due and payable on October 18, 1914, had not been paid as required by the terms thereof. That notwithstanding such requirement, plaintiff waived the default. That defendant is ready, able and willing to pay said installment of interest and offers to pay the same—followed by a prayer that "plaintiff be required to permit said defendant to pay said interest and that it be declared that said contract is an existing valid agreement."

[1, 2] For want of sufficient evidence to support the same, appellant attacks the finding of the court to the effect that plaintiff did not waive, or by his acts, conduct, or otherwise excuse, the failure on the part of the defendant to pay the interest due on the contract on October 18, 1914. This contention is based upon testimony of defendant to the effect that upon the making of default in the payment of said interest plaintiff did not at once give notice that the former's rights were forfeited, but, while continuing to care for the property, he on several occasions after October 18th asked defendant to pay the interest then due, and discussed with him the possibility of making a sale of the property in order to enable him to pay it, and further requested defendant to pay his personal taxes out of moneys due from defendant to plaintiff on account of disbursements made by plaintiff in caring for the orchard, to all of which demands for payment defendant told plaintiff that he was endeavoring to raise the money. It cannot be said that plaintiff's demands for payment, or his forbearance to exercise his right of forfeiture pursuant to the provisions of the contract, constituted a waiver thereof. Indeed, we find no evidence whatever tending to show the alleged waiver by plaintiff, but, conceding plaintiff had by his acts of forbearance led defendant to believe that further leniency in making the payment would be granted, all grounds for entertaining such belief were destroyed by the notice in writing served by plaintiff upon defendant on November 4th to the effect that, unless said payment was made by December 1st, his rights under the contract would, as therein provided, be forfeited.

As to this notice, appellant insists that it was improperly admitted as rebuttal evidence, over his objection. Appellant's defense was based upon the theory that plaintiff by his acts waived the prompt payment of the interest; and conceding, but not holding, this to be true, the evidence with reference to the notice was competent to show a revival of the right or termination of the alleged waiver, and that, if defendant did not within the reasonable time specified therein make such payment, the right to forfeiture would be exercised. Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 128 Pac. 751, and cases therein cited. There is no merit in the contention that the agreement contemplated noncompliance with all the terms of the contract as a condition upon which the right to forfeiture should be exercised.

[3, 4] Moore, having by assignment acquired the contract and claiming the benefits thereof, was subject to its burdens as fully and to the same extent as though he was the original party to it; hence plaintiff, for noncompliance with its terms, might declare all his rights secured thereby forfeited. Nor, since the McKinneys had transferred all their interest, was it necessary to serve the notice of forfeiture upon them. They had no interest to which the act of forfeiture could apply.

[5] As shown by the pleadings, plaintiff was the owner of the property on October 18, 1913, which fact was also stipulated at the trial, whereupon plaintiff rested. Defendant then moved for a nonsuit, which was denied, and this ruling is assigned as error. Since defendant's rights were based upon the contract, it devolved upon him to show a compliance therewith, or, since it appeared from his answer he had failed to comply, to prove, as alleged therein, that plaintiff had waived such want of compliance. This being true, and in the absence of any evidence of such alleged waiver, the court properly denied his motion for nonsuit. There are no other points which merit consideration.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐516—STREET IMPROVEMENT — EXCESSIVE ASSESSMENT — APPEAL TO CITY COUNCIL.

Sole remedy for excessive assessment for street improvement is by appeal to city council under Street Law, § 11, and, in absence of such appeal, amount of assessment is not open to question in subsequent collateral proceeding.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐583—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — DEED FROM TREASURER — COMPLIANCE WITH PRECEDENT STEPS — BURDEN OF PROOF.

In action to quiet title, plaintiff claiming under deed of treasurer of city issued on sale for nonpayment of street assessment and bond, introduction of deed containing appropriate recitals under Bond Act, § 5, subd. k, threw on defendant burden to show want of compliance with precedent steps required by statute, as giving of notice to redeem property, etc.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐581—STREET IMPROVEMENT—BOND ACT—NOTICE TO MORTGAGEE.

Grantee under deed of treasurer of city issued on sale of property for nonpayment of street improvement assessment and bond was not called upon by bond, under Bond Act, § 5, subd. j, to serve notice on mortgagee, but only upon owner or agent of property, if named in certificate, and party occupying it.

Action by the Empire Securities Company against Alta Jean Matthews and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James, Smith & McCarthy, and A. R. Holston, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Crouch & Crouch, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The defendants appeal from a judgment quieting the plaintiff's title to a lot of land in the city of Los Angeles.

[1] The plaintiff claimed under a deed of the treasurer of the city of Los Angeles issued upon a sale of the property for nonpayment of a street improvement assessment and bond. The proceedings were regularly had under the street law and the bond act of 1893. Stats. 1885, p. 147; Stats. 1893, p. 33, and amendments. Neither Alta Jean Matthews, the owner of the property, nor any of the other defendants claiming to have an interest therein, appealed to the city council, or otherwise objected to the assessment or to the issuing of the bond, until after the sale was made and the deed delivered. At the trial they undertook to attack the validity of the sale by showing that the property, after the improvement had been made, was not worth as much as the amount assessed against it, and that the assessment therefore necessarily exceeded the benefits resulting from the improvement. The court received the testimony, but gave it no consideration upon submission of the case, taking the ground, evidently, that the sole remedy for an excessive assessment is by appeal to the city council, under section 11 of the Street Law (Stats. 1885, p. 156), and that, in the absence of such appeal, the amount of the assessment is not open to question in a subsequent and collateral proceeding. The conclusion thus reached was clearly correct. Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, 692, 76 Pac. 661; Brown v. Drain (C. C.) 112 Fed. 582, affirmed, 187 U. S. 635, 23 S. Ct. 842, 47 L. Ed. 343. "Where the property owner has an opportunity given him, under the prescribed proceedings, to appear and contest the question before the legislative body, the determination of that body on the subject of benefits is final, and if he fails to appear he thereby admits the finality of the determination." Duncan v. Ramish, supra. In each of the cases cited above, the property owner, having failed to appeal, attempted to prove in another proceeding that the assessment in fact exceeded the benefit. It was held that he was foreclosed by his omission to seek the remedy given by the statute. The same rule governs the present case.

[2] It is further claimed that the plaintiff failed to introduce any evidence, outside of the deed itself, to show the giving of notice to redeem the property. But under subdivision k of section 5 of the bond act, as amended (Stats. 1899, p. 45), the deed "is primary evidence of the regularity of all proceedings theretofore had." The introduction of the deed, which contained appropriate recitals, therefore threw upon the defendants the burden of showing a want of compliance with the precedent steps required by the statute, and this burden they did not attempt to meet.

[3] The plaintiff was not called upon to serve a notice upon the mortgagee. All that the statute demands is that such notice shall be served upon the owner or agent of the property, if named in the certificate, and upon the party occupying the property, if the property is occupied. Section 5, subd. j.

No other points are made.

The judgment is affirmed.

BIRD v. HUBER. (L. A. 4521.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 14, 1918.)

LIBEL AND SLANDER ⊂=104(3)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action for damages for defamatory statements concerning plaintiff, published in letters delivered to another, where the evidence as to whether defendant was responsible for the publication was conflicting, it was error to admit another defamatory letter in evidence, to which no reference was made in the complaint.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

Action by P. I. Bird against Bertha Huber. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

B. E. Tarver, of Santa Ana, for appellant.

Clyde Bishop, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff, alleging that defendant had by means of letters delivered to another person written and published false and defamatory statements concerning him, brought this action for damages.

The case was tried by the court without a jury, which, findings being waived, gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff, from which, after the denial of her motion for a new trial, defendant appealed.

While in the complaint defendant was charged with writing and causing the delivery of several specific letters to as many different persons, all of which as to plaintiff were defamatory in character, no evidence was offered touching any of them other than one written to Mrs. Kaiser. As to this letter, a 14 year old boy by the name of Dorsten testified that a woman, who at the time he did not know and had never seen, gave it to him, requesting that he deliver it to Mrs. Kaiser, which he did. Thereafter he, accompanied by a detective employed by plaintiff, saw defendant and identified her as the one who had given him the letter. Against this evidence was that of defendant, who, in the strongest and most direct terms, denied that she had ever written or in any manner published or put in circulation any of the letters in question.

Upon this conflict of evidence the determination of the trial judge would be conclusive, except for the fact that the court erred in permitting plaintiff to introduce another letter, likewise as to plaintiff defamatory, and to which no reference was made in the complaint; the reason assigned for its admission and proof of its delivery being, as appears by the bill of exceptions, not to show malice, but "for the purpose of showing a course of conduct on the part of defendant," thus rendering it probable that she had committed the act with which she was charged. That the ruling was error admits of no question; and that it was prejudicial is equally clear, since in the mind of the court evidence of the delivery of this second letter, with the publication of which defendant was not charged, tended to corroborate the story of Dorsten and lend weight to his testimony, without which the court might very properly have entertained doubts as to the truth thereof. Especially is this so if Dorsten's testimony, on motion for new trial, be viewed in the light of his affidavit filed in support of such motion, and wherein, after referring to his testimony, he stated:

"But I now say that I do not know whether it was Miss Huber or not who gave me the letter; that I am not sure that it was her, and I would not testify again that it was Miss Huber that gave me the said letter, because I am not sure it was her; that after said letter was given to me I did not see the person who gave me the letter any more, but that several months thereafter, when I was in company with Mrs. Firman, the detective, I saw Miss Huber, and I told Mrs. Firman that Miss Huber gave me the letter; that before the trial of said case the plaintiff, Mr. Bird, gave me some fireworks, and Mrs. Firman gave me some pieces of money."

The judgment is reversed.

HOFFMAN v. PATTERSON. (L. A. 4579.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 14, 1918.)

1. PLEADING ⟸369(6)—ELECTION—NECESSITY OF DEMURRER.
Where complaint was indefinite, because it did not show whether the action was for damages for breach of contract or for false and fraudulent misrepresentations, and defendant failed to demur upon such ground, he could not on the trial require an election of which ground should be relied on.

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟸79(1)—MISREPRESENTATIONS BY AGENT—LIABILITY TO PRINCIPAL.
Where plaintiff constituted defendant his agent to acquire public school lands, but plaintiff was not allowed to prove up because failing to take proper preliminary steps, he could recover for the false representations as to necessary steps to secure the land, although after he went on it he found that the land was not as represented, but nevertheless remained thereon.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟸79(1)—RELIANCE ON AGENT.
Where plaintiff made defendant his agent for purchase of school lands, and signed affidavit for the purchase without reading it, his negligence did not preclude recovery from defendant for failure to tell him the necessary steps to secure the land, whereby he lost the land.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1033(5)—HARMLESS ERROR—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.
In action for damages against agent for purchase of school land, for failure to inform him as to the necessary steps to procure the land, instruction as to measure of damages held favorable rather than adverse to defendant.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Willis I. Morrison, Judge.

Action by Alfred Hoffman against Hanlon Patterson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Evans, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an action for damages arising out of a transaction between the parties wherein the plaintiff applied to the defendant for information as to the location of school land of the state of California open to entry which he desired to acquire. The defendant was a real estate dealer, who advertised himself as dealing in school lands and expert in advising and aiding persons who desired to purchase such lands. The plaintiff was a foreigner speaking English but brokenly, and wholly ignorant of the land laws of California relating to school lands. The defendant, upon plaintiff's application to him, represented that he knew the location of a section of school land open to entry, which he described as quite desirable, and further represented that he had personally been upon the land, and had taken the necessary preliminary steps to obtain title thereto under the sections of the Political Code applicable to the purchase of school lands, and had paid the first filing fee of $25, and that he would proceed as the plaintiff's agent to do or have done the things necessary to acquire the title to said land. The plaintiff engaged him so to do, and at his instance signed without reading the same, the formal application and affidavit for the purchase of said land which the defendant had prepared and presented to him for signature. He also transferred to the defendant his equity in a house and lot in Los Angeles, which was to be the consideration to be paid for the defendant's advice and services. The plaintiff's application and affidavit were duly filed in the office of the surveyor, but when the plaintiff came to prove up on the land, as required by law, his application to purchase the same was refused for the reason that it developed that he had not taken the proper steps with regard to going upon the land prior to his application to purchase, as required by the statute. Thereupon he brought this action. The foregoing facts were stated in the plaintiff's complaint and testified to by him upon the trial. The defendant had filed a demurrer, which being overruled, he answered denying that he had misled the plaintiff or had failed to perform the services for which he had received the transfer of the plaintiff's equity in the Los Angeles property.

[1] At the inception of the trial the defendant insisted that the plaintiff's complaint was indefinite, in that it could not be determined whether he was seeking to recover damages for the breach of a contract, or for false and fraudulent misrepresentations, and that he should be limited in his proofs to one or the other cause of action. The court at first seemed to incline to this view, and required the plaintiff to elect between the two alleged causes of action, but later allowed him to prove the entitre transaction as alleged in his complaint. The appellant alleged this as error, but it is evident that the later view of the court was the correct one; defendant not having by his demurrer objected to the plaintiff's pleading upon the grounds stated at the trial. The appellant further contends that the evidence does not support the findings of the court as to the defendant's alleged misrepresentations in relation to the condition and value of the school land, but in this regard the plaintiff testified fully upon all of these matters and the trial court was entitled to accept this version of the transaction.

[2, 3] As to the appellant's claim that the plaintiff should not recover for the reason that after he had entered into the transaction he had gone upon the section of school land and had seen that it was not as represented and had nevertheless gone ahead with his attempt to prove up upon it, this claim has no merit, since the plaintiff does not found his claim for damages upon this misrepresentation alone, but upon his failure to procure said land because the defendant had misled him as to the proper steps to be taken to perfect his right to purchase it from the state. In respect to this phase of the case the appellant urges that the plaintiff is seeking to found his right of recovery upon his own wrong, in this: That it was his duty to have read the affidavit and application to purchase, which he signed, and that if he had done so he would have discovered that he had not done the things which he had therein stated had been done in order to set in motion his right to purchase the land. This contention is also without merit. The relation between the plaintiff and the defendant was a confidential one. The plaintiff was entitled to rely upon the defendant as his agent in the matter of signing without reading the papers which the latter had prepared and presented for his signature. The case of Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 76 Pac. 486, is precisely in point in holding that as between parties occupying the confidential relation of principal and agent the former is entitled to rely upon the statements of the agent without reading before signing the papers which the latter prepares and presents for his signature.

[4] The final contention of the appellant is that the court erred in adopting as its basis for the plaintiff's damages the value of his equity in the Los Angeles lot, instead of the value of the school lands which the plaintiff failed to obtain. We think the defendant was rather benefited than injured by this error, if error it was, since the plaintiff's testimony was to the effect that the defendant had represented said section of school land to be of the value of $6,400, whereas in fact it was not worth in excess of one-tenth of that sum. The court took the view that the measure of the plaintiff's damages was what he had actually lost by the transaction, since he had not paid anything for and had not received the school land. The court, therefore, took the value of the plaintiff's equity in the lot which he had transferred to the plaintiff, and, finding this equity to have been worth $400, deducted therefrom the sum of $25, which the proof showed the defendant had paid as the preliminary fee for the school land purchase, and gave the plaintiff judgment for the sum of $375. In so doing it committed no error of which the appellant can complain.

Judgment affirmed.

NEELEY v. NEELEY. (L. A. 4487.)

1. DIVORCE ⟸51 — "UNREASONABLE DELAY" — IN BRINGING SUIT.

Where plaintiff wife condoned extreme cruelty by dismissing divorce suit upon agreement that defendant would refrain from acts of unkindness, the condonation under the agreement as well as under Civ. Code, § 117, carried with it the condition subsequent that plaintiff should be treated with conjugal kindness, and, where defendant over three years thereafter broke the condition, the original cause of action was revived (section 121), and plaintiff was not, under sections 124 and 125, guilty of "unreasonable delay," where she brought a second suit within a few days thereafter.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Unreasonable Delay.]

2. DIVORCE ⟸108 — CONDONATION — PLEADING.

Condonation was not a part of plaintiff's case, but new matter, properly pleaded in the answer, which plaintiff had the right to meet by evidence showing justification for revoking condonation in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 462, as to new matter in answer being deemed controverted.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth E. Neeley against Elmer E. Neeley. From interlocutory decree of divorce for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Earl Newmire, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fairbanks & Macfarland, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. From an interlocutory decree of divorce granted to the wife, plaintiff in the action, the defendant appeals.

The complaint was based on the ground of extreme cruelty, and specified acts committed in October and November, 1911, and on April 26, 1915. The action was commenced on April 27, 1915. The answer denied the charges of cruelty and set up condonation with respect to the alleged acts in October and November, 1911. The court found that the defendant was guilty of extreme cruelty toward the plaintiff in October and November, 1911; that she brought suit for divorce in December, 1911; and that that suit was dismissed upon the agreement of the defendant that he would refrain from acts of unkindness toward his wife. It is further found that he had not thereafter treated his wife with conjugal kindness, and that on the 26th day of April, 1915, he had kicked her, as alleged in the complaint.

The defendant did not, at the trial, attempt to controvert the testimony offered to show that he had, as averred, been guilty of cruelty in 1911. He did deny that he had committed the later acts charged against him, but the plaintiff's testimony, which was not without corroboration, was sufficient to support the findings in this regard also.

[1] The record indicates, however, that the court based its decree upon the acts committed in 1911, rather than those of 1915. As to the earlier occurrences, the appellant's only contention is that they "were too remote to be considered." There is nothing in this claim. Our statutes provide no specific limitation for an action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. It is provided, merely, that a divorce must be denied "when there is an unreasonable lapse of time before the commencement of the action." Civ. Code, § 124. By the following section, "unreasonable lapse of time" is defined as "such a delay in commencing the action as establishes the presumption that there has been connivance, collusion, or condonation of the offense, or full acquiescence in the same, with intent to continue the marriage relation notwithstanding the commission of such offense." Civ. Code, § 125. We should hesitate to say that an unexplained delay of 3½ years must, as matter of law, be deemed unreasonable. But that is not the question here. The plaintiff's failure to proceed earlier is fully accounted for by the dismissal of the prior action, and the conduct of the parties thereafter. Civ. Code, § 125. The plaintiff condoned the offenses of 1911, but under the agreement, as well as by the terms of the law itself (Civ. Code, § 117), the condonation carried with it the condition subsequent that the plaintiff should be treated with conjugal kindness. This condition was broken by the defendant in 1915, and the original cause of action thereby revived. Civ. Code, § 121. Under these circumstances, there is absolutely no ground for claiming that the court below should have held the plaintiff guilty of an unreasonable delay in commencing her action.

[2] The plaintiff was not required to set up, in her complaint, the facts justifying her in revoking the condonation. Condonation was not a part of her case. It was new matter, properly pleaded in the answer. The plaintiff was not required to anticipate it in her complaint, but had the right to meet it by any appropriate proof. Code Civ. Proc. § 462; 9 R. C. L. 386.

The judgment is affirmed.

CORNIC v. STEWART. (L. A. 4567.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 12, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸102—ORDERS APPEALABLE—RULING ON DEMURRER.

Orders sustaining demurrer to the amended complaint and denying leave to file a second amended complaint are not appealable.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by J. W. Cornic against Gertie E. Stewart. From two orders sustaining demurrer to the first amended complaint and denying leave to file a second amended complaint, plaintiff appeals. Appeals dismissed.

Willedd Andrews, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James W. Barnes, of Compton, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. In this case no respondent's brief has been filed, but a cursory examination of the record discloses that the only appeal before us is an attempted appeal from two orders of the trial court sustaining a demurrer to the plaintiff's first amended complaint and denying the plaintiff's application for leave to file a second amended complaint. Neither of these orders are appealable orders, and there is no appeal from the judgment.

It follows that the appeals must be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

OGDEN v. FORD et al. (L. A. 4552.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 14, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS ⊜128(1) — CONSIDERATION OF NOTE—COMPOUNDING FELONY.

A promissory note given on an agreement to dismiss criminal proceedings against the maker for embezzlement is void as embodying an illegal consideration.

2. CONTRACTS ⊜141(3) — CONSIDERATION—COMPOUNDING FELONY—EVIDENCE.

In an action against guarantors of a promissory note, evidence held to support a finding that the note was not given in consideration of dismissal of an embezzlement prosecution against the maker.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by M. H. Ogden against Benjamin F. Ford and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. J. Rodgers, of San Diego, and Ford & Hammon, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

M. H. Fleming, of San Diego, and Geo. M. Harker, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. In this action plaintiff obtained judgment against Benjamin F. Ford and Frank J. Becker as guarantors of a promissory note made and delivered to him by Russell T. and George M. Briggs.

From this judgment and an order of court denying their motion for a new trial the defendants, Becker and Ford, have appealed.

[1] As a defense to recovery on the note, defendants alleged that the consideration thereof was an agreement on the part of plaintiff that he would dismiss, or cause to be dismissed, a certain criminal proceeding then pending in the superior court against Russell T. and George M. Briggs, and against whom he had sworn to a complaint charging them with embezzlement. Such agreement, if made as alleged, would, of course, render the note void. Keating v. Morrissey, 6 Cal. App. 169, 91 Pac. 677; Thom v. Stewart, 162 Cal. 415, 122 Pac. 1069. As to this issue, however, the court found adversely to defendants, and further found that the note with the indorsement of defendants guaranteeing payment thereof was duly made and delivered to plaintiff in satisfaction of a judgment obtained by him against the said Russell T. and George M. Briggs, and in the absence of any agreement, promise, or understanding on his part, express or implied, to dismiss the criminal action then pending against the said Briggs, or otherwise to refrain from the prosecution thereof.

[2] Appellants' chief claim is that this finding is not supported by the evidence. The record discloses no ground for such contention. As appears therefrom, the note, payment of which was guaranteed by appellants, was given in satisfaction of a judgment obtained by plaintiff against the Briggses for money of his which they had wrongfully appropriated. Assuming that both they and appellants believed, as the evidence tended to prove, that defendants in the criminal action would fare better if they reimbursed plaintiff for the loss incurred by reason of their offense, their act in so doing was not due to any agreement or promise on his part not to prosecute them. Indeed, the control of the prosecution was in the hands of the district attorney, who says that, upon learning that Briggs had satisfied the judgment, he dismissed the prosecution for the reason that in such cases it was extremely difficult to secure a conviction where the civil liability had been settled. True, he further stated that plaintiff said he did not wish to prosecute them and gave expression to language indicating his desire to have the action dismissed, as to which, however, whether to the district attorney or to others, both plaintiff and his attorney, Freeman, denied the making thereof. Other than this conflicting testimony, no evidence was adduced on behalf of defendants tending to show that plaintiff ever at any time agreed to cause the criminal action against Briggs to be dismissed in consideration of the giving of the note guaranteed by them. While it is, no doubt, true that defendants and Briggs hoped that by giving the note in satisfaction of the civil liability the latter, as they did, would escape prosecution, none of them testified to any act or word of plaintiff which could be interpreted as an agreement on his part to aid in such escape, and the evidence given on behalf of plaintiff shows the nonexistence of such fact.

There is nothing in the record disclosing error on the part of the court in sustaining objections to questions asked on cross-examination of the witnesses Maud S. and Russell T. Briggs, as to conversations had by them with defendants as to the purpose for which the note was to be given. Plaintiff was not present and had no part in these conversations. Moreover, since there had been no examination in chief upon the subject of the interrogation, such fact alone was sufficient reason for the ruling.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

HOLLENBECK–BUSH PLANING MILL CO. v. ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOP OF MONTEREY et al. (L. A. 4512.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 12, 1918. On Rehearing, Dec. 12, 1918.)

MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂=291(4) — DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—SUFFICIENCY.

Judgment in action to foreclose a materialman's lien describing property as "the northerly portion of block 413–B, of the city of Bakersfield, according to the map of said city of Bakersfield, filed," etc., was insufficient.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by the Hollenbeck-Bush Planing Mill Company against the Roman Catholic Bishop of Monterey and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. Wiseman McDonald, of Los Angeles, and J. W. Wiley and R. B. Lambert, both of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Geo. E. Whitaker, of Bakersfield, and Everts & Ewing, of Fresno, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action to foreclose a materialman's lien. Two questions are presented upon this appeal. The first relates to the issue as to whether the claim of lien was filed within the time permitted by statute for the filing of such liens. As to this question it is conceded that it has been settled in respondent's favor by the case of Hughes Manufacturing & Lumber Co. v. Hathaway, 174 Cal. 44, 161 Pac. 1159, decided since this appeal was taken.

The other point presented upon this appeal relates to the sufficiency of the description of the property against which the plaintiff's claim of lien was filed, which is herein sought to be foreclosed as the same appears in the judgment from which this appeal is taken. Said description is as follows:

"The northerly portion of block 413–B, of the city of Bakersfield, according to the map of said city of Bakersfield, filed in the office of the county recorder of Kern county, November 25, 1898."

We are of the opinion that the appellant's contention that this description, as embodied in the judgment herein, is insufficient, must be sustained. The case of Union Lumber Co. v. Simon, 150 Cal. 751, 89 Pac. 1077, 1081, which is chiefly relied upon by the respondent, is clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. In that case the property was described as "commencing at a point on the northerly line of Sutter street distant thereon 137 feet and 6 inches from the westerly line of Scott street, running thence," etc. The defect in this description consisted in the fact that it did not locate the point of commencement as to whether it was easterly or westerly from Scott street. It was thus applicable to two different pieces of property on the northerly line of Sutter street; otherwise, the description was of a rectangular piece of land of definite dimensions. The court held that such a description was aided by the statement in the claim of lien as to who was the owner or reputed owner of the land, and was thus made "sufficient for identification," which is all that is required by the statute in the claim of lien. But the court also suggested that in the action for the enforcement of such a lien the plaintiff might enlarge the description in his complaint and proofs so that the judgment would distinctly specify the land which was to be sold. The difference between the description in that case and that in the case at bar is apparent. In that case there was a description of a definite parcel of land which could be applied to either one of two locations by supplying the single word "easterly" or "westerly," which would give the description its point of beginning. But in the case at bar no description of any parcel or amount of land by metes and bounds or otherwise is given.

In the case of Rall Bros. v. McCrary, 45 Mo. App. 365, which is cited with approval in Union Lumber Co. v. Simon, supra, the property sought to be subjected to the lien was described as "a frame barn and one acre on which the same is situated, being erected on a tract of sixty-four acres" in a designated quarter section. This was held to be sufficient; but this case also is to be distinguished from the case at bar by the fact that a definite quantity of land upon which the structure stood was designated, while in the case at bar no quantity of land to be affected by the lien of the judgment is given. In Phillips on Mechanics' Liens (3d Ed.) § 385, the case of Howell v. Zerbee, 26 Ind. 214, is cited with approval, wherein the following description, viz. "a part of lot 3, section 36," etc., was held to be void for uncertainty. In the case of Willamette S. M. Co. v. Kremer, 94 Cal. 205, 29 Pac. 633, this court, quoting from Phillips on Mechanics' Liens, § 379, says:

"'The best rule to be adopted is that if there appear enough in the description to enable a party familiar with the locality to identify the premises intended to be described with reasonable certainty, to the exclusion of others, it will be sufficient. There is great reluctance to set aside a mechanic's claim merely for loose description, as the acts generally contemplate that the claimants should prepare their own papers; and it is not necessary that the description should be either full or precise.' See, also, Kennedy v. House, 41 Pa. 39, 80 Am. Dec. 594; McClintock v. Rush, 63 Pa. 205; Northwestern Cement, etc., Co. v. Norwegian etc. Seminary, 43 Minn. 449 [45 N. W. 868]; Cleverly v. Moseley, 148 Mass. 280 [19 N. E. 394]; Seaton v. Hixon, 35 Kan. 663 [12 Pac. 22]; Hotaling v. Cronise, 2 Cal. 60; Tredinnick v. Mining Co., 72 Cal. 78 [13 Pac. 152].

"In an action to foreclose the lien, it is, however, necessary that the property which the plaintiff seeks to subject to a sale therefor should be definitely described, and that the judgment should specifically designate the property affected by the lien and directed to be sold, otherwise the officer executing the judgment can neither point out the property which he offers for sale, nor place the purchaser in possession thereof, and the deed which he may execute will not convey any title; and as the judgment must follow the complaint, it is essential that the complaint should itself contain such specific description."

In the case at bar the appellant does not assail the sufficiency of the description in the plaintiff's claim of lien in the answer and does not do so in the briefs upon appeal, but, on the contrary, concedes that "it is probably sufficiently complete for identification and therefore would constitute a valid description so far as the lien is concerned." The appellant's attack is confined to the judgment, and, under the rule declared in the cases above cited, the contention of the appellant as to the insufficiency of the description as embodied in the judgment herein must be sustained.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for hearing in bank is denied.

The effect of the reversal of the judgment is to return the case to the trial court for a new trial and for such proceedings therein, including the right of the respective parties to make such application to amend their pleadings as they may be advised, as though there had been no previous trial of the action.

FIFE v. MATHES. (L. A. 4565.)

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇐100(1)—POWER OF ATTORNEY—POSSESSION OF PROPERTY.

A bare power of attorney from plaintiff to acquire, manage, sue for, etc., any real property "to which I now or hereafter may have any interest or right," did not empower plaintiff's attorney in fact, without plaintiff's knowledge and in the absence of any claim asserted by plaintiff, to take possession of and sue for vacant and unoccupied lots in the name of plaintiff.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by H. B. Fife against James H. Mathes. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Herbert C. Kelly, of San Diego, for appellant.

Hamilton & Lindley, of San Diego, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff sues in ejectment, alleging that on July 10, 1914, while he was in lawful and peaceable possession of certain described city lots, claiming title thereto in fee, he was ousted therefrom by defendant, who, without right or title and by force, entered into possession of the same, which he withholds from plaintiff, all of which allegations are denied by the defendant, who in his answer alleges ownership of the property in himself.

The case was tried by a jury, which, as directed by the court, brought in a verdict for defendant, upon which judgment was entered and from which plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff's claim to the property was based wholly upon the naked possession thereof, and defendant's right thereto was founded upon a tax deed from the state of California, which the court, over plaintiff's objection to its competency, admitted in evidence. The court's ruling in so receiving the deed in evidence is the chief, and indeed the only, error relied upon by plaintiff for a reversal of the judgment.

It is unnecessary to pass upon the alleged error of the court in so ruling, since, as we view the case, the record fails to show that plaintiff was ever at any time in possession of the property.

As disclosed by the evidence of Herbert C. Kelly, who appeared in the dual capacity of both attorney and sole witness for plaintiff (and in neither rôle with credit to himself), the latter on April 1, 1914, for an expressed consideration of $1 executed to him an irrevocable power of attorney—

"to buy, acquire, receive, sue for, defend, recover, manage, maintain, improve, control, sell, convey, assign, mortgage, pledge, lease, release, receive rents, profits, incomes, proceeds, and price, and reinvest or dispose of the same, compromise, settle and deal in or with in every way whatsoever, as freely as I myself might do in the absence of this grant, any and all real or personal property or interest or right therein or thereto now or hereafter standing in my name, or in or to which I now or hereafter may have any interest or right whatsoever, within the county of San Diego, state of California, and to do any and every act, execute any and every instrument, carry on any and every business, and to make and carry out any and every agreement or arrangement which may in his judgment be convenient or advisable for any of the purposes mentioned herein."

Kelly further testified:

"I don't know anything about H. B. Fife." "I don't know whether Mr. Fife was just a hobo or not." That he had met him only once and that was when alone on the street in La Jolla. That he did not know his present residence and had no correspondence with him as to the power of attorney under which, without any direction so to do, or other authority than that conferred by the document, he some time in April, 1914, at his own expense, had a fence erected around the lots, for the cost of which he was reimbursed by one Max Watson, not shown to have any connection with plaintiff. That he never at any time talked with Mr. Fife concerning the property nor informed him as to the fencing of the same, nor of any acts taken in regard thereto. That plaintiff's claim to the property was not based upon any deed or instrument of conveyance, but solely upon the fact that from some time in April, 1914, when the fence was erected, to July 10th following, when the alleged ouster occurred, he was in possession thereof.

Conceding, as claimed by appellant, that the tax deed was insufficient to divest the real owner of title to the lots, and that defendant's entry thereon was unlawful, plaintiff was in no position to complain unless, as claimed, he was at the time in possession thereof. The acts of dominion over the property whereby his possession was manifested were not had and taken by plaintiff, but by Kelly, whose sole authority so to do in the name of and for plaintiff was the power of attorney, wherein no claim to or reference in any manner was made to the lots. By the terms of the instrument Kelly's authority to act for plaintiff was restricted to acts in connection with real property then or thereafter standing in the name of plaintiff, or to property in which he had some right or interest. This did not empower Kelly, as attorney in fact for plaintiff, in the absence of any claim, right, or interest asserted by plaintiff, to take possession of vacant and unoccupied lots in the name of plaintiff, who, it appears, was never informed of the unwarranted acts, and thus afforded opportunity to disclaim the same. If in the commission of such trespass damage had resulted, could it be said that plaintiff would have been liable therefor? If not, it would seem equally clear that the unauthorized acts of Kelly constituted no ground upon which plaintiff could assert that he was in possession of the lots at the time of the ouster. Our conclusion is that the evidence excludes any inference that plaintiff was at any time in possession of the lots, and since the alleged possession thereof is the sole ground upon which he based his right of action, it must follow that, without regard to whether the court erred in admitting the tax deed in evidence and instructing the jury as to the effect thereof, the directed verdict in favor of defendant was not unwarranted by the facts so made to appear.

There is no merit in the contention that the court erred in denying plaintiff's motion, made at the close of the evidence, to file a supplemental complaint, wherein he proposed to set up a deed from some one purporting to be a conveyance to him of the property in question.

We may say that the action of plaintiff's attorney, as shown by his own testimony, discloses the fact that he was knowingly engaged in conducting an illy camouflaged transaction for himself and others, using the name of plaintiff, who he knew had no interest in the subject of the action.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re DEXTER'S ESTATE. (L. A. 5604.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 14, 1918.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⇐14—WILLS ⇐130—APPOINTMENT OF EXECUTOR —HOLOGRAPHIC WILL.

Where deceased in writing to nephew informed him as to location of her valuables, expressed desire that public administrator should not handle her property, and told him to keep letter in safe depository, an addendum to letter reading: "I have stated to you before that I wish you to administer on my estate, when it has to be. So will put it in writing. Distributed equally among my nieces and nephews. You receive your pay besides out of the estate" —was written in view of possible death, and should be construed as a holographic will, making nephew executor.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Hester W. Dexter, deceased. Appeal from order of court admitting a certain document to probate as the last will and testament of Hester W. Dexter. Affirmed.

Hurst & Hurst, of Woodland, and Haines & Haines, of San Diego, for appellant.

Grant & Bailey, of San Diego, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from an order of court admitting a certain document to probate as the last will and testament of Hester W. Dexter.

It appears that Thomas J. Dexter died intestate, leaving as the surviving widow of his second marriage Hester W. Dexter, and a community estate, one-half of which went to said widow; hence, under the provisions of section 1386, Civil Code, contestant and her sisters, children of Thomas W. Dexter, deceased, by a former marriage, would, in the absence of testamentary disposition thereof made by Hester W. Dexter, deceased, who left no issue, be entitled thereto.

The document admitted to probate as a will was as follows:

"Woodland, May 9th, 1904.

"I have stated to you before that I wish you to administer on my estate, when it has to be. So will put it in writing. Distributed equally among my nieces and nephews. You receive your pay besides out of the estate.

"Your Aunt, Mrs. H. W. Dexter.

"to
"Charles H. Wright."

This writing was in the form of an addendum written upon a sheet of paper upon which Mrs. Dexter had, on May 8, 1904, written a letter addressed, "Dear Charley and Mabel," in which, after referring to matters of family interest and the fact that she was about to go on a visit for some length of time, she said:

"My valuables are in a box in bank, which I inclose an order for you to get if anything happens to me while I am away. Mrs. Coil will notify you. If any advice. Hurst & Hurst lawyers here.

"Keep this all inclosed. Don't want the public administrator to handle my effects, he will unless a relative in the state.

"Love to both. Truly Hester W. Dexter.

"Hope to come and see you on my return. All is in the box except a bank book I take with me of a deposit in San Francisco Savings Union $500."

The question for determination is, What was the intention of deceased in giving expression to the language employed in the instrument? and this should be ascertained by a consideration of the whole document in the light of the circumstances under which it was written. Thus considered, it appears quite evident that the document formally addressed "To Charles H. Wright" was prepared in view of her possible death, and intended by her not only as a testamentary disposition of her property to her nephews and nieces, but also directed that he act as executor thereof. The wish theretofore expressed that he should administer upon her estate "when it had to be," she put in writing in the form of an olographic will, and therein directed the distribution of her estate. It is evident that the word "distributed," notwithstanding the past tense of the verb, is meant, "to be distributed," and could have reference to no subject for distribution other than her estate, to obtain possession of which she stated in her letter: "I inclose an order for you to get if anything happens to me while I am away." That she understood the importance and character of the writing is apparent from the fact that in the letter of transmittal she impressed upon Wright the importance of keeping it in some safe depository.

In our opinion the document must, as deemed by the trial court, be regarded as the last will and testament of deceased.

The order is affirmed.

McLEAN v. COLF et al. (L. A. 4476.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 12, 1918.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY ⊂=15—PROTECTION OF PROPERTY.

Where plaintiff seized paper, property of a defendant, she gained only a momentary custody, rather than its possession, and defendant had right to use force to protect his possession, or to regain his momentarily interrupted possession.

2. ASSAULT AND BATTERY ⊂=7—DEFENSE OF PROPERTY—REGAINING POSSESSION—NECESSARY FORCE.

Defendant's right to use force, particularly as against plaintiff's person, in defending or recovering momentarily interrupted possession of a paper, was limited by condition that force must be no more than reasonably necessary.

3. ASSAULT AND BATTERY ⊂=35—DEFENSE OF PROPERTY—EXCESSIVE FORCE—EVIDENCE.

In action for assault and battery in attempting to recover paper belonging to one defendant and taken by plaintiff, evidence held to sustain finding that amount of force used by defendants was unreasonable, excessive, and violent.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1010(1) — ASSAULT AND BATTERY ⊂=42—DEFENSE OF PROPERTY —UNNECESSARY FORCE—QUESTION OF FACT.

Question whether excessive force has been used by defendants in regaining possession of property momentarily interrupted is one of fact for trial court or jury, and, evidence sustaining finding, Supreme Court cannot interfere with conclusion reached.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Laura V. McLean against Guy V. Colf and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Spencer Thorpe and Haas & Dunnigan, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

D. Z. Gardner, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Action to recover damages for personal injuries resulting from an alleged assault and battery by the defendants upon the plaintiff. The cause was tried without a jury; the court making its findings in favor of the plaintiff, and entering judgment in her favor for $300. The defendants appeal.

Their only contention is that the evidence fails to sustain the findings. It appears that the defendant Guy V. Colf, as contractor, had undertaken to construct a dwelling house for the plaintiff. A dispute arose concerning the completion of the contract, and the owner agreed with the contractor that, if the latter would do certain specified work, Mrs. McLean would consider the contract as completed. This understanding was embodied in a letter signed by Mrs. McLean and her husband, and addressed to Colf. On the following day Colf, with his codefendants, came to the house to do the work agreed upon. Mrs. McLean met them, and requested certain other changes in the place of those specified in her letter. To this the contractor assented. He proceeded to write a new agreement embodying the new terms. He laid the letter of the preceding day on a table, and was proceeding to write the new agreement, when the plaintiff took the letter and placed it inside her bodice, stating that she would keep it. Colf demanded its return, which was refused, and he thereupon attempted to take it from her by force. The plaintiff resisted, and Colf called his codefendants to his aid. The three men continued their efforts to take the paper from the plaintiff, she meanwhile resisting and screaming, until a neighbor appeared on the scene, whereupon the defendants desisted. According to the plaintiff's testimony, which was in some degree corroborated, the defendants treated her with considerable roughness, not to say brutality, inflicting bruises and swellings upon her person, and causing her pain from which she suffered for two weeks or more.

[1-4] The claim of the appellants that the paper was the property of the appellant Guy V. Colf; that the plaintiff, by seizing it, gained only a momentary custody, rather than the possession of it; and that said Colf had the right to use force to protect his possession, or to regain his momentarily interrupted possession, may be conceded. But the right to use force, particularly as against the person of another, is always limited by the condition that the force must be no more than is reasonably adequate and necessary to the occasion. 5 C. J. 631; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyc. (2d Ed.) 981; Chapell v. Schmidt, 104 Cal. 511, 38 Pac. 892. In this case the court made a finding:

"That the amount of force and violence used by the defendants in committing the assault and battery upon the plaintiff was unreasonable and excessive and unduly violent."

Without going into any further recital of the details of the occurrence, as testified to by plaintiff, it may be said that the evidence is ample to sustain this finding. Although Colf may have had a technical right to the paper, its ownership and possession were of little or no substantial value. The claim of the appellants that their failure to regain the paper conclusively establishes that they did not use more than the "necessary" force is without merit. Their want of success may have been due to a variety of causes other than their own moderation. The question whether excessive force has been used is peculiarly one of fact for the trial court or the jury, and, under the circumstances here shown, we cannot interfere with the conclusion reached.

The judgment is affirmed.

REHER v. REED et al. (L. A. 4480.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 12, 1918.)

1. WORK AND LABOR ⊂=28(5)—SPECIAL CONTRACT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.
In action for work and labor performed and money expended by plaintiff's firm for defendant's use, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that there was no special contract between defendant and plaintiff's firm whereby firm agreed to cultivate tract of land.

2. WORK AND LABOR ⊂=28(4)—AMOUNT OWING PLAINTIFF—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.
In action for work and labor performed and money expended by plaintiff's firm for defendant's use, evidence held to support finding there was $599.14 due and owing plaintiff as assignee of his firm.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1033(7)—HARMLESS ERROR—UNINTELLIGIBLE FINDINGS.
Defendant's contention that findings of trial court as to plaintiff's last three causes of action are indefinite and unintelligible cannot avail him on appeal, findings being in his own favor.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by C. C. Reher against C. C. Reher, S. C. Reher, and C. M. Reher, individually and as copartners doing business as Reher Brothers, and George H. Reed, wherein Reed filed cross-complaint against the Rehers individually and as copartners. From judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying his motion for new trial, defendant Reed appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

H. P. Shaw, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

H. W. Brewer, of El Centro, and McPherrin & Nichols, of Imperial, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant and cross-complainant George H. Reed from a judgment in plaintiff's favor upon his complaint, and against the cross-complainant upon his cross-complaint. The plaintiff sets forth fourteen causes of action in the form of the common counts for work and labor performed and for money expended by a partnership known as Reher Bros. for the defendant's use and benefit; the said causes of action having been assigned to the plaintiff. The defendant denies each of these alleged causes of action, and for answer and also by way of cross-complaint alleges the existence of a special contract between said partnership and himself by the terms of which the former agreed to level, plow, cultivate, disc harrow, and irrigate a certain tract of land in Imperial county, and alleges that the said partnership failed and neglected to carry out said contract, by reason of which he was damaged in the sum of $7,285, for which sum he prays judgment in his cross-complaint. The case was tried without a jury, and the trial court by its findings found that as to the first eleven causes of action the plaintiff's complaint was true, but found against the plaintiff upon his last three alleged causes of action. The court also found against the defendant's averment in his answer and cross-complaint as to the existence of any special contract between himself and said copartnership, and further found against the defendant's claim of damages. The plaintiff was accordingly awarded judgment for the sum of $599.14. The defendant moved for a new trial, which motion was denied, and from said judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] The appellant's first contention is that the finding of the trial court that there was no special contract between the defendant and the plaintiff's assignor is contrary to the evidence in the case. This contention has no merit. The plaintiff, as one of the members of the said copartnership, testified fully as to the arrangement between the parties upon which the partnership performed the several sorts of services upon which the counts in his complaint were predicated. His testimony upon that subject is contradicted by the defendant in certain material respects, but if believed by the trial court was sufficient to support its findings in the plaintiff's favor. The claim of the appellant that the finding that there was $599.14 due and owing plaintiff is contrary to the evidence is supported by an argument which is more specious than sound. The plaintiff testified from memory as to the several payments which had been made by the defendant as the work progressed. One of these was of the sum of $400 which plaintiff stated he had received in December, 1908. The defendant produced canceled checks showing payment of $300 and $100 on January 9, 1909, and he claims that he is entitled to credit for these amounts and also for the $400 payment to which the plaintiff testified; but we think it may be fairly inferred that the payments cover the single credit of $400, particularly in view of the fact that the defendant produced no check showing any payment in the month of December.

[3] The appellant's further contention that the findings of the court as to the plaintiff's last three alleged causes of action are indefinite and unintelligible can be of no avail to him, for the reason that as to those three causes of action the findings were in his favor. As to the other contentions of the appellant with respect to alleged errors of the trial court in the admission and exclusion of evidence, none of them involve any legal principle or are supported by any authority or appear otherwise to have any semblance of merit.

Judgment and order affirmed.

LEWIS v. HALL et al. (Civ. 2526.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 1, 1918.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟸148(2)—NOTICE OF CHANGE OF AGENT'S AUTHORITY TO SELL.
Purchasers of land from vendor's agent, knowing that vendor had reserved right to change scope of agency and that one-half of land purchased was in possession of tenant, were charged with notice of change in agent's contract, withdrawing authority to sell such land because of lease to the tenant.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸232(9)—LAND OCCUPIED BY TENANT—NOTICE TO PURCHASER.
Occupancy of land by tenant was notice to prospective purchaser of tenant's rights therein.

3. EQUITY ⟸57—MAXIMS OF EQUITY.
Where there has been no actual conveyance of land, the passing of title to crops growing upon land by means of a mere contract for such conveyance in the future is based upon the doctrine that equity treats a thing agreed to be done as actually performed.

4. EQUITY ⟸66—MAXIMS OF EQUITY.
An equitable principle will not be applied for the purpose of defeating equity.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸194—NONPERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT—TITLE TO CROPS.
Where vendors under contract for future conveyance of land remained in possession of land, purchasers who failed to perform contract, and who made no effort to perform, and no demand upon vendors for possession, were not entitled to a volunteer crop of barley growing on land at time of execution of contract.

6. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⟸290—COMPENSATION OF RECEIVER—MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE ACTION.
Where plaintiff, in action to foreclose chattel mortgage, applied for receiver, receiver's compensation could be charged to plaintiff, where court found that the appointment of receiver was improvidently and erroneously made.

7. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⟸290—RECEIVERS—COMPENSATION—PROCEEDINGS.
Where court, having found that appointment of receiver, upon motion of plaintiff, in chattel mortgage foreclosure action, was improvidently and erroneously made, settled receiver's account of hearing of which plaintiff had notice, and two days thereafter made order charging receiver's compensation to plaintiff, plaintiff had notice of the order so made; it being based upon the proceeding at which court settled receiver's account.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Frank Kellner Lewis, executrix of the last will and testament of E. F. Kellner, deceased, against John H. Hall and others. From judgment for plaintiff against defendants Hall only, and against plaintiff for compensation to be paid receiver, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Gallaher & Aten, of Fresno, and Childers & Bruce, of El Centro, for appellant

O'Brien & Spalding, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This was an action to foreclose a mortgage given by defendants John H. Hall, Howard H. Hall, and Emmett H. Hall upon a volunteer crop of barley growing upon land belonging to the defendant San Joaquin Valley Farm Lands Company (a corporation), hereinafter referred to as the Land Company, and for which land they held a contract of purchase. The defendants Hall confessed judgment in the sum of $2,754.20, the amount of the obligation to secure which the crop mortgage was given, for which sum, with interest, judgment was duly awarded against them; but as to the Land Company the court decreed that the plaintiff take nothing, and that the rights of said company in said crop so mortgaged were superior to those of the plaintiff, and denied to the plaintiff any relief by way of foreclosure. Pending the litigation a receiver was appointed upon the prayer of the plaintiff, and in its judgment the court ordered that the balance in his hands, amounting to the sum of $1,250.88, be paid to the Land Company. The court also, after final judgment, made an order that the compensation of said receiver, amounting to the sum of $400, be paid by the plaintiff. The appeal is by plaintiff from that part of the judgment denying her any relief against the Land Company, and awarding to the latter the balance in the receiver's hands, and is taken upon the judgment roll. Plaintiff also appeals from the order charging her with the payment of the receiver's fees, and this part of her appeal is based upon a bill of exceptions.

The facts, which are very fully found by the court and as to which there seems to be no dispute, are as follows: The San Joaquin Valley Farm Lands Company on January 15, 1915, was the owner of some 70,000 acres of land situated in the county of Fresno. It had its principal place of business in the city of Los Angeles, and on said date entered into a contract with Stine & Kendrick (a corporation), doing business in the city of San Francisco, by which Stine & Kendrick was employed to sell some 30,000 acres of said land in parcels of varying size and upon certain conditions, terms, and restrictions. On April 26, 1915, the Land Company executed to its said agent a power of attorney, authorizing said agent to make, execute, sign, and deliver contracts for the sale of the lands authorized to be sold by said agreement. This power of attorney made specific reference to the said contract of January 15, 1915, and to the provisions therein contained by which it could be modified, altered or terminated. The terms of this contract and also of said power of attorney were known to the defendants Hall. Included in said lands so authorized to be sold was a tract of some 640 acres, described as follows: The east one-half of section 32 and the west one-half of section 33 in township 15 south, range 17 east, M. D. B. & M. On December 17, 1915, the Land Company leased to one V. P. Snow one-half of this tract, namely, that part described as the west half of section 33, for a term of nine months from said date, and said Snow immediately took possession of said lands, and remained in their actual, open, and exclusive possession and occupancy until the filing of this suit. On December 22, 1915, the Land Company notified Stine & Kendrick of the execution and delivery of this lease, and instructed it to withdraw the land so leased from sale during the term of said lease. On December 27, 1915, said agent assented in writing to said withdrawal and notified the Land Company to that effect. The Hall brothers were never notified of any change or limitation of the authority of Stine & Kendrick to make contracts for the sale of lands included in the authorization of January 15, 1915, and did not know of such change or limitation until after the making and delivery of their crop mortgage hereinafter referred to; nor did they nor the plaintiff ever inquire of the Land Company whether that company had made any change in the authority of their said agent. On January 12, 1916, without the knowledge or consent of the Land Company, Stine & Kendrick, in the name of and for the Land Company, entered into a written agreement with the defendants Hall, by which agreement said agent and attorney in fact attempted to bind and obligate the Land Company to sell and convey to said defendants Hall the 640 acres hereinbefore described, for a price of $150 per acre, of which the sum of $19,200 was made payable two years from the date of the contract, and the remainder in eight equal annual installments thereafter, together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum on the unpaid purchase price, payable annually. Said contract also contained the following provisions:

"Third. That any crop heretofore planted upon said premises is hereby reserved by the owner, and the possession of such of said premises so planted shall not be delivered to nor taken by said purchaser until said crop shall have been harvested and removed from said premises; * * *

"Twenty-second. The purchaser agrees, forthwith after the execution hereof, to erect on said lands above described and fully pay for suitable buildings and other permanent improvements costing not less than a sum equal to 10 per cent. of the total purchase price aforementioned, and likewise to immediately commence and continue in good faith the development of said lands and the whole thereof by planting thereon alfalfa, fruit, or other crops acceptable to the owner, and should the purchaser fail so to do, said purchaser shall be conclusively deemed to be in default hereunder, and the owner may exercise either of the options hereinabove granted, providing for the termination of this agreement or the specific enforcement of the same."

The contract in all respects as to form complied with the requirements of the Land Company. At the time of the making of this contract the land covered by it, except that part of it leased to Snow, was in the actual occupancy and possession of the Land Company, and so remained up to the time of the commencement of this action, and neither of said defendants Hall ever demanded or sought to take possession thereof. At the time of the execution of said contract to them they were insolvent, and so have been ever since, and they have at no time attempted to comply with their contract in any respect. At that time, also, there was growing upon said land a volunteer crop of barley, which had sprung up from grain lost by the Land Company in harvesting the previous crop. On April 5, 1915, and for a long time prior thereto the defendants Hall had been indebted to the plaintiff, as executrix of the estate of E. F. Kellner, deceased, in the sum of $2,754.20, represented in large part by a promissory note given by them, and the balance being upon an open account; and on said day they executed and delivered to the plaintiff, as such executrix, a promissory note in said sum, payable on demand, and bearing interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month, and at the same time made and delivered to the plaintiff a mortgage upon the said crop of barley as security therefor. At the time of accepting this mortgage the plaintiff was aware that the only right or title of the defendants Hall, if any, to said crop, arose out of the contract for the purchase of the land above described, and she also knew that said defendants Hall had not taken, nor sought to take, possession of the land, and that it was in the actual and open occupancy of the Land Company and its tenant, and that the defendants Hall had done nothing whatever to in any way comply with their contract for the purchase of said land. This mortgage is the instrument sought to be foreclosed in this action.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact the trial court entered, among others, the following conclusions of law: That the defendants Hall acquired no title to the said crop, or right to sell or mortgage the same, and that the mortgage to the plaintiff was of no force or effect as against the Land Company; that the brothers Hall were in default under their contract with the Land Company; that the plaintiff took said mortgage subject to the superior right of the Land Company, as vendor under said contract, to disaffirm, cancel, or terminate the same on account of said default; and that the defendants Hall, at the time of the execution and delivery of said mortgage, had no right or power to incumber the crops growing upon said land. Judgment was accordingly entered that the plaintiff, as against the Land Company, take nothing by her action.

[1, 2] We are of the opinion that the judgment appealed from must be affirmed. Without deciding whether, as contended by the appellant, it was the duty of the Land Company to notify all persons having knowledge of their contract of agency with Stine & Kendrick of any modification therein, it appears to us that the defendants Hall were clearly put upon notice of such modification, and that they are to be charged with knowledge of such facts as a proper inquiry upon their part would have disclosed. Knowing that the Land Company had specifically reserved the right to change the scope of the agency of Stine & Kendrick, and that a tenant was openly in possession of one-half of the land for the purchase and immediate delivery of which they contracted, they made no inquiry of said tenant as to any rights which he claimed, which inquiry, if made, would have disclosed the fact that this part of the land had been withdrawn from sale; nor, irrespective of the open occupancy of such land by a tenant, did the defendants Hall make any inquiry of the Land Company as to whether they had exercised their reserved power of modification of their agent's authority. The authority of the agent to enter into this contract having been in fact withdrawn, the principal can be held to it only by showing some breach of duty on its part, and no omission on the part of the defendants Hall which prevents them from taking advantage of such breach. The fact that a vendor of land in the occupancy of his tenant, who contracts for its immediate delivery, thereby places himself under the obligation to terminate the tenancy, has no bearing upon the question of notice. The occupancy of the tenant was notice to a prospective purchaser of his rights, and a pursuance of the inquiry which such occupancy in the present case made necessary on the part of the defendants Hall would undoubtedly have disclosed the lack of authority on the part of Stine & Kendrick to enter into this contract.

[3-5] Quite apart from this question of notice the judgment of the court must be sustained upon the further ground that under the facts as disclosed by the findings, the title to the crop did not pass to the Hall brothers, and this, not by reason of any express reservation thereof, but because there are no facts existing in the case upon which a passage of title to the crop from the Land Company to the defendants Hall can be predicated. It is true that the appellant in her brief cites authorities to the effect that a purchaser of real estate under a contract giving him the right to possession becomes the owner of crops growing thereon when the contract was entered into, unless there be an express reservation of such crops; but where there has been no actual conveyance of the land, the passing of title to crops growing upon the land by means of a mere contract for such conveyance in the future is based upon the equitable doctrine that equity treats a thing agreed to be done as actually performed (8 Ruling Case Law, 360; Speicher v. Lacy, 28 Okl. 541, 115 Pac. 271, 35 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1066; Dunn v. Yakish, 10 Okl. 388, 61 Pac. 926), and is a principle applied only for the purpose of doing equity between the parties. An equitable principle will not be applied for the purpose of defeating equity. In the present case the Hall brothers did nothing under their contract; they did not enter upon its performance, and never attempted to. They made no demand for possession of the land, and the Land Company, not having been informed of the existence of the contract, was not in a position to make a tender of possession. There is nothing to show that the defendants Hall ever intended to perform, and the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the facts is that they did not. To ask a court of equity under such circumstances to apply the equitable doctrine above referred to for the purpose of converting a mere agreement to convey into an actual conveyance, and by so doing take away a crop from its owner and give it to persons who have not raised a finger in its production, or taken or manifested an intention to take a single step under a contract by which they might have acquired it, is to invite a stern refusal. As it has been said of the statute of frauds that it will not be used for the purpose of aiding the commission of a fraud, so of a principle of equity, it will not be applied for the purpose of defeating equity. Sellers v. Solway Land Co., 35 Cal. App. 259, 160 Pac. 175. In that case the court declined to invoke the equitable principle of estoppel against the party in whose favor the equities of the case seemed to lean.

The respondent, in support of the judgment, argues very persuasively that, even if title to the crop passed to the Hall brothers, the subsequent exercise by the Land Company of its option to terminate the contract, coupled with its possession of the land at all times, defeated the lien, if any, of the chattel mortgage; but we think, in view of our conclusion on the points already discussed, that it is not necessary to consider and decide that question.

[6, 7] As to the plaintiff's appeal from the order charging her with the payment of the receiver's fees, it appears from the record that the appointment was made at the request of the plaintiff, and that the Land Company (who, as we have seen, was in possession of the land) had ample means and was able to respond to the plaintiff for any damages that might result to her from its possession or disposition of the crop. The court in its findings declared that the appointment of the receiver was improvidently and erroneously made. Under these circumstances it would have been manifestly unjust to charge the defendant's property with the compensation of the receiver, and, on the other hand, such expense could legitimately be imposed upon the plaintiff, at whose instance the receiver was appointed. Frick v. Fritz, 124 Iowa, 529, 100 N. W. 513; McAnrow v. Martin, 183 Ill. 467, 56 N. E. 168; Ephraim v. Pacific Bank, 129 Cal. 589, 62 Pac. 177.

Appellant's principal objection to this order is that it was made without notice to him; but the record, we think, does not bear out this contention. It shows that the receiver filed his report and account, praying that it be settled and his compensation fixed; that thereafter the Land Company filed objections to the account, and asked that the receiver's compensation be not paid from the funds in his possession, but that the court should order it to be paid by the plaintiff. A hearing was duly had upon this matter, of which the plaintiff had notice. Thereafter, and on December 5, 1916, the court made an order settling the account, but containing no direction as to the receiver's compensation. Two days later, however, and without any further proceedings, the court made the additional order of which the appellant is now complaining, and which fixed the receiver's compensation at the sum of $400, and made it payable by the plaintiff. While it would have been more usual to dispose of all the matters pertaining to the receiver's account in one formal order, we can perceive no error in covering the matter by two separate orders, divided by an interval of time of two days. The second order, equally with the first, was based upon the proceeding of which the plaintiff had notice.

For the reasons given, the judgment and order are affirmed.

SHAW, J. Action to recover damages caused by the alleged negligent operation of defendant's railway train, which collided with plaintiff's automobile at the crossing of a public highway, known as Mission road, in the city of Los Angeles.

Judgment went for plaintiff, from which, and an order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant has appealed.

That defendant, at the time of the accident, was guilty of negligence in operating its train not only at an excessive rate of speed, but contrary to the provisions of a city ordinance, and without warning by the use of either whistle or bell, admits of no controversy.

As a defense to the cause of action, however, defendant pleaded contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, and, claiming that as a matter of law such contributory negligence was shown, it, at the close of plaintiff's evidence and based thereon, moved for a nonsuit, which motion was by the court denied. This ruling, claimed to be erroneous, constitutes the chief ground upon which defendant bases its claim for a reversal.

[1] It is settled law that, in reviewing the ruling of a court in passing upon a motion for nonsuit, every inference which can be reasonably deduced from the testimony must be resolved in support of the ruling. Applying this rule to the evidence touching the question of defendant's contributory negligence, it fairly appears therefrom that the train which collided with plaintiff's automobile was a nine-car passenger train, which at the time approached the crossing noiselessly, coasting downgrade in a westerly direction, at a speed of from 50 to 60 miles per hour; that at the point where plaintiff crossed the track the roadway upon which he was traveling was rough and bumpy, having been plowed up preparatory to paving it, and the grade thereof was some 20 to 25 inches below the defendant's railway track. Plaintiff was familiar with the track and its location and the frequency with which defendant operated trains over the same. In approaching the crossing he stopped his automobile at a point about 75 feet from the railway track, got out, and, hearing no bell or whistle, he looked easterly up the track, along which he had an unobstructed view for a distance of 800 to 1,000 feet; and it appearing that no train was in sight, and there being no warning to indicate the approach thereof, he got into his automobile and, traveling over the rough roadway up the slight grade proceeded to cross the track, which at the speed he traveled consumed some 12 or 15 seconds, during which time and while so proceeding he did not look further for the approach of a train. When he reached the track and was partially across the same, he was, by the blowing of the whistle, for the first time apprised of the presence of the train, coming from an easterly direction and then at a point distant about 100 to 120 feet from him. He had so nearly reached a point of safety that he escaped the engine, but the hind wheel of his automobile was caught by the step jutting out from the engine cab and turned over, as a result of which the injury and damage was sustained.

[2-5] It is quite true, as claimed by appellant, that a steam railway track over which trains are constantly operated is itself a warning of danger, and that one approaching with intent to cross the same may not rely upon want of negligence on the part of those engaged in operating the train. Notwithstanding their negligence, he is charged with notice of the hazard and risk which he assumes in crossing such track, and hence bound to exercise his faculties of sight and hearing in order to ascertain whether a train is approaching at a rate of speed and from a distance which should under the circumstances deter a prudent man exercising reasonable precautions for his safety from attempting to cross the same. Loftus v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 464, 137 Pac. 34, and cases therein cited. It was plaintiff's duty to stop and look and listen for the approach of a train. This, as shown by the uncontradicted evidence, he did, at a point 75 feet from the track. The question of whether one is guilty of negligence is ordinarily one of fact to be determined by the jury, and even where the facts, as here, are undisputed, it is nevertheless a question to be determined by the jury, unless it can be said that reasonable minds can draw but one conclusion as to the issue. Considering the character of the vehicle which plaintiff was driving, that its top was up rendering it necessary for him to again stop and get out in order to make his observation, and that the roadway embraced in the 75 feet over which he must travel to reach the track was rough and in a condition which demanded his close attention, taken in connection with the fact that 12 or 15 seconds before he reached the track he had made observations along 1,000 feet thereof, upon which no train was in sight, and that, except for the excessive speed at which the train was being operated, the 12 or 15 seconds required therefor afforded him ample time to cross in safety, we cannot say as a matter of law the conclusion of the jury in determining that plaintiff, under all the circumstances, exercised reasonable precautions for his safety, was improper. Vance v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 9 Cal. App. 20, 98 Pac. 41.

Conceding the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to propound certain questions to a witness called in rebuttal, no prejudice resulted therefrom, for the reason that the answers thereto were favorable to defendant; nor did plaintiff's efforts to impeach his own witness affect the substantial rights of defendant.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

RELEASE ⊜17(2) — RESCISSION — MISREPRESENTATION OF LEGAL EFFECT OF INSTRUMENT.

Where an employé in full possession of his faculties signed a release from personal injuries which he read and understood, or had every opportunity to read and understand, he cannot avoid the effect of his act by producing evidence that the master or the master's servants told him the release was not binding.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Action by Frank O. Rogers against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Judgment and order reversed.

U. T. Clotfelter, M. W. Reed, Robert Brennan, and F. J. Heid, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

George L. Greer, of Los Angeles, and Byron Waters and Grant Holcomb, both of San Bernardino, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover damages for personal injuries suffered by the plaintiff, caused by negligence of the defendants. The plaintiff at the time when the injuries were received by him was employed as a switchman on the railroad of the defendant corporation. Defendant Shortridge was foreman of a switching crew and engine of the defendant corporation. The defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. We observe, however, that the verdict as shown in the transcript was against the railway company only; and we assume that the judgment (which is not shown in the transcript, but entry of which is recited in the notice of appeal) also is against the railway company alone.

In addition to other grounds of defense which we find it unnecessary to consider, the defendants pleaded that, for a good and valuable consideration paid to the plaintiff by the defendant corporation, the plaintiff executed to said corporation an agreement in writing releasing it from all liability arising from the personal injuries claimed to have been sustained by him on the occasion referred to in the complaint. The accident occurred on the 6th day of February, 1913. On April 28, 1913, plaintiff received from the railway company (hereinafter called the appellant) the sum of $56.42, and executed a release, which we will call the "first release." On September 15, 1913, plaintiff received from appellant the further sum of $350 and executed another document, which we will call the "second release." The releases are identical with each other in form. They refer specifically to the injury sustained by respondent while in the performance of his duties as a switchman for appellant on the 6th day of February, 1913, and purport to fully release, discharge, and satisfy all claims, demands, or causes of action arising from or growing out of said injuries. In each of the releases respondent, in his own handwriting, made the following statement above his signature: "I have read the above voucher, receipt and release and fully understand the same."

It is conceded, as it must be, that the first release upon its face purports to be a full and complete release, and in that respect is identical with the second. To overcome the effect of the releases respondent gave testimony offered by him for the purpose of proving that both payments were for time lost after the accident and were calculated upon the basis of a percentage of the wages which respondent would have earned if the accident had not occurred. As a part of the same attempt to destroy the effect of the releases, respondent testified that his "job was at stake"; that he was assured by appellant's agent that the instruments which he signed were only receipts for wages or for lost time. The testimony thus received was admitted over objections of appellant, specifying, among other things, that the terms of a written contract could not thus be changed.

At the times when these settlements were made, the plaintiff had so far recovered from his injuries that he was able to and did voluntarily visit the office of appellant's claim agent, where both transactions were consummated, and he was in complete possession of his mental faculties. There is no evidence to the contrary. He admits that appellant's agents did not make any attempt to prevent him from reading the releases before they were signed by him.

We think that this case may very properly be determined upon the authority of Haviland v. Southern California Edison Co., 172 Cal. 601, 158 Pac. 328, where the Supreme Court has clearly stated the principles governing the case, and has pointed out the distinction between those cases in which releases of this kind may be set aside and those where such releases may not be set aside. It is true here, as it was true there, that—

"No case is cited, and we find none, which decides that where a party in full possession of his faculties signs an instrument which he has read and considered and whose terms and provisions he understands, he may avoid the effect of his act by producing evidence that the adverse party told him that the instrument was not binding."

Assuming it to be true that respondent in this case did not read the contracts which he signed, the legal situation is just the same, for he had a complete unimpeded opportunity to read the documents and to consider their effect.

The judgment and order are reversed.

2. EVIDENCE ⊜354(10) — DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT.

In action on book account on assigned claim of mine manager for salary, books kept by him were admissible, though his salary was entered up at $150 a month, instead of an entry being made of the items of work in each month; he having worked at salary of $150 a month.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊜9 — SALARY OF SERVANT.

Where person hired at fixed salary for definite period continues after expiration of period in the same employment without new contract, presumption is that continued employment is at same salary.

4. EVIDENCE ⊜354(9) — DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT.

In action on assigned claim of mine manager for salary, item representing claim by manager against another company, assumed by defendant company by resolution, held properly included in books of manager made up to close entire account with defendant company, so that books were not inadmissible.

5. EVIDENCE ⊜354(9) — DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT.

In action on assigned claim of mine manager for salary, item due manager on original contract under which mine was purchased by company, having been part of entire transaction between manager and company, held properly included in account between them drawn up by manager two years later to close entire account, so that books were admissible.

6. ACCOUNT STATED ⊜19(3)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action on assigned claim of mine manager for unpaid salary, count upon an account stated held sustained by the evidence.

7. EVIDENCE ⊜71—PRESUMPTION—DELIVERY OF MAIL.

There is a presumption that letter or document deposited in post office, properly directed to addressee, with proper postage prepaid, was delivered to addressee.

8. ACCOUNT STATED ⊜6(2) — RETENTION OF ACCOUNT.

Where account is rendered it becomes debtor's duty to make seasonable objections, and if he does not it becomes an "account stated," and foundation of an independent action.

9. ACCOUNT STATED ⊜6(2)—CLAIM FOR SALARY.

Where a mine manager presented his account for salary, etc., by mail to the company on or about August 1, 1914, and no objection was made thereto as late as December 28th, the officers of the company, on the contrary, promising suitable action, an "account stated" resulted.

10. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊜197(3)—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS — PROMISES TO PAY ITEMS.

In action on account stated for salary, etc., between mine manager and company, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding company kept alive two items of $1,500 and $458 against statute of limitations by repeated promises to pay.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by George W. Schneider against the Oakman Consolidated Mining Company.

From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Theodore L. Breslauer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Costello & Costello and Henry L. Corson, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. [1] This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment for plaintiff upon an assigned claim of one Frank Dillon. The defendant is a mining corporation, with its principal place of business in Massachusetts. On December 19, 1907, the defendant acquired a group of mines in Nevada county, Cal., from F. H. Oakman. On September 29, 1909, Dillon was elected mine manager, and from the 22d of November of that year he served as vice president of the company. On or about the 3d day of June, 1911, his salary was fixed at $150 per month, to continue to the 1st day of January, 1912. He was paid this salary in full to that date. He continued in the service of the company until the 1st day of August, 1914, without any new arrangement being made as to salary. It is claimed by the defendant that during the year 1913 he either performed no services, or that his services were materially different from those performed by him as manager during the period between his employment and the 1st day of January, 1913; but an examination of the evidence shows that he was busy about the affairs of the company during that time except a short period when he was absent on a vacation. While the mine was apparently not in operation, he kept it in condition to show to prospective purchasers, did the assessment work on the claims, and otherwise employed his time pretty fully about the mine. He did not charge the full price for his services during this period, however, but of this it seems to us the defendant has no right to complain. Schneider, upon the assignment of the claim to him, brought this action upon two counts, the first of which is for $4,219.49 upon an open book account, alleged to have accrued within four years before January 17, 1916, the date of filing the complaint, and the second upon an account alleged to have been stated between the parties on or about August 1, 1914, and, except as hereafter stated, the claim was composed of work done by Dillon as mine manager for the company. Dillon kept books, and one of the chief grounds upon which the appellant urges that this case should be reversed is that these books should not have been admitted in evidence because of the irregularities of Dillon's bookkeeping. It is true that there seem to be some inconsistencies in the books. Many such are pointed out by counsel, but from the evidence it appears that Dillon kept these books himself, that the entries, except of two or three items, were made practically contemporaneously with the transactions and on the dates that appear on the face of the books, that the items were correctly entered thereon, and it must be held that this was sufficient to justify their admission.

[2] It is contended that they should not have been admitted because the salary of Dillon was entered up at $150 per month instead of an entry being made of the separate items of work that he did during the month, but, as he was working at a salary of $150 per month, there seems to be nothing in this point.

[3] It is contended that there was no contract for salary beyond the 1st day of January, 1913, but it does not appear that there was any other contract for salary except the agreement for the specific period above mentioned ending on the last-named day; at least we are directed by counsel to no other agreement for salary. The rule of law in such cases is that, where a person, hired at a fixed salary, continues in the same employment without any new contract, the presumption is that the continued employment is at the same salary. Nicholson v. Patchin, 5 Cal. 475. The books were therefore admissible in evidence.

It is contended that these books do not prove the truth of the items therein contained. Conceding this to be true, the record contains much evidence by Dillon himself as to the verity of these items, and we think that the evidence amply sustains the findings of the court upon all questions as to the amount of salary due Dillon.

[4] The defendant objects to a certain item of $468 dated on the books as of August, 1914. This item was a claim by Dillon against another company, known as the Sunshine Company, which was assumed by defendant by a resolution adopted October 27, 1914. This, we think, is a sufficient admission, taken with the other evidence on this point, that the company did assume to pay this item, and therefore, as Dillon was making up a set of books for the purpose of closing his entire account with the defendant, the item was properly included in his books.

[5] A $1,500 item due Dillon on the original contract under which the mine was purchased was included in this book account. Defendant argues that this item, being due upon a "special contract," could not be charged against it in this account, but we see no reason why it was not properly so charged. It was a claim against the company on December 3, 1912. Oakman, the president of the company and its responsible directing officer, wrote Dillon telling him not to worry about this $1,500, and assuring him that it would be paid. It was somewhat irregular to enter it upon the books as late as August, 1914, but it made a part of the transaction between the parties and was properly included in the account between them. The justice of the claim is not denied, and the only defense set up thereto is the statute of limitations, and that it was not properly included in the proofs to sustain the account. Had the entry been made as the first item of the account and entered at the date of Oakman's letter, no objection, it seems, could properly have been made to it. We are not favored with the date or terms of the original contract except by inference. Counsel has not seen fit to call our attention to the contract if it is included in the transcript, and we have been unable to find it, but it is claimed that at the time the item was entered in the books it was barred by subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, because founded upon a written agreement made outside of the state of California. We are not directed to the evidence that it was executed outside the state; at least we can find no citation to any such evidence, and we have been unable to find such evidence in the transcript. The history of the item, taking the statements of defendant's counsel unsupported by citations to the evidence, is that it was due January 1, 1911; it appears in evidence that on December 3, 1912, Oakman, the president, promised in writing that it would be paid; that again on January 23, 1913, Amstein, who upon Oakman's death had apparently assumed direction of the corporation's affairs in Massachusetts, wrote Dillon that "the matter will surely be taken care of in due time"; that on August 1, 1914, Dillon entered the item in his account before finally presenting it to the company. We are constrained to leave the matter as the trial court found it.

[6, 7] The count upon an account stated is also sustained by the evidence. Dillon testified that he deposited the account in the post office on or about August 1, 1914, properly directed to the defendant at its office in Massachusetts, and that he paid the proper postage thereon. It is therefore presumed that the letter with the account therein was delivered to the defendant; but it is not necessary to rely on this presumption, for on the 17th of August, 1914, Amstein wrote Dillon a letter which cannot be interpreted otherwise than as a promise to settle Dillon's book account, and on September 2, 1914, Amstein again wrote Dillon promising to bring about a settlement, and on September 15, 1914, the matter was brought before the directors, as shown by a letter from Amstein to Dillon written on the company's stationery, and in which the hope was held out to Dillon that the matter would soon be fixed up with him. On October 6, 1914, Amstein again wrote to Dillon asking him for the lowest figures that he would take in settlement of his claim, and on November 4 again wrote, saying that he had had the matter up before the directors, and assuring him that it would be fixed up soon, and as late as December 28, 1914, Perry, another officer of the company, wrote Dillon, saying that they had discovered that there were many obligations to be met, among them that of Dillon, and asking him for a statement of his account, together with different methods of settlement that might be satisfactory to him, and reminding him that the company was without funds, but promising that they would make desperate efforts to get the same. Nowhere in this correspondence is there any objection to Dillon's account.

[8] When an account is rendered to a debtor, it becomes his duty to make seasonable objections thereto, if any he have, and if he does not do so the account becomes an account stated and the foundation of an independent cause of action, which arises thereon whenever a reasonable time has elapsed without any objection being made thereto. It has been held that under certain circumstances failure to object for 6 months after the receipt of an account by the debtor is unreasonable (Crane v. Stansbury, 173 Cal. 631, 161 Pac. 7), and in Atkinson v. Golden Gate Tile Co., 21 Cal. App. 170, 131 Pac. 107, a space of 25 days which elapsed after rendition of the account without objection thereto being made on the part of the debtor established the account as an account stated.

[9] The facts of this case clearly sustain the allegations of the second count of the complaint. Auzerais v. Naglee, 74 Cal. 60, 15 Pac. 371; Hendy v. March, 75 Cal. 566, 17 Pac. 702; Mayberry v. Cook, 121 Cal. 588, 54 Pac. 95; Terry v. Sickles, 13 Cal. 427; Cowell v. Snyder, 171 Cal. 294, 152 Pac. 920.

[10] It is contended, however, that the two items above mentioned, $1,500 and $468, were barred by the statute of limitations before the presentation of the account in August, 1914. We think the evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that the company kept these items alive by repeated promises to pay the same from time to time, and that therefore they were never barred.

In this case the labor of the court has been rendered more difficult by the failure of counsel to indicate where the evidence supporting their various contentions might be found in the transcript or in the appendix to appellant's opening brief. We think the court may therefore be pardoned if any mistakes have been made in reciting the evidence. The writer has made a diligent effort to discover the facts as stated in the briefs, but in some instances has been unable to do so.

The judgment is affirmed.

LAKAS v. ARCHAMBAULT. (Civ. 1868.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 4, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 2, 1918.)

1. HOMESTEAD ⊂⊃18—"HEAD OF FAMILY."
Defendant, who was the sole support of his aged grandmother, for some years the object of his care, was the "head of a family," within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 1261, when he made a declaration of homestead.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Head of a Family.]

2. HOMESTEAD ⊂⊃33—OCCUPANCY—ERECTION OF DWELLING HOUSE.
Defendant, who erected on his claimed homestead a one-room dwelling house, 20 by 10 feet, having sides of plain lumber, the cracks being battened, with four windows and two doors, the flooring being tongued and grooved, and there being a place for a stove, complied with the Homestead Act.

3. HOMESTEAD ⊂⊃1, 55—RIGHT OF DEBTOR —STATUTE.
Under the Homestead Act, defendant had right to defeat plaintiff creditor's attachment of land by impressing premises with homestead, purpose of statute being to enable debtor to establish refuge for himself and family, which, under section 1241, he may do at any time prior to lien being fixed by judgment.

4. HOMESTEAD ⊂⊃31—FORMS AND INTENTION.
Merely to go through forms necessary to establishment of homestead under the Homestead Act is not sufficient, for there must be present the element of good faith, and a present intention to make premises home of declarant and family.

5. HOMESTEAD ⊂⊃31—OCCUPANCY AND INTENTION—RESIDENCE.
Under the Homestead Act, time of occupancy prior to or after declaration of homestead is not only essential element in perfecting right; physical fact of occupancy and intention with which premises are occupied being limitations to be considered in determining residence.

6. EVIDENCE ⊂⊃589—ACCEPTANCE OF PARTY'S TESTIMONY.
In action to declare void homestead claimed by defendant, court was not bound to accept as conclusive defendant's testimony as to his intention in going on premises and erecting house, if other circumstances were inconsistent with intention testified to.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃931(1)—REVIEW—EVIDENCE.
In viewing circumstances bearing on defendant's intention in going on premises claimed by him as homestead and erecting house, appellate court, in support of judgment, must give them interpretation accorded by trial court, if reasonable, though different interpretation favorable to defendant might also have been reasonably given them.

8. HOMESTEAD ⊂⊃57(3)—INTENTION TO OCCUPY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.
In action to declare void homestead claimed by defendant on 20 acres of land whereon he erected a one-room dwelling house and occupied it with his grandmother temporarily, evidence held to justify conclusion that defendant did not have intention when he went on premises permanently to occupy them as a home.

9. WITNESSES ⊂⊃321—IMPEACHMENT OF OWN WITNESS—SURPRISE.
Circumstances under which plaintiff's own witness had given certain testimony held to have brought case within rule permitting plaintiff to impeach witness on ground he was surprised by her answer.

10. HOMESTEAD ⊂⊃57(2)—INTENTION IN ESTABLISHING—DECLARATIONS OF PARTY.
In action to declare void homestead claimed by defendant, it was permissible to show by his own declarations what defendant's intention was in establishing a homestead.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1058(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.
In an action to declare void defendant's homestead, refusal to allow defendant to show that he had made some attempt to obtain a house or move to the premises held not prejudicial to defendant; he having testified as to his intention in building house he occupied.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Action by Speros Lakas against George L. Archambault. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur L. Levinsky, of Stockton, for appellant.

Lafayette J. Smallpage, of Stockton, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action to have a homestead claimed by defendant on certain 20 acres of land declared void and invalid. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and plaintiff had findings and judgment in his favor. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

The pleadings raised the single question whether or not the homestead sought to be vacated was valid.

For several years prior to the declaration of homestead by defendant, he had supported and maintained his grandmother, Mrs. Jack. They had lived together on a tract of land of about 57 acres, four miles distant from the city of Stockton, of which land the 20-acre tract in suit was a part. The house occupied by defendant at that time and other improvements were on a part of the larger tract, being 37 acres, which latter he sold some time prior to the declaration of homestead. Upon the sale of this 37 acres defendant with his grandmother moved to Stockton and took up his residence in one of the flats of a building under the management of his sister-in-law, the wife of his brother, C. C. Archambault, to whom defendant paid rent for his flat. His grandmother lived with him there and was supported by him. She was over 90 years of age, and feeble, sometimes bedridden for a considerable period, but "up and down," as described by witnesses. Defendant was a "meat cutter" by occupation. He moved into town, as he testified, because he "had bad luck, didn't make no money, and my health was bad, and I had a chance to work in town and to be where my work was." Defendant was engaged in the pursuit of his trade after moving to Stockton and up to the time he made the declaration of homestead and also thereafter. On April 22, 1915, plaintiff levied a writ of attachment against the said 20-acre tract, and soon thereafter defendant commenced the construction of a dwelling house thereon, which was substantially completed by the 1st of May, and on the first Sunday in May, 1915, defendant with his grandmother moved to this house and occupied it for about five weeks, when they returned to the apartment formerly occupied by them in Stockton, and defendant continued the pursuit of his trade as meat cutter. During their stay in the house on the 20-acre tract, defendant went to town daily, except Sunday, to work at his trade as meat cutter, taking his morning and evening meals at this house and his luncheon in town. At the time he removed to the 20-acre tract, defendant took with him the furniture and housekeeping utensils with which he had been housekeeping in said flat and his own and his grandmother's wearing apparel. Three sacks of coal at one time and two sacks at another time and some wood were sent out for use in the cook stove. The house was a one-story building 20 feet long and 10 feet wide, consisting of one room in which the occupants lived. "The sides of the house were plain lumber, surfaced lumber, and the cracks were battened—battening, they call it. There are four windows in the house and two doors. The interior was plain boards and uprights that they were nailed to, and a roof. Tongue and grooved flooring and place for stove. No partition in it at all; just one room."

One Blankenship had a verbal cropping contract or lease of this land with defendant by which defendant was entitled to one-half of the crops, the lease embracing the entire 20 acres. Blankenship helped defendant to build the house, hauled the wood and coal to it, and some time after defendant moved back to his flat, occupied and cared for the house defendant had built on the premises. Blankenship had previously occupied a house situated on adjoining land, the 20-acre tract having no improvements on it.

It is contended by plaintiff that because of this existing lease or cropping contract defendant could not establish a homestead on the premises. We do not find it necessary to consider this point.

The foregoing facts are undisputed. Witness Kirkins, proprietor of a restaurant in Stockton where defendant occasionally took a meal, testified that about the time plaintiff sued out his attachment against defendant the latter told witness about it, and in the presence of defendant's brother there was some talk of securing plaintiff by giving him a mortgage on the premises involved. He was asked as to any further conversation, and replied:

"Well, then, when they leave I don't know nothing about it, except I remember now he tell me they are going to give him the mortgage. That is all I know about it. So next morning George Archambault come to the place again and eat the breakfast. I ask him how he get along. He tell me: 'I don't think I am going to give him any mortgage. I think I can beat it,' he says, 'without giving any mortgage.' That is all. Any time I see him I tell him, 'How you get along?' He says: 'I got pretty nice lawyer. I think he pull me through all right.' I tell nothing else. That is all. All we were talking about that I know. I always tell him, 'How you get along?' That is all. He tell me he think he get along all right, he think he going to beat the case—the note—whatever it is. Of course, Archambault a friend of mine, just as Lakas. I know Archambault more than I do Lakas. I am willing to tell the truth. That is all I can say. I don't know what they do after that. * * * Q. Do you remember any further conversation that took place at all? A. Oh, yes; I remember the time he told me he was going to make the application for the homestead. That he could do. I didn't know what homestead meant, myself, to tell you the truth. He says he make a homestead. I said: 'What you going to do? What homestead that mean?' He says: 'Well, I am going to move out and make a homestead and live there. So, if I live there 30 days,' he says, 'then they won't bother me—Lakas won't bother me with his note, I declare a homestead.' So right after—oh, about two weeks, come to a little place my brother used to own. I work there. I said, 'How you get along?' He said, 'I get along all right.' Because I had kind of trouble myself, and I ask him how he make his homestead. He says: 'Well, I make it. If you stay there 30 days, it will be just the same, you can declare a homestead.' I said, 'How you go out and live in it?' He said, 'I have bedsteads, couple quilts,' whatever it is, he said, 'that is all you need.' I said, 'If you live in the place, if a person live in the place, you think they can bother them?' He said: 'No, they can't bother them. You are all right.' That is about all we were talking about. Of course, my talking, I don't remember well different exactly. That is all he was talking. I always try to fix it up between Lakas and George. I was try very hard, telling them the best way do not get in trouble."

Plaintiff called defendant as his witness, who testified to many of the facts above narrated. He was asked if he paid rent for the flat he had rented from Mrs. Archambault for the month that he was out at his ranch, and answered that he did not. He was asked on cross-examination why he removed from the homestead, and answered:

"My grandmother was sick, you see. It was impossible for me to get anybody, and I didn't want to impose on good nature myself." He was asked who looked after her when she was sick. "A. Mrs. Yettner (a near neighbor) was there every day, and Bill Blankenship was there more or less, and that was all. * * * The Court: Q. You stated that your grandmother was ill? A. Yes, more or less. Q. She is in feeble health, is she? A. Yes, sir. Q. How long has she been in feeble health? A. Well, for the last three or four months she has been pretty bad. Q. Prior to that time, how was she? A. Had asthma, and short of breath, but she pulled through all right. Q. At the time she moved off the ranch back home, was her condition about the same as when you went out? A. No, it was a little worse. Being alone it bothered her."

Mrs. C. C. Archambault, defendant's sister-in-law, was called by plaintiff. She testified that when defendant moved to the ranch in May he took his grandmother out there in a surrey; that they had been living in a flat for which defendant paid witness rent.

She was asked if defendant paid her rent for the flat while he was on the ranch, and answered: "No, sir; he did not pay me rent for the rooms while he was absent." She was asked if she did not state to plaintiff that she had received rent from defendant for that time. Defendant objected on the ground that it was an attempt to impeach his own witness. The objection was overruled, and she answered: "I don't remember, sir, whether I made such a statement or not." She testified that she visited defendant every Sunday while out there, and occasionally during the week when Mrs. Jack was sick; that Mrs. Jack had not been bedridden continuously, but "was up and down" and had been in that condition "for a couple of years" and that "she got worse out there" and "had been going down rapidly."

W. T. Blankenship testified, as plaintiff's witness, that he built the house for defendant on the premises in question, and that he lived in a house near by but not on the homestead premises; that he had a lease or cropping contract of the land, as hereinabove stated. On cross-examination he testified that his lease did not give him the occupancy of the land and that he lived in defendant's house in order to take care of it. "He told me to stay there. He wanted the land leveled, and some trees set out. He said if I would stay there he would pay me for that."

Plaintiff testified in his own behalf. His attention was called to the conversation between him and Mrs. C. C. Archambault concerning the payment of rent by defendant while on his homestead. He testified, over objection, that Mrs. Archambault told him defendant did pay rent for his flat for that time.

At this point plaintiff rested, and defendant moved for a nonsuit "upon the ground that the only allegation of the complaint in this action was that the defendant did not live on the premises, and that his grandmother did not live with him, and that she is not dependent upon him for support." It was contended that the evidence submitted by plaintiff showed that they did live there. Defendant is in error in his statement. The complaint alleged that neither did the defendant nor his grandmother "use said premises as a home, or reside upon them or any part thereof." In ruling upon the motion for nonsuit, the court said:

"The question of intent is necessarily involved in the matter of the defendant living upon the premises, and that must necessarily be a question of fact to be determined, and therefore the motion for a nonsuit will be denied."

Defendant was called as a witness in his own behalf. He testified that when he moved to the premises and all the time he was there it was his intention to make the place his home; that he moved back to town because of his grandmother's health, which grew worse while on the premises; that he went to town to work daily, but returned at night; that while he was away his grandmother was alone except as neighbors might call; that he paid no rent for his flat while on these premises. He testified, on cross-examination:

"Q. When you built that house, you did not intend to make it any bigger, did you? A. Yes, some day I did, in case there was a change in my grandmother, immediately I would go out there to live, immediately. I came in on account of my grandmother, for her health and everything; her health was getting worse all the time. I intend to live over there in the near future."

His attention was called to the testimony of witness Kirkins. He denied having any such conversation as testified to by Kirkins.

Mrs. Mary Yettner testified that she lived "across the road" from the premises involved; that she visited Mrs. Jack daily and had been there "when the grandmother was starting a meal." She testified as to the condition of Mrs. Jack's health:

"The first one or two days she was there, she was able to be up, but after that she was up and down. Whenever she felt able she was up. And that was the reason I visited the place every day, because I knew the old lady was there alone, and on that account I went there every day to see how she was."

She testified that defendant was working for her husband and had been for two years past.

[1, 2] We have endeavored to set forth substantially all the evidence in the case which appeared to us to have any bearing upon the issues presented. We think the evidence sufficient to establish the fact that defendant, when he made his declaration of homestead, was the head of a family within the meaning of section 1261 of the Civil Code. He was the sole support of his aged grandmother, who had for some years been the object of his solicitude and care. Also, that he sufficiently complied with the statute in the erection of his dwelling house on the premises. It served the purpose of a shelter and comfortable abiding place for the time and was commensurate with defendant's means and financial abilities. When he occupied it, he took with him all his and his grandmother's personal belongings, their furniture and household and housekeeping utensils, and had a sufficient equipment for the reasonable enjoyment of the dwelling by persons in their walk in life.

The crux of the matter, however, is seen in the statement made by the learned trial judge in ruling upon the motion for a nonsuit, namely:

"The question of intent is necessarily involved in the matter of the defendant living upon the premises, and that must necessarily be a question of fact to be determined."

[3, 4] The defendant had a clear right to defeat his creditor's attachment by impressing the premises with the character of a homestead. The very purpose of the statute is to enable the debtor to establish a place of refuge for himself and family which the creditor shall not invade; and this he may do at any time prior to a lien being fixed upon the premises by judgment obtained. Civ. Code, § 1241. But merely going through the forms necessary to the establishment of a homestead is not sufficient. There must be in these forms the element of good faith and a present intention to make the premises the residence, the home, and the abiding place of the declarant and his family.

In Tromans v. Mahlman, 92 Cal. 1, 8, 27 Pac. 1094, 1095, the court said:

"To effect its purpose, the statute has been liberally construed in some respects, but the requirement as to residence at the time the declaration is filed has been strictly construed. Thus this court has many times used and emphasized the word 'actually,' to show that the residence must be real, and not sham or pretended."

The same case was again before the court, reported in 111 Cal. 646, 44 Pac. 327. Said the court:

"The only respect in which it is claimed by the appellants that the evidence herein differed from that at the former trial to such an extent as to authorize a different conclusion is that Mrs. Mahlman testified that at the time she went to the premises on the 21st of August, 1883, it was her intention to remain there and occupy the house continuously, but that by reason of supervening circumstances she was compelled to return to San Francisco the next day after the declaration of homestead was filed. Whether she did in fact actually reside on the premises at the time the declaration was filed was a question of fact to be determined by the court from the evidence before it. The physical fact of her occupancy, as well as the intention with which she occupied the house, were both elements to be considered in determining actual residence, and the court was not bound to accept her statement that she intended to reside thereon as conclusive, if other facts to which she testified were inconsistent with such intention. Whatever inconsistency there was between these facts and her statement of her intention presented merely a conflict of evidence, on which the decision of the trial court was final. Its decision upon this conflict of evidence that she did not reside there is conclusive upon this court."

[5] In that case the time of occupancy was much shorter than in the present case. But, as we view the statute, the time of occupancy prior to or after the declaration is not the only essential element. The physical fact of the occupancy and the intention with which the premises are occupied "are both elements to be considered in determining the actual residence."

[6-8] The trial court found that defendant did not move to the premises in question with the intention to make the house there erected his home or residence. The defendant testified that such was his intention, but the court was not bound to accept his testimony as conclusive if the other facts and circumstances were inconsistent with such intention. In viewing these facts and circumstances we must, in support of the judgment, give them the interpretation given to them by the trial court if such interpretation is reasonable, even though a different interpretation, favorable to defendant, might also be reasonably given to them. The declaration of intention made by defendant to the witness Kirkins, considered with other facts and circumstances otherwise appearing, is susceptible of the construction that he moved to the premises for the sole purpose of defeating plaintiff's claim, and, while he had a right to do this, such right was dependent upon a bona fide intention to make the place his residence, his home. This intention was not expressed by him to Kirkins or any one else, and, disregarding the defendant's testimony as to his intention, as the court must have done, we cannot say the court was not justified in its conclusion.

[9] Error is assigned in permitting plaintiff to impeach Mrs. Archambault, who was his own witness. She had testified, in answer to plaintiff's question, that defendant did not pay rent for the flat he had been occupying while he lived on the premises in question. Plaintiff claimed that he was surprised by the answer. The circumstances under which the question arose brought it within the rule in such cases.

[10, 11] Error is claimed in permitting the witness Kirkins to testify as to the statements made to him by defendant, for the reason that defendant was called as a witness by plaintiff but "was not asked anything about any such conversation." It was permissible to show by his own declarations what defendant's intention was in establishing a homestead. Defendant was not prejudiced by the refusal of the court to allow him to show that he had made some attempt to obtain a house to move to the premises. He had testified as to his intent in building the house which he occupied. The facts sought would not have strengthened his testimony.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF OAKLAND v. LARUE WHARF & WAREHOUSE CO. (S. F. 8562.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 4, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚷719(4)—POWERS—LEASE OF TIDELANDS.

A lease by a city of water front privileges drawn in conformity with St. 1911, p. 1254, transferring to the city title to the lands in question for harbor development purposes and expressly providing for such leases, held a valid exercise by the city of its powers and not inconsistent with the purposes of the grant to the city.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚷719(4)—POWERS—DELEGATION.

Under Oakland city charter, the board of public works may execute a lease of tidelands, title to which is vested in the city by statute.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Suit by the City of Oakland against the Larue Wharf & Warehouse Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Paul C. Morf, De Lancey C. Smith, and John J. Earle, all of Oakland, for appellant.

Guy C. Earl, W. H. Spaulding, and Chaffee E. Hall, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in the defendant's favor in an action to quiet title to certain lands lying along the Estuary of San Antonio, which forms a portion of the southern boundary of the city of Oakland. The defendant, while admitting title in the plaintiff to said lands, claims a leasehold interest therein, which claim the trial court sustained. The facts of the case are practically undisputed, and the questions of law involved are those arising out of certain transactions between the plaintiff and the defendant in the course of which the latter's alleged leasehold interest in the premises is claimed to have been created.

Prior to May 1, 1911, the tidelands upon this estuary, including the premises in question, were the property of the state of California, although upon said 1st day of May, 1911, and for many years prior thereto, the defendant and its predecessors in interest had been in possession of said premises claiming to be the owners of the same under an instrument designated as the "Stratton Patent" which the appellants herein claim to have been wholly void as a muniment of title. During these prior years the defendant and its predecessors had placed and maintained certain improvements upon the property consisting of a wharf over which some small amount of traffic moved, and a yacht clubhouse for the use of which rents in a small amount were collected. On May 1, 1911, the state of California, by an act of the Legislature of said date (St. 1911, p. 1254), transferred to the plaintiff herein all of its right, title, and interest in the lands lying along said estuary, including the premises in question, subject to certain conditions and trusts specified in said act, among which were the following provisions having an important bearing upon the instant case:

"That said lands shall be used by said city and its successors, only for the establishment, improvement and conduct of a harbor, and for the construction, maintenance and operation thereon of wharves, docks, piers, slips, quays and other utilities, structures and appliances necessary or convenient for the promotion and accommodation of commerce and navigation, and said city, or its successors, shall not, at any time, grant, convey, give or alien said lands, or any part thereof, to any individual, firm or corporation for any purposes whatever; provided, that said city or its successors, may grant franchises thereon, for limited periods, for wharves and other public uses and purposes, and may lease said lands, or any part thereof, for limited periods, for purposes consistent with the trusts upon which said lands are held by the state of California, and with the requirements of commerce or navigation at said harbor, for a term not exceeding twenty-five years, and on such other terms and conditions as said city may determine, including a right to renew such lease or leases for a further term not exceeding twenty-five years or to terminate the same on such terms, reservations and conditions as may be stipulated in such lease or leases, and said lease or leases may be for any and all purposes which shall not interfere with navigation or commerce, with reversion to the said city on the termination of such lease or leases of any and all improvements thereon, and on such other terms and conditions as the said city may determine, but for no purpose which will interfere with navigation or commerce; subject also to a reservation in all such leases or such wharfing out privileges of a street, or of such other reservation as the said city may determine for a belt line railroad where the same may be deemed necessary by the said city; and such other reservations as the city may require, and for sewer outlets, and for gas and oil mains, and for hydrants, and for electric cables and wires, and for such other conduits for municipal purposes, and for such public and municipal purposes and uses as may be deemed necessary by the said city; provided, however, that each person, firm or corporation or their heirs, successors or assigns now in possession of land or lands abutting on said lands, within the boundaries of the city of Oakland, lying and being southerly from the southern line of East Fourteenth street in said city of Oakland and easterly from the eastern limits of the former town of Oakland as hereinbefore firstly described, and lying and being westerly from the easterly boundary line of the city of Oakland as it existed in A. D. 1908, shall have a right to obtain a lease for a term of twenty-five years from said city of said land and wharfing out privileges therefrom with a right of renewal for a further term of twenty-five years pursuant to the provisions of this act and on such terms and conditions as said city may determine and specify, subject to the right of said city to terminate said lease at the end of the first twenty-five years, or refuse to renew the same, or to terminate the lease so renewed during the term of such renewed lease on such just and reasonable terms for compensation for improvements at the then value of said improvements as said city may determine and specify. Upon obtaining such lease and wharfing out privileges such person, firm or corporation, their heirs or assigns, shall quitclaim to said city any right they or any of them may claim or have to the said lands hereby granted."

In the month of June, 1911, the city of Oakland, through its counsel, in an attempted compliance with the foregoing provisions of the statute, passed an ordinance purporting to authorize the board of public works of said city to make and execute leases of the lands so conveyed by the state to said city, including the premises in question, to the parties in possession thereof; and thereafter and on June 28, 1911, the said board of public works by formal resolution authorized the making of the lease to the defendant under which it claims to have its leasehold interest in said premises. On June 30, 1911, said lease was executed by its signature, both by the defendant and by the members of the board of public works, individually and on behalf of the plaintiff, purporting to act under the authority conferred upon them so to do; and the said defendant, at the time of the execution and delivery of said lease, executed and delivered to the plaintiff a quitclaim deed to all of its right, title, and interest to the premises in question, except such as was created by said lease, since which time it has paid to said plaintiff the rents required by said lease to be by it paid, which the plaintiff has regularly received, and no part of which has ever been refunded to the defendant, nor has the plaintiff ever offered to reconvey to the defendant such interest in said premises, if any, as it acquired by the defendant's quitclaim deed to it. Since the execution of the lease to it by the plaintiff, the defendant has made, with the plaintiff's knowledge and consent, certain permanent improvements upon the premises covered by its said lease at an expense to it of approximately $6,000, no part of which has been refunded or offered to be refunded by the plaintiff, and has also maintained thereon the wharf previously erected, over which some small amount of traffic is conducted. Notwithstanding the foregoing admitted facts, the plaintiff has instituted this action to quiet its title to the premises; its contention being that the defendant's purported lease is utterly void and its attack upon its validity being based upon two grounds: First, that its requirements do not satisfy the requirements of the statute of 1911, which is the source of the authority of the plaintiff to make the same; and, second, that its execution was never legally authorized or effectuated by the municipal officials vested with authority to execute such a lease. The trial court found against the plaintiff's contention as to both of these grounds, and rendered its judgment accordingly in the defendant's favor. Both of the foregoing grounds of the alleged invalidity of said lease are urged by the appellant upon this appeal.

As to the first of the foregoing reasons for the alleged invalidity of the lease in question, the contention of the appellant is this: That the purpose of the state of California in the enactment of the statute of 1911 by which the city of Oakland was granted the lands along the said estuary, including the premises in question, was to insure the development of a harbor through the use of the lands conveyed by said grant in such a manner as would tend to promote commerce and navigation, and that, this being so, whatever leases were contemplated or authorized by the terms of said act must be such as would effectuate said purpose, and hence must have contained provisions making the use and improvement of the lands by the lessees thereof along lines conducive to such purpose obligatory and not optional on the part of such lessees; and that, this not having been done in respect to the form and terms of the lease in question here, it is void as in violation of the spirit and purpose of the act authorizing its execution. We are unable to agree with the appellant's contention in the above regard to the extent of giving to the terms of the act of 1911 such an interpretation as would render a lease, couched in the language of the instrument under which the respondent claims a leasehold interest in the land in question, void. Reading the legislative act in its entirety, it is quite evident that, while it was doubtless the general and ultimate purpose of the state in granting these water-front lands to the city of Oakland to bring about the development of a harbor with its increased facilities for navigation, it was recognized that there were certain obstacles in the way of an immediate realization of these objects, consisting in the fact that there were various private parties in possession of these lands, some of whom, including the respondent herein, were claiming ownership in specific portions of said lands under muniments of title which, whether of some or of no value or validity, might furnish the bases of litigation more or less prolonged in character, which would probably interfere with the realization for an uncertain period of the purposes for which said grant was made. The act therefore embodied the provisions above quoted, which were plainly intended to enable the city of Oakland as the grantee of these lands to make compromises with such private persons as might be possessed of portions of the lands so conveyed to it under whatever claim of right, or title, by making such leases to such persons as would permit the continued occupation and use by them of the parts thereof occupied by them for the period of 25 or even 50 years, conditioned upon their surrender of whatever claim of title they were asserting in the premises to the city.

The only limitation upon the purposes for which these prospective lessees of the premises they had theretofore occupied was that they might "use the premises leased for any and all purposes which shall not interfere with navigation or commerce, but for no purpose which will interfere with navigation or commerce." It may not be doubted that if the occupants of such premises were at the time of the passage of said act or the making of said lease occupying and using the same for purposes which were inconsistent with the trust in which the state had held these tidelands under the terms of article 15 of the Constitution and subject to which the legislative grant to the city of Oakland was made, no lease of the same by or on behalf of said city would be valid in so far as it would undertake to authorize or permit the continued devotion of said lands to such inconsistent uses, nor could it be contended that if, after the making of such a lease as that in question here, the lessees should undertake to occupy or use said premises in such manner or for such purposes as would be inconsistent with the terms of said trust and with the development of commerce and navigation in said harbor, the state, and its successor in interest, the city of Oakland, would have the right to institute such proceedings as might be proper or necessary to compel a cessation of the use of said lands for such inconsistent purposes, even to the extent of an avoidance of said lease. It may, however, be proper to state in this connection that—"When the plan or system of improvement or development adopted by the state for the promotion of navigation and commerce cuts off a part of these tidelands or submerged lands from the public channels, so that they are no longer usful for navigation, the state may thereupon sell and dispose of such excluded lands into private ownership or private uses, thereby destroying the public easement in such portion of the lands and giving them over to the grantee, free from public control and use." People v. Cal. Fish Co., 166 Cal. 576, 138 Pac. 79; Knudson v. Kearney, 171 Cal. 250, 152 Pac. 541.

But none of these conditions is presented by the record before us. The undisputed evidence shows that both before and since the execution of its lease the uses to which the respondent has been and is devoting such portions of the premises as are in use are such as are consistent with the general purposes for which the city of Oakland was given its grant of said lands and do not constitute an interference with, but rather to the extent of such use an aid to, navigation and commerce. It may be that such uses are limited, and that the term of said lease and of its possible extension seems unduly long; but as to the former we fail to find in the record before us facts sufficient to warrant a conclusion that a more extended utilization of these premises would be practicable or profitable in the present state of development of Oakland water front possibilities, or that a lease which would have compelled a more extended use of the premises in the way of promoting navigation and commerce would have been accepted by the defendant, or that they would have surrendered their claims of ownership of the premises for a lease more drastic and compelling in its requirements as to the uses to which the property should be presently devoted. We are given no reason to doubt from the record before us that the defendant, as the development of the commercial and navigation uses of the harbor demand it, will so increase their uses of said property as to fully effectuate the purposes contemplated by the state in making its grant. With respect to the term of the lease, it is drawn in exact conformity with the provisions of the statute, and it is not for the courts to say that the lease is void because its term is too long.

The only case cited by the appellant which seems to bear remotely upon the question of the power of the city of Oakland to authorize the execution of the lease in question is the case of Weekes v. City of Galveston, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 102, 51 S. W. 544, wherein a lease by the city of Galveston of Pelican Island and its flats to private parties with no other limitation than that the property should not be used to the injury of the harbor was held to be invalid. The marked distinction, however, between that case and the case at bar, consists in the fact that in the legislative grant of Pelican Island to the city of Galveston no provision for the leasing thereof for any purpose was embodied, and hence the court very properly held that the grant to the city of the island in its harbor was for public purposes which would not be conserved by its unrestricted lease for private uses. In each of the recent California cases cited by appellant, viz. San Pedro, etc., Co. v. Hamilton, 161 Cal. 610, 119 Pac. 1073, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686, and Koyer v. Miner, 172 Cal. 448, 156 Pac. 1023, this court upheld the leases in question, and in the former case expressly approved the policy of making such leases of water-front lands as would tend to interest private capital in the improvement of harbors; the case of Pacific Coast S. S. Co. v. Kimball, 114 Cal. 414, 46 Pac. 275, being cited as illustrative of the beneficent effects of this policy, although in that case the lease was of lands fronting on Monterey Bay for the construction and operation of a wharf for private use, and the theory of this latter case as expressed therein being that the lease therein upheld was promotive of commerce and navigation. It is also to be noted that in each of the cases of San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co. v. Hamilton, supra, and Koyer v. Miner, supra, the leases in question did not expressly specify or require that the lands so leased must be used for any particular purpose promotive of commerce and navigation. Both leases were nevertheless upheld, the court in each case holding that the state had power under the terms of the Constitution to make leases of tide and submerged lands "with proper restrictions of time and proper regard to public and quasi public use, * * * so that private enterprise and capital may build up the commerce of our seaboard cities."

[1] Our conclusion upon this branch of the case is that the lease in question having been drawn in precise conformity with the terms of the statute of 1911, which in its grant of these water-front lands to the city of Oakland expressly provided for the making of such leases, and having incorporated in it the express provision that the lands so leased might be used "for the purposes for which they were then being used, * * * but for no other purpose which will interfere with navigation or commerce," was a valid exercise of the powers thus given by the statute to the city of Oakland to make such leases in so far as its provisions are concerned.

The next contention of the appellant is that the lease is invalid because not executed by the proper officials of the city of Oakland having power to execute such leases. The lease in question was, as we have seen, executed by the board of public works of the city of Oakland and by the individual members thereof under and by virtue of an ordinance of the council of said city expressly authorizing and directing said board of public works to enter into and to execute said lease. The appellant, however, contends that the city council had no right to delegate to the board of public works the authority to make said lease and that the board of public works had no power to make the same. The argument of the appellant in support of this contention is that, under the terms of the charter of the city of Oakland of 1889 and the amendment thereto made in 1909, the legislative powers of the city are exclusively conferred upon the city council, and that the act of making leases of the lands of the city being legislative in character cannot be legally delegated to any other board or officer of the city. Without attempting to review all of the various provisions of the said charter of Oakland relating to the exercise of legislative powers by the several boards and officials of said city, it may be generally stated that the exercise of legislative functions, especially in the matter of making leases, is not conferred by its terms exclusively upon the city council. The board of library trustees of the city, for example, are expressly empowered "to rent" such buildings as may be needed for their uses under certain conditions. The park commissioners are also empowered to lease for a limited period buildings and park grounds under their control. Again, subdivision 47 of section 31 of said charter, having reference to the powers of the city council in the matter of making leases of municipal property, invests the city council with power "to regulate the custody, leasing and sale of all the property of the municipality," and it would seem to be quite clear that under the terms of this subdivision the city council would have power to provide that as to the matter of the execution of such leases of the city property as it had properly determined should be made the city council might designate any appropriate board or officer of the city to perform the manual duty of signing and executing the instrument itself. It is also to be noted that by the amendment to the city charter made in 1909 the board of public works were given certain enlarged powers in relation to the water-front properties owned by the city. The amendment, so far as pertinent, reads as follows:

"The board of public works shall, subject to such ordinances as the council may from time to time adopt, have full power to regulate, control, operate and manage the use of the water front of the city of Oakland, and all wharves, docks, slips, warehouses, railroads and other improvements thereon; * * * to collect rents * * * due the city for the use of the water front, or any portion thereof or improvements thereon."

[2] While not undertaking to decide whether the last above-quoted provision of the city charter would of itself be sufficient to confer authority upon the board of public works to enter into and execute the lease in question, we are of the opinion that, taking into consideration the several foregoing provisions of the city charter of 1889 and the amendments thereto made in 1909 under which the lease in question herein was made, it was a proper exercise of the powers of the city council thereunder and under the terms of the statute of 1911 to have enacted the ordinance directing the making of said lease and authorizing the board of public works of said city to execute the same, and that said lease as thus executed in precise conformity with the terms of said statute and of such ordinance is in all respects valid, and was properly decided so to be by the judgment appealed from herein. This being so, the other alleged errors of law occurring at the trial become immaterial and do not merit separate consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

LAPALLETERIC v. SHIMONOWSKY. (Civ. 2537.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 8, 1918.)

ADVERSE POSSESSION ⊂=66(1)—EXTENSION OF POSSESSION TO FENCE.

Where, for a time exceeding the period of limitations, adjoining landowners have regarded a fence as the true boundary line, and the defendant has used, improved, and paid taxes on the overlapping portion, plaintiff may not question the location of the boundary line.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by A. Lapalleteric against Betty Shimonowsky. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Frank W. Taft, of Willits, for appellant.
Chas. Kasch, of Ukiah, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action to quiet title. Judgment went for the plaintiff and defendant appealed under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure.

The common grantor, L. R. Whited, owned a town lot in Willits, Mendocino county. While the owner, he put up a fence dividing the lot into what we shall term the north lot and the south lot. May 8, 1904, he conveyed the north lot to the husband of the defendant, now deceased. May 20, 1904, Whited conveyed the south lot to Frost, and by mesne conveyances that lot came into the ownership of the plaintiff. In the grants by Whited each lot was described by metes and bounds. That the fence was not on the true line was never suggested by any one till four or five months before plaintiff filed this action. At that time a survey was made, and a dispute arose in which plaintiff commenced to assert a claim that the fence line was 3 feet 2 inches over on his land.

From May 8, 1904, the defendant had possession of the land within the boundary fences, paid taxes thereon, gardened some berries thereon, rebuilt on the fence line a part of the fence, and built improvements on that land in such a place that the same are overlapped by the new survey. Under such facts the plaintiff may not now question the location of the boundary line. Sneed v. Osborn, 25 Cal. 619; Young v. Blakeman, 153 Cal. 477, 95 Pac. 888. Whatever question may have existed, when this case was on trial, as to the true limits of the rule in the Blakeman Case, all such questions have been brushed aside by the later case of Silva v. Azevedo, 173 Pac. 929.

The judgment is reversed.

ALLEN v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 2531.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 11, 1918.)

GIFTS ⊂=30(3)—WILLS ⊂=90 — TESTAMENTARY PROVISION OR GIFT.

Where mother gave a key to a strong box to certain person, with directions to hand it to defendant, and while on her deathbed told defendant, "All that box contains is yours," whereupon defendant pulled the box out of its place and shoved it back again, but remained in the room until the death of the mother, receiving the key the next day from the third person, there was an executed gift of a deposit in the bank, evidenced by a bank book in the strong box, and not a testamentary disposition of the same.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by Uletta Allen, administratrix of the estate of Christian Whitford, deceased, against Fannie Smith and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. B. Rinehart, of Oakland, for appellant.

Eugene W. Roland, of Oakland, for respondent Smith.

De Ligne & Jones, of Sacramento, for respondent Sacramento Bank.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff as administratrix of her mother's estate, brought this action against the defendants to recover certain moneys which she alleged to be the property of the estate. The defendants had judgment in the trial court, and the plaintiff appealed and has brought up the record under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendant Fannie Smith claims title to the moneys under an alleged gift from the plaintiff's intestate. If this claim is sustained, the judgment should be affirmed.

The defendant bank filed a disclaimer, and for the purpose of clarity we will treat the subject as though Fannie Smith is the only defendant. The evidence shows that plaintiff's intestate was the mother of the plaintiff, of the defendant, and of a brother, Richard; that on March 4, 1914, she had a savings bank account in the Sacramento Bank; that on that date she executed an assignment of $25 of her bank account to Uletta, another assignment of $25 of her bank account to Richard, and another assignment of all of the balance to Fannie; on November 22, 1914, she delivered all of the assignments to the defendant and she recorded them; shortly prior to May 4, 1915, the decedent had her bank book in her treasure box and the box was under her bed; at that time she delivered the key of the box to a niece, Mrs. Williams, and told her to hand it to Fannie Smith; this instruction was repeated to Fannie.

On May 4, 1915, Fannie went to the bedside of her sick mother; on the evening of that day her mother told Fannie that the box was under her bed; that Mrs. Williams had the key and had been told to turn it over to Fannie, and at the same time her mother told Fannie that "all that box contains is yours." At this same time the defendant pulled the box out of its place, then shoved it back again, but remained in the same room with the box till the death of her mother. Mrs. Williams handed to the defendant the box and the key on the day after the death of the mother and the defendant has retained possession of the same. These facts do not bring this case within the doctrine of Knight v. Tripp, 121 Cal. 674, 54 Pac. 267, as contended by the plaintiff, but they do show an executed gift. Civ. Code, §§ 1146–1150; Francoeur v. Beatty, 170 Cal. 740, 151 Pac. 123; Burkett v. Doty, 167 Pac. 518.

The judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

EASTERN OUTFITTING CO., Inc., v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 2514.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 5, 1918.)

1. Replevin ⊂⊃109—Claim and Delivery—Joint Rights and Liabilities—Statute.

When, in claim and delivery, judgment was entered against all defendants, it rested on implied finding all had become possessed of property, as alleged by plaintiff, and under such possession rights and liabilities of defendants were not several, but joint, under Civ. Code, § 1431.

2. Certiorari ⊂⊃47 — Supersedeas — Order Recalling Execution.

Where, in claim and delivery, judgment for property or value was awarded against all defendants, and one alone fully perfected appeal and filed required stay bond, appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 946, stayed all proceedings on judgment, and order recalling writ of execution thereon, which would disturb appealing defendant's possession was proper.

Petition for writ of review by the Eastern Outfitting Company, Incorporated, against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and others. Writ denied.

Wm. Tomsky, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Lloyd S. Ackerman, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an application for a writ of review to cancel an order recalling a writ of execution. The basic case was in claim and delivery. The plaintiffs alleged that "the defendants became possessed" of the property in controversy, which consisted of certain household furnishings. The defendants Myers, Gray, and Goldstein, admitted, by failure to deny, that allegation. January 24, 1918, the trial court awarded judgment against all of the defendants for the return of the property of the plaintiff or for $750, the value in case a delivery could not be made. Thereafter the defendant Goldstein duly and regularly appealed and furnished a bond in proper form as required by section 943, Code of Civil Procedure. The defendants Myers and Gray did not appeal. June 7, 1918, the plaintiff took out an execution, and, two days later, on the motion of the defendant Goldstein, the trial court made an order recalling the writ of execution. The plaintiff then commenced this proceeding.

[1, 2] When the trial court entered its judgment against all the defendants, such judgment rested on the implied finding that all of the defendants had "become possessed" of the property in controversy. Under such possession the rights and liabilities of the defendants were joint and not several. Civ. Code, § 1431. The rights and liabilities of the defendant Goldstein extended to every jot and tittle of each article in controversy. If therefore a writ of execution should issue to take possession of said articles, the levy would disturb the possession of the defendant Goldstein at least in part. But, when he had fully perfected his appeal and had filed the stay bond required in such cases, the effect of the appeal was to stay all further proceedings in the trial court upon the judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 946.

The writ is denied.

SMITH v. F. L. MOORE MOTOR TRUCK CO. et al. (Civ. 2573.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 14, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸995 — REVIEW — FINDINGS.

Appellate courts will not review evidence, where only disputed point in case rests wholly upon the determination of facts about which there was a very clear and unequivocal conflict in the evidence.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸994(3) — REVIEW — CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

Whether oral testimony is inconsistent with acts of the witnesses is for the trial judge, who has the duty of resolving facts and reconciling the inconsistencies.

3. SALES ⟸391(5) — RESCISSION BY MUTUAL CONSENT—ENFORCEMENT OF CONTRACT.

Where contract of sale of a truck is rescinded by mutual consent of buyer and seller, and seller takes back truck and resells it, and buyer relinquishes everything received under contract, buyer is entitled to the restoration of money paid and return of promissory notes.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by T. D. Smith against the F. L. Moore Motor Truck Company, a corporation, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Andrews, Toland & Andrews, A. V. Andrews, and M. D. Andrews, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Thomas K. Kase, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff.

[1-3] The action was brought to enforce rescission of a contract for the purchase of an automobile truck. The making of the contract for the purchase of the truck and as to the terms thereof was not disputed by any evidence offered on either side. Plaintiff, together with T. J. Smith, his son, arranged for the purchase of a heavy truck from appellant Moore Motor Truck Company for a price in excess of $4,000. As part payment on the purchase price, the Smiths turned in an old truck at the agreed value of $1,400, paid $300 in cash, and gave notes for the balance of the purchase price. The truck was being manufactured and when ready was taken out for use upon several consecutive days, after which it was returned to the Moore Company and later sold by it. The old truck received from the Smiths was also sold by the same company. About the facts just recited there was no dispute. The disputed point in the case, as argued on the appeal, is whether there was a mutual rescission, or whether the Moore Company, to the obligations of which the Pacific Metal Products Company afterwards succeeded, in taking back the truck and reselling the same did so as the agent only of the Smiths. This proposition rests wholly upon the determination of facts other than those hereinbefore related and about which there was a very clear and unequivocal conflict in the evidence. As to such a case and a proposition so affected, it is hardly necessary to declare that the appellate courts have no function by way of review. The testimony offered by the Smiths was that the truck when sent out of the shop to them was sent out in charge of an operator employed by the manufacturer, the Moore Company, and that during the few days that it was used on work it was handled by the employé of the Moore Company; that defects of several kinds developed and the machine did not work satisfactorily; that, upon representation of the conditions to the manager of the company mentioned, he told them that he would take the truck back and return to them their property; that he stated that the truck as contracted for by them had not been injured by use, that it was new and that he could dispose of it, and that there would be no depreciation charge; that later, when they requested that there be restored to them the property and money which they had paid and their promissory notes, the demand was met by a refusal; whereupon this action was brought. It was shown in evidence that, after the alleged return of the truck to the manufacturer, one of the Smiths inserted an advertisement in a newspaper, offering the truck for sale over his own name, setting forth as a reason that illness compelled the sale. The insertion of this advertisement was admitted by the Smiths, but the explanation was offered that Mr. Moore requested that that be done to assist in the resale of the truck. We can find no ground to justify our interference with the judgment. The appellants' argument is that the acts of the Smiths were shown to be wholly inconsistent with their testimony; that their oral testimony, inconsistent with their acts, should not, therefore, be believed, but should be counted of no effect. The trial judge had the duty of resolving the facts and reconciling the inconsistencies. His determination was that there had been a mutual rescission, expressing that conclusion in the following language:

"That thereafter and on or about the 20th day of September, 1913, said defendants abandoned, canceled, and annulled said written contracts as set forth in the answers of defendants and retained and kept their said Moore motor truck; that on or about the 20th day of September, 1913, said written contracts above referred to were abandoned by mutual consent by all parties thereto, and said contracts came to an end and terminated by the mutual failure to perform of all parties to said contracts."

The finding of the ultimate fact that there was a rescission by mutual consent is sufficient to support the judgment, regardless of any question as to whether the defects alleged to have developed in the machine were substantial or trivial. The manufacturer did take back the truck and resell it; hence the plaintiff relinquished all that he had received or was to receive under his contract and was entitled to enforce the agreement of rescission as against the other contracting party. The observations here made take into view, of course, only the evidence offered by the plaintiff, for upon the issues of fact we have only to determine as to whether there was sufficient proof made to entitle the court to find the facts as it did as to there having been an agreement of rescission made.

We finds no points urged as to errors committed by the trial court which seem to be deserving of particular consideration or discussion.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

WATERS v. CONSELHO SUPREME DA UNIAO PORTUGUEZA DO ESTADO DE CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 2540.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 4, 1918.)

1. INSURANCE ⇐782—FRATERNAL INSURANCE — CHANGE OF BENEFICIARY — INSANITY OF INSURED.

In wife's action to cancel certificate issued to another by fraternal society and to declare prior policy in her favor to be in effect, evidence held to show that her husband was permanently insane before he made change of beneficiary in question.

2. WITNESSES ⇐347—CREDIBILITY—ACTION INCONSISTENT WITH CLAIM OF PARTY.

In wife's action to cancel certificate issued by fraternal order and to declare prior policy in her favor in effect, on ground that when husband changed beneficiary he was insane, circumstances that wife dealt with husband three months before change of beneficiary in settlement of property rights on divorce, as if he were a sane man, affected only her credibility as witness.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by May L. Waters against Conselho Supreme Da Uniao Portugueza Do Estado De California and Rosa Rex. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Rex appeals. Affirmed.

L. Gonsalves, of Oakland, for appellant.

L. A. Kottinger and Milton Shepardson, both of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This was an action brought by respondent to cancel a certain certificate of insurance issued by a fraternal insurance society operating under the provisions of the Fraternal Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1320), and declaring a prior policy to be in force and effect. The complaint alleges that respondent is the surviving wife of the insured, Antone E. Waters; that she acquired a vested right in said insurance policy by reason of certain agreements or understandings between herself and her husband at that time and by reason of her conduct thereafter with reference to the policy; that thereafter in 1913 the insured delivered up his policy to be canceled; that it was canceled, and a new policy—the one in suit designating the appellant as beneficiary—issued; that the issuance of the new policy, of which the appellant, a sister of the deceased, was made the beneficiary, was brought about through fraud and undue influence practiced upon deceased by appellant; and that at the time of the issuance of the new policy and consequent change of beneficiary deceased was of unsound mind and incapable of making a valid designation of beneficiary for that reason.

The court found each and all the allegations of the complaint to be true and supported by competent evidence, although it may be stated at the outset that there is no evidence in support of the allegations of fraud and undue influence.

The conclusion we have reached on the merits of the case renders unnecessary a determination of respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal; and for the same reason it will be unnecessary for us to consider the question whether or not the wife, having in accordance with an agreement with her husband paid the dues upon the policy as long as the fraternal society would accept them, with the understanding that she should be the beneficiary thereof, acquired a vested interest in the policy.

It is the contention of the appellant that the evidence in the case is insufficient to support the finding of mental incompetency. We are of the opinion that this contention is not maintainable, and that there is an abundance of evidence in the record that Waters was permanently insane prior to the time that he made the change of beneficiary in question.

The evidence shows that before the year

1907 Antone E. Waters was a shrewd business man, a carpenter by trade, a good mechanic, and was very bright and intelligent. In the year 1907 he suffered a fit of epilepsy. The epilepsy was caused by a cyst or tumor on the brain, and finally resulted in his death on December 21, 1914. Dr. Harris, the managing physician in charge of the county hospital where he died, stated it as his opinion that Waters was permanently insane as far back as January, 1912. The tumor was large and would necessarily result fatally, and would permanently impair his mental and reasoning faculties. It would result in epilepsy. The paroxysms would increase in frequency with the growth of the tumor, and correspondingly the brain cells would disintegrate, and mental degeneracy would gradually take place. The doctor stated that many medical writers agree that such a patient would never be mentally normal or sane after the first severe paroxysm; and he stated that the tumor disclosed by the autopsy held by him was about the size of a plum, and that it required several years to develop, and would cause blindness, and in his opinion a person with such a tumor would be mentally unbalanced for six years previous to his death. Waters was totally blind when he was admitted to the hospital on February 6, 1914, and at that time was mentally unbalanced, and in the opinion of the doctor on May 4, 1913, Waters was not competent to transact any business in an intelligent manner. The tumor affected the motor cells and the mentality, and would render Waters incompetent and unbalanced for several years. After Waters became the subject of epileptic attacks, intimate acquaintances testified that they were of the opinion that after the year 1907 he was insane. Apparently insanity was congenital with him; his mother being an inmate of the Napa State Hospital, an aunt being insane, and his brother Manuel simple-minded.

During the years 1907 and 1908, Waters was the subject of epileptic attacks. In 1907 he fell on the street, three teeth being knocked out. He would occasionally have two or three fits a day. At such times he would foam at the mouth and stiffen out, would fall to the ground, turn black in the face and have a glassy stare, his muscles would become rigid, and he had great difficulty in breathing; his face would sometimes take on a purple hue; and apparently he was in a bad condition. After he became subject to these fits, he would sit for long periods staring at the sidewalk. He would gaze at an object before him for hours and seemed as if in a trance. His wearing apparel became filthy; his habits of industry left him; he became slovenly in his person, which the doctor testified is a symptom of the disease. He would not permit his wearing apparel to be washed, though filthy. He became very bitter against his little girls, nine or ten years of age, and against his wife without cause. He would seldom speak to them, although he talked with others. After the first epileptic fit in 1907, Waters gradually became more slovenly in his habits, dress, and personal appearance, and his hatred towards his wife and children increased in intensity, until in 1912 his wife became afraid to longer live with him. He would swear at the children, and threw a shoe at and cut one of them. He threw a knife at his wife. He placed a powder on some grapes and melons intended for the family's use, but which being fed to the chickens killed them. He poured something in his wife's coffee which tasted like carbolic acid, and laughed when he saw her pour the coffee. He tried to burn his suit of clothes, and exhibited it to the public with a sign written on a slab attached to it reading. "This $18 suit on exhibit by Mrs. Waters bought over one and a half years ago." When his wife asked for money, which it appears he was able to furnish, he tried to throw her downstairs. He would not support his wife and children, and the former had to take in sewing for a living. At times, though the door was unlocked, he would sneak in the back way and climb over the roof of the house and let himself in through an upper window. At Benicia Waters made his appearance ragged, tattered, and torn. He shook like a leaf and had an unusual stare. In November, 1912, he talked in a rambling and incoherent way and had an unnatural laugh. His eyes became badly afflicted in 1910 and grew worse until in 1918 he became totally blind. Charles Taylor knew Waters intimately for years, and testified to his opinion that Waters was insane before May of 1913. He would hide in his children's playhouse or under the steps. He would leave his family for three months at a time without explanation. The witness Dana knew the deceased 15 years. He visited the witness three or four times and on those occasions acted as though he did not know him, and had a look in his face which caused Dana to form the opinion that he was crazy. Other testimony was to the effect that in the lodge room he acted as though he was drunk, waved his arms, and turned around, but had no odor of liquor about him. He did not seem to know how to get out of the lodge room when ready to leave. To another witness, Frank Joseph, he appeared to be insane at the time he was endeavoring to have the lodge change the policy. His agent was afraid of him. In the latter part of 1912 the witness Jerry Wade met Waters on the street where Waters was attracting a crowd by silently gazing at an upper window. Wade greeted him, and Waters replied: "Who are you talking to? I don't remember you." Wade stated who he was, and Waters replied, "You are the fellow I tried to buy the tannery from in Benicia"—which was not the fact. Wade formed the opinion that he was insane.

It may be true that there is evidence in the record from which one might conclude that Waters was suffering only from a mental delusion which did not operate to produce the change of beneficiary attacked in this action, but it certainly cannot be said that there was no evidence that he was insane at that time. Two witnesses testified directly to that effect, and the same conclusion can reasonably be drawn from the testimony of eight other witnesses. We think it follows that the finding of the court upon this issue is sustained by the evidence.

[1, 2] Appellant appears to contend that because the wife of Waters in a divorce proceeding entered into an agreement with her husband by which their property rights were settled, at a time when according to her testimony and claim in this case he was permanently insane, she waived any rights she may have had under the policy of fraternal insurance. We think the insurance did not constitute a claim against Waters which was affected by the divorce settlement, but was one which had been arranged between them previously. However that may be, the question to be decided in this proceeding was as to the condition of Waters' mind when he procured the change of beneficiary, and the circumstance that the respondent dealt with him three months prior thereto in the settlement of their property rights as if he were a sane man affected only her credibility as a witness.

The judgment is affirmed.

ONELL v. CHAPPELL. (Civ. 2544.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 7, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜907(2) — PRESUMPTIONS FAVORING TRIAL COURT — DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR.
In action against automobile owner for injuries in collision with plaintiff's wagon, cases of collision to which doctrine of res ipsa loquitur would be applicable being conceivable, and evidence not being before appellate court, it must assume in favor of judgment for plaintiff that evidence showed facts warranting instruction applying doctrine.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜901 — BURDEN OF DUTY TO SHOW ERROR.
It is appellant's duty to show error.

3. NEGLIGENCE ⊜121(2)—RES IPSA LOQUITUR—BURDEN OF PROOF.
The fact that doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable does not relieve plaintiff of ultimate burden to prove defendant's negligence, though it permits the jury to infer negligence and find on all evidence whether plaintiff has sustained burden.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; J. A. Bardin, Judge.

Action by Ernest Onell against Harvey Chappell. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Zabala & Sargent, of Salinas, for appellant.

Chas. B. Rosendale, of Salinas, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This was an action to recover damages for personal injuries resulting from a collision between defendant's automobile and a wagon of the plaintiff.

[1, 2] In this case the trial court applied the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and instructed the jury in effect that it is the law that—

"When a thing that caused the injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care."

The evidence taken at the trial is not before us, and we are unable to say from an examination of the record that the instruction was inapplicable to the facts of the case, as contended by appellant. As cases of collision between two vehicles when the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur would be applicable may be readily conceived, we must in the present case assume in favor of the judgment that the evidence showed a state of facts which warranted the giving of this instruction; it being the duty of appellant to show error. Such a case was Bauhofer v. Crawford, 16 Cal. App. 679, 117 Pac. 931, in which a collision occurred between a moving automobile and a wagon standing on the street. Under the circumstances there disclosed, it was held to be a case justifying the application of the rule mentioned. See, also, 1 White on Personal Injuries on Railroads, § 116; 29 Cyc. 592.

[3] Appellant also contends that certain instructions given by the court, to the effect that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff, were inconsistent with and contradictory of the instruction embodying the rule of res ipsa loquitur; but the fact that the doctrine named is applicable to the case does not relieve the plaintiff of the ultimate burden of the issue (Cody v. Market St. Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 90, 82 Pac. 666; 29 Cyc. 599), although it permits the jury to infer negligence on the part of the defendant, and find on all the evidence whether plaintiff has sustained his burden of proof (Ross v. Double Shoals Cotton Co., 140 N. C. 115, 52 S. E. 121, 1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 298). We see nothing inconsistent in these instructions.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BEASLY, Judge pro tem.; STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem.

FERERIRA v. SILVEY et al. (Civ. 1866.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 3, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹278(3)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—VICIOUS MULE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action for personal injuries to farm hand when team he was driving, hitched to mower, ran away, testimony held to support findings implied by verdict for plaintiff that mule of team was of wild disposition, with propensity to run away, and that it was unsafe animal for farm.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹278(14)—VICIOUS MULE—KNOWLEDGE OF PROPENSITY—EVIDENCE.

In action by farm hand for injuries when team he was driving, hitched to mower, ran away, evidence held to support finding implied in verdict for plaintiff that defendant, when plaintiff was employed, was familiar with vicious nature of mule and its predilection for running away.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹288(5)—KNOWLEDGE OF PROPENSITY OF MULE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In farm hand's action for injuries when team, including mule, ran away, whether plaintiff, before he was injured, knew of propensity of mule to run away, held for jury on conflicting evidence.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹205(5)—ASSURANCES AS TO GENTLE CHARACTER OF MULE—RIGHT TO ASSUME TRUTH.

A farm hand had the right to assume that repeated assurances of employer as to gentleness of mule and team were true, though lively actions of mule might have generated suspicion animal was not so gentle as not to require vigilant watching and handling.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹150(2)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DUTY TO INFORM OF DISPOSITION OF MULE.

It was duty of owners to have given farm hand, on requiring him to use vicious or lively mule in employment to which they assigned him, any information they possessed regarding mule's disposition to act viciously or to run away.

6. PARTNERSHIP ⟹159 — KNOWLEDGE OF PARTNER—IMPUTATION TO FIRM.

Where one partner of firm owning ranch knew that mule had once run away, his knowledge was imputable to other partners, who, at time of employing farm hand, later injured by running away of mule, did not know of prior runaway.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹125(6)—DUTY OF EMPLOYING PARTNERS — KNOWLEDGE OF SAFETY OF INSTRUMENTALITIES.

It was a duty resting alike on all partners of firm owning ranch to know whether instrumentalities with which they required their servants to work were safe or unsafe.

8. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹285(5)—ACCIDENT AS ACT OF GOD OR RESULT OF NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action for injuries to farm hand when team he was driving, hitched to a mower, ran away, frightened by hay blown close to their heads, whether accident was result solely of act of God, or cause wholly beyond human control, or direct result of vicious tendencies of team, or a mule in it, together with failure to inform plaintiff of danger, held for jury.

9. TRIAL ⟹139(1)—PRIMA FACIE CASE.

Where plaintiff has made out a prima facie case in support of averments of complaint, trial court has no legal right to take case from jury.

10. TRIAL ⟹260(8) — REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTION COVERED BY ORAL INSTRUCTIONS.

In action for injuries when driving team ran away, refusal of defendants' requested instruction, that element of negligence of having furnished defective breast strap had been eliminated, held not prejudicial to defendants; clear oral instruction to same effect having been given.

11. NEW TRIAL ⟹143(2)—IMPEACHMENT OF VERDICT BY JUROR.

A juror cannot impeach his own verdict for alleged misconduct, where evidence thereof is offered by party against whom verdict was given.

12. TRIAL ⟹307(4)—DELIBERATIONS OF JURY —SENDING WRITTEN INSTRUCTIONS.

Action of trial court, on request of jury, without directly informing counsel, in sending written instructions in to jury during deliberations, was irregular; there being no law expressly authorizing course; Code Civ. Proc. § 612, as to papers which may or may not be taken to jury room, not mentioning instructions.

13. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1170(6)—HARMLESS ERROR—IRREGULARITY IN SENDING INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY.

In servant's action for injuries, irregularity committed by trial judge on request of jury in sending in to them written instructions, also in omitting to send transcript of oral instruction, held not prejudicial to either party; injury not being presumed from irregularity under Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Percy T. Fererira against F. J. Silvey and others, individually and as copartners. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Welsh & Henry, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Hughes & Bradford and S. W. Cross, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. Plaintiff brought the action to recover from defendants damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff by reason of a team belonging to defendants running away. Judgment, following the verdict of a jury, was entered in favor of plaintiff and against the defendants, individually and as copartners, for the sum of $5,000, from which judgment defendants prosecute this appeal.

Defendants are farmers, and, at the time of the injury complained of, were engaged in general farm work in Solano county. On the 25th of April, 1915, plaintiff was employed by them as a general ranch hand. At that time he was 28 years of age, in good physical condition and was earning $40 per month and board. On the 3d day of June, 1915, the defendant Frank Silvey directed plaintiff to cut hay and to use for that purpose a certain team composed of one horse and one mule. Plaintiff hitched the team to a mower, the mule being on the off or right side. The mower was a right-hand cut, the sickle-bar being on the right side. Plaintiff started cutting hay and on the first round the tongue of the mower fell down. He threw the sickle out of gear, tied the lines on the lever, went to the left, past the horse, and "grabbed the mule by the halter," as he testified. At that time "the north wind blowed, it came out, a little piece of hay, the team jumped, started to run away." He said that the piece of hay was about the size of his hat. The mule forced him down on the bar, the sickle cut him in various places, and he was dragged for a distance of several hundred feet.

Dr. John L. White, who attended plaintiff, testified that—"He had a comminuted fracture; that is, a fracture in two or more places. He also had two perforations about, just above the knee, and he had several abrasions on the leg below—between the knee and the ankle. * * * The bone had protruded the flesh before I saw him, on the inner side, I believe. * * * There is an overlapping of the bones of the leg, making the leg about 3½ inches shorter. * * * He will always have a shorter leg and will never have the same use of it that he once had. He will not be able to conduct himself as a laborer."

Appellants insist that the evidence does not show that the mule was of a wild and of a vicious nature or disposition.

The plaintiff testified that, soon after his employment by defendants, he said to defendant Silvey, "This team must be a lively team," to which Silvey replied, "This is a gentle team; he was like that because he don't work for four or five months." Plaintiff said:

He talked to defendant Silvey several times about the team. "Mr. Silvey says, 'Gentle team.' Q. What did you tell him at the time? A. I says, 'No look like to me.' Q. No look like to you? A. Because lively—lively team. Q. Why did you state to Mr. Silvey that it was a lively team? A. Because I saw them in the corral, jump, jump all the time, playing."

On another occasion when he hitched up the team he said:

" 'The horses, they jump lively.' I says: 'Mr. Silvey, look to me better be careful with this team.' He says, 'This is a gentle team.' "

The plaintiff said that he was never informed that the mule had run away.

On cross-examination he testified that he had been handling horses and mules about eight years and considered himself a first-class teamster; that he had driven the team in question four or five times; that some one helped him every time he took the mule out of the corral; that the mule looked to him wild —"lively mule"—and that he was "scared of him" because he saw him jump in the corral and kick the cows.

John Santos, called as a witness for the plaintiff, testified that he had a short time previously to the accident to the plaintiff worked for the defendants on their ranch near Dixon; that his employment required him to drive a team; that he drove a team of which the mule in question was one; that, on one occasion, while so employed and engaged in cutting grass "on the edge of the levee," the team he was driving, the said mule being one, suddenly started to run and ran a considerable distance. He said that the defendant Lewis, having learned of the "runaway," went to him (witness) and "started quarreling at me, growling at me," because the team ran away, and the witness thereupon quit working for the defendants.

[1, 2] The foregoing testimony is sufficient to support the implied findings of the jury that the mule in question was of a wild and vicious disposition, with a propensity for running away from the control of its driver, and that it was just such an animal of the horse variety which it would be unsafe to employ in the ordinary purposes of a farm. But it is further contended that, assuming that the mule was of a wild and vicious nature, the evidence does not show that defendants, or either of them, had knowledge of such wildness or viciousness. It is true that the evidence is slight upon that proposition, but, as above shown, there is some evidence tending to show that the defendant, Lewis, knew before he employed the plaintiff that the mule was given to running away, and we cannot say that the evidence referred to is not sufficient to support the implied finding that said Lewis, when the plaintiff was employed by the defendants, was thoroughly familiar with the vicious and dangerous nature of the mule and its predilection for running away or violently releasing itself from the control of its driver when being used for the ordinary farming purposes of the ranch of the defendants.

It is insisted, however, that the plaintiff was fully aware of the wild and unruly nature of the mule before the mishap here complained of occurred, and therefore himself assumed whatever risk attended the handling of the animal. To this proposition, the plaintiff makes a twofold reply, to wit: (1) That the doctrine of the assumption of risk is no longer a legal defense in this state in personal injury cases, the defense of the assumption of risk having been expressly abrogated by the Employers' Liability Act, popularly known as the "Roseberry Act," passed by the Legislature of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 796); (2) that the evidence is conflicting upon the question whether the plaintiff knew of the disposition of the mule to run away, from no special cause, and that therefore the finding of the jury thereon forecloses a review of the point by this court.

[3] The impression, at least to some extent has prevailed that the "Roseberry Act" and all its provisions, except such as might have been retained in the statute known as the "Workmen's Compensation Act," were repealed by the latter act, which was passed by the Legislature of 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 279), it being generally supposed that the scheme as established by the Workmen's Compensation Act for the protection and compensation of servants suffering personal injuries in the course of their employment and while engaged therein was intended as a substitute for that embraced in the Roseberry Act. In Barrett v. Met. Cont. Co., 172 Cal. 116, 155 Pac. 645, which was decided on February 15, 1916, the Supreme Court unqualifiedly declares that in such a case as this it is essential to a recovery that the plaintiff be ignorant of the viciousness of the animal until the injury had happened. But we do not deem it necessary in this case to pass upon the question, since counsel for the appellants have not raised the point that the provision of the Roseberry Act excluding assumption of risk as a defense in a personal injury case to which such a defense would under the facts be pertinent is now and was at the time the injuries complained of here occurred nonexistent, and, since, particularly, we agree with the respondent on the proposition that there is a conflict in the evidence upon the question whether the plaintiff, previously to the time he was injured through the running away of the mule, knew of the disposition of the mule to perform in that dangerous manner, and that therefore the question became one solely for the determination of the jury.

The plaintiff testified (and in this he was not contradicted) that he had altogether "hitched the mule up" and driven it five different times only, and, while (as he stated) he had observed that the mule was a very "lively" animal and had several times told Silvey, one of the defendants, that he believed the mule was inclined to be "lively," he was invariably assured by the said defendant that the team was perfectly gentle, and thus he was soothed into a feeling of security and safety in the handling of the team. The plaintiff was not told by the defendants or by any other person that the same mule had, prior to his employment by the defendants run away while being used or driven by the witness Santos, who had formerly worked for the defendants, performing services similar to those assigned to the plaintiff on the ranch of the defendants.

[4-7] The plaintiff had the right to assume that Silvey's repeated assurances of the gentleness of the mule and the team of which said mule was a part were well founded and true, notwithstanding that the actions of the mule coming under his observation might have generated in his mind some suspicion that the animal was not so gentle and tractable as not to require vigilant watching and handling when being used in the usual employments of the ranch. In this connection, it may be observed that it was, obviously, the duty of the defendants to have given the plaintiff, on requiring him to use the mule in question in the prosecution of the employment to which they assigned him, any information they possessed regarding the disposition of the mule to act viciously or to run away. As has been shown, Lewis knew that the mule, without any apparent cause, had run away on an occasion prior to the time at which the defendants employed the plaintiff, and here it may be parenthetically stated that if the other defendants, who were the partners of Lewis, both at the time the mule ran away from Santos and at the time of the employment of plaintiff, did not, in point of fact, know of the circumstance of the running away of the mule from Santos, then knowledge of that circumstance is to be imputed to them. Clowdis v. Fresno Flume & Irrigation Co., 118 Cal. 315, 50 Pac. 373, 62 Am. St. Rep. 238; Barrett v. Met. Contract. Co., 172 Cal. 116, 155 Pac. 645; Kittredge v. Elliott, 16 N. H. 77, 41 Am. Dec. 717; Harris v. Carstens Pkg. Co., 43 Wash. 647, 86 Pac. 1125, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1164, 1169. It was, of course, a duty resting alike upon all the partners to know whether the instrumentalities with which they required their servants to perform services for them were safe or unsafe.

[8] The point next urged against the plaintiff's right to a recovery arises from the fact, above mentioned, that, just before the team started to run, a small bunch of hay was blown by the north wind near the team and close to their heads. It is contended that that circumstance caused the team to become frightened and to run. It is hence argued that, but for the happening of that circumstance, the team would not have become frightened and so would not have started to run, and that therefore the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff was directly imputable to that circumstance, which was beyond the control of human agency. In other words, the contention is that the accident and consequent injuries to the plaintiff were proximately caused by an "an act of God."

We have given above the testimony of the plaintiff as to the circumstance of the small bunch of hay being driven by the north wind, then prevailing, to a point in close proximity to the team, when it became frightened and started to run. It is not necessary to reproduce that testimony here, except to repeat that the plaintiff described the bunch of hay as being about the size of a man's hat, and said that the hay did not strike or touch either the mule or the horse. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that the cause of the "runaway" was entirely due to the blowing of the hay near the team, as indicated. That circumstance might have had something to do with starting the team. It, indeed, may be conceded that it did, and still it was for the jury to say whether that circumstance was the proximate cause of the accident and injury. Common experience justifies the observation that the average work horse or mule, having been thoroughly "broken" to the harness and the ordinary burdens cast upon horses, is so gentle in his relations with those using him for the purposes to which he has been educated—that is, is so bereft of nervousness or of an inclination to become nervous—that the mere blowing of hay or paper in front of or near him would have no effect upon him. In truth, it is commonly known that the blowing of a steam whistle or the noise of an automobile, or, what is infinitely worse, the noise of a motorcycle, as it is ordinarily propelled through streets and over highways, does not disturb in the least the average work horse in these days. On the other hand, it is known that the slightest noise or disturbance of any character will often arouse to a high pitch the nervousness of a spirited or high-strung horse. Such an animal is generally looking for such trouble from natural fear and is ready to run or become unmanageable from the slightest causes, which would not disturb the average work horse. Such an animal is naturally wild in disposition and dangerous, and it is just such a horse that a master should never give over to his servant to use without first acquainting the servant with its dangerous disposition. In this case, the jury could well have concluded, and perhaps did conclude from the evidence, that the mule in question, although "broke" to the harness, was still of a mean, or nervous and spirited disposition, with an inclination to put into action such disposition from causes which may properly be regarded as of the most trivial nature when it is considered that the average work animal would pay no attention to them, and that the blowing of the bunch of hay to a point near where it was standing or moving only had the effect of startling it and arousing to action its wild and vicious disposition. Such a finding would not be inconsistent with the theory that the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries was the vicious disposition of the mule and the failure of the defendants, who knew of the propensity of that animal to runaway, to inform the plaintiff, who then had no knowledge thereof, of the mule's dangerous disposition when the animal was given into his hands as one of the instrumentalities through which he was required to perform his duties as a servant of the defendants.

The foregoing considerations clearly show, we think, that the question whether the accident was the result solely of an act of God or a cause wholly beyond human control or the direct result of the wild and vicious tendencies of the team or the mule in question, together with the failure of the defendants to invest the plaintiff with their knowledge of the dangerous characteristics of the animal when they required him to use the mule to carry out his contract of employment with them, was one peculiarly within the province of the jury to decide. Hence, as to that question, the verdict is conclusive upon this court.

[9] The next point made by the appellants is that the court erred in making the order denying their motion for a nonsuit on the close of the case for the plaintiff. The consideration of the evidence in the foregoing discussion necessarily answers this point adversely to the position of the defendants. It is not out of place to suggest, however, that no rule is better settled in this state than that, where the plaintiff has made out by the evidence a prima facie case in support of the averments of his complaint, the trial court has no legal right to take the case from the jury. Some of the leading cases upon this proposition are cited in Boyle v. Coast Improvement Co., 27 Cal. App. 714, 721, 722, 151 Pac. 25, in which also the rule is stated and applied. Obviously, a reading of the testimony, even as synoptically given herein, will convince any fair-minded person that the plaintiff more than made out a prima facie case of culpable negligence on the part of the defendants as the direct cause of the injuries sustained by him.

The court's action in giving and refusing certain instructions is next attacked. The only given instruction of which complaint is advanced reads as follows:

"The court instructs you as a matter of law that the owner of a dangerous mule or other animal, knowing the same to be dangerous to any one who might drive or use it, owes the duty of not permitting others to drive the same without informing any such other person or persons of the fact of the dangerousness of such animal; and this is true whatever may be the relation of such owner to such other person or persons. And in this case, if you believe from the preponderance of the testimony that the defendants knowingly permitted the plaintiff to use or drive any mule dangerous to be used or driven, without informing plaintiff of the dangerousness of the same, and the plaintiff, while endeavoring to use said mule, without fault or neglect upon his part, and without knowing the dangerousness of the same, is injured, then the defendants are liable to plaintiff for such damages as he may sustain by reason thereof."

The appellants declare that identically the same instruction was condemned as erroneous in Finney v. Curtis, 78 Cal. 498, 500, 501, 21 Pac. 120. But there is a dissimilarity between the two instructions as to a vital element. The instruction in the Finney Case made the defendant liable without reference to his knowledge of the vicious nature of the horse. The court said:

"The rule is well settled that the owner of an animal, not naturally vicious, is not liable for an injury done by such animal, unless it is affirmatively shown, not only that it was vicious, but that such owner had knowledge of the fact"—citing Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, §§ 1887, 1888, and Sutherland on Damages, § 53.

The instruction complained of in this case (above reproduced herein in its entirety) declares, as will be noted, that, to render the owner of a dangerous or vicious mule or animal liable for injury produced by such animal, such owner must have known, at the time he furnished such animal to another to be used or driven by him, of the dangerousness of such animal. Moreover, the court incorporated into its charge to the jury several instructions requested by the defendants themselves, in which the proposition that it was necessary, before the plaintiff would be entitled to prevail, to show that the defendants had previous knowledge of the vicious nature of the mule, was clearly stated. The jury could not have misunderstood the law in that respect.

[10] It is claimed that the court erred by refusing to allow the defendants' proposed instruction in which it was declared that the element of negligence sought to be stated in the allegation of the complaint that the "harness on said team * * * was defective in that the breast strap or chain was not made for the purpose, but was a halter chain, substituted and used as a breast chain, and was unsuitable for such purpose, and it was known by said defendants, and each of them, that it was unsuitable for such purpose, and was used on said mule," etc., had been eliminated from the case as one of the alleged acts of negligence directly responsible for the plaintiff's injuries, and that the issue as to the alleged negligence of the defendants was thus reduced to the single proposition whether the mule was of a vicious nature and whether the defendants had knowledge of his dangerous characteristics before and at the time the mule was given over to the plaintiff to be used by him in his employment with the defendants and did not put the plaintiff in possession of knowledge of the dangerous disposition of the animal.

The plaintiff had testified that the breast strap broke and the tongue of the mower fell to the ground, and that he ran to the head of the mule and grasped the halter which was on the animal. The court admitted this evidence, not as addressed to an issue of negligence upon which the plaintiff relied for a recovery, but as bearing upon the question whether the plaintiff, in going to the head of the team and taking hold of the halter attached to the mule, was, all the circumstances considered, guilty of contributory negligence. The court, as above stated, refused to adopt the instruction of the defendants declaring that the plaintiff did not rely upon the alleged defectiveness of the harness as a basis for a recovery, but, orally, and in very plain, clear, and readily understandable language, instructed the jury to that effect. We think therefore that the rejection of the instruction preferred by the defendants cannot be held to have been prejudicial.

In this connection, we may remark that the general charge of the court was a fair and clear statement or exposition of the principles applicable to those cases of personal injury, like the one before us, where the master is charged with having failed to furnish his servant with reasonably safe instrumentalities with which to perform the service to which the latter is assigned, and by reason of such failure or omission on the part of the master the servant suffers personal injury in the course of his employment. We may further suggest that the instructions proceeded upon the theory that the doctrine of assumption of risk is still a legal defense in those personal injury cases where it is pertinent to the facts. Whether the court was right in that respect, we are not, as heretofore stated, prepared to say at this time; nor are we required to pass upon that question in this connection, since it is obvious that the theory upon which the instructions were framed in the particular referred to was not unfavorable to the defendants, nor, as the result of the trial shows, prejudicial to the plaintiff.

The next and last point arises from the circumstance that the judge of the court below, after the case had been given to the jury and the latter had been engaged in deliberation thereon for about an hour, sent the written instructions to the jury room at the request of the jury. This circumstance furnished one of the several grounds upon which the motion for a new trial was based and pressed before the trial court, and it was supported by the affidavits of counsel for the defendants, a deputy county clerk, the deputy sheriff under whose charge the jury were placed upon the submission of the case, and several of the jurors. All the jurors but one (Juror Cutshall) deposed that before they called for the instructions they had taken a ballot upon the question whether the plaintiff or the defendants were entitled to a verdict, and that they thereby unanimously agreed to a verdict in an undetermined amount of damages in favor of the plaintiff; that, before the question of the amount of damages to which the plaintiff was entitled was considered by them, it was suggested by one of the jurors that they send out and secure the instructions which the court had read to them. They thereupon requested the deputy sheriff, in whose charge they were, to see the judge and ask him to send them the instructions he had read to them. Cutshall deposed that a difference of opinion arose between the jurors upon the question whether the defendants could be held liable for the alleged negligence in furnishing the plaintiff with defective harness. The instruction given by the court upon that proposition, it will be remembered, was orally given, or not in writing. The attorneys for the defendant each deposed that the instructions were sent to the jury without his knowledge or consent. J. R. Hughes, one of the attorneys for the plaintiff, deposed that he was in conversation with Martin I. Welsh, one of the attorneys for the defendants, in the rotunda of the courthouse, near the entrance to department 2 of the superior court, when the deputy sheriff having charge of the jury passed them and stated, in reply to a question by Welsh as to what the jury were doing, that the jury had asked for the instructions and that he was on his way to communicate the request by the jury for the instructions to the judge; that thereafter affiant and Welsh went into the courtroom of department 2 and there continued their conversation, when the said deputy sheriff appeared in said courtroom, and affiant, in the immediate presence and hearing of said Welsh, asked said deputy, "What has become of the jury?" and said deputy replied, "Oh, the judge has sent the instructions in to them."

[11] It is a well-established principle, founded in public policy, that a juror cannot impeach his own verdict for alleged misconduct, where the evidence of such misconduct is, as here, offered by the party against whom the verdict was given. See People v. Chin Non, 146 Cal. 561, 80 Pac. 681, and cases therein cited. It follows therefore that the affidavits of any juror in this case as to the considerations governing or influencing him or his fellow jurors in arriving at a verdict cannot be reviewed. But, for the moment and for the purposes of the discussion only, waiving this proposition and considering the affidavits, it is to be observed that, as above stated, all the jurors, save and except Juror Cutshall, declared in their affidavits that it had been unanimously agreed that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict under the evidence, without then voting upon or deciding the question of the amount thereof, before the instructions were sent for or any suggestion made that they be secured and brought to them. Therefore, if the affidavits were properly reviewable, it was within the discretion of the trial court to hold, upon the showing thus made, that the jurors unanimously agreed upon a verdict, irrespective of the amount, before the suggestion to send for the instructions was made or the instructions sent for, and that the charge was not sent for as a result of a controversy arising among the jurors upon the question whether they were authorized to consider the defectiveness of the harness, as alleged in the complaint, as one of the grounds upon which the plaintiff relied for a recovery.

[12, 13] As to the matter of sending the instructions to the jury, it is to be said that there is no law expressly authorizing such a course to be pursued in civil cases. Section 612 of the Code of Civil Procedure specifically states what papers or documents may and may not be taken to the jury room by the jury; but that section does not say that the instructions given may be so taken, nor does it say that they may not be taken by the jury. The section neither expressly includes the instructions within the papers or documents which may be taken nor expressly includes them within those which are expressly excluded. In criminal cases, the court, by express authority of section 1137 of the Penal Code, may allow the jury to take the given instructions with them. Of course, there can be no doubt that, in civil cases, the court may, upon the express consent of both parties to the litigation, permit the jury to take with them to the jury room the instructions which have been read to them. There was, it is true, no express stipulation or consent by the attorneys in this case that the jury might be given the instructions; but, upon the conflicting showing upon the question whether the attorneys for the defendants did know that the jury had made a request for the instructions and that the judge had complied with the request, the court below was justified in finding, or at least amply supported in its finding, that the attorneys on both sides had knowledge of those facts and an opportunity to register an objection to the giving of the instructions to the jury, if they had so willed. It is, however, very certain that, at all events, it cannot justly be said that, in point of fact, prejudice to either party could have followed from the fact that the jurors were given an opportunity to read, and that they did in fact read, the instructions which had been read to them by the court. It is to be conceded that the manner in which they were given the instructions was irregular, but it was only an irregularity, from which injury will not be presumed (Const. art. 6, § 4½; Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 147 Pac. 238), and there is no affirmative showing that the defendants were prejudiced by the proceeding complained of. What we here say is equally applicable to the complaint that the court omitted to send to the jury with the other instructions the reporter's transcription of the oral instruction above referred to. They made no special request for said instruction, and, obviously, if they examined those sent to them by the judge, they knew that there was no copy or report of the oral instruction sent to them.

We have now disposed of all the points urged for a reversal. The evidence, it may be admitted, is slight and not altogether satisfactory upon the question of the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries; but, as above declared, there is some evidence that the proximate cause was the vicious nature of the mule, of which fact the defendants knew and the plaintiff did not, and under the rule governing reviewing courts on the question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict or findings, we do not feel at liberty to hold in this case that the verdict was without legal justification or is not sufficiently supported to preclude us from so declaring. It is true, as is to be expected, that the defendants presented testimony tending to show that both the mule and the horse were perfectly gentle; but an appellate court cannot resolve conflicts in the evidence, but is only concerned with the question, so far as the evidence is concerned, whether there is to be found therein proof sufficient to support the verdict or findings.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

SANTA FÉ LAND IMPROVEMENT CO. v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO. (Civ. 2651.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 7, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸719(4) — WHARF FRANCHISE—GRANT—BOARD OF HARBOR COMMISSIONERS—RATIFICATION BY CITY —CONDITIONS.

Under Pol. Code, § 2606, providing that no wharf franchise in city shall be valid until confirmed by ordinance, power to grant such franchise was in state board of harbor commissioners, and city could only ratify and confirm, or reject, and could not ratify on condition.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸719(4) — WHARF FRANCHISE — GRANT BY HARBOR COMMISSIONERS — CONDITIONAL CONFIRMATION BY CITY.

Under Pol. Code, § 2606, where state board of harbor commissioners granted wharf franchise in city, which did not reject franchise, but confirmed it, attempting by ordinance to prescribe conditions, confirmation must be deemed absolute and unconditioned.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸719(4) — WHARF FRANCHISE—GRANT—CONDITIONS.

Under St. 1911, p. 1357, as necessary incident of state's grant or transfer to city of San Diego of authority vested in board of harbor commissioners, there was transferred right to city, as substituted for board, to take advantage of any condition reserved in wharf franchise for benefit of state.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸719(4)—TERMINATION OF WHARF FRANCHISE—PAYMENT OF VALUE.

Under Pol. Code, § 2606, and terms of wharf franchise granted by state board of harbor commissioners, city of San Diego, to which, by St. 1911, p. 1357, state had transferred authority of board of harbor commissioners, had right to terminate franchise and take possession of ground on payment of value of wharf independent of the privilege.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸719(4)—TERMINATION OF WHARF FRANCHISE—ARBITRATORS.

Where city of San Diego, after declaring termination of wharf franchise, neglected to have arbitrators appointed, pursuant to Pol. Code, § 2606, under which it was acting, by virtue of St. 1911, p. 1357, to fix compensation for wharf structure, owner had right to possession in place where it was located.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸719(4) — INTERFERENCE WITH WHARF—TERMINATION OF FRANCHISE—FAILURE TO APPOINT ARBITRATORS.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 526, and Civ. Code, § 3422, where city of San Diego, after canceling wharf franchise under powers of state board of harbor commissioners, prescribed by Pol. Code, § 2606, transferred to it by St. 1911, p. 1357, did not appoint arbitrators to fix value of structure, but invaded owner's possession, latter was not entitled to injunction.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by the Santa Fé Land Improvement Company against the City of San Diego. From a judgment denying injunctive relief, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. B. Cosgrove, City Atty., of San Diego, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment denying to plaintiff injunctive relief.

In August of 1905, the control of the bay of San Diego was vested in a board of state harbor commissioners especially appointed for the bay by that name. The authority of such commissioners was as defined in certain sections of the Political Code. The right was given to such commissioners to grant permits to private persons to build and maintain wharves. Pursuant to such authority, on the 1st day of August, 1905, the harbor commissioners passed a resolution granting to William Jorres and G. W. Jorres the right for a period of 20 years to maintain "a wharf already constructed in the bay of San Diego" at a place designated and particularly described in the resolution granting the permit. The resolution provided for an annual rental to be paid for the privilege, and also contained a condition satisfying the terms of the statute, which provides that in the case of a wharf permit or franchise grant the commissioners shall reserve the right to terminate the same and purchase the wharf, the provision in terms being as follows:

"That if at any time the said commissioners shall desire to terminate any franchise and to purchase any wharf, pier, marine ways, dry dock, or shipyard, and the purchase price thereof cannot be agreed upon, then the owner of said franchise shall select two disinterested persons, and the said commissioners two disinterested persons, who shall ascertain and fix the value thereof, and if three of said four persons cannot agree, then they shall appoint a fifth competent disinterested person, and any three of said five persons may fix the value thereof, and upon the payment or tender thereof by the commissioners they shall be entitled to the possession thereof, and the title thereto shall vest in the state of California, and all franchises to build, construct, or maintain any wharf, pier, marine ways, dry dock, or shipyard, shall contain this provision therein; provided, that in fixing such value the franchise or privilege shall not be considered as of any value." Section 2606, Pol. Code.

The wharf permit or franchise, in the course of time, passed by assignment into the hands of the plaintiff, which held the same at the time of the acts complained of and thereafter. The franchise, as granted, described the wharf site as extending from the shore of the bay past the government bulkhead line and to the official pierhead line. However, while the resolution granting the franchise recited that the wharf was already constructed, it appears that the wharf existed only upon a portion of the site, and that during the years following the wharf became in disrepair and the outer end thereof continued to decay and fall into the bay until, at the time of the commission of the acts complained of and the commencement of this action, the structure extended from the shore for only a distance of about 625 feet and lay wholly between the shore line and the government bulkhead line. The city of San Diego, as a work of public improvement, had proceeded to fill in the shallow water of the bay, up to within 75 feet of the bulkhead line, in order to reclaim the ground, and proposed also to extend one of the city streets through, over, and across this fill, to the official bulkhead line, which extension would include all of the existing wharf structure of the plaintiff, except two very small portions, which existed by way of lateral projections. The work of filling had progressed up to a point where the earth was being filled both under and over a portion of the wharf structure. Thereupon the plaintiff proceeded to have its workmen commence the raising of the wharf structure above the level of the fill. The city, by its employés, interfered and prevented this latter work from being done, whereupon this suit was brought for an injunction to restrain and prevent such interference. More particular reference will be made hereinafter to the record of official action taken by the city of San Diego and to the time thereof.

[1, 2] The lands upon and over which the fill was being made were tide lands, the right to the use of which the city claimed by virtue of an act of the Legislature approved May 1, 1911. Stats. 1911, p. 1357. The city's position also has been and is that by the act mentioned all of the authority theretofore vested in the board of harbor commissioners for the bay of San Diego, as an agency of the state, was transferred in its entirety to the city As a result of the last assumption, the city maintains that the condition, which under the statute became a term of the franchise grant, to wit, the condition giving the commissioners the option to terminate the privilege by paying for the wharf, has descended to it, and that its action finds full justification in the facts as disclosed by the record. Going behind all of this, the city claims, also, that when it confirmed the grant of the franchise it did so by ordinance and upon certain conditions, which the franchise holder never fulfilled. To understand this latter position, something must be said as to the terms of the statute, in addition to that recited. Section 2606 of the Political Code contains, among other things, this provision:

"Provided, no franchise granted within or bordering upon the corporate limits of any city shall be valid until the same shall be ratified and confirmed by an ordinance of such city."

The franchise granted to the assignors of plaintiff was confirmed by the city by ordinance, certain conditions being added, however, such as limiting the time within which the wharf structure should be built and providing that the city should have the right to vacate the confirmation at its pleasure. We do not agree with respondent that the conditions attached to the ordinance of confirmation were of effect. The granting power was in the board of harbor commissioners; the city could ratify and confirm or reject; its power was not to ratify upon condition, for the law vested in the harbor commissioners the right to prescribe the conditions under which the wharf privilege should be enjoyed. The city did not elect to reject the franchise, but confirmed it, and, having done that, we think its confirmation must be deemed to have been absolute and stripped of all conditions; that the latter were void for want of jurisdiction. This position is sustained in its principle by California cases which define the extent of the power of the state over tide and harbor lands. See People v. California Fish Co., 166 Cal. 576, 138 Pac. 79; People v. Williams, 64 Cal. 498, 2 Pac. 393; Payne v. English, 79 Cal. 540, 21 Pac. 952. This power was one inherent in the state, and subject to control and definition by general statute, and was not a municipal affair. See, also, Galveston & W. Ry. Co. v. City of Galveston, 90 Tex. 398, 39 S. W. 96, 36 L. R. A. 33. A similar condition was presented in that case, where the court said:

"In order to sustain the claim that the city of Galveston had the right to couple with its consent for the railroad company to use its streets any conditions or terms that it might deem proper, we must invest that municipal corporation with such legislative authority over the subject as would make its action the source from which the railroad company derives its right to build on the streets, or we must conclude that the city had as full power to contract as a private person has, and that the ordinance in question constituted a contract between it and the railroad company."

The source of the power here involved was the state, to which, under the constitution, has been reserved the right to hold and control those lands and waters for purposes of navigation, fishery, etc. See California cases cited. The cases cited recognize the right in the state to delegate its power over the lands to other agencies; such delegation being consistent all the while with the paramount rights impressed upon the same for the public benefit. We think, then, that the inquiry must be to determine how far the state has delegated to the city its power over the tide and submerged lands in the bay of San Diego. And we find upon examination of the act of the Legislature no apparent reason for concluding that the power and control over the lands, harbor and wharf facilities is not as complete as it was possible for the state to make it. The act in its preamble recites as follows:

"Whereas, the state has not the general power of alienation of such lands but may, when the interests of commerce, navigation and fishing require it, convey to municipalities limited and defined areas of such lands with the power to govern, control, improve and develop the same in the interests of all the inhabitants of the state; and whereas, the conveyance to the city of San Diego of the lands hereinafter described, together with the right to govern, control, improve and develop the same will result in great advantage and benefit to all the inhabitants of the state, it is provided. * * *"

The act then proceeds to describe all lands between the line of high tide and the pierhead line in the bay, etc.—provides that the city shall have the right to make improvements, betterments and structures useful and needful for the development of commerce, navigation and fishing, including wharves, docks, piers, etc. The right is given to take tolls and to lease wharves constructed by the city. In general, as we read it, the act purports to give to the city complete charge of the tide and submerged lands, at least to the pierhead lines, which would be the outermost limit to which wharves could be legally constructed in the harbor under federal permission. The act did not specifically give the city authority to grant franchises, although at a later date this subject was particularly covered by amendment. Stats. 1915, p. 1323.

[3, 4] We think that, as a necessary incident of the grant or transfer to the city, there was transferred the right to the municipality, as substituted for the board of harbor commissioners, to take advantage of any condition reserved in the franchise for the benefit of the state. Assuming the correctness of this position, it at once appears that the city had the right to terminate the wharf franchise of the plaintiff and take possession of the ground upon payment of the value of the wharf only. As we construe the statute and the terms of the franchise granted in accordance therewith, upon the determination being made by the proper authority that the franchise should terminate, the right granted becomes at an end and there is left only the matter of adjustment of compensation between the franchise-holder and the representative of the state. This adjustment is provided to be made by arbitrators and it is provided that when the award is made by such arbitrators, if not accepted upon tender of the compensation fixed, the state shall be entitled to the possession of the ground and wharf.

[5, 6] We now are confronted with two remaining questions: (1) Did the city by appropriate action terminate the franchise and do all that was required of it in the way of awarding compensation to the wharf owner? (2) Assuming that such action was not taken and that the city was proceeding to take possession of the wharf and interfere with the ownership of the plaintiff therein, was the plaintiff entitled to an injunction, or should it be left to its action at law for damages which, it must be conceded, could be easily and reasonably ascertained? We find, first, that this action was commenced on January 28, 1915, by the filing of the complaint. Prior thereto, and in the year 1913, a resolution was adopted by the city council of San Diego declaring that it was the desire of said council to purchase the wharf upon the ground covered by the Jorres franchise, and appointing an agent to ascertain and negotiate the price, the same to be agreed upon. On January 26, 1915, two days before the filing of the complaint in this action, an ordinance was adopted forfeiting the franchise rights granted to the assignors of plaintiff, and another ordinance was adopted on the same day attempting to repeal the original ordinance confirming the franchise grant. On the day of the filing of the complaint another ordinance was adopted to open and extend F street in the city of San Diego over and across the wharf of the plaintiff; on February 3, 1915, a resolution was adopted terminating the wharf franchise and providing for the purchase of the wharf and appointing two appraisers; on February 8, 1915, another resolution was adopted declaring the intention of the council to be bound by the decision of arbitrators, and demanding that the plaintiff appoint arbitrators on its behalf. By the answer in the case it was shown that notice was given to the plaintiff of the appointment of the arbitrators on behalf of the city, and the various acts taken by the municipality as noted above were referred to. It does not appear that any further steps were taken under the resolution of August 13, 1913, by the city. It may well be said, then, we think, that while the city had declared in effect the franchise to be terminated at a date long prior to the commission of the acts complained of, it had not proceeded to have its arbitrators appointed in order to fix the compensation which the plaintiff was entitled to have fixed before possession was relinquished of the wharf structure. This being true, then at the time of the commission of the acts complained of the plaintiff still held the right to the possession of the wharf in the place where it was located, and we would be inclined to hold that the offer of the city to appoint arbitrators, made after the commencement of the action, would not debar the plaintiff from its right to relief if, under the facts, an injunction appeared to be the proper remedy.

We are, therefore, brought to the second proposition before noted, that being whether, where it appears that the wharf franchise has been terminated, leaving only the matter of the ascertainment of the value of the wharf structure to be made, the conditions were such as to warrant the court in restraining interference with the possession of the plaintiff. We think this must be answered in the negative, in consonance with the well-known equitable rule which finds expression in section 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 3422 of the Civil Code. The court by its findings determined fully all of the facts which we have made note of, and including a finding as to the conditions imposed by the ordinance confirming the franchise grant on the part of the city. It may be that the court gave greater weight to those conditions than to other facts found (if so, erroneously, under our view); but it does remain true that there are facts disclosed by the findings which, in view of what has last been stated, afford sufficient support for the judgment denying an injunction.

The judgment is affirmed.

NEWHALL v. HUNSAKER et al. (Civ. 1884.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 8, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⟸93—SALE OF STOCK FOR DELINQUENT ASSESSMENT—"DEFECT OR IRREGULARITY."

Under Civ. Code, § 341, sale of corporate stock by directors for delinquent assessment must be at public auction to highest bidder for cash; and where bidder gave note, which was paid before stockholder instituted action to recover stock, there was a "defect or irregularity" in the sale, within section 347.

2. CORPORATIONS ⟸99(1) — ISSUANCE OF STOCK FOR "PROPERTY"—NOTE—STATUTE.

A promissory note is "property," and included within Civ. Code, § 359, providing no corporation shall issue stocks, except for money paid, labor done, or "property" actually received.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Property.]

3. CORPORATIONS ⟸93—FORFEITURE OF STOCK — FAILURE TO PAY ASSESSMENT — STRICT COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

To deprive owner of corporate stock of his rights therein for delinquency in meeting assessment, case being one of forfeiture, there must be a strict compliance with requirements of controlling statute.

4. CORPORATIONS ⟸93 — FORFEITURE OF STOCK—DELINQUENCY—ACTION FOR RECOVERY—ESTOPPEL.

Corporate stockholder, deprived of his stock for delinquent assessment, the sale being defective or irregular, within Civ. Code, § 347, because bidder gave note, and not cash, as required by section 341, could make tender of assessment and bring suit for recovery of stock within time prescribed in former section, not being estopped.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by Mrs. M. E. Newhall against I. B. Hunsaker and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. I. Feemster and Power & McFadzean, all of Visalia, for appellants.

F. E. Cook, of Fresno, G. W. Zartman, of Tulare, and Lamberson, Burke & Lamberson, of Visalia, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought under section 347 of the Civil Code to recover 25 shares of the Tulare County Power Company, which were sold for a delinquent assessment. The stock was sold for $225, and the corporation, instead of requiring that the assessment be paid in money, accepted the promissory note of the bidder for the amount of the bid. The assessment sale was made and the note received on the 27th of March, 1915, and the note was paid the following August. Plaintiff did not question the validity of the sale until September 15th, and she did not learn before that time of the manner in which the corporation had attempted to dispose of the stock. It is stated by appellants that there is only one question in the case, and that is:

"Did the acceptance of the note by the corporation for the delinquent bid and the payment of the same before proceedings taken by plaintiff under section 347, Civil Code, make a valid sale of the stock to defendant Hunsaker?"

Said section provides:

"No action must be sustained to recover stock sold for delinquent assessments, upon the ground of irregularity in the assessment, irregularity or defect of the notice of sale, or defect or irregularity in the sale, unless the party seeking to maintain such action first pays or tenders to the corporation, or the party holding the stock sold, the sum for which the same was sold, together with all subsequent assessments which may have been paid thereon and interest on such sums from the time they were paid; and no such action must be sustained unless the same is commenced by the filing of a complaint and the issuing of a summons thereon within six months after such sale was made."

[1] As to this section, however, we may say that plaintiff made such tender, and the complaint was filed and the summons issued, within the six months therein provided. As to this there can be no doubt. The question is therefore, not whether plaintiff has pursued the proper remedy, but rather whether ther was such "defect or irregularity in the sale" as to make it voidable within said period at the instance of plaintiff. To determine that question we must consider the force and effect of section 341 of said Code, providing:

"On the day, at the place and at the time appointed in the notice of sale, the secretary must, unless otherwise ordered by the directors, sell or cause to be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, so many shares of each parcel of the described stock as may be necessary to pay the assessment and charges thereon, according to the terms of sale."

It is admitted that there was a violation of this provision of the statute, inasmuch as the stock was not sold for cash, but for a promissory note. If a violation of the statute in this important particular does not constitute a defect, or at least an irregularity, in the sale, it is difficult to conceive what would constitute such infirmity. Such section, we think, is plain enough. The bid must be upon a cash basis, and the purchaser must be ready and able to pay in money the amount of his offer at the time his bid is accepted. There is reason enough in the rule, but we need not discuss it. It should be sufficient for us to know that the Legislature has so provided. If it had been intended that the note of the purchaser might be accepted for the bid, it is fair to assume that such contingency would not have been excluded. It is true that the corporation might lose nothing by the acceptance of the note, but it is not a question of the solvency of the purchaser, but whether the sale has been conducted as the statute requires. The Legislature has seen fit to provide that the sale shall be made for money, and not for its equivalent, or what may be converted into cash.

[2] Nor is the rule the same as in the case of subscriptions for stock. In the latter case the law provides (section 359, Civ. Code) as follows:

"No corporation shall issue stocks or bonds except for money paid, labor done or property actually received."

A promissory note is property, and therefore it is included within said provisions. This circumstance must be considered in viewing the cases cited by appellants. Besides, the case of Pacific Trust Co. v. Dorsey, 72 Cal. 55, 12 Pac. 49, and of Quartz Glass & Mfg. Co. v. Joy, 27 Cal. App. 523, 150 Pac. 648, upon which appellants rely, involved the validity of the notes given in payment for the stock. The contention was that the note in each instance was void as against public policy, but it was held that such construction "would sanction fraud and unfair dealing." It is not claimed here that the note given by Hunsaker was void, nor is it necessary to hold that the corporation could repudiate the transaction and treat the sale as a nullity. The proper position, as we view it, is that, in view of said section 341 of the Code, the sale was irregular, and therefore voidable, at the instance of the delinquent owner of the stock if he proceeded as provided in said section 347.

[3] Of course, the general principle as to the necessity for a strict compliance with the requirements of the statute in order to deprive the owner of his stock is recognized by the authorities.

In Ruck v. Caledonia Silver M. Co., 6 Cal. App. 356, 92 Pac. 194, the validity of the assessment was involved, and it was held that the courts have no power to dispense with any of the conditions that are provided by the Legislature as precedent to forfeiture. Therein is quoted with approval the following declaration of Justice Sharswood in Germantown Pass. R. Co. v. Fitler, 60 Pa. 130, 100 Am. Dec. 546:

"We must look to the charter for the power of the directors to forfeit the stock. No doubt the power given must be strictly pursued, and if any restrictions or limitations there provided have been disregarded, the alleged act of forfeiture must be declared invalid."

In 1 Cook on Corporations, § 129, it is said:

"The general method of forfeiting stock for nonpayment of calls is usually presented in detail by the statute authorizing forfeiture. In the earlier cases there may be observed some tendency to hold that a substantial, in distinction from a strict, compliance with the requirements of the statute is all that is necessary to a valid forfeiture. But in the later cases, English and American, it is plainly declared and may be taken as a settled rule that the validity of the forfeiture and sale of the stock of a subscriber in arrears depends upon a strict and formal compliance with the requirements of the enabling statute."

The foregoing refers specifically to a forfeiture for the nonpayment of the subscription, but the same strictness should manifestly be required in the sale for a delinquent assessment.

In 10 Cyc. 502, it is said:

"In respect of the mode of sale the governing statute must be strictly pursued."

However, as before indicated, it is not necessary to hold that the sale herein was void; but it is important to bear in mind that the situation is governed by the general rule of construction that prevails in cases of forfeiture.

[4] Appellants also contend for the application of the doctrine of estoppel. The principle upon which they rely is stated in 4 Thompson on Corporations (2d Ed.) § 3571, as follows:

"The right of a stockholder to invoke the aid of equity in case of invalid or illegal forfeiture may be waived by acquiescence or delay, and, as in analogous cases, he must act promptly in order to obtain relief. The doctrine has been applied where stock was unlawfully forfeited and sold with the stockholder's knowledge, at a time when such stock was of little value, but afterwards, by some change of circumstances and the diligence of the other stockholders, it became valuable, and the original holder then attempted to recover it by a suit in equity."

Among the cases cited by said author are Sayre v. Citizens' Gaslight Co., 69 Cal. 207, 7 Pac. 437, 10 Pac. 408, and Hayward v. National Bank, 96 U. S. 611, 24 L. Ed. 855. In the former it is said:

"If he [the owner] had the right to repudiate the sale of stock upon the ground that it was not assessable, or for any other cause, was it not incumbent upon him to act with diligence? Could he acquiesce in the sale [of stock] as long as the stock of the company was of but little value, but when, by the exertions of others, the consolidation of the company with a rival one imparted to the stock of the combined properties more value, come into a court of equity and claim an equivalent of the stock of the new company? We think not."

In the Hayward Case the Supreme Court of the United States declared:

"If Hayward was defrauded of his stock—if the title did not pass from him or the bank because of the peculiar relations which the purchasers held to him and the property; if he had the right originally upon any ground to repudiate the sale and reclaim the stock—it was incumbent upon him, by every condition of fairness, to act with diligence, and before any material change in the circumstances and in the value of the stock had intervened."

These authorities, however, are not in point, for the reason that the Legislature has prescribed the time within which a defective or irregular sale may be avoided. There is no more reason to deny effect to this than to any other statute of limitations. It confers a right or privilege upon the owner of the stock, and, it may be added, the purchaser at an irregular sale is presumed to take with knowledge of this right of the owner within six months to redeem his stock. There can be, therefore, nothing inequitable in the enforcement of the rule.

The purchaser knew that the defective or irregular sale was inoperative to confer an indefeasible title to the stock as against the owner, who might make tender of the assessment and bring suit for its recovery within the time prescribed in section 347. Burham v. S. F. Fuse Mfg. Co., 76 Cal. 26, 17 Pac. 939.

Moreover, it would seem that the purchaser was himself guilty of some degree of laches, as he did not pay the note until about five months after the sale. If the property had depreciated in value, would he have paid his note at all? We do not know, but, at any rate, it is not unfair to assume that he was unwilling to pay it until assured that he would suffer no loss. Again, there is no evidence in the record that the property when redeemed was of any greater value than what was repaid by the owner. There is some assertion to the contrary in the brief of appellants, but the evidence does not disclose it. All that the record shows is that there was quite a sum of money to be distributed to the stockholders, but it is silent as to the amount to be appropriated to each share. Therefore we may assume that appellant Hunsaker lost nothing by the redemption, and, not being damaged, he is in no position to invoke the doctrine of estoppel; and, of course, it is no concern of the Power Company whether plaintiff was entitled to redeem.

The judgment is affirmed.

SMITH v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 1873.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 7, 1918.)

1. PARENT AND CHILD ⟸11 — ACTION BETWEEN—PRESUMPTIONS.

The presumption specified by Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 7, 8, that money paid to one by another was due to the latter, and that a thing delivered by one to another belonged to the latter, applies where a child sues his parents for money turned over to them during his minority.

2. PLEADING ⟸434 — DEFECTIVE ANSWER — AIDER BY JUDGMENT.

In an action to recover money given to another, plaintiff alleging an express contract to return, an answer, after judgment, will be held sufficient, although it did not squarely meet the issue tendered by the complaint upon an implied promise to repay, where such issue was gone into fully on the trial.

3. PARENT AND CHILD ⟸11—MONEY PAID TO PARENT BY MINOR—PROMISE TO RETURN—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action by child against parents to recover money paid to parents during minority, evidence held to sustain a finding that parents had not expressly or impliedly agreed to return the same.

4. PARENT AND CHILD ⟸11—EARNINGS OF CHILD—PRESUMPTION.

In an action by child against parents for return of money paid to parents while a minor, burden rested upon child to show that he was duly emancipated during the period of his minority, under Civ. Code, §§ 197, 211.

5. PARENT AND CHILD ⟸11 — ACTION BETWEEN—FINDINGS—EMANCIPATION.

In action by child to recover money paid to his parent during minority, a finding upon whether plaintiff was emancipated was not necessary to support a judgment for defendant, where there was no evidence tending to show emancipation, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 197, 211.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Chas. O. Busick, Judge.

Action by Clifford H. Smith against Albert W. Smith and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Mering and M. J. Gillespie, both of San Francisco, and Eugene Aram, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Wachhorst & Wachhorst and Jay L. Henry, of Sacramento, for respondents.

HART, J. The plaintiff, who is the son of the defendants, brought this action for the purpose of recovering the sum of $5,600, alleged to have been turned over by him in small amounts from time to time during the period of his minority and for a period of time thereafter to the defendants.

The complaint alleges:

That "in the year 1906, the plaintiff * * * and the defendants * * * entered into an agreement wherein it was agreed between them that the plaintiff should engage in various occupations and that the wages and salary earned by him should be turned over to the defendants and should be by said defendants invested in the name of said defendants and said sums of money and the income therefrom should be safely kept and preserved by said defendants and all of said sums should be upon demand of the said plaintiff turned over to said plaintiff; that pursuant to said agreement said plaintiff engaged in various occupations, beginning with the year 1906, and continued in said occupations till the year 1913; that during said time all of the moneys earned by said plaintiff were turned over to said defendants; that pursuant to said agreement said defendants received all of said sums and agreed to hold said sums according to said agreement; that said defendants under said agreement received the sum of $5,600."

It is alleged that "within two years last past" the plaintiff demanded of the defendants the return of said moneys, together with the income derived therefrom, but that the latter refused and still refuse to turn over said moneys or any part thereof to plaintiff. It should, perhaps, be stated that, while the evidence shows that the plaintiff is the son of the defendants, the complaint does not disclose the relationship existing between the parties.

The defendants by their answer deny the making of any such agreement as is declared upon by the plaintiff, or that any agreement of any kind was entered into by and between the plaintiff and the defendants by or under which the latter ever received any money or moneys from the plaintiff to be by them invested for the plaintiff and to be returned to him upon his demand for the return thereof; deny that "pursuant to such or any agreement said plaintiff engaged in various or any occupations, beginning with the year 1906, or at any other time, or at all, and continued or continued in said or any occupations until the year 1913, or any other time or at all; deny that during said or any time, or at all, all or any of the moneys earned by said plaintiff was turned over to said defendants, or either of them, pursuant to such or any agreement, and deny that said defendants, or either of them, received all of said or any sums, and agreed to hold said or any sums according to said or any agreement; deny that said defendants, or either of them, under said agreement, received from said plaintiff, or from any one in his behalf, the said sum of $5,600, or any sum or sums." It is then denied that any demand was made by the plaintiff upon the defendants for the return of any money or moneys alleged in the complaint to have been turned over by him under the agreement pleaded in his pleading, and then follow several special defenses, among which is that of the minority of the plaintiff during the greater portion of the period referred to in the complaint and the support of the plaintiff by the defendants during said period, and that the defendants were legally entitled to the former's earnings during his minority.

The court found that no such agreement as is set out in the complaint was ever made or entered into between the plaintiff and the defendants, and that the plaintiff never at any time turned over any money or moneys to the defendants under an agreement between the parties that such money or moneys, with the income therefrom, would, upon the demand of the plaintiff, be turned over to him by the defendants. The court further found that no demand was ever made by the plaintiff upon the defendants for the return of any money or moneys delivered by him into the possession of the defendants. But no finding was made upon the question whether the plaintiff, during his minority, was or was not emancipated from parental control by the defendants.

Judgment passed for the defendants, and this appeal is by the plaintiff from said judgment.

[1, 2] The proposition first invoked by the appellant is that the answer, although denying the making of the agreement pleaded by the plaintiff, is, nevertheless, pregnant with an admission by the defendants of the receipt of the wages or moneys earned by the plaintiff during the period of time mentioned in the complaint. This proposition is founded upon the denial that the defendants received such moneys or earnings "under such agreement"—that is, the agreement set out in the complaint—from which, it is said, the necessary implication is that they did, as a matter of fact, receive the earnings of the plaintiff and that they still retain the same, thus raising an implied agreement or promise on their part to return the same to the plaintiff.

It cannot be doubted that there is some force in the suggestion that the denials of the answer are of a character to warrant the inference that the plaintiff did turn over to the defendants, and that the latter received and still retain, the earnings of the former acquired during the period of time mentioned in the complaint; but the answer directly and squarely denies that either under the agreement pleaded in the complaint or any agreement whatsoever the defendants promised to return to the plaintiff whatever of his earnings he might have turned over to the defendants, and we think this is sufficient to meet the question of fact submitted by the complaint that the defendants agreed to return to the plaintiff such of the latter's earnings as he might have delivered into the possession of the former. It does not necessarily follow, from the mere fact that a party has delivered money or property of any kind to another, that the latter has agreed to return the same to the former. Indeed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, the presumption is that money paid by one to another was due to the latter and that a thing delivered by one to another belonged to the latter. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 7 and 8.

But, even assuming that the answer is pregnant with an admission that the defendants received the earnings of the plaintiff during the period of time stated in the complaint, and that upon such admission at least an implied promise to return the same to the plaintiff arises, there is still another answer to the point thus made in the propositions that the case was tried, so far as plaintiff was concerned, entirely upon the theory that, as alleged in the complaint, there was an express agreement upon the part of the defendants to return such earnings to the plaintiff upon a demand by him for the same, and, so far as the defendants were concerned, upon the theory that no such agreement as is set out in the complaint was ever made or entered into between the parties, and that whatever of his earnings or moneys the plaintiff turned over to his parents were either so turned over under the legal right of the defendants to receive and retain such moneys of plaintiff as he acquired during his minority, or that the same, after having been received by the defendants, were returned to the plaintiff. It follows, therefore, that, notwithstanding the failure of the answer, if such failure there is, directly and squarely to meet the issue proposed by the complaint upon the question of the alleged indebtedness of the defendants to the plaintiff, the trial of that issue was, without objection, gone into as fully and effectually as though a proper joinder thereof had been effected by the pleadings. Noakes v. City of Los Angeles (Sup.) 175 Pac. 409; Boyle v. Coast Improvement Co., 27 Cal. App. 714, 151 Pac. 25; Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bower & Co., 26 Cal. App. 318, 147 Pac. 90.

[3] The next point urged is that the evidence is insufficient to support the decision, but an examination of the evidence has readily convinced us that the point is without merit.

As above stated, the testimony discloses that the plaintiff is the son of the defendants, and, while, on his direct examination, he testified that for many years pending his minority and for a few years thereafter he was engaged in employments from which he derived during his minority small and after his majority larger earnings, which he immediately turned over to his parents, giving the details thereof from a bill of particulars which he had previously prepared and served on the defendants, he, however, on his cross-examination, gave testimony from which it is reasonably inferable that so much of his earnings as he derived during his minority were delivered to and received by the defendants under the authority of the latter to claim and receive the same by virtue of the provisions of section 197 of the Civil Code, although receiving some of them back, and so much thereof, if any, as he turned over to his parents after he attained his majority constituted a gift to the latter.

On direct, he testified, in substance, as follows:

"I was born August 20, 1890. I lived with my father and mother in Sacramento. I completed my studies in the grammar school; that was all the schooling I had. I quit school in June, 1906, when I was 16 years of age, and started to work in July. At that time I had a conversation with my parents. I wanted to put my money in the bank. They said they were buying the home place and they would try—see a good chance to buy property where it would increase in value; if I would give them my money they would invest it. The money should be returned to me when I got married; they would see I had a home. I says that I wanted a little start when I got married. They told me not to worry about that; they each told me that. I worked first for J. N. Larkin, a printer. I answered an ad in the paper that Mr. Larkin wanted a boy to learn the pressman's trade. I went down and got the job. The arrangement was that I should start in for $3 a week and they would increase my wages. My wages were increased very rapidly. When I got paid, I took the money home and gave it to my mother; my father knew I was giving it to her. He said to take care of my money; they saved that, would take care of it for me. I quit working for Mr. Larkin May 30, 1912, and went to work for P. N. Schmidt."

A bill of particulars introduced in evidence showed that, up to August 20, 1911, when plaintiff became of age, he had received the sum of $3,585.24, and thereafter, until May 30, 1913, he received $1,381.08, a total of $4,966.32, which was turned over to his parents. The bill of particulars also contains items for painting buildings, carpenter work, etc., amounting to $445. Plaintiff testified that he milked two cows for his parents, took care of a horse, irrigated, gardened, and did all the general work around the property. Defendants were purchasing their home on installments. Witness said:

"In about 1911 I got rather discouraged. I wanted to put some money in the bank. They discouraged me, told me the property would increase in value; it would be more profitable to let them go on as they were than to put it in the bank. I left home about May, 1913. Before leaving, I asked my mother to return me my money. She said she would not, I was not to have anything back as—since I married the woman I did. I married in November, 1914. My father and mother were present at the time I made the demand. I was living in San Francisco, and came to Sacramento especially to see them. They both refused to give me the money."

On cross-examination, plaintiff testified that he boarded at home, that his clothing was furnished him by his parents, that they gave him some spending money, paid a doctor's bill for him, and gave him money for excursions; that on one occasion his mother sent him a check for $25, and that she purchased for him for $350 a printing business in San Francisco. He stated that he had never asked his mother for a loan, whereupon a portion of a letter written by him to her was shown him, which contained the statement:

"And I asked you for only a loan, to pay back every cent and interest, and I don't get it. It may be hard to get the money, but you could get it if you tried very hard, and I think I have been help enough, so you can do that much."

In explanation of the portion of the letter not produced, witness said:

"I went up there and told them I wanted to get $500. They told me that they were pretty—they had quite a bit of bills to pay, and they could not raise the money at that time, so they could not give it to me. So I told them, I says 'If you can borrow it, if you can't raise it, if you borrow it, I will pay you interest, so it don't go hard on you at this time.' That is, the first part of the letter goes on to tell about that. Q. You were going to borrow it from them, were you, from your parents? A. In the same words. * * * I told my mother that I always gave her money to save for me, to invest for me; naturally, I had some coming."

Other witnesses were introduced by the plaintiff to support his claim, but an analysis of their testimony will show that in effect it amounts to no more than this: That the mother of the plaintiff had frequently referred to their son as a "good boy," that he always gave her his wages, and that she and her husband, the father of plaintiff, intended to buy the latter a lot, or that everything they had would go to their two boys—the plaintiff and his brother. For instance, the plaintiff's witness, W. H. Larkin, for whom the plaintiff had worked as a printer during his minority, testified that the defendant Mrs. Smith had at one time said to him that "she had two boys, and that everything they had would go to them." Of course, such testimony has little force in proof of the alleged fact that the defendants agreed expressly or otherwise to return to the plaintiff the moneys he turned over to them. Particularly is this true in view of his admission that he boarded at home, that his parents provided him with all his clothing, paid his doctor's bill and gave him "spending money" and "money for excursions."

But, conceding that there was enough in the testimony of the plaintiff to warrant findings and judgment in his favor, still, on the other hand, the testimony of the defendants is amply sufficient to support the findings as made by the trial court.

The defendant Mrs. Jennie Smith, mother of the plaintiff, testified that she never had any conversation with the plaintiff when he first went to work, or at any other time, about his wages; that she never at any time entered into an agreement or understanding with the plaintiff that he was to turn over his wages to her, and that she would return the same to him upon his demand therefor, or when he was married; that the plaintiff generally did as he pleased with his wages, and gave her such portions thereof as pleased him; that she always placed the money so given her in the "bureau drawer"; that he was at liberty to take it out and use it whenever he pleased, and that he not only did take back the money he gave her, but that she often gave him more than he turned over to her; that he had never, until some time in the month of October, 1913, claimed that she had any money belonging to him. Mrs. Smith further testified that, after the plaintiff reached the age of 21 years, she never received a cent of his wages or money derived by him from any source. She said that the plaintiff asked her and her husband for the loan of $500 after he attained his majority, and that she told him that they did not have the money with which to make such loan. It was then for the first time that the plaintiff asked for a return to him of such moneys as he had turned over to the defendants during his minority.

The defendant Albert W. Smith corroborated the testimony of his wife in all substantial and vital particulars.

Ralph W. Smith, brother of the plaintiff, testified that he was present at a conversation between the plaintiff and his father and mother, on the 17th day of October, 1913, which was two years after the plaintiff had arrived at his majority, and that on that occasion the plaintiff besought his parents for a loan of a sum of money sufficient to start him in the printing business; that the plaintiff did not then say or claim that the defendants were indebted to him; that, on the contrary, his father in said conversation said to the plaintiff that he was under no obligation to him, whereupon the plaintiff replied:

"I know you are not, Pa, under no obligation to me; I only want it as a loan; I will pay it back as a loan."

It would, of course, be idle to argue that the foregoing testimony does not afford sufficient support to the decision that there was no agreement that the defendants would return such portions of the plaintiff's wages to him as he had turned over to the defendants, and that (as is at least to be implied from the findings) the plaintiff did not, after attaining his majority, deliver into the possession of the defendants any of his earnings, or any money whatsoever, or, if he did, that the same were intended as a gift.

But it is said that the court's failure to find whether the plaintiff was or was not emancipated by his parents during his minority is fatal to the judgment. Under the state of the record, as it is presented here, we do not think so.

[4, 5] The plaintiff, it appears, became of age on the 20th day of August, 1911; he having been born on the 20th day of August, 1890. He first started to work and to earn wages on a small scale in the year 1906, when he was but 16 years of age. All the earnings acquired by him in that period of time he claims to have turned over to his parents, the defendants here.

There is, under the law, no abstract or implied right in a minor to claim a return of earnings acquired by him and turned over to his parents during his minority. The plaintiff here was under the legal control of his parents, and they were entitled to his services and earnings during the whole of the period of his minority (Civ. Code, § 197), unless he was emancipated therefrom and so invested with the right to his own services and the fruits thereof by some legally recognized act of emancipation by the parents (Civ. Code, § 211). The burden rested upon the plaintiff in this case to show that he was duly emancipated by his parents during the period of his minority. There is no evidence, save possibly that of the plaintiff himself to the effect that his parents received the earnings he derived from his employments during his minority and agreed to return the same to him on his demand for a return thereof, tending in the slightest degree to show that the defendants relinquished their right of controlling the plaintiff and of receiving his earnings during his minority, and in the absence of such a showing the presumption is, we think, that no such relinquishment took place and that all of the plaintiff's earnings, acquired by him during his minority, legally belonged to his parents, the defendants herein.

Therefore the finding of the court that no such an agreement as is relied upon by the plaintiff was ever made or entered into by and between the parties to this action is itself conclusive against him upon the claim that he was or is entitled to a return of such moneys as he might have turned over to his parents during his minority. In other words, there having been introduced no testimony showing or tending to show that the defendants, while the plaintiff was still in his minority, relinquished their legal right to control him and to receive the benefit of his services and his earnings, there was no necessity for finding upon the question whether the plaintiff was or was not emancipated from the control of his parents by the act of the latter; the presumption being, until the contrary is shown that there was no such emancipation and that the parents were legally entitled to claim, receive, and retain all the wages earned by him during his minority.

Among the specifications of error set forth by the plaintiff are these: (1) That there is no evidence to sustain the finding "that plaintiff did not engage in various occupations between 1906, and 1913; (2) that plaintiff did not turn over to defendants his wages; (3) that plaintiff did not demand the return of the wages."

It is argued in the briefs with much earnestness that the foregoing findings are absolutely without any support from the evidence. But there were no such findings, as the first and second, in the order in which they are above given, made by the court below. What the court did find was that the plaintiff did not enter upon various occupations under an agreement of any character with the defendants that the wages he derived from his employment should be turned over to the defendants and returned by them to him upon his demand for the same, and that defendants did not receive any of plaintiff's wages under any agreement to return the same to him. These findings fall far short of saying that the defendants under no circumstances received the wages earned by the plaintiff. As to the finding referred to above as the third specification of error, there is, as we have already shown, evidence to support it.

Several of the rulings of the court touching the admissibility of certain evidence are attacked. We have carefully examined and and considered the specifications thus relied upon and are not impressed with their importance. Conceding that some of them were, strictly speaking, erroneous, yet it is clear to our minds that the evidence thereby excluded or allowed, if opposite rulings thereon had been made, could not have exerted any material or important influence on the final result of the trial.

We think the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

KEOHANE v. KEOHANE et al. (Civ. 2538.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 10, 1918.)

1. DIVORCE ⟸275—LEGAL DIFFICULTIES.
Where husband, because he apprehended that wife was to sue for divorce, conveyed land to his brother to secure him in the repayment of moneys advanced by him, the conveyance was not fraudulent.

2. QUIETING TITLE ⟸51 — RELIEF — CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.
In an action by an administrator to quiet title to land which defendants claimed had been sold by plaintiff's intestate to their intestate, a decree for plaintiff on ground that deed was not delivered to defendants' intestate, and that plaintiff's intestate had regained title by adverse possession, should be made contingent upon repayment of money paid by defendants' intestate.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1071(6)—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—FINDINGS.
In an action by an administrator to quiet title to land conveyed by deceased, a decree for plaintiff, based upon findings that deed was not delivered and that deceased had regained title by adverse possession, will be reversed, where there was no finding on issue of failure of consideration; there being evidence that deceased had been paid $1,000 on purchase price.

4. WITNESSES ⟸205—PRIVILEGE OF COMMUNICATION—ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.
An attorney may testify as to what was said by his client and by him to another concerning the purpose of a conveyance by the client to the other, the statements testified to have been made with the express intention that they be communicated to the grantee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; R. H. Latimer, Judge.

Action by Patrick Keohane, as administrator of the estate of Batholomew Keohane, sometimes called Bart Keohane, deceased, against Bessie Keohane and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Milton Newmark, of San Francisco, for appellants.

T. H. De Lap, of Richmond, and F. J. Kierce, of San Francisco (Walter Christie, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. In an action brought by plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of a deceased grantor, against defendants, as heirs at law of a deceased grantee, to set aside a deed and to quiet title, judgment went in favor of the plaintiff. Defendants appeal from the judgment.

Bart Keohane, while vested with the title and in possession of certain real property, located at Stege, Cal., made, in 1908, a deed thereto in favor of his brother, John Keohane, who was then residing at San Francisco. John died intestate in 1913. Bart died intestate in 1915. Thereafter the administrator of the estate of Bart commenced the present action against the widow and minor children of John as his heirs at law to quiet title to said property. The complaint alleged nondelivery of the deed, lack of consideration, and title to the property by adverse possession, which allegations were denied in the answer. The trial court found in favor of the plaintiff on the issues of adverse possession and nondelivery of the deed, but failed to find on the issue of lack of consideration.

From the evidence it appears in part that in the month of June, 1908, Bart Keohane was apprehensive that his wife might institute a suit against him for divorce whch might involve the real property in controversy in the present action, and desiring to secure his brother, John, who had theretofore loaned him some money, from the possible consequences of such litigation, Bart made the deed in question. Thereafter, and until the time of his death, he remained in possession of the property and conducted a business thereon. A few months after the purported deed was made, Bart borrowed the sum of $1,800 and gave therefor his promissory note secured by a mortgage on this property executed by himself and John and their respective wives. Bart repaid this loan with the interest thereon. He at all times paid the taxes levied upon the property, and also all premiums for fire insurance thereon. After making the deed above mentioned, he caused extensive improvements to be made to the property, and alterations thereto, and paid the entire cost thereof.

The contention of the defendants in the court below was that John Keohane, through whom they claim, bought this property from Bart, paying therefor the sum of $1,000; and their principal contention upon this appeal is that the court erred in failing to find upon the issue of consideration for the deed thus made. They also contend that, if the court should find against this defense, then the evidence shows that the conveyance was made for the purpose of defeating the rights of the grantor's wife, and that therefore the court, as a court of equity, will not lend its aid to the plaintiff to quiet the title of the estate represented by him.

[1] Dealing with the last point first, the evidence is, not to the effect claimed by appellants, but only goes so far as to show that the legal difficulties apprehended by the grantor were merely the occasion of his doing what in any event he had the right and even the duty to do, namely, secure his brother in the repayment of moneys advanced by him. In saying this we do not mean to intimate that the evidence establishes that Bart Keohane was in fact indebted to his brother; but the evidence of this indebtedness came from the same witness who testified as to the anticipated legal difficulties which threatened to arise between Bart Keohane and his wife, and stands on the same plane of credibility. The evidence therefore, not establishing that the conveyance was fraudulent, the court was not required upon this ground to deny to the plaintiff the relief sought.

[2, 3] We are, however, clearly of the opinion that the court below should have found on the issue of consideration made by the pleadings; for, if John Keohane in fact paid to Bart the sum of $1,000 for a conveyance of this property, then notwithstanding the other findings in favor of the plaintiff, to the effect that the deed was not delivered, and that the plaintiff's intestate had regained title by adverse possession, the plaintiff would not be entitled to a decree quieting title unless the court should also find that this sum of $1,000 had been repaid, or, if not repaid, the decree quieting title should be made contingent upon its repayment. "A party seeking to quiet his title to the realty or remove a cloud thereon will as a condition precedent to the relief be compelled to do equity." 32 Cyc. 1379, citing among other cases Tripp v. Duane, 74 Cal. 85, 15 Pac. 439. "A court of equity setting aside a judicial sale under a void execution as a cloud on title should decree that the purchase money be refunded." 32 Cyc. 1383. And the doctrine is also well established that failure to find upon a material issue is under certain circumstances ground for reversal. Math v. Crescent Hill Gold Mines Co., 31 Cal. App. 636, 161 Pac. 140.

[4] There is no merit in the point that the court committed error in allowing Bart Keohane's attorney to testify as to what was said by his client to him, and by him to John Keohane, concerning the purpose of the conveyance. It appears in the record that all that Bart told the attorney was told him with the express intention that it be communicated to John so that the latter might know why the deed was being executed, and was, therefore, not privileged. Ferguson v. McBean, 91 Cal. 63, 27 Pac. 518, 14 L. R. A. 65; 40 Cyc. 2363, 2375. An attorney who acts as a conduit through which a conveyance is made may testify as to the circumstances attending its execution. Foster v. Wilkinson, 37 Hun, 242; Rosseau v. Bleau, 131 N. Y. 183, 30 N. E. 52, 27 Am. St. Rep. 578.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court for the purpose of finding upon the issue of consideration, and thereupon to enter its judgment upon the findings as they shall then stand.

STEDMAN v. STEDMAN. (L. A. 4459.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1918.)

1. DIVORCE ⊜184(7)—QUESTIONS FOR COURT —CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

A trial court in a divorce action is the exclusive judge of the credibility of witnesses and is no more required to believe two witnesses than one.

2. EVIDENCE ⊜75 — SUPPRESSION OF EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

In a divorce suit where the corroboration of the parties, who were both willing that a decree be entered, was weak, and it appeared that stronger evidence was possible, the court was bound to presume that such evidence would be unfavorable and was for that reason suppressed in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 5, 6, and section 2061, subds. 6, 7, relating to presumptions and weight of evidence.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by John C. Stedman against Lillie Stedman for divorce. From a judgment denying divorce after default, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. T. Blakely, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Respondent in pro. per.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment denying him a divorce after default of the defendant. Respondent files no brief. The complaint charges desertion after 40 years of married life, and the defendant, appearing as a witness in pursuance of a rule of court requiring her to be subpœnaed, testified circumstantially to her desertion of the plaintiff; that on January 24, 1914, she had left the house and had taken a large part of the furniture; that she intended to desert the plaintiff; and that she desired that plaintiff be granted a decree. The plaintiff also testified to the circumstances of the separation. Both witnesses, if believed, established desertion. The testimony of both, however, was insufficient without corroboration to entitle the plaintiff to a decree. Civ. Code, § 130. Three witnesses were called by the plaintiff in corroboration, and one testified that he called at plaintiff's house two days after the alleged desertion and that it looked "pretty vacant." A neighbor testified that he saw defendant moving some furniture out of the house. A son of the parties testified that, in response to a telephone from a neighbor, he went to the home of plaintiff and found him alone and ill, the house scantily furnished; that he took his father, the plaintiff, home with him; and that the plaintiff and defendant had not lived together from that time (more that a year before the complaint was filed). It appeared from the testimony of the plaintiff that the youngest son and the daughter of the parties were living in the house at the time of the separation, were present at the time of the separation, heard what transpired between them, and went away with the defendant. It further appears from the transcript that another divorce action had been tried between the same parties, before the judge who tried this action, and that a decree had been denied two days before the alleged desertion upon which this complaint was based. The files in the former suit were introduced in evidence, but are not set forth in the clerk's transcript as required by law. Findings of fact were filed by the court, deciding that defendant did not desert or abandon the plaintiff without fault on his part or at all. "On the contrary, he did not want to live with her any more than she wanted to live with him." According to the transcript, at the close of the case the judge said:

"I do not think the evidence is sufficient here to warrant a decree. In the first place, the circumstances are not shown, and the only two witnesses who could tell anything are not here. It is easy enough to get them here, and they are not brought. It was a simple fact about the way the people lived before there was a suit pending and both of them hung onto the same house and both of them wanted to live in the same house, although they were fighting and scrapping at (all) the time, and the situation was such that she would not speak to him. Now, I passed on that, and decided in that other case that up to that time there was no desertion, and I do not think the fact that people have been living the way they lived, occupying separate parts of the house, proves desertion."

Notwithstanding the statement of the court that he was influenced in his decision by the failure to produce the evidence of two witnesses to the separation whose attendance could be readily secured, and the other witnesses testified to the mere fact of separation, no offer was made to secure the attendance of such witnesses.

This case illustrates the difficulty presented by our present divorce laws, which throw upon the trial court the duty of protecting the public interest by preventing divorce and also the duty of weighing the testimony as a judge. The whole matrimonial difficulties of this couple, who should have been celebrating the fortieth anniversary of their wedding instead of seeking a divorce, had been tried out in an adversary proceeding, but two days before this alleged desertion occurred, and the same judge is now confronted by the parties seeking a new divorce on a new ground.

[1, 2] Unless we are prepared to hold that testimony barely sufficient, when taken at its face value, requires the court, in the absence of conflicting testimony, to grant a divorce, the judgment must be affirmed. The trial court is the exclusive judge of the credibility of witnesses, and is no more required to believe two witnesses than one, and we are to assume that the court did disbelieve these witnesses, particularly in view of the fact that their testimony alone is made by law insufficient, and weak corroboration was offered where stronger evidence was possible. The court was bound to presume under the circumstances that their testimony would be unfavorable and was for that reason suppressed. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 5 and 6; section 2061, subds. 6 and 7.

FOSTLER et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (L. A. 4535.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 18, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐34—ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY—NOTICE OF ELECTION.
Publication of notice on May 2d, 9th, 16th, 23d, and 29th complied with statute relating to annexations of territory to cities, which provides that notice of election be published "at least once a week for a period of four successive weeks next preceding the date upon which the election is to be held."

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐34—ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY—NOTICE OF ELECTION—LISTING OF BONDS ASSUMED.
A notice of election by a municipal corporation on the question of annexation of territory, in listing bonds to be assumed by the voters in the annexed territory, need not state the nature and purposes of the bonds in detail, and a list, "Waterworks bonds issued 1905; waterworks bonds authorized June 12, 1907, in the sum of $23,000,000," etc., was sufficient.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Jacob J. Fostler and another against the City of Los Angeles, a municipal corporation, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Ward Chapman and Hickcox & Crenshaw, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., and Charles S. Burnell, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. [1] This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment on demurrer denying an injunction claimed by the plaintiffs to restrain the defendants from levying taxes and exercising jurisdiction within the certain annexed territory known as the Palms. The action was based upon alleged irregularities in the election. The statute under which the annexation election was held required that the notice should be published "at least once a week for a period of four successive weeks next preceding the date upon which the election is to be held." The notice was published May 2d, 9th, 16th, 23d, and 29th. The election was held June 1st. The notice was published once a week for five weeks, and the last date of publication was within one week of the date of the election. This was sufficient. The case of Williams v. Sacramento County, 58 Cal. 237, decides nothing to the contrary. That case was construed upon section 3447 of the Political Code requiring that a similar notice "be published for four weeks next preceding the hearing thereof." There notice was published May 12th, 13th, 15th, 19th, 20th, 22d, 23d, 26th, 27th and 28th, and June 4th and 12th. The hearing was June 17th. The court there stated that there were two intervals of more than seven consecutive days in the four weeks next preceding the day of the hearing in which there was no publication of the petition, referring, perhaps, to the intervals between May 27th and June 4th and between June 4th and 12th. It is perhaps assumed in that case that the publication should have begun on the 20th, thus the next weekly publication is the 27th, and the next should have been the 3d, and the next the 10th of June, the seventh day before the hearing. It is, however, immaterial how the court there arrived at its conclusion that there were two intervals of eight days. On any theory, there was an eight-day interval from the 4th to the 12th days of June.

[2] It is next contended that the notice failed to set out with sufficient detail the purpose of the various bonds issued which were to be assumed by the voters in the annexed territory. The reference thereto is contained in the notice and in the figures following, to wit:

"Waterworks bonds issued 1905.

"Waterworks bonds authorized June 12, 1907, in the sum of $23,000,000.

"Electric plant bonds issued in 1912 for $3,500,000.

"Harbor improvement bonds issued 1910, for the sum of $3,000,000.

"Waterworks bonds authorized April 15, 1913, for $1,500,000.

"Harbor improvement bonds in the sum of $2,500,000, authorized April 15, 1913."

The purpose of this statute requiring such a vote was to put plainly before the voters of the district the amount of obligations which would be assumed by them in coming into the municipality.

It is not necessary to state the nature and purposes of the bonds with the details which might have been required in an election upon the question of the issuance of the bonds. The notice is, therefore, sufficient.

Respondents claim that the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained for the reason that the proper way to test the validity of an annexation election and circumstances detailed where an election has been held and the results so ascertained as to constitute the annexed territory as part of the city is by quo warranto.

In view of the fact that the complaint is without merit, it is unnecessary to determine that question.

Judgment affirmed.

TADGE v. BYRNES et al. (L. A. 4514.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1918.)

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⊂=16—PRIVILEGE FROM SERVICE OF PROCESS—ATTENDANCE AT COURT.

A nonresident attorney within the state for the purpose of advising and assisting in the trial of an action therein, in which he is not an attorney of record, is not exempt from service of civil process.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Henry Tadge against Edward Byrnes, impleaded with others. From an order refusing to quash service of summons on defendant Byrnes, he appeals. Affirmed.

Waldo, Root & Dysert, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank Birkhauser, of Brawley, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court refusing to quash the service of summons upon defendant Edward Byrnes. The motion to quash was based upon the proposition that the defendant Edward Byrnes was in California for the purpose of assisting as an attorney at law in connection with two cases then pending in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Southern Division. It is not alleged or claimed that defendant Byrnes was an attorney of record in the cases pending in the United States District Court, or entitled to practice, in that court, but he alleges in his affidavit that he came from his home and residence in the city of Chicago, Ill., to the city of Los Angeles for the sole purpose of assisting as counsel in the preparation for argument of numerous demurrers and motions to strike out parts of the complaints in the said two actions and for the purpose of attending before Hon. Benjamin F. Bledsoe, one of the judges of the said court upon the argument of said various motions and demurrers, which after several adjournments were set for hearing on Monday, the 24th day of May, 1915; that on the 22d day of May, 1915, while said Edward Byrnes was temporarily sojourning in the city of Los Angeles for the sole purpose of assisting in the preparation and the argument of said motion and demurrers on the part of the plaintiff, said Edward Byrnes was served with a summons to appear and answer the complaint in this action. It is true there are cases holding that attorneys coming into a jurisdiction for the sole purpose of appearing in court to represent their clients are exempt from the service of civil process while so engaged, and there are cases holding quite to the contrary. There are none, so far as called to our attention or discovered by investigation, going so far as to hold that an attorney who is not an attorney of record and does not become such is entitled to such privilege.

In view of the situation presented by the affidavits in this case we find it unnecessary to determine the right of an attorney of record to protection from the service of civil process.

Order affirmed.

LINDLEY et ux. v. KNOWLTON.
(L. A. 4442.)

1. TRIAL ⊜260(8)—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL OF REQUESTS.
In action for damages, when plaintiff's wife and children were attacked by escaped chimpanzee, where court instructed that plaintiff could recover if the attack was the proximate cause of the wife's ill health, and that the jury should consider the wife's previous physical condition, refusal of requested instructions that no recovery could be had unless the fright was accompanied by personal and bodily injury, which must be physiological, and that no recovery could be had for fright produced by apprehended danger to the children, was not erroneous.

2. DAMAGES ⊜52—FRIGHT—CHIMPANZEE—FEAR FOR CHILDREN.
Where action for damages by attack of chimpanzee was based on theory that plaintiff's wife suffered personal physical disorders, proximately arising from the attack, plaintiff could recover, though the injury and the fright were not concurrent, but the physical ill-effect followed the fright.

3. DAMAGES ⊜216(4) — INSTRUCTIONS — FRIGHT—CHIMPANZEE—FEAR FOR CHILDREN.
Where plaintiff's wife and two children were attacked by escaped chimpanzee, and the wife fought the beast off, and the complaint was drawn on the theory of both fright and personal injuries, it was fairly inferable that the wife had fear for herself, as well as for the children, so that refusal of instructions that there could be no recovery for fear of injury to a third person was not erroneous.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by O. P. Lindley and wife against E. W. Knowlton. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank H. Snyder, Whitney E. Smith, and Arthur M. Hadley, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gordon Boller, W. N. Goodwin, and Hunsaker & Britt, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. O. P. Lindley and his wife, Lillian S. Lindley, sued defendant for damages on account of personal injuries, alleged to have been sustained by Mrs. Lindley because of fright occasioned by the appearance and acts of a chimpanzee owned by Knowlton. The complaint contained allegations that the animal was so negligently kept by defendant that it escaped from restraint and entered the dwelling house of plaintiffs, where Mrs. Lindley and her two little children were at the time; that it attacked the two children successively, choking one of them severely; that the mother successfully, though with great effort, contended with the chimpanzee, rescuing her children from it, although the beast weighed about 165 pounds; and that in consequence of the said animal entering the house and seizing the children Mrs. Lindley was greatly frightened, shocked, and made sick in body and mind. It was averred that as a consequence her nervous system was disordered; she was rendered hysterical and caused to suffer pain and mental anguish; and that she was confined to her bed for many months as a result of the permanent injuries to her physical health and mind and nervous system. The proof offered tended to sustain these allegations. A verdict was given in favor of plaintiffs for $2,000, judgment was entered accordingly, and defendant appeals from said judgment.

Appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions involving the following propositions: (1) No recovery may be had unless the fright occasioned by defendant was accompanied by some personal and bodily injury; (2) the injury must be a physiological one; and (3) no recovery may be had on account of fright produced by apprehended danger or peril to a third person.

[1] The court did tell the jurors that no verdict might be given for plaintiffs unless Mrs. Lindley received injuries which were the natural consequences of fright caused as alleged in the complaint. They were told that unless the evidence showed, by a preponderance thereof, that the occurrence recited in the complaint had taken place and was "the efficient, proximate, and producing cause of the injuries complained of or of the conditions of ill health, if any, on the part of the plaintiff, Lillian S. Lindley, or some of said conditions or injuries," their verdict must be for the defendant. Another instruction was to the effect that they might consider Mrs. Lindley's previous physical condition in determining whether the results of which she complained were or were not the consequences of general ill health. The instructions were full and fair, and the refusal to give those offered by defendant was not error.

[2] Conceding the full force of appellant's first contention that no damages may be given for mere fright, we are of the opinion that the court sufficiently covered this matter in the instructions to which we have alluded. The complaint was not drawn upon the theory that the lady had merely suffered the mental discomfort of fear, but was based upon a claim of damages for permanent, physical disorders proximately arising from the occurrences set forth in the pleading; and the court carefully instructed the jury that no verdict for plaintiffs should be returned unless under the issues of the case both the fright and the alleged physical consequences thereof were proven by a preponderance of the evidence. The law upon the subject of fright and its consequences has been long settled in California, and settled in a way which disposes of appellant's contention that the physical injury for which damages may be given must accompany the fright. In Sloane v. Southern California Ry. Co., 111 Cal. 668, in the opinion prepared by Mr. Justice Harrison, quotation is made (page 681, 44 Pac. 320, 32 L. R. A. 193) from Bell v. Great Northern Ry. Co., L. R. 26 Ir. 428, a case in which the contention was made that the jury should be told that unless fright was accompanied by physical injury, even though there might be nervous shock occasioned by the fright, such damages would be too remote. The quotation adopted by this court from the opinion in the Bell Case was as follows:

"It is admitted that as the negligence caused fright, if the fright contemporaneously caused physical injury, the damage would not be too remote. The distinction insisted upon is one of time only. The proposition is that, although, if an act of negligence produces such an effect upon particular structures of the body as at the moment to afford palpable evidence of physical injury, the relation of proximate cause and effect exists between such negligence and the injury, yet such relation cannot in law exist in the case of a similar act producing upon the same structures an effect which, at a subsequent time—say a week, a fortnight, or a month—must result without any intervening cause in the same physical injury. As well might it be said that a death caused by poison is not to be attributed to the person who administered it, because the mortal effect is not produced contemporaneously with its administration."

And the whole matter is admirably epitomized in the language of Mr. Justice Harrison in the Sloane Case:

"Whatever may be the influence by which the nervous system is affected, its action under that influence is entirely distinct from the mental process which is set in motion by the brain. The nerves and nerve centers of the body are a part of the physical system, and are not only susceptible of lesion from external causes, but are also liable to be weakened and destroyed from causes primarily acting upon the mind. If these nerves or the entire nervous system is thus affected, there is a physical injury thereby produced, and, if the primal cause of this injury is tortious, it is immaterial whether it is direct, as by a blow, or indirect through some action upon the mind."

The rule which appellant seeks to invoke is only applicable in cases in which fright alone is made the gravamen of action. Easton v. United Trade School Contracting Co., 173 Cal. 199, 159 Pac. 597, L. R. A. 1917A, 394. In the case at bar physical detriment was pleaded and there was evidence tending strongly to sustain the allegations of the complaint.

[3] The above quoted and cited authorities fully uphold the action of the court in refusing to give the proffered instructions in two of the classes indicated by defendant. It remains for us to examine the contention that the court should have informed the jury that no recovery may be had on account of fright produced by apprehended danger or peril to a third person. Appellant insists that the authorities are uniform in upholding this rule. But there is excellent authority to the contrary. Hill v. Kimball, 76 Tex. 210. 13 S. W. 59, 7 L. R. A. 618; Wilkinson v. Downton, L. R. 1897, 2 Q. B. 57; Cohn v. Ansonia Realty Co., 162 App. Div. 791, 148 N. Y. Supp. 39. It is not necessary, however, to discuss any conflict of authority on this subject, because in this case, as in Easton v. United Trade School Contracting Co., supra, fear for another was not the only cause of injury. While, of course, Mrs. Lindley was greatly and perhaps chiefly concerned for her children, for whom she fought so valiantly and successfully, there is nothing in the testimony to indicate that she was not concerned for her own safety. All of the circumstances connected with the unexpected appearance of the animal, its attacks upon her children, and her own conflict with the chimpanzee, make it impossible that she should have been devoid of fear for herself. Therefore, under the authority last cited, the court was fully justified in refusing to give the requested instruction on the subject of fears for another person.

No other questions are discussed in the brief of appellant, and we find no others in the record meriting analysis.

The judgment is affirmed.

FRIEDMAN et al. v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA TRUST CO. et al.
(L. A. No. 4571.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸2—ORDERS APPEALABLE—DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL—STATUTES.
In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 963, amended 1915, where the notice of appeal from an order denying new trial was not filed until the law permitting such appeals was no longer in effect, the appeal must be dismissed.

2. BOUNDARIES ⟸37(5)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—AGREEMENT.
Evidence held to warrant the finding that defendant did not believe the dividing line between land defendant bought and plaintiff's land was irregular, embracing the tract in question, where defendant's deed called for a straight line.

3. BOUNDARIES ⟸47(2)—EVIDENCE—ESTOPPEL—MISTAKE IN POINTING OUT BOUNDARY.
The party asserting an estoppel to deny boundaries as pointed out by vendor must have been deceived by and relied upon the representation.

4. BOUNDARIES ⟸46(1)—ESTABLISHMENTS—AGREED BOUNDARIES—APPLICABILITY.
The doctrine of agreed boundaries can be invoked only where adjoining owners, uncertain of the actual position of the boundary described in their deeds, agree upon its true location, and is inapplicable, where the court finds a party claiming such agreement did not rely thereon.

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION ⟸86—PAYMENT OF TAXES.
Where defendant claimed land beyond the boundary in his deed by adverse possession, but paid taxes only upon that described in the deed, the claim of adverse possession held ineffectual.

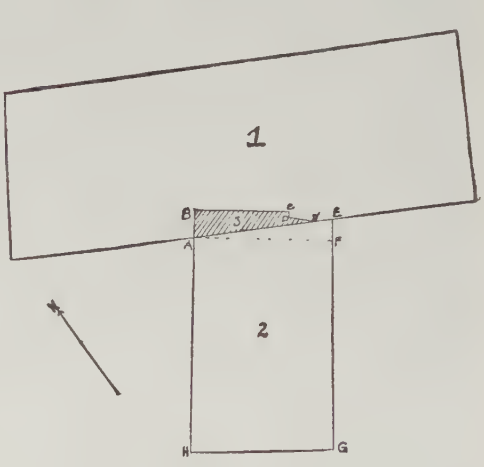
6. EJECTMENT ⟸64—PLEADING—COMPLAINT—DESCRIPTION OF LAND.
Under Code Civ. Proc. § 455, the complaint and findings in an action to recover possession of land should so describe the land in possession of defendant as to enable an officer, upon execution, to identify it.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1170(3, 10)—REVERSAL—LACK OF PREJUDICE—PLEADING AND FINDINGS.
Where complaint and findings in action to recover land were defective, in not describing the part in defendant's possession, and defendant asserted a right to the whole disputed tract, the right to which was adjudged to plaintiff, the defect must be disregarded, as not being prejudicial, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 475, and Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Department One.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Libby Friedman and husband against the Southern California Trust Company, a corporation, and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and the denial of a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Appeal from order denying new trial dismissed. Judgment affirmed.



Wheeler & Sweet, of Los Angeles (Henry O. Wackerbarth, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Edwin A. Meserve and Shirley E. Meserve, both of Los Angeles (J. D. Taggart, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

SLOSS, J. [1] Action to recover possession of a parcel of land in the city of Los Angeles, with damages for its withholding. The plaintiffs had judgment for restitution of the premises, without damages. The defendants appeal from the judgment. They also attempt to present an appeal from the order denying their motion for a new trial; but, when their notice was filed, the law no longer permitted appeals from such orders. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, amended 1915.

The plaintiffs are husband and wife. The wife (Libby) is the sole party in interest, and we shall refer to her as "the plaintiff" or "the respondent." So, too, Southern California Trust Company may be designated as "the defendant" or "the appellant," since all other defendants and appellants claim merely as its tenants.

The plaintiff and the defendant are owners of adjacent parcels of land. The location of their holdings and of the land in controversy may be illustrated by the following diagram, which reproduces in a rough way, but with sufficient accuracy for our purpose, a plat offered in evidence:

Plaintiff is the owner of tract 1; defendant, of tract 2. The land in dispute is tract 3, represented on the diagram by shading, and inclosed by lines connecting the points A, B, C, D, and D'. All of the land shown belonged at one time to I. I. Dehail, and passed from him by mesne conveyances to S. S. Federman. Federman conveyed parcel 2 to A. J. Brown, who subsequently conveyed it to the defendant. The plaintiff was the wife of Federman, and, upon his death, succeeded to his title to parcel 1, which was, in due course, distributed to her. The deed from Federman to Brown, and that from Brown to the defendant, described parcel 2 so as to make its northerly boundary the line A, E. The description in these deeds did not include any part of tract 3, all of which is embraced within the boundaries of tract 1, retained by Federman and passing from him to his widow, the plaintiff. The plaintiffs, accordingly, had a clear record title to the land here in controversy.

Conceding this, the defendant asserts ownership of the disputed premises by adverse possession, by estoppel, and by virtue of the doctrine of agreed boundary. These claims may be considered together, as all three rest upon the same state of facts, shown or claimed to have been shown by the defendant.

On its southerly line (H, G), tract 2 fronts on First street. That tract is occupied by a brick building, which covers the entire width of the parcel from its street frontage to the dotted line (A, F). Attached to the rear of this structure is a wooden porch with stairways, which covers the part of the lot not covered by the brick building, and extends, so far, at least, as the stairways are concerned, over a part of tract 3, to the line D, D'. A high board fence had been built along the lines A, B, C. The line C, D runs along the easterly side of an oil tank, which lay within the corner C. The space back of the building, thus inclosed by the fence and the tank, was floored with brick or cement, and in it there stood a toilet, which was used (but probably not to the exclusion of those in possession of tract 1) by the tenants occupying the brick building. These conditions had existed from the time of Dehail's ownership of the entire property, and continued at the time this action was tried. The defendant claims, and alleged by answer and cross-complaint, that when Federman sold tract 2 to Brown he represented to his grantee that the fence line (A, B, C) marked the boundary line dividing tracts 1 and 2; that Brown bought on the faith of this representation; that Brown in selling to the defendant had made the same statement; and that the defendant believed the fence to be the dividing line, and would not, except for such belief, have purchased the property. It was further alleged that the defendant had at all times occupied the disputed premises and paid all taxes assessed thereon.

The findings of the court were against these defenses. It was found that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of tract 1; that Federman did not, at the time he sold tract 2 to Brown, represent to said Brown that the board fence marked the boundary line between the property conveyed and that retained by Federman; that when Brown conveyed to the defendant he did not represent to said defendant that said board fence was on the dividing line between the parcels; and that it was not true that defendant believed that said fence was the division line between said parcels, and would not have purchased said property if it had not so believed. There is a further finding that the defendants have not, nor have any of them, since the date of the conveyance from Federman to Brown, paid all taxes which have been assessed upon said parcel 3.

[2] These findings are assailed as unsupported by the evidence. It is argued that evidence tending to show the making of the representations relied on by the defendants stands without contradiction in the record. On the other hand, the plaintiff contends that she introduced evidence which had the effect, at least, of raising a substantial conflict. A discussion of this point of difference would be of little importance, since we are satisfied that the evidence fully sustains a further finding which is fatal to the attempted defenses. This finding is the one which declares that the defendant, Southern California Trust Company, did not at the time of its purchase believe that the fence marked the division line between parcels 1 and 2. It is true that an officer of the defendant who represented it in the purchase, gave testimony to the effect that he did so believe, and that he would not have purchased the property unless he had so believed. The plaintiff was not in a position to offer evidence directly contradicting these declarations of the witness. But facts were shown which warranted the court in drawing the inference embodied in its finding. Thus it appeared that under the description of tract 2 in the deed from Brown to the defendant, together with the recorded map referred to in said deed, the northerly boundary of said tract was a straight line, something over 50 feet in length, running between points A and E, as shown on the foregoing diagram. If, as might reasonably be supposed, the defendant had knowledge of the description of the land which it was contracting to purchase, it was aware that the boundary line dividing its land from that of the plaintiff was a straight line, connecting the side lines of tract 2. But the line marked by the board fence and the oil tank, which it claims to have believed to be the boundary of its property, was not a straight line. It ran from B to C, a distance of some 35 feet, to the oil tank above mentioned, then turned southerly, at a right angle, a distance of several feet. This divergence from the line indicated by the deed was apparent upon a mere inspection of the premises. The court below was certainly justified in concluding that a purchaser could not have believed that a straight line of over 50 feet was marked on the ground by a line running straight for only 35 feet, then continuing for several feet in a jog or right angle, and finally ending quite a distance short of the apparent width of the lot. It must therefore be held that the evidence warranted the finding that the defendant did not believe the dividing line to be the line of the fence.

[3] If this finding be upheld, all of the defendant's claims must fall. That a grantor may be estopped from showing the true line of property conveyed by him, where he has misled the grantee into the belief that the line is located elsewhere, is not to be questioned. 5 Cyc. 936; Rippey v. Harrison, 66 Wash. 109, 119 Pac. 178. But it is of the essence of an estoppel that the party asserting it shall have been deceived by and relied upon the representation. Boggs v. Merced M. Co., 14 Cal. 279, 367; Nilson v. Sarment, 153 Cal. 524, 531, 96 Pac. 315, 126 Am. St. Rep. 91.

[4] So, too, the fact, as found by the court, that the defendant did not believe the line of the fence to be the real boundary, is fatal to the application of the rule of agreed boundaries. That rule is a familiar one, and has been discussed by this court in a number of cases, of which we may cite a few: Sneed v. Osborn, 25 Cal. 619; Young v. Blakeman, 153 Cal. 477, 483, 95 Pac. 888; Price v. De Reyes, 161 Cal. 484, 119 Pac. 893; Grants Pass, etc., Co. v. Brown, 168 Cal. 456, 143 Pac. 754; Silva v. Azevedo, 173 Pac. 929. But the doctrine can be invoked only where adjoining owners, being uncertain of the actual position of the boundary described in their deeds, agree upon its true location. "A formal agreement to fix a boundary line is not valid, indeed is void, if the parties know, or one of them knows, that the agreed line is not the true line." Clapp v. Churchill, 164 Cal. 741, 745, 130 Pac. 1061, 1062. The validity of such an agreement rests upon the belief and understanding of both parties that they are establishing the true boundary line between their properties. Otherwise their agreement amounts simply to an attempt to convey real property without the formalities required by law for such a grant.

[5] The plea of adverse possession is ineffectual for the same reason. Concededly, the defendant paid no taxes except those assessed upon the land described by its deed. Its claim that by reason of the representations and agreements of the parties the description in the deed should be regarded as extending to the fence, is but an attempt, in another form, to invoke the rule of agreed boundaries, and this, as we have seen, cannot be done.

[6, 7] An attack made by the appellant upon one other finding requires brief notice. The description of plaintiff's property (tract 1), as it appears in the complaint, differs in phraseology from the description in the findings and judgment. The findings declare that the property therein described is the same property as that described in the plaintiff's complaint. The evidence fully supports this finding; indeed, the transcript shows that the identity of the two descriptions was virtually accepted by both parties as established at the trial.

In view of the conclusions already stated, a consideration of attacks made on other findings could have no material bearing upon the result.

The complaint and the findings are both open to criticism in that they declare that the defendants are in possession of "a part" of the property claimed (tract 3), without specifying the particular part so occupied. "In an action for the recovery of real property, it must be described in the complaint with such certainty as to enable an officer, upon execution, to identify it." Code Civ. Proc. § 455. But the defect was not one affecting the substantial rights of the parties. The defendant in its pleadings asserted a right to the possession of the whole tract in dispute. The record shows that the plaintiff was entitled to the entire parcel, and the judgment awarded it to her. No damages were allowed to the plaintiff. The defendant could not have been prejudiced in any way by the failure of the complaint or the findings to specify the exact land occupied. It was perfectly apparent at the trial that the matter to be litigated and adjudicated was the ownership and the right of possession of the whole of tract 3, and the defect in plaintiff's allegation and in the finding must, therefore, under section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no less than under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, be disregarded.

There are no other points requiring notice.

The appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed.

The judgment is affirmed.

The convenience of a party's employés should have no consideration upon application for change of venue for convenience of witnesses.

3. VENUE ⟸52(1)—CHANGE OF VENUE—DISCRETION OF COURT—ABUSE OF DISCRETION.
The denial of change of venue from San Diego to Butte county, a distance of 659 miles (Pol. Code, §§ 154, 186), and a transfer to Fresno, 255 miles from Butte county (Pol. Code, §§ 154, 160), where eleven witnesses to relevant and material matters resided, who could not be compelled to attend (Code Civ. Proc. § 1986), thus compelling use of their depositions, while defendant's witnesses were employés or experts, held an abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by the Security Investment Company against Charles M. Gifford and another, copartners doing business as C. M. Gifford & Son. From an order denying plaintiff's motion for change of venue to Butte county for convenience of witnesses, and transferring the case to Fresno county, it appeals. Reversed.

Brittain & Kuhl, of San Francisco, and Andrews & Wright, of San Diego, for appellant.

Eugene Daney and Fred O'Farrell, both of San Diego, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. [1-3] Plaintiff moved for a change of venue from San Diego county to Butte county on the ground of the convenience of witnesses. The court denied the motion and transferred the case to Fresno county. The distance from Butte county to San Diego is 659 miles. Pol. Code, §§ 154, 186. The distance from Butte county to Fresno is 255 miles. Pol. Code, §§ 154, 160. The question presented is whether or not the court abused its discretionary power in denying the motion. Clanton v. Ruffner, 78 Cal. 268, 20 Pac. 676. The controversy between the parties grows out of a contract entered into between them in August, 1910, whereby the defendants agreed to purchase the olives grown by the plaintiff upon its land located at Palermo, Butte county, Cal. The main question in the case is as to whether or not certain olives alleged to have been delivered by the plaintiff to the defendants were of such a quality as to require their acceptance by the defendants. A dispute also exists as to whether or not there was an actual delivery of olives under the contract. The parties in their briefs do not agree as to the proper construction of the pleadings as to the issues raised thereby. We do not undertake to determine that controversy, nor to critically analyze the pleadings and issues. We have, however, sufficiently stated the general nature of the controversy to show the character of evidence necessary to establish the contention of the parties. If the pleadings for any reason do not present the real controversy they can, of course, be amended to do so. Plaintiff, in its affidavit used on the motion, named eleven witnesses residing in Butte county, within five miles of Oroville, the county seat, whose testimony is deemed relevant and material. If the case is tried in either Fresno or San Diego county it will be necessary to take the depositions of these witnesses, as they cannot be compelled to attend upon the trial. Code Civ. Proc. § 1986. Plaintiff has demanded a jury and desires to present its witnesses before the jury. Defendants, in opposition to plaintiff's motion, filed an affidavit in which they name their witnesses and state the testimony expected from each. Eleven of these witnesses are expert witnesses, having no knowledge of the facts in the case. The only other witness of defendants residing in San Diego county is Mabel Spencer, an employé of defendants, who, it is said, will testify "as to all disputes between the parties." Neither the convenience of experts nor of employés should be considered in determining the question of the convenience of witnesses, except where the experts also have personal knowledge of the facts upon which their testimony is to be based. Bushnell v. Durant, 83 Hun. 32, 31 N. Y. Supp. 608; Quinn v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 88 App. Div. 57, 84 N. Y. Supp. 738; Groff v. Rome Metallic Bedstead Co., 98 App. Div. 152, 90 N. Y. Supp. 691. The effect of the order was to require the plaintiff to present its case to a jury by depositions, an expensive and unsatisfactory mode of trial, while Butte county was the place where most of the witnesses lived and the facts in controversy arose. Plaintiff's motion should have been granted.

Order reversed.

ROSE v. DE WITT et al. (L. A. 4546.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸837(1) — MATTERS REVIEWABLE—STATEMENTS OF JUDGE.

In an action for damages, statements by trial judge concerning his belief as to actual damage, made during progress of case, are of little or no value to the Supreme Court in determining whether his final conclusion as to the amount, as embodied in his findings and judgment, is correct.

2. DAMAGES ⟸130(4)—INADEQUATE DAMAGES—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where some witnesses testified that the damage was $1,000 and others testified that there was no damage at all, award by the court of $200 was not inadequate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Margarett R. Rose against C. F. De Witt and others. From a judgment for only part of the relief demanded, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Evans and Shepard, Alm & Sevenson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edwin A. Meserve and Shirley E. Meserve, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, but for an amount less than that to which she deemed herself entitled. The plaintiff was the owner of lot 12, block D, of the Harvard Heights tract in the city of Los Angeles, upon which was a residence which she occupied as her home. The defendant was the owner of lots 13 and 14 in the same tract, which immediately adjoined the said property of the plaintiff. There were certain building restrictions imposed upon the erection of structures in the tract which forbade the erection upon any of the lots within it of any structures other than first-class private residences of at least two stories in height, and which also provided that such residences should be located not less than 20 feet from the property line along the street. About two months before the commencement of this action the defendants commenced the erection of a flat building upon their said lots in alleged violation of these building restrictions as to the height and quality of the buildings, whereupon the plaintiff commenced this action, in which, in her original complaint, she sought to enjoin the further prosecution of work upon said building. She presently, however, filed an amended complaint, changing the nature of her action to one for damages for the alleged depreciation in value of her own property by reason of the erection of the defendants' said structure in violation of said building restriction, fixing her damage thereby at the sum of $1,000. The defendants, having by their answer already denied all of the averments of the plaintiff's original complaint, it was stipulated that their said answer should stand as a denial of the averments of her amended complaint. In their said answer, in addition to its denials, the defendants set up affirmatively that the plaintiff had herself violated the said building restrictions in respect to the distance which her own structure stood with relation to the property line; and they further averred that for a long time prior to the commencement of actual work in the construction of their said building the plaintiff had known what its character and outlines were to be, and had made no objection thereto, but, on the contrary, had by her acts and conduct led said defendants to believe that no objection would be made by her to said structure, and that, having stood by and seen the said defendants prepare for and begin the erection of their said building without objection, she was estopped to claim that it was in violation of said building restrictions, or that she or her property would be in any way injured or damaged thereby. The cause proceeded to trial upon the issues thus framed. Upon the question of the damage to the plaintiff's property the plaintiff and her witnesses testified that it would be damaged in the amount claimed. On the other hand, the defendants and their witnesses testified that no damage had been or would be sustained by plaintiff through the erection of the defendants' structure. The fact that said structure was in some respects in violation of the aforesaid building restrictions seems to have been established, but there was also some quite direct evidence that the plaintiff's building was, as to its distance from the property line, in violation of said restrictions. At the conclusion of the trial the trial judge made some remarks upon the state of the evidence as to these several matters, but later filed his findings and decision, in which he awarded the plaintiff damages in the sum of $200. Judgment was entered accordingly, and it is from this judgment that the plaintiff appeals.

[1, 2] Her sole contention is that too small an amount of damages has been awarded to her. In making this contention she relies mainly upon the remarks made by the court at the conclusion of the trial as indicating that he considered the amount of actual damage to her property to be much larger than that which he finally awarded to her. But statements by the trial judge of the character made during the progress of the case are of little or no value to this court in determining whether its final conclusion as embodied in its findings and judgment is correct. Upon the evidence in this case the court might well have found that the plaintiff had suffered no damage whatever, for it was so testified by several witnesses; or the court might have found that the plaintiff's damage amounted to the full sum of $1,000, which she claimed and to which certain of her witnesses had testified. Between these two limits the court had discretion, in view of the conflicting evidence, to determine as to the plaintiff's actual damage, and there is nothing before us to indicate that he abused that discretion. With his conclusions and judgment, therefore, we cannot interfere. It may be stated incidentally that the respondent has filed no brief upon this appeal, and that we have thus been without the aid to which we were entitled in the examination of the record upon appeal. Notwithstanding this, we have carefully examined the record before us, and have arrived at the conclusion that there is no merit in this appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

STREET et al. v. UPTON.

(L. A. 5587.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 18, 1918.)

WILLS ⊂=386—CONTEST—QUESTION OF FACT.

The question of undue influence in a will contest is peculiarly one of fact for the trial court.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rivis, Judge.

Proceeding by Julia Street Upton against Webster E. Street and others to probate the will of Mary E. Street, deceased. From an order dismissing the contest and probating the will, contestants appeal. Affirmed.

Bernard Potter, Lynden Bowring, and J. O. Downing, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

N. P. Moerdyke, George R. Davis, and James E. Shelton, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from an order dismissing a will contest and probating a will. The will was contested upon the ground that the same was procured by undue influence. The court tried the case without a jury, and determined the issues adversely to the contestant, and found that there was no undue influence. Appellant attacks this finding, claiming that under the undisputed evidence there was a clear case of undue influence as a matter of law.

With this contention we cannot agree. The testatrix was of sound mind, and the question of whether or not the influence brought to bear upon her was so overpowering as to constitute undue influence was peculiarly a question of fact to be determined by the trial court. No case has been called to our attention in which the judgment of a trial court to the effect that there was no undue influence has been overturned by an appellate court upon the theory that undue influence was established as a matter of law. It is unnecessary to detail the evidence presented for our consideration. It is sufficient to say that there was abundant evidence to justify the conclusion of the trial court that at the time the will was executed the testatrix was not acting under the undue influence of the respondent Julia Street Upton.

Judgment affirmed.

2. PARTNERSHIP ⊂=311(5)—DISSOLUTION AND SETTLEMENT—RESCISSION—EFFECT.

Where partnership was dissolved before contract of settlement was made between former partners, transactions being distinct, rescission by one partner on ground of fraud in contract of settlement did not involve re-establishment of status quo of former partners as such.

3. PARTNERSHIP ⊂=344 — ACCOUNTING — ACTION—TIME FOR JUDGMENT.

Though in general judgment may not be entered in partner's suit for accounting until all assets have been marshaled to pay firm liabilities, where there are no liabilities to settle except as between partners, such course is not necessary, and personal judgment can be rendered against a partner before firm property has been sold and liabilities paid.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=907(4)—PRESUMPTIONS FAVORING COURT BELOW—SUPPORT OF FINDINGS.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by S. Shuken and wife against H. Cohen and the Traders' Bank of Los Angeles. From judgment for plaintiffs on their bill, and against defendant Cohen on his cross-complaint, the latter appeals. Affirmed.

Veitch & Richardson and Harry Ellis Dean, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Baird, Gerecht & Chambers, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. H. Cohen, one of the defendants, appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs on their bill in equity, and against said Cohen on his action, by way of cross-complaint, for recovery on six promissory notes for $500 each. The other defendant made default; so the action as to the Traders' Bank of Los Angeles (a corporation) need not be considered herein.

The transcript consists of the judgment roll alone. There is no bill of exceptions, and it does not appear that any party demurred to any of the pleadings. Before judgment the plaintiffs were permitted to file certain amendments to their complaint to make it conform to the proofs. These amendments were duly noticed and served on appellant's attorneys, but no objection of any kind was made to them. The court found that in July, 1914, S. Shuken and H. Cohen entered into a copartnership, according to a written agreement, by which they were to carry on the business of buying, selling, and dealing in junk; that Shuken invested in the copartnership $7,458.13 and Cohen $1,588.76; that they continued the conduct of the business until December 23, 1914, when they mutually agreed to dissolve the partnership; that prior to the said date Cohen wrongfully took possession of certain books of account and papers belonging to the copartnership and wrongfully denied Shuken access to them until after December 29, 1914; that between December 23 and December 29, 1914, Cohen, personally and assisted by one Joe Margolis, represented to Shuken and his wife that said Shuken had stolen certain of the firm's moneys, and that Cohen and Margolis could prove that fact by the books and papers in their possession, and that Shuken was guilty of a felony. It was also found that Cohen and Margolis demanded, then and there, that Shuken deliver to Cohen certain specified personal property used in the business and $4,000 in money, or that Shuken should retire from the copartnership, accepting as his share therein $4,000. It was also found that Cohen and Margolis threatened that if Shuken did not comply with their demand they would cause his arrest and imprisonment. According to the findings it appears that plaintiffs, defendant Cohen, Margolis, and one Lyons, are Russian Jews; that Shuken is not conversant with the English language and is ignorant of the laws of this state concerning crimes and their punishments; that Shuken's mental powers, owing to an injury to his head, had been impaired; that Margolis represented that he was about to be appointed to a position in the office of the district attorney, and would have great power and influence in prosecuting offenses; that said Lyons (who was a law student during a part of said period from December 23 to December 29, 1914) counseled and advised Cohen, and was present at some of the conversations between Shuken and Cohen and Margolis; that the Shukens had great confidence in Margolis and in his and Lyons' influence with the state and county officials; that S. Shuken was not guilty of any crime, but, by reason of the threats and statements of Cohen and Margolis, consented to the division of the copartnership property upon the demanded terms, and executed a certain writing and delivered to Cohen a team of horses, wagon, and harness, $500 in cash, one-half of the hay belonging to the copartnership, and signed and delivered seven promissory notes, each for $500, payable to Cohen. The court found that in parting with his property Shuken acted under the compulsion of menace and undue influence amounting to fraud upon him. The notes were put in the Traders' Bank (as the court finds), and one of them was paid early in 1915. There were also findings to the effect that on December 23, 1914, Shuken's total net investment in the copartnership was $5,358.13 (he having already been repaid $2,100), and Cohen's was $1,588.76, making the total investment at the time of the dissolution $6,946.89; the net assets were $6,859.77—showing a net loss of $87.12, of which $43.56 was chargeable to each partner. Accordingly it was found that at all times from December 23 to December 29, 1914, the partners were entitled upon dissolution of the copartnership to the following amounts: Cohen to $1,545.20, of which he has received $1,000 in cash, and horses, etc., worth $400, leaving a balance due him of $145.20. It was also found that since December 29, 1914, Shuken and Cohen have engaged separately in business, using a part of the property formerly belonging to the copartnership, and that by reason of these facts it was impossible to make an inventory of the property which belonged to the copartnership at the time of its dissolution, and that all the liabilities of the copartnership up to December 29, 1914, amounting to $4,278.13, had been paid by plaintiff.

As conclusions of law which were carried into the judgment the court determined that the copartnership ceased to exist on the 23d of December, 1914; that Cohen was entitled to receive from Shuken $145.20, and the latter was entitled to retain all the other property formerly owned by the firm; that the certain instrument made December 29, 1914, purporting to provide for a dissolution of the copartnership, is void and of no effect; that the six promissory notes, each for $500, are void and must be delivered for cancellation; and that plaintiffs recover costs from appellant.

[1, 2] Appellant endeavors to make the point that the complaint was insufficient because it failed to aver that before the commencement of the action plaintiffs restored him to his former rights as a partner. Even if appellant, who did not demur to the pleading nor specify error on account of the supposed infirmity of the complaint, were in a position to set up this objection, nevertheless this criticism of the pleading is without force. By the amended pleading the date of dissolution was averred as of a time prior to the contract of settlement. The dissolution and the other contract were distinct transactions. Therefore the rescission of the latter did not involve a re-establishment of the status quo of the contracting parties as partners.

[3] It is also contended that the court had no power to render a personal judgment against one of the partners until the partnership property had been converted into money and the liabilities paid, as far as possible, from said fund, citing Clark v. Hewitt, 136 Cal. 77, 68 Pac. 303; Rassaert v. Mensch, 17 Cal. App. 637, 120 Pac. 1072. The cited cases really support the contention of counsel for respondents. While those authorities hold that in general a judgment may not be entered against a partner in a suit for an accounting until all of the assets have been marshaled and made to bear the burden of the copartnership liabilities, in cases where there are no liabilities to settle except as between the partners themselves, such course is not necessary. In Harper v. Lamping, 33 Cal. 641, it was held that in proper cases property of the copartnership may be distributed in kind.

[4, 5] There is no force in the contention that the findings do not sustain the complaint or the amended complaint. No part of the evidence except certain of the exhibits appears in the transcript; so we must assume that all of the findings are supported by ample proof. The findings are in substantial accordance with the pleadings as amended. In this behalf it is asserted that there could be no dissolution without a division of the assets or some arrangement for such division, and that therefore the finding that dissolution did occur may not stand. But dissolution may be had by retirement of one of the partners (Ross v. Cornell, 45 Cal. 133), or by agreement of partners (Wagner v. Wagner, 50 Cal. 76). The court found that the partnership was dissolved by mutual agreement December 23, 1914, and this is in strict accord with the pleading to which appellant did not demur.

Next it is asserted that the complaint does not plead facts sufficient to constitute duress operating upon Shuken in such manner as to compel him to sign the alleged unconscionable agreement. Further criticism is directed against the pleading of Shuken's partial disability by reason of an accident to his head. But, having failed to raise these objections by special demurrer, appellant may not do so now. Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. 383, 92 Pac. 1011.

No other alleged errors require discussion. The judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte BLOIS. (Cr. 2184.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃625—INSPECTION OF LAUNDRIES—FEES—UNREASONABLENESS.

A city ordinance requiring inspection by a health inspector of laundries at least once a month, and providing for an inspection fee of $3 for each inspection and a mileage fee of 30 cents per mile both ways, was unreasonable in the mileage charge.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃589—POLICE POWER—EXTRATERRITORIAL POWERS.

A municipality may, under its police powers, exercise extraterritorial powers, when the possession and exercise of such powers are essential to the proper conduct of the affairs of the municipality, even though the exercise of such power would impose an added burden as respecting the individuals affected.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊂⊃205(7) — PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES — INSPECTION OF LAUNDRIES.

A city ordinance requiring the health department to inspect laundries at least once a month, and providing for an inspection fee of $3 and a mileage fee of 30 cents per mile both ways was unconstitutional, under Const. art. 1, § 21, forbidding special privileges and immunities as applying to a laundry situated 20 miles from town; the mileage fees constituting a discrimination in favor of domestic laundries.

In Bank.

Petition by J. B. Blois for writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner discharged.

H. A. Gabriel, of San Jose, for petitioner.

McWilliams & Hatfield, of San Jose, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. The petitioner applied for a writ of habeas corpus, setting forth his conviction in the police court of the city of Palo Alto for the alleged violation of the provisions of an ordinance of said city entitled:

"An ordinance for the protection of the health of the people of the city of Palo Alto, providing for the inspection by the health officer of the city of Palo Alto of laundries and other establishments of like character."

The petitioner, whose laundry establishment is in the city of San Jose, undertook to solicit laundry work in Palo Alto without first procuring a license so to do, as required by the terms of said ordinance, and his arrest and conviction followed. He seeks his release by this writ upon the ground that said ordinance is invalid for the reason that the charges therein provided to be paid to the health officer of Palo Alto for inspection, and for mileage in going to and coming from the place or places where such inspection is to be made, are unreasonable, harsh, discriminatory, oppressive, and prohibitory, and hence in violation of the personal and property rights of the petitioner as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and of the state of California. The particular portion of the ordinance in question, which the petitioner assails by this writ, is to be found in section 2 thereof, which reads as follows:

"The health officer of the city of Palo Alto is hereby authorized to charge a fee for such inspection which shall be in the sum of three ($3.00) dollars for the time consumed by him in making said inspection, together with mileage at the rate of thirty (30) cents per mile and for each mile actually traveled by him from his said office in Palo Alto to the place where such inspection is to be made and return. Said inspection is to be made at least once every month, and no such permit or license shall be issued for a longer period of time than one (1) month.

"The board of public safety shall not issue any permit or license hereunder until all fees due hereunder for inspecting the plant or place of laundering or washing of the laundry or other establishment at which the person applying for such permit or license proposes to have such laundering or washing done, are paid. All fees and mileage shall be paid into the general fund for the use of the board of public safety."

Upon the hearing and in the briefs which followed the petitioner's assault upon these provisions of the ordinance was chiefly directed against that portion thereof providing for the mileage to be paid the inspector for traveling to and from the place of location of the laundry, which by the terms of the ordinance was to be visited at least once a month in the course of his required inspection. The mileage charge thus objected to is 30 cents a mile both ways, which, in the case of the petitioner, amounted to the sum of not less than $12 per month, exclusive of the stated fee of $3 for the inspection itself. These mileage and inspection charges were to be paid into the general fund of the city treasury for the use of the board of public safety. The effect of these mileage and inspection charges, the petitioner contends, is to require of him a gross fee for the privilege of soliciting laundry work in the city of Palo Alto of at least $15 monthly, as compared with the charge of $3 required of all proprietors of laundries located within the said city. It is this which constitutes the discrimination of which the petitioner complains and it is the fact that these inspections, with the consequent fee and mileage charge, may be repeated as often in each month as the inspector chooses to make them, which, according to the petitioner's contention, renders the ordinance not only obviously and harshly discriminative in favor of local laundries, but also practically prohibitive upon the solicitation of laundry work by outside laundries within said city. The distance from Palo Alto to San Jose, where the petitioner's laundry is located, is conceded to be about 20 miles. It is a matter of public knowledge that between these two cities there are two railway systems whose established passenger rates are not to exceed 3 cents per mile, and which afford opportunities for hourly travel between them, and that there is also a motorcar service of one or more companies giving even more frequent service and at somewhat lower rates.

[1] The ordinance, in providing for a mileage rate of 30 cents per mile both ways by the inspector, thus imposes upon the laundry owner in San Jose a mileage fee of $12 for the traveling expenses of the inspector, for which same mileage of travel by the same means of transportation the traveling public pays not to exceed $1.20, thus making the health inspector's mileage fees 10 times that which he would be required to pay for his transportation between said cities by the ordinary means of travel. A further comparison of these mileage rates with those chargeable by other public officers under the state law is enlightening. Sheriffs are allowed mileage at the rate of 15 cents per mile one way when travel can be made by rail. Pol. Code, § 4300b. Constables are allowed mileage at the rate of 25 cents one way in their township, 15 cents out of their township, but in the county, and 5 cents both ways out of the county. Pol. Code, § 4300d. Jurors are allowed 15 cents per mile one way. Pol. Code, § 4300f. Witnesses are allowed 10 cents per mile one way. Pol. Code, § 4300g. It will thus be seen that the mileage charge permitted to the health inspector under this ordinance is not only out of all proportion to the actual cost of ordinary travel in that region, but is also so far in excess of that allowed by the state laws to other public officials as to compel the conclusion that it was imposed for other purposes than that merely of a mileage fee. The respondent perceives this and seeks to meet it by urging that the time occupied by the health inspector in travel to and from the place of inspection is to be taken into account in determining the reasonableness of the charge. There is some force in this argument, but not enough to justify the charge, since the fee allowed the inspector for making the inspection is to be taken as ample compensation for the time actually consumed in making it, and the time occupied in going to and fro between the two cities, as a matter of common knowledge, by train or bus is less than an hour each way, for which the imposition of a charge of $10 or more would be clearly exorbitant.

[2] The source of the power of municipalities to enact ordinances of the general character of that here under review is to be found in article 11, § 11, of the state Constitution, reading as follows:

"Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws."

In the exercise of the powers thus conferred the municipality is limited by the terms of article 1, § 21, of the Constitution, which provides:

"No special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted which may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the Legislature, nor shall any citizen, or class of citizens, be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens."

This latter section of the Constitution has been given direct application to statutes and ordinances which have been enacted and sought to be enforced either by the state or by political subdivisions thereof, and in which attempts have been made to discriminate in favor of or against particular persons or classes of persons as to whom no reasonable basis of discrimination can be seen to exist, and in all such cases the courts of this state have uniformly held such attempted legislation to be void. Ex parte Frank, 52 Cal. 606, 28 Am. Rep. 642; In re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 77 Pac. 180; Ex parte Dickey, 144 Cal. 234, 77 Pac. 924, 66 L. R. A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82; Ex parte Hayden, 147 Cal. 649, 82 Pac. 315, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 184, 109 Am. St. Rep. 183; Ex parte Foley, 172 Cal. 744, 158 Pac. 1034, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 180; In re Hines, 33 Cal. App. 45, 164 Pac. 339.

The respondent herein concedes the force and effect of the foregoing decisions as applied to statutes and ordinances which are in the nature of revenue measures, but contends that they are not to be given full application to ordinances enacted under the health and police powers of municipalities, and which have for their purpose the regulation of those classes of business which are peculiarly within the range of these powers. The respondent also insists that in relation to such establishments as laundries, dairies, bakeries, and like institutions located outside of municipalities, but distributing commodities within them, which, if not sanitary in the methods of their creation or manipulation, might be the means of spreading infection or disease, the municipality as a proper health precaution may exercise the right of inspection of such establishments wherever located, with the consequent right of making a reasonable charge for the fees and mileage of its inspector, and that ordinances thus providing for such extraterritorial inspection of such institutions should be sustained even though the reasonable cost of such inspection when imposed upon such institutions lying at some considerable distance from the municipality itself would result in placing an added burden upon these inspected places as a condition of their doing business within it, depending as to its amount upon their distance from the municipality adopting such an ordinance as a health measure.

We are disposed to agree with this contention to the extent above indicated, and to concede that municipalities may exercise certain extraterritorial powers when the possession and exercise of such powers are essential to the proper conduct of the affairs of the municipality. As, for example, this court has held that a municipality has power to construct and maintain a system of waterworks outside of its boundaries for the supply of its inhabitants with water, and that it might even go to the extent of supplying water to persons living without the limits of such municipality. So. Pasadena v. So. Pasadena Canal Co., 152 Cal. 579, 93 Pac. 490. So, also, it has been held that a city, in order to protect the health and property of its citizens from the effects of overflowing of a stream passing through such city, might go beyond the corporate limits and construct a ditch for the diversion of such overflow waters. Wilson v. Boise City, 6 Idaho, 391, 55 Pac. 887. Again, with more immediate application to the case in hand it has been decided that a city council might properly pass an ordinance providing for the inspection of dairies and dairy herds outside of the city, but from which it was proposed to supply milk to its inhabitants. State v. Nelson, 66 Minn. 166, 68 N. W. 1066, 34 L. R. A. 318, 61 Am. St. Rep. 399. In none of these cases, however, has the question as to the right or reasonableness of fees or mileage charges for the making of such inspections as are provided for in ordinances of the kind here under review been involved, nor has our attention been called by the respondent to any case where such charges, so clearly discriminative as those involved in the case at bar, have been sustained.

The strongest reliance of the respondent is upon the case of County of Plumas v. Wheeler, 149 Cal. 758, 87 Pac. 909, involving the validity of an ordinance exacting a license fee for conducting the business of raising and pasturing sheep in Plumas county; the license fee charged being 10 cents for each sheep so raised or pastured. In that case, however, no question of discrimination arose and this court very properly held that it could not be determined from the face of the ordinance itself that the charge imposed was so clearly excessive or grossly disproportionate to the expense incurred by the county in the regulation of the business affected as to render the enactment void upon its face. The distinction between that case and the case at bar consists in the fact that no question of discrimination between persons or places of business was involved in the former case, and also in the fact that the ordinance under review in that case did not upon its face furnish any standard by which the reasonableness or unreasonableness of its charges could be determined. In the instant case both of these elements are present. The petitioner, as the representative of a laundry establishment located at San Jose, is required to pay for the permit to solicit washing for his laundry a sum five times as great as that charged the solicitor for a local establishment. This increase over the local charge is made up of mileage fees which are to be charged at a rate not only tenfold greater than the known cost of travel by the usual modes of transportation between the two cities, but that is also more than four times the official mileage fees permitted to be charged by state, county and township officers.

[3] The conclusion is irresistible that the mileage fees to be exacted for the inspection of laundries outside the limits of Palo Alto are unreasonable in amount, measured by any of the known standards for determining the reasonableness of charges of like character, and that since they are to be incurred, charged and collected regularly and at least once a month from the representatives of laundries located elsewhere than within the municipality, but seeking to collect and distribute washing within its limits, the imposition of an exorbitant charge works a substantial discrimination as between nonresident and local establishments, each entitled to solicit and do business within said municipality upon an equal basis, such as is forbidden by the express terms of the Constitution, to which reference has above been made.

These provisions of the ordinance, being inseparable from the main body thereof, it follows that the ordinance is invalid and hence that the petitioner is entitled to his discharge. So ordered.

PRICE v. BEKINS VAN & STORAGE CO.
(L. A. 4557.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1052(7)—TRIAL ⊂=365 (1)—HARMLESS ERROR—GENERAL VERDICT.

A general verdict for plaintiff imports a finding in his favor on all averments of complaint material to his recovery; and where evidence supporting one cause of action was untainted, error in the admission of evidence as to another cause of action was immaterial.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Charles R. Price against the Bekins Van & Storage Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Collier & Clark, Oliver O. Clark, George M. Pierson, and Claud B. Andrews, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Goudge, Williams, Chandler & Hughes and Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment and an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The suit was for the value of goods destroyed by a fire, which consumed defendant's warehouse, in which plaintiff's property was stored. The amended complaint was in two counts. In the first it was alleged that defendant falsely represented to plaintiff that his goods, placed in storage with defendant, were in a fireproof building customarily guarded by watchmen, night and day, to prevent loss by fire. It was also averred that, relying upon these representations, plaintiff left his property in defendant's custody and agreed to pay a certain monthly charge to defendant for such storage. The second count contains a statement of a cause of action for conversion.

Appellant contends that the court erred in admitting evidence of the fact that certain other warehousemen in Los Angeles employed watchmen at their warehouses, and in instructing the jury that such evidence was admissible and might be considered by the jurors in arriving at their verdict as to what defendant should have done to protect plaintiff's goods.

Respondent insists that the first cause of action was sustained by evidence admittedly free from error; that the issue of negligence was raised by defendant in its answer to the pleading of the second cause of action, wherein said defendant alleged that the loss by fire was without fault on its part; and that, even if it should be conceded for the purpose of argument that general custom among ordinarily careful warehousemen may not be proven by the method followed by plaintiff, nevertheless the verdict being sustained by ample evidence, free from error in its introduction, establishing the validity of the first cause of action, the error, if any, is immaterial.

This contention must be upheld. A general verdict for plaintiff imports a finding in his favor on all the averments of the complaint material to his recovery. Tremble v. Tuman, 175 Cal. 696, 167 Pac. 142. In this case it is conceded that the first cause of action was supported by a showing which was untainted by error under the authorities. Kirstein v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 27 Cal. App. 586, 150 Pac. 999; Lynch v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 31 Cal. App. 68, 159 Pac. 822; Laux v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 169 Pac. 1012; Hood v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 172 Pac. 594. It therefore becomes immaterial whether or not the evidence relative to the issue of negligence in the second count was erroneously admitted, and whether or not the instruction thereon was correct.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

In re CLOVER'S ESTATE.
CLOVER v. HATHAWAY et al.
(L. A. 5733.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂=278(2) — SEPARATION CONTRACT—VALIDITY.

A contract reciting, "Whereas the said parties hereto have now determined between themselves that such relationship of husband and wife cannot be continued for any longer period of time to the mutual satisfaction of either of said parties hereto, and other reasons existing at this time by reason of which the said parties cannot live together in the relationship of husband and wife, with the degree of happiness that each of said parties deem should exist in such relationship, and," followed by an agreement of separation and division of property is not void as against public policy, under Civ. Code, § 159.

2. EVIDENCE ⊂=271(16) — SELF-SERVING DECLARATION—DECLARATIONS OF DECEDENT.

In a proceeding for appointment of administrator, where wife claimed that there was a reconciliation after a separation agreement, a declaration of deceased, a short time before the alleged reconciliation, that he did not want to have anything to do with his wife, was admissible for purpose of showing decedent's attitude, going to the probability of such reconciliation, and was not self-serving.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Melvin Clover, deceased. From an order appointing Lewis P. Hathaway and Chester Clover administrators, Nellie J. Clover appeals. Affirmed.

Argabrite & Drapeau, of Ventura, for appellant.

Orr & Gardner and Bowker & Sheridan, all of Ventura, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from an order appointing respondents administrators of the estate of the deceased, who was the husband of Nellie J. Clover, appellant. The refusal of letters of administration to the widow of the deceased was based upon an agreement of separation entered into between them in May, 1913, six months after their marriage. Appellant concedes that if the agreement of separation is valid and binding, she is not entitled to letters of administration, but claims that it is invalid, as against public policy, and if valid in the first instance, that it has been abrogated by reason of a reconciliation between the parties.

[1] Her contention that the separation agreement is void is based upon the proposition that the contract undertook to do more than merely agree to a separation. The recitals in said contract are made the basis of this claim, and are as follows:

"Whereas the said parties hereto have now determined between themselves that such relationship of husband and wife cannot be continued for any longer period of time to the mutual satisfaction of either of said parties hereto, and other reasons existing at this time by reason of which the said parties cannot live together in the relationship of husband and wife with the degree of happiness, respect, and esteem that each of said parties deem should exist in such relationship; and—"

This recital contains no contract between the parties in violation of the law. It is merely stated as a basis for the agreement which follows for a separation and division of their property and an adjustment of their future property rights. Such a contract is expressly authorized by section 159 of the Civil Code. With reference to the claim of reconciliation between the parties, it is sufficient to say that the fact of reconciliation depends upon the truth of appellant's testimony, and the trial court found against the appellant. We are not, therefore, required to determine whether or not such testimony, if true, would establish a reconciliation, nor whether such reconciliation, if established, would so far abrogate the agreement between the parties as to entitle the appellant to administer upon the estate of the deceased.

[2] Appellant claims that error was committed on the trial of the case by overruling her objections to the testimony of a witness as to declarations made by the deceased prior to the alleged reconciliation. On December 1st the witness testified that the deceased said concerning his wife, "He told me he wished she wouldn't come any more, and again at the same time he did not want to have anything to do with her, and she was bothering him the same as she did before they were married." This declaration was admissible solely for the purpose of showing the attitude of the decedent a short time before the reconciliation, alleged to have occurred about December 1st. It went to the probability of such reconciliation and comes within the principle announced in Estate of Walker, 168 Pac. 689, 693, where it was said:

"The objection that the trial court erred in permitting evidence of the conduct of Walker and his wife toward each other and of declarations connected with such conduct goes more to the weight thereof than to its competency. * * * We cannot say that such evidence was erroneously admitted."

These declarations were in no sense self-serving declarations. The case of Carter v. Younger, 123 Ark. 266, 185 S. W. 435, was a case where declarations of the decedent, made after the alleged agreement of reconciliation, were received in evidence as proof that no such reconciliation had occurred, but this case has no application to the declarations admitted in the instant case.

Order affirmed.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Earl Bowen and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Bowen & Harris, against Herman Desser, sometimes known as H. Desser, and others, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying motion for new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Frank L. Borden, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles M. Ackerman, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiffs sued to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Defendants answered, and filed a cross-complaint. Judgment was in favor of defendants. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The court found that the plaintiffs, who are copartners, entered into a contract to furnish to one A. E. Dean, for the sum of $1,350, certain work and the materials to be used in the erection of a building on the property of defendant H. Desser, in the county of Los Angeles. The following facts were also found: This sum of $1,350 has been paid by Desser to plaintiffs. On April 29, 1914, Desser entered into a contract with Dean for the erection of a building at a cost of $4,500. Of this sum $3,500 was to be paid in specified amounts as the building should progress, and the balance, when the building should be completed and accepted. To secure the faithful performance of the said contract, Dean, as principal, and Bowen and Harris, as sureties, entered into another written contract or bond in the sum of $2,250 indemnifying Desser from loss. Both contracts were duly filed for record. Dean, the contractor, began the erection of the building, and proceeded until it was nearly completed when, owing to business reverses, he substituted Bowen and Harris as his agents, and they caused the building to be erected according to the plans and specifications. Upon receipt of orders from Dean, payments due him were made by Desser directly to Bowen and Harris, who prior to the completion of the building, had thus received $3,500, leaving $1,000 in the hands of the owner of the land. Upon the completion of the building Dean and his successors and agents, Bowen and Harris, failed to release and cancel all claims for material and labor. As a consequence, Desser was compelled to pay claims amounting to more than $1,000, the amount left in his possession for the completion of the building.

[1] The first contention of appellants is that the findings are unsupported by the evidence. In this behalf it is contended that there was no contradiction of the testimony of Mr. Harris to the effect that Dean promised to pay the reasonable value of all materials furnished. There was, however, testimony to the effect that plaintiffs entered into an express contract with Dean, after making an estimate based upon the plans for the building, by which they promised to furnish all the necessary material for $1,350. Mr. Dean testified:

"In the beginning I took the plans to Mr. Harris and asked him to figure up the lumber—what he would furnish the lumber and the roof and the flooring to build that flat, and he said, 'Very well.' He measured, he figured it up, and I went back, and he showed me it figured on an estimate sheet, and said he would finish the cement and roof, and everything that was necessary to build the house as specified therein in the bill, for $1,350; and, of course, I took that, and I made my bid on the house—I took that as the price for the material, and I signed up the building contract with that understanding that I was to have that material furnished at that price."

This testimony, if believed by the court, justified the finding which plaintiffs attack as unsupported. It also leads to the conclusion that the claim of lien filed by plaintiffs as a preliminary to this action did not truly set forth the transaction between the contractor and the materialmen. Wilson v. Nugent, 125 Cal. 280, 57 Pac. 1008.

[2] The complaint averred that the contractor agreed to pay the reasonable value of the materials, which was alleged to be $1,712.41. The answer, as originally drawn, admitted that the contractor did agree to pay the reasonable value of the materials, but denied that they were worth more than $1,350. On these pleadings the court found that Dean did agree to pay the sum of $1,350 on an express contract. Subsequently the court permitted an amendment to the answer, based upon the theory of an express contract, and eliminating the admission that the "reasonable value" was the measure of the price to be paid. Appellants insist that they were deprived by this ruling of substantial rights. It appears that the counsel for defendants unsuccessfully moved, during the trial, for permission to make this very change in their pleading, by which it would appear that plaintiffs had sold the material and promised to perform certain labor at an agreed price of $1,350, and not upon contract to pay the reasonable market value thereof. The court announced that when, from the proof of facts at the trial, it should appear that such amendment ought to be made, it would be permitted. The court, in summing up the evidence, not only found upon the express agreement, but also against plaintiffs upon their allegation regarding an agreement to pay a reasonable market value. Counsel for defendants inadvertently failed to renew his motion for leave to file an amendment. The reserved ruling admitting testimony relative to an express agreement, subject to a subsequent determination by the court regarding the motion of defendants for leave to amend the answer, was notice to plaintiffs that they might be called upon to meet that issue. Such notice became a certainty when the court, in summing up, indicated an agreement with defendants in their contention that the contract was not based upon a "reasonable value" of the materials, but upon an express agreement as to price. The court made the order ex parte, about three weeks after the entry of judgment. Subsequently there was a hearing, on due notice, of a motion by plaintiffs to vacate said order. Their motion was denied, and they appeal from the order of denial.

We are of the opinion that the amendment was merely to bring the pleadings in harmony with the proof and findings, and was without material prejudice to plaintiffs. The issues actually tried, and the ones, too, upon which the court had made findings, were not changed by the amendment. This is a case in which the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution are clearly applicable.

[3] It appears that Dean owed plaintiffs $264.54 upon some transaction not connected with the Desser contract. When plaintiffs received the $3,500 from Desser, they applied a portion of it to the payment of this indebtedness. Clearly, they had no right so to do. Harris received the money for his firm and for himself and his coguarantor for application to the building contract between Dean and Desser, which he had undertaken to carry out for the former. Desser was not responsible for any old debts of his contractor. Clearly, application of this money to the payment of the early indebtedness of the contractor to the materialmen was unauthorized.

No other assignments of error require analysis.

The judgment and orders are affirmed.

ALLRED v. PIONEER TRUCK CO.
(L. A. 4483.)

1. NEGLIGENCE ⟨⟩134(3) — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

In action for death of a boy who, in attempting to climb on projecting end of brake-beam on side of defendant's furniture van or by slipping upon wet pavement, fell in front of rear wheel, receiving the injuries which caused his death, evidence, when construed most strongly in favor of plaintiff, held insufficient to show neglect of duty on the part of defendant.

2. NEGLIGENCE ⟨⟩25 — VAN — PRECAUTIONS AS TO CHILDREN.

Failure of defendant to place drivers of its furniture van in a position where they could at all times see that small boys did not find lodgment upon parts of van or come near enough to be endangered did not constitute negligence.

3. NEGLIGENCE ⟨⟩23(1)—TURNTABLE DOCTRINE—APPLICABILITY.

The principle applicable "to turntable cases" is not to be extended so as to include vehicles in common and everyday use on city streets.

4. EVIDENCE ⟨⟩14—HABITS OF BOYS.

It is a matter of common knowledge that boys are prone to steal rides on all sorts of vehicles.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by May Allred against the Pioneer Truck Company. From judgment for defendant and an order denying motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. L. Richardson, of San Diego, for appellant.

A. H. Sweet, Morganstern, McGee, Henning & Hendee, and Sweet, Stearns & Forward, all of San Diego, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. In this action plaintiff sought to recover damages for the death of her minor son, Melvin Allred, a boy nine years of age, which she alleged occurred as a result of defendant's negligence.

At the close of plaintiff's evidence, the court granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit. In accordance therewith, judgment in favor of defendant was entered, from which, and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, she prosecutes this appeal.

At the time of the accident, an employé of defendant was driving a furniture van, drawn by three horses, along Broadway, in the city of San Diego. As constructed, this van was an inclosed box some 12 or 15 feet in length, 6 feet high, and 5 feet in width, with a tail or end gate 3 feet wide, suspended by chains so that the outer edge was but 2 feet 8 inches above the surface of the street. The van was filled with furniture, by reason of which neither the driver nor the assistant with him, occupying the front seat of the vehicle, could see the end gate upon which, unknown to them, three or four boys were riding. Melvin Allred and another lad were on their way to school, and seeing these boys on the end gate they ran to the vehicle and his companion climbed upon the end gate. Young Allred, however, ran around the side of the wagon, and, either in attempting to climb on the projecting end of the brake beam or by slipping upon the wet asphaltum pavement, fell in front of the hind wheel, receiving injuries which caused his death. There was also evidence that defendant, in conducting its business, operated trucks, the platforms of which, being uninclosed and surrounded by movable stakes, were low hung, thus rendering them easy of access and upon which theretofore, on occasions, small boys had, with the consent of those in charge, been permitted to ride along the streets. Also, that on one or two prior occasions boys had ridden on the tail gates of defendant's furniture vans.

[1] Construing the evidence thus summarized most strongly in favor of plaintiff, we are clearly of the opinion that it is insufficient to establish any neglect of duty on the part of the defendant towards the deceased.

The contention of appellant is that defendant was not only guilty of negligence in that it had theretofore on occasions permitted boys to ride upon its low-hung trucks, but that they left the end gate of the furniture van down, thus inducing boys to climb thereon, constituting negligence. "It was the duty of defendant," says counsel for plaintiff, "to place its men in a position where they could at all times inspect all parts of the vehicle it was operating, and its failure to do so was negligence."

[2] The proposition, upon the facts shown in the instant case, find no support in the authorities cited. Very few vehicles operated on highways are so constructed that boys cannot climb upon them or some parts thereof, and the proposition advanced, carried to its logical conclusion, would mean that the driver of an automobile or other vehicle whose duty requires him to observe the road along which he is traveling and attend to his motive power must be Argus-eyed or accompanied by outriders charged with the duty of seeing that small boys do not find lodgment upon the running boards or other parts of the vehicle, or approach a position of danger where they may, as in this case, fall under a wheel. The law does not impose such duty on one lawfully operating a vehicle along a public street. Hebard v. Mabie, 98 Ill. App. 543; Bishop v. Union Railroad Co., 14 R. I. 314, 51 Am. Rep. 386; Hestonville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Connell, 88 Pa. 520, 32 Am. Rep. 472.

[3] The facts involved in the case of Cahill v. Stone, 153 Cal. 571, 96 Pac. 84, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094, upon which appellant so largely relies, brought it within a line of decisions known as the "turntable cases," the principle applicable to which, however, is not to be extended so as to include vehicles in common and everyday use on city streets. Mayfield Water & L. Co. v. Webb, 129 Ky. 395, 111 S. W. 712, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 179, 130 Am. St. Rep. 469; Underwood v. Western A. R. Co., 105 Ga. 48, 31 S. E. 123.

[4] It is a matter of common knowledge that boys are prone to steal rides on all sorts of vehicles propelled along the streets, but it would be an intolerable rule that imposed upon the owner of vehicles the duty of employing guards to keep boys so inclined to trespass, at a safe distance therefrom. Foster-Herbert, etc., Co. v. Pugh, 115 Tenn. 688, 91 S. W. 199, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804, 112 Am. St. Rep. 881. Hence, as to deceased, negligence cannot be imputed to defendant merely because other boys at the time, but without its knowledge or consent, were attempting to ride or riding on the end gate constituting a part of the floor of the furniture van wherein to load and transport goods. Moreover, the injury to the lad was not caused by his climbing, or attempting to climb, on the end gate, but, as stated, due to his running to the side of the vehicle, where he fell in front of the hind wheel. Whether attracted to the wagon by the presence of the boys or the novelty of the vehicle's construction, the unfortunate accident was one for which defendant was not liable on account of negligence.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

ROSENHEIM v. HOWZE et al. (L. A. 4569.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 20, 1918.)

CONTRACTS ⊜212(1)—ARCHITECT'S CONTRACT —CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Under architect's contract for services certain in their character, compensation for which was fixed, owner could not defeat recovery by abandoning contract or failing to obtain loan, although architect agreed to make no demand for payment "until you have succeeded in negotiating a loan," for if the owner did not negotiate a loan, the indebtedness became payable within a reasonable time.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Alfred F. Rosenheim against John Howze. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, A. C. Howze and the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank, as administrators of the estate of John Howze, deceased, appeal. Affirmed.

W. W. Butler, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edward A. Simons, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued for a fee alleged to be due to him as an architect for designing and supervising the partial construction of a house on land owned by John Howze. There were two causes of action set forth in the complaint, one based upon an alleged written contract, and the other was a declaration upon quantum meruit. Judgment was given for plaintiff in the sum of $2,300.80 and costs. Defendants, as successors of John Howze, deceased, appeal from the judgment and from an order denying the motion for a new trial.

One of the objections urged to the judgment by the appellants is that no recovery on quantum meruit may be had because more than two years had elapsed between the time when the work was completed and the filing of the complaint herein. We need not decide, however, whether or not the statute of limitations bars recovery upon the second cause of action pleaded, because the court correctly found that John Howze was liable for the payment of the architect's fee under a written contract.

The uncontradicted evidence shows that the plaintiff wrote to the defendant on April 15, 1908, a letter of which the material part is as follows:

"The undersigned hereby proposes and agrees to render architectural services in connection with your new residence, proposed to be erected in Westchester Place, for a fee of 10% on the first $20,000, 8% on the next $10,000, and 6% on everything over $30,000, figured on the total cost of the same when completed, as per the schedule of minimum charges of the American Institute of Architects, copy of which is hereto attached.

"I also offer my services in assisting you to the extent of arranging with the contractor to carry the work of construction forward to the point of completing the wooden frame and covering it with the rough boarding and outside trimmings before demanding any payment on account of his contract.

"I will further agree to make no demand for payment on account of my own services until you have succeeded in negotiating a loan."

On April 21, 1908, Mr. Howze wrote his acceptance upon this letter. Subsequently the plaintiff, acting under direction of defendant, and with his full sanction, made arrangements with a contractor who was willing to prosecute the work of building without any payment on account until the construction should go forward to the point indicated in the letter quoted above. Plaintiff also furnished the necessary sketches, detail drawings, plans, etc., necessary for the construction of the house. The court found that thereafter and without any default on the part of plaintiff, Mr. John Howze abandoned the construction of said residence and declined to let the bidding contractor carry on the work of construction at all; that the said Howze did not make diligent, proper, or reasonable efforts to secure a loan upon his premises and the building to be erected thereon; that plaintiff's full fee would have been $3,028, and that he had earned three-fifths of such sum, payable in case of abandonment, or $1,816.80.

Appellants assert that the finding that Mr. John Howze did not make diligent efforts to secure a loan is outside the issues made by the pleadings, and the same contention is made with reference to the finding that plaintiff made no demand for payment on account of services until a reasonable time had elapsed after due performance by plaintiff and abandonment of the construction of the building by Mr. Howze. Neither of these objections to the findings is valid.

Considering, first, the understanding of the meaning of the agreement by the contracting parties, it is evident that Mr. Howze recognized the validity of Mr. Rosenheim's claim. The latter wrote to Mr. Howze in November, 1910, demanding $1,000 on account and the balance at about the first of the succeeding year. To this communication Mr. John Howze replied in a letter assuring the architect that he had not been forgotten, referring to the writer's unchanged financial condition, and closing with the sentence, "Kindly allow me to reassure you that I will take care of you at the earliest possible moment."

This and other evidence in the case demonstrated that the contracting parties did not believe the plaintiff's compensation was dependent upon the mere caprice of the owner of the property who contemplated the building of a place of residence upon his land. The contract did not provide for the payment of the architect only in the event of the securing of a loan by Mr. Howze. There was an agreement for services certain in their character, and the amount of compensation was fixed. Under the terms of this writing the agreed price was due and owing when the work was done, but the architect promised to delay collection of his fee until Mr. Howze could secure money by negotiating a loan. There is absolutely no room for a construction of this document which would make the employment of Mr. Rosenheim to do any work at all dependent upon the precedent condition that Mr. Howze should succeed in negotiating a loan. If there were the slightest reason for such a construction in the language of the contract, it would disappear when we consider the conduct of the parties to the writing. Mr. Howze could not, therefore, by abandoning the contract, defeat recovery by the plaintiff, who had fully performed his part. If he did not negotiate a loan the indebtedness became payable within a reasonable time. Nunez v. Dautel, 19 Wall. 560, 22 L. Ed. 161; Williston v. Perkins, 51 Cal. 554; Greenstreet v. Cheatum, 99 Kan. 290, 161 Pac. 596; Randall v. Johnson, 59 Miss. 317, 42 Am. Rep. 365; Doe v. Thompson, 22 N. H. 217; Sears v. Wright, 24 Me. 278. Therefore, the findings attacked were responsive to the issues and support the judgment of the superior court.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

ABBOTT v. ARP. (L. A. 4586.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 23, 1918.)

1. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ⟸18(5)—WANT OF PROBABLE CAUSE—EVIDENCE.

Where defendant loaned plaintiff a wagon, and plaintiff left the country, leaving a wagon with a named person, who told defendant that plaintiff had sold the wagon to another, whereupon defendant commenced prosecution for embezzlement, mere fact that defendant knew that the wagon left with the person named was not his did not show want of probable cause.

2. TRIAL ⟸243—INSTRUCTIONS—INCONSISTENCY.

In action for malicious prosecution, instructions authorizing judgment for plaintiff, should the jury believe two utterly inconsistent propositions, held improper, as misleading.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by E. M. Abbott against James Arp. Judgment for plaintiff, and order denying motion for new trial, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Kaye & Siemon, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

J. W. Wiley, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The action was one by which plaintiff sought damages for malicious prosecution. The issues of fact were tried by a jury, and a verdict was returned in favor of plaintiff for $500. Judgment was entered accordingly.

The evidence showed that on the 27th day of January, 1913, defendant, James Arp, swore to a complaint in the justice's court of the Sixth township, county of Kern, charging that E. M. Abbott, on or about the 27th day of November, 1912, did unlawfully convert and embezzle a certain wagon, the property of Arp, of the value of $15, with which property Abbott had been intrusted as bailee. Abbott was arrested upon the charge and imprisoned for several days. When the criminal case came on for trial, it was dismissed on motion of the district attorney.

The plaintiff, Abbott, did not testify at the trial of the civil action; but Arp gave testimony, both for the plaintiff and on his own behalf. He testified that he loaned Abbott a spring wagon in June or July of 1912. In September, Arp met Abbott, and asked for the return of the vehicle. Abbott replied that he had left it at the ranch of a man named Brinkman, and promised either to bring the wagon to Arp or have Brinkman, deliver it. Later, and after Abbott's departure from Kern county, Arp called up Mrs. Brinkman on the telephone, asked if Abbott had left a wagon at her place, and received an affirmative reply. On the following day she notified him that, upon consultation with her husband, she had learned that Abbott had sold the wagon left by him at the Brinkman ranch to a man named Green. Later, on the advice of a peace officer, Arp. went to the district attorney's office, stated the foregoing facts to one of the deputies, and obtained a complaint charging Abbott with embezzlement. Defendant also testified that he did not see the wagon at Green's place until after the issuance of the warrant and just before the trial. Mrs. Green, he said, pointed out to him the wagon which had been purchased from Abbott and he then discovered that it was not the one which he had owned.

The deputy district attorney, who drew the complaint on the criminal charge, had no remembrance of the details of the conversation with Arp which induced him to act in the matter. Mrs. Brinkman corroborated the defendant was reference to the conversations which she had with him by telephone.

While there was evidence from which plaintiff seeks to draw the conclusion that Arp did not own the wagon loaned to the plaintiff, we do not think it justifies that theory. E. M. Roberts testified that he left the old vehicle on the ranch which he sold to Arp, and that "Mr. Arp could have it if he wanted it." Evidently Arp did appropriate and use the wagon, and, as Roberts had abandoned all claim to it, there can be no doubt that defendant considered it his property.

One Goble, who was present when the conversation was in progress between Abbott and Arp with reference to the wagon, testified that the latter said: "You can have the wagon; go out and get it." Upon this testimony plaintiff bases his claim that, as defendant had made a gift of the property to plaintiff, the subsequent prosecution for embezzlement must have been inspired by malice. It is important to remember, however, that Goble was not present throughout the conversation, and that the plaintiff did not contradict defendant's testimony with reference to his subsequent promise to return the property. Such a promise would, of course, be totally inconsistent with the conclusion that Arp had made Abbott a present of the wagon.

[1] Respondent also insists that defendant knew when he swore to the complaint that the wagon sold by Abbott to Green was not the one loaned by Arp. Mrs. Green and her sister told of his visit to the Green place "on or about the 27th of January, 1913," when he was shown a wagon bought by Green from Abbott and exclaimed: "That is not my wagon." But they could not definitely fix the day. Mr. Green gave the time of the visit as "somewhere near a week" before they moved, fixing the latter date as February 2, 1913. In one part of his testimony Arp stated that he saw a woman whom he supposed to be Mrs. Green at the home of the Greens prior to the time when he swore to the complaint; but he stoutly asserted that she did not show him the wagon, and he did not discover it was not his property until after the complaint against Abbott had been filed. It is argued that, since Mrs. Green and her sister told of but one conversation and one meeting, during which defendant discovered that the wagon in her husband's possession was not the one Abbott had borrowed from Arp, therefore the latter must have known, when he swore to the complaint, that he was verifying a false statement. The record is rather obscure on this point; but, assuming that Arp's discovery regarding the wagon at Green's place antedated the complaint, it does not follow, by any means, that want of probable cause was thereby established. Even if he did discover, before causing Abbott's arrest, that the wagon transferred from the Brinkman place to that of the Greens was not the one which had been loaned to Abbott, the undisputed facts remain that plaintiff had borrowed defendant's wagon, had kept it for more than half a year, had frequently promised to return it, and had departed for Long Beach without doing so, stating that it had been left with Mr. Brinkman. Added to these facts are the undenied statements that defendant had been told by Mrs. Brinkman that his wagon had been sold by Abbott to Mr. Green. The mere discovery that Green had purchased a wagon from Abbott, which was not defendant's, would not necessarily demonstrate that the loaned wagon had not been appropriated by the borrower. Yet the court instructed the jury that there would be "no probable cause for prosecution" if the jurors should find:

"That at time the defendant, Arp, made inquiry at residence of Green, he was shown and saw the wagon sold by Abbott to Green, and then knew and stated that it was not the wagon he had loaned to Abbott, and that these facts were all known to defendant, Arp., before he commenced the prosecution against Abbott."

This instruction was clearly erroneous.

The court gave, among others, the following instruction:

"Evidence has been introduced to show the following facts:

"(1) That the defendant, Arp., did not loan the wagon to plaintiff, Abbott, but gave it to him without consideration, with the statement to the effect that he (Arp) had no further use for it.

"(2) That after Arp had demanded the return of the wagon from Abbott, that Abbott informed the defendant, Arp, that said wagon was at Ben Lamb's, or Brinkman's place, in the Weed Patch, and that he would return it.

"(3) That after Arp had been informed that Abbott had sold the wagon to one Green, he, before commencing the criminal complaint against Abbott, knew that said wagon, which had been sold by Abbott to Green, was not the property of Arp.

"If you find that the above statements are established by a preponderance of the evidence, you are instructed that there was a want of probable cause."

[2] The instruction is one which would be misleading to any jury. The jury was told that one of the things establishing want of probable cause was Abbott's promise to return the wagon. On the contrary, such promise, is unfulfilled and followed by the departure of Abbott, would be one of the strong elements of probable cause, if Arp had good reason honestly to believe that the wagon had been sold by the borrower. By the instruction the jurors were told that they could believe two utterly inconsistent propositions —one that Abbott had received the wagon as a gift, and the other that he had promised to return it to the donor still claiming ownership. The giving of such an instruction was clearly error, requiring this court to reverse the judgment and order. Our conclusion upon this branch of the case makes it unnecessary to examine the other alleged errors.

The judgment and order are reversed.

OLCOVICH v. GRAND TRUNK RY. CO. OF CANADA. (S. F. 8606.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 29, 1918. Rehearing Denied Dec. 27, 1918.)

1. CARRIERS ⟸135—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—INJURY—DAMAGE—FREIGHT — "MARKET VALUE."

Carrier's liability for damage to goods based on value at point of destination under Civ. Code, §§ 3300, 3316, does not include freight as such in addition to the loss or deterioration; the market value of goods at destination including freight.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Market Value.]

2. CARRIERS ⟸158(1)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—LIABILITY FOR INJURY—LIMITATION BY BILL OF LADING—DAMAGES.

Where bill of lading provides that carrier's liability should be computed at the value of the property at the place and time of shipment, the carrier's liability for partial loss of shipment of paper, where damage exceeded cost at point of shipment, was limited to value of paper at the time and place of shipment plus the freight, if paid.

3. CARRIERS ⟸135—INJURY TO GOODS—DAMAGE—INTEREST.

Where carrier's liability was limited by bill of lading to value of goods at time and place of shipment, the shipper in case of partial loss could recover interest on claim under Civ. Code, § 3287; the claim being capable of being made certain.

4. CARRIERS ⟸135—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—LIABILITY—DAMAGES.

Where paper was damaged during shipment so as to be worthless except as waste paper and shipper reconditioned paper so that its value after deducting cost of reconditioning was greater than its value as waste paper, the cost of reconditioning was properly charged to carrier.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Julian H. Olcovich, as executor of the last will and testament of Herrman Olcovich, deceased, against the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, a corporation. From judgment giving him less relief than demanded and from order denying new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

William E. Billings, of San Francisco, and C. V. Riccardi, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Elmer Westlake and E. J. Foulds, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment and order denying a motion for new trial in an action to recover damages for injury to two shipments of freight by plaintiff's testator, from Berlin, N. H., to San Francisco, Cal., under bills of lading issued by the defendant. The first consignment consisted of 3,000 rolls of wrapping paper, shipped March 27, 1907, weighing 35 tons, costing $1,221.60 in Berlin with freight paid thereon amounting to $416.79. The second consignment, shipped October 23, 1907, consisted of 570 bundles of wrapping paper, weighing 26 tons, costing $1,196.59 in Berlin, with freight paid thereon amounting to $344.73. Both shipments were so far damaged that they had no market value except as waste paper. The value of the first shipment as waste paper in San Francisco was not to exceed $165, and that of the second shipment not to exceed $130. Plaintiff's testator, however, in an effort to reduce the loss, reconditioned the first shipment at an expense of $1,144.54. Its value was so increased that it sold for $1,558.82, making the net value of the reconditioned paper $414.28, instead of its waste paper value of $165. In the same manner the net value of the second shipment was increased by reconditioning to $770.13. The reconditioning consisted of sorting out the damaged and destroyed paper and retying the paper in new bundles with new wrapping thereon.

The actual expenditures of the plaintiff's testator on the first shipment were the cost, $1,221.60, the freight, $416.79, and the expense of reconditioning, $1,144.54, while the amount realized therefor was $1,558.82, making the total expenditures $1,224.11 in excess of receipts. On this shipment the trial court allowed as damages $60. On the second shipment the expenditures exceeded the receipts by $770.19. On this shipment the trial court allowed $40 as damages. The actual money loss of plaintiff's testator was therefore $1,994.30, and the judgment was $100.

The sole question presented by the appeal is the measure of damages.

[1-4] It is conceded that at common law, in the absence of any contract limiting the liability, the depreciation of the market value at the point of destination is the measure of damage. Ringgold v. Haven & Livingston, 1 Cal. 108, 118; Hart v. Spalding, 1 Cal. 214; Civ. Code, § 3316. The bill of lading, however, provided "that the amount of any loss or damage for which the carrier becomes liable shall be computed at the value of the property at the place and time of shipment," and it is conceded that such contract governs in fixing the measure of damages. Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 430; Civ. Code, § 2174; Donlon Bros. v. Southern Pacific Co., 151 Cal. 763, 91 Pac. 603, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811, 12 Ann. Cas. 1118. Appellant claims that he is entitled to recover the value of the paper at Berlin, plus the freight and other charges expended to get it to San Francisco, plus the expenditures to put the property in a salable condition, less the amount for which the goods sold, plus interest on the balance from the date of delivery. Respondent claims that the measure of damages is the difference between the market price of the paper and the market value of the damaged paper at Berlin as of the time of shipment, of which latter no evidence was offered. No authority for this proposition is cited or has been found. When the loss is total, it has been held in this state that under such a contract the measure of damages is the value at the time and place of shipment, plus freight and interest. Pierce v. Southern Pacific Co., 120 Cal. 156, 47 Pac. 874, 52 Pac. 302, 40 L. R. A. 350. The authorities are not in accord as to the measure of damages in case of partial loss or injury. In Corpus Juris it is said:

"Very generally the view is entertained that such stipulations are to be considered as permitting recovery for the damage actually done, the amount recoverable not to exceed the amount agreed on as compensation for the total loss." 10 Corpus Juris, § 608b.

See, also, section 612, 3 Sutherland on Damages, 3391, citing Wilson Co. v. Ill. Cen. Ry. Co., 130 Tenn. 92, 169 S. W. 311. While the exact question has never been determined in this state, in the case of a partial loss under such a contract, it has been determined, in harmony with the general view, that the loss is limited by the value stated and agreed upon in the bill of lading in the case of a total loss. Pierce v. Southern Pacific Co., supra. If this limit is valid as to a total loss, there seems to be no reason why it should not also be considered as a limitation upon the damage in the case of a partial loss. The general rule of damage for breach of contract is the "amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom." Civ. Code, § 3300. As has been said, this is the value at the point of destination in case of total loss (Civ. Code, § 3316), and the depreciation in value at that point in case of partial loss, unless limited by contract. As to the question of freight. It is not allowed as such. If the shipment follows the proper lines of commerce, the market value at the destination will include freight. If, however, as may be the result in the instant case, the damage thus estimated exceeds the cost or value at the point of shipment, the question remains as to whether the limitation upon the damage by the contract is the cost plus the freight, or the cost alone; that is to say, as to the first shipment in the instant case, whether limit of liability is $1,221.60, the cost at Berlin, N. H., or $1,638.39, the cost plus the freight. There seems to be no logical reason for a different rule, in the case of a partial and a total loss. In the instant case, to say that in case of a total loss the recovery could be $1,638.39, but that where there was a salvage value of $165 the recovery must be $1,221.60 less $165, instead of $1,638.39 less $165, would be as absurd as it is unjust. The limitation, therefore, upon the liability, is the value at the point of shipment plus the freight, if paid. The Supreme Court of Colorado has recently laid down this rule in Denver Co. v. Peterson Co., 59 Colo. 125, 130, 147 Pac. 663, and our own decision in Pierce v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, compels us to the same view. The question of plaintiff's right to interest is also raised. Respondent claims that although interest was allowed in the case of Pierce v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, in case of a total loss, it should not be allowed in case of a partial loss, under the rule that interest is not allowed in the case of unliquidated damages. The statutory rule is that—

"Every person who is entitled to recover damages certain or capable of being made certain by calculation, and the right to recover which is vested in him upon a particular day, is entitled also to recover interest thereon from that day," etc. Civ. Code, § 3287.

If, within the meaning of this rule, a claim based upon the value at the point of shipment, as in the case of a total loss, is to be deemed "capable of being made certain, as we held in Pierce v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, the fact that it requires the proof of two market values to establish the damage in the case of a partial loss instead of one, that is, the market value at destination of the goods, if uninjured, and the market value of the damaged goods, would not be sufficient to render the amount of damage "uncertain," within the rule. We are therefore of the opinion that interest should be allowed from the date of delivery of the goods on the depreciation of market value. This case was not tried on this theory of the measure of damages. Appellant proved the cost and value in Berlin, N. H., the freight thereon, and the selling price of the "reconditioned" goods and the cost of such reconditioning. While there are late cases holding that the measure of damages under such a bill of lading as that herein is the difference between the cost price at the shipping point and the selling price of the injured freight at the point of destination (Wallingforth v. A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 101 Kan. 544, 167 Pac. 1136, L. R. A. 1918B, 716), and under this rule the evidence here furnished a sufficient foundation for such a determination, we prefer to follow the general view above stated, and under this rule the evidence is insufficient to determine the market value in San Francisco, either of the goods as sold, or the value if uninjured, nor does the record squarely present the matter. However, as it was shown that 570 bundles cost $1,196.59 in Berlin and 365 bundles thereof sold for $1,108.35 in San Francisco, and 3,000 rolls cost $1,221.60 in Berlin and that 2,720 thereof sold for $2,000.22 in San Francisco, and as the "reconditioning" consisted simply of discarding the paper that was torn and dirty, and retying the balance into bundles, it is a necessary inference from the evidence that the plaintiff was at least injured to the extent of the expense of reconditioning the paper, over $1,800, and for this reason the judgment for $100 should be reversed. The defendant claims that the plaintiff should not be allowed the large expenditures made in reconditioning the paper. The result of this work was to substantially increase the value of the reconditioned paper over the value thereof before the work, plus the cost of reconditioning. The defendant was entitled to the benefit of the net gain resulting from such reconditioning, namely, the difference between the value before such work and the net value thereafter, and therefore should be charged with the cost thereof.

The judgment is reversed.

In re MOORE'S ESTATE AND GUARDIANSHIP. (L. A. 5495.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 20, 1918.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⇐10 — APPOINTMENT—RIGHTS OF PARENT.

The father or mother of a minor child under the age of 14 years has a preferential right to be appointed guardian, which right the court must recognize unless the parent be incompetent, has unnaturally or willfully abandoned the child, or failed to maintain it.

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⟸11—RIGHTS OF PARENT—APPOINTMENT.

Where a divorced wife, having been given the custody of the child, died and left a will appointing a guardian for it, such appointment was ineffectual, when the father survived.

3. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⟸13(4)—RIGHTS OF FATHER—ABANDONMENT—EVIDENCE.

In proceedings by a father to be appointed guardian for his minor child, evidence held not to sustain a finding that the father, by abandoning the child, had lost his right to its guardianship.

4. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⟸10 — APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN—RIGHTS OF PARENT.

In proceedings by a parent for the guardianship of his child, the welfare of the child is not a consideration so exclusive as to prevail over the natural and legal right of the parent.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Separate proceedings for the appointment of a guardian for Phelps S. Moore, a minor, brought by Charles Walter Moore and Hugh T. Gordon. From an order appointing Hugh T. Gordon as guardian, Charles Walter Moore appeals. Reversed.

George A. Hooper, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hugh T. Gordon and Ernest P. Wellman, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Opposing petitions for letters of guardianship of the person and estate of Phelps S. Moore, a minor, were filed by Charles Walter Moore, father of the child, and by Hugh T. Gordon. The petitions were heard together, and the court made its order denying the application of the father, and appointing Mr. Gordon guardian. The father appeals.

In addition to the petitions, there was on file a paper embodying the objections of Hugh T. Gordon to the petition of Charles W. Moore for appointment. This document alleged the unfitness of the father and his abandonment of the child. The court made no finding upon the first issue. It found, in effect, that Charles Walter Moore, the father, had knowingly and willfully failed to contribute to the support of the child, or to communicate with it, although he had the ability to do so. A declaration that he had abandoned the child is embodied in the conclusions of law.

[1] At the time of the hearing, the minor was of the age of seven years. It is settled law in this state that the father or mother of a minor child under the age of 14 years has a preferential right to be appointed guardian, and that the court must recognize this right unless it finds the parent seeking appointment incompetent, or unless such parent has knowingly or willfully abandoned the child, or, having the ability so to do, has failed to maintain it. Code Civ. Proc. § 1751; Civ. Code, § 246, subd. 4; Guardianship of Mathews, 169 Cal. 26, 145 Pac. 503; In re Mathews, 174 Cal. 679, 164 Pac. 8; In re Forrester, 162 Cal. 493, 123 Pac. 283; In re Salter, 142 Cal. 412, 76 Pac. 51. In this case, as we have seen, the court did not find against the father on the issue of his competency, and it is, at the very least, extremely doubtful whether a finding of incompetency could have been sustained on the evidence produced. We are satisfied, further that the evidence was not such as to support a finding that the father had abandoned the child (assuming that the court did so find), or the finding that he had failed to maintain it.

[2] The appellant and Marion A. Moore, the mother of the child, were married at Los Angeles in 1909. Charles W. Moore, the husband, was a resident of the state of New York, and he and his wife took up their abode in that state, where the child was born the following year. In November, 1911, Mrs. Moore, with her child, left the appellant and came to California. Thereafter she resided in this state. The husband remained in New York, where he was engaged in business, with his father, as a jeweler. He did not, apparently, make any protest against his wife's departure. The wife had means of her own, was able, after the separation to give the child good care and nurture, and did so. The husband did not contribute toward her support or that of the child. She did not, however, request him to do so. On the contrary, there is evidence that she told the appellant she would accept nothing from him for herself or the child. He did not write letters or send presents to the child, but his testimony, which is uncontradicted, is that his wife would not permit correspondence. In January, 1917, she obtained in the superior court of Los Angeles an interlocutory decree of divorce, whereby the custody of the minor child was awarded to her. The decree, which was based upon the grounds of desertion and willful neglect, was entered on the defendant's default. Some months thereafter Mrs. Moore died. She left a will by which she undertook to appoint the respondent, Hugh T. Gordon, guardian of the child, but, the father surviving, she had no right of testamentary appointment, and the provision of her will in this regard was ineffectual. Matter of Allen, 162 Cal. 625, 124 Pac. 237.

[3] The court was not authorized, on this evidence, to find that the father had abandoned the child and thus lost his right to its guardianship. "In order to constitute abandonment 'there must be an actual desertion, accompanied with an intention to entirely sever, so far as it is possible to do so, the parental relation and throw off all obligations growing out of the same.'" Guardianship of Snowball, 156 Cal. 240, 104 Pac. 444. The mere fact that the father permitted the child to remain with the mother is not enough to show such intent. The spouses had separated, and his right to the custody of the child was in no way superior to that of the mother. Civ. Code, § 197. Indeed, in view of the tender years of the minor, it was entirely proper that the mother should have its custody and care. Nor, under the circumstances, did his failure to contribute amount to a failure to maintain the child. The wife was able and willing to provide for its needs, and the father's acquiescence did not work a forfeiture, under Civil Code, § 246, of his right of guardianship. In re Forrester, supra.

[4] The court below seems to have proceeded upon the theory that in awarding guardianship, the paramount consideration is the welfare of the child. Our recent decisions, and particularly those in the two appeals in the matter of Mathews, cited above, make it manifest that, under the law of this state, this consideration alone will not prevail over the natural and legal right of the parent. Such parent is entitled to the guardianship, unless he or she be found incompetent, or has forfeited the right by abandonment or failure to maintain. One may readily sympathize with the desire of Mr. Gordon to carry out the trust which the deceased mother had attempted to confide to him, and to promote what he deems to be the best interests of the child. But however commendable his motives, they cannot justify us in sustaining an order which deprives the father of his natural right to the custody of his child, without a showing of legal ground therefor.

The order is reversed.

In action against physician for failure to properly diagnose fractured forearm, where expert had testified that proper practice would have required use of X-ray, exclusion, during cross-examination, of testimony that he had treated certain patient without X-ray was proper, being as to collateral matter, and expert having testified that he had treated patients without X-ray, and that X-ray was not essential in case of "pure dislocation."

4. Evidence ⟸555 — Expert Evidence — Facts of Case.

An objection that the opinion of an expert witness was not founded upon all the facts of the case goes to the weight of the evidence rather than to its competency or materiality.

5. Trial ⟸110—Conduct of Counsel.

Where court has stricken certain evidence, it is improper for counsel to attempt to get the same evidence before the jury by means of putting the question in another form.

6. Appeal and Error ⟸930(2)—Review—Presumptions.

Where the court instructed the jury to pay no attention to the answer to a certain question, it will be presumed on appeal that the jury obeyed the court's instruction.

7. Trial ⟸252(8) — Instructions — Evidence.

In action for malpractice against a physician, refusal to instruct jury to render verdict for defendant, if plaintiff's forearm was not fractured, was proper, where the fracture was not contradicted.

8. Appeal and Error ⟸1067 — Review — Harmless Error.

Where court instructed jury that plaintiff was required to prove every material allegation in his complaint, its failure to instruct that such proof must be by a preponderance of the evidence was not of sufficient importance to justify a reversal.

9. Trial ⟸253(4) — Instructions — Evidence.

In action against physician for negligence in examining and treating plaintiff's forearm, requested instruction that plaintiff alleged negligence in examination of arm, and must prove such allegation, was not error, having omitted reference to plaintiff's allegation of negligence in treatment of arm.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Frank N. McCollum against J. H. Barr. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. E. Ebert and W. H. Carlin, both of Marysville, for appellant.

E. C. Levey, of San Francisco, W. P. Rich, of Marysville, and Geo. M. Lipman, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action for damages resulting from defendant's alleged unskillful treatment as physician and surgeon of an injury to plaintiff's right forearm.

It is alleged in plaintiff's second amended complaint that on October 24, 1915, he fractured and broke his right forearm in cranking an automobile, and upon that day he called upon defendant and informed him thereof, and employed defendant as a physician and surgeon "to examine such fractured and broken forearm, and ascertain the extent of the injury thereby caused, and to set the same if broken, and to treat and heal the same for whatever the injury was to it." It is further alleged as follows:

"That defendant thereupon, as a physician and surgeon, and pursuant to such employment and undertaking, had a reasonable opportunity for examining, and did examine, the injured forearm of plaintiff; that by the exercise of ordinary skill in making said examination the defendant could have discovered that said plaintiff's forearm was fractured and broken, but defendant examined plaintiff's forearm in a negligent and careless manner, and without exercising ordinary skill, and by reason thereof defendant failed to ascertain that plaintiff's forearm was fractured and broken, and he, the said defendant, treated and tried to heal plaintiff's injured forearm as though the same was not fractured and broken, greatly to plaintiff's injury."

In his answer defendant alleges that plaintiff came to him for treatment as alleged in the complaint—

"with the wrist joint of his right arm completely dislocated backward, but defendant denies that his right forearm was broken or fractured;" that "defendant then and there examined said forearm, and used all due diligence and care to ascertain the extent of the injury thereby caused, and he did treat the same, and continued such treatment at intervals whenever called upon by plaintiff, until on or about the 11th day of December, 1915; that up to said time defendant discovered no fracture in plaintiff's said forearm, nor had plaintiff complained of or mentioned any such fracture until said 11th day of December, 1915; that on said date, however, plaintiff did ask defendant if he thought his said forearm was in fact fractured, and thereupon defendant stated to him that he had as yet discovered no fracture, but that he could and would make further examination of said forearm by applying thereto the X-ray process. Thereupon plaintiff left the office of defendant, and failed to return for further treatment or at all."

Defendant denies the averments of the complaint set forth in the fourth paragraph, and, on information, alleges—

"that plaintiff's forearm was not in fact fractured, or, if fractured, the fracture was not of such a nature or character that, with the exercise of ordinary care and skill on the part of defendant, he was unable to discover the same."

The cause was tried by the court with a jury, and plaintiff had the verdict for the sum of $1,000, and judgment followed accordingly for plaintiff. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

Plaintiff testified that he was cranking his automobile in Yuba City, "shoving down hard, and it back-fired, throwed my arm back in this condition. It made a big lump up here, and a lump underneath here, and after that I immediately got a horse and buggy and came to Dr. Barr's residence," where he met Dr. Barr in Yuba City. He was asked to describe the condition and general appearance of his arm when he called upon Dr. Barr, and answered: "Well, my arm—there was a large lump underneath here and a hump on the top, and the bones were spread out here and inclined down a little bit." He stated that his hand "was kind of back a little bit; * * * my hand was black and blue and up to my elbow here." He was asked to state what Dr. Barr did and said at this time:

"The doctor examined my arm, pressing in here in this manner, and on the side for about a minute, and told me to come out to his automobile and he would examine it further. I went out to his automobile there and he asked Mr. Beaver— Q. Who is Mr. Beaver? A. He is a brother-in-law of mine—to hold his arm on my shoulder, he would pull on it in this position, worked my arm up and down like this a little bit, still continuing to press on it, and asked Mr. Beaver to hold my arm in this position while the doctor wrapped it with the bandage, merely wrapped it; then helped me on with my coat, stuck my hand through the bib of my overalls, and told me I would be all right in a few weeks. Q. Did you have any further conversation at that time? A. That was all at that time, but later in the day I met him at the Rideout Hospital. My arm was paining me very severe. We got in his automobile and rode up to the cold-storage place, and he waited on Mr. Heilman's daughter, I believe— Mr. Carlin: Unless the witness was along we object to it as hearsay. Mr. Levey: Q. Did you ride with him? A. I rode in the front seat of the automobile with the doctor. We went from the Rideout Hospital to the cold-storage, and from there to the doctor's office, and after visiting his office he took my arm, nipped the bandage off with a pair of scissors, pressed on it again in this manner, not over a minute, then laid my arm in one of these metal splints in this condition, with the hand turned in, wrapped it with a bandage, and I had a sling around my neck at the time. After wrapping the bandage about here to here, he laid it in the sling, and said I would be all right in a few weeks. Q. How many splints did he use? A. Just the one." He testified that the splint extended from the wrist to a point near the elbow. "Q. Did Dr. Barr say anything or not at this time as to what was the nature of the injury? A. He merely stated it was a dislocated arm."

He testified that he continued his visits to Dr. Barr for treatment from October 24, 1915, to December 11, 1915, visiting him about three times a week. He was asked what Dr. Barr did at these visits:

"A. Every time I would visit Dr. Barr he would merely take his scissors, rip the bandage off, and feel my arm, in this position, lay the splint back and wrap it up; that is all he ever done. Q. Did you and Dr. Barr have any conversation during any of these visits with relation to the condition of your arm or the cause of the injury? A. Yes, sir; I asked Dr. Barr what made that large bump in my arm there. He stated that the tendon was out of place, and that pulled my hand back in that position. He showed me a skeleton hanging up in the corner, and explained to me where this tendon was out of a little groove that passed over that bone; he says that is what pulled that cord back; he says, 'I will never be able to get that back in place any more.' Q. Did Dr. Barr use any other method of examination during the course of your treatment with him other than what you have testified to? A. None whatever. * * * Q. During this time what was the condition of your arm? A. I couldn't use my arm for any purpose whatever; I was unable even to hold a lead pencil in my hand, to write with a lead pencil; no motion whatever, or only a little bit. Q. What was the general outward appearance of the arm at the end of the seven weeks? A. Crooked, in this condition; a large lump here; one underneath, and these bones spread apart."

He testified that at the end of seven weeks, on December 10, 1915, he consulted Dr. Kauffman, who examined his arm through a fluoroscope, and then told him to go back to Dr. Barr, but plaintiff was not permitted to testify what Dr. Kauffman said of the nature of the injury.

"Q. Did you go back to Dr. Barr? A. Yes, sir; I went back to Dr. Barr, and I asked Dr. Barr if my arm was broke, and he stated no, it was merely dislocated; be all right in three or four weeks; could go to work. I asked him the question the second time, 'Is my arm broke?' and he stated, 'No, it was not.' Q. Did he say anything further at this time? A. No, sir; none whatever. Q. Then what did you do, if anything? A. I went back to Dr. Kauffman; he examined my arm the second time, and told me to go to San Francisco."

He testified that he went to San Francisco, and consulted Dr. Hunkin, who took an X-ray picture of the arm, and from there he went to the Fairmont Hospital in San Francisco, where he received treatment under Dr. Hunkin's direction for ten days, and remained at San Francisco under Dr. Hunkin's treatment for thirteen weeks, after which he returned to Marysville. He testified that while under the care of Dr. Barr he followed his instructions with reference to his arm, and did nothing contrary thereto; that he was incapacitated to work from October 24, 1915, until April 3, 1916. He was a mill worker and plumber.

It came out on cross-examination that Dr. Kauffman told plaintiff his wrist was broken. This was the day before plaintiff made his last visit to Dr. Barr.

"Q. So you said, 'Dr. Barr, is my wrist broken?' A. Yes, sir. Q. You asked him the second time? A. Yes, sir. Q. He told you he thought not? A. He told me it wasn't broken. Q. And you said, 'That is all I want to know?' A. I told him I wanted to know if my arm was broken. Q. Then what did you say to him? A. 'That is all I want to know if my arm is broke.' Q. Why didn't you tell him that you had the opinion from another doctor or surgeon that the wrist was broken? A. I didn't know which doctor was right."

The witness stated that he did not tell defendant that he had seen another physician or what that physician had told him.

Dr. Kauffman testified that when plaintiff visited him he examined plaintiff's arm, both visually and by use of the fluoroscope, "an apparatus used in conjunction with the X-ray, coil, and tube, whereby one can visually see the bones or other structures without taking a plate"; that he found a fracture of both of the bones, both the radius and ulna of the right forearm, these two bones connected with the bony structure of the forearm.

"Q. What condition did you find in the arm? A. Both bones broken. Q. What was the exterior appearance of the arm at the time Mr. McCollum called upon you? A. The lower end, that is, the lower end of the radius where the bone was broken, the broken piece, the detached piece of the radius, lay heaped up on top of the portion of the radius associated with the elbow joint, and on the underneath surface, the distal extremity, the other end of the radius, the other end of that broken bone, was sticking out in a projection underneath. The broken piece was heaped up on top of the bone, and there was a projection due to the unbroken piece projecting below it. Q. Was this visible to the naked eye? A. Yes. Q. What was the position of the styloid process, that is, the ends of each of the two bones of the arm, at the time? A. The styloid process of the radius was up above the level of the remaining portion of the radius; that is to say, instead of being in line with the rest of the bone, it was sticking up about three-quarters, between three-quarters and an inch, out of alignment, and the styloid process of the ulna, while not as much difference, was still distinctly out of alignment."

Dr. Hunkin testified that plaintiff consulted him, and that he found that both bones of the right forearm—the radius and ulna—were broken, with some displacement; that he made an examination with the X-ray, which disclosed both bones broken; that plaintiff came to him December 15, 1915, and that he saw him up to March 25, 1916; that plaintiff was taken to the Fairmont Hospital, where he was operated upon.

"Q. Will you state what you did and what course was followed in making the first examination when Mr. McCollum first called upon you? A. I examined him with my fingers and with the X-ray. Q. Will you state what the examination of the fingers consisted of? A. I examined the arm and hand as to movement and as to the character of the power and as to the position. Q. Was any opening made at the point of fracture at the time of examination? A. No opening was made at that time. Q. Will you state just what condition you found there at the time of the operation and will you state exactly what was done? A. The bones were lifted in place and secured in proper position. Q. What condition did you find with respect to the bones? A. I found the lower fragments displaced backwards and impacted. Q. From your examination, both at the time of the first calling and at the time of the operation, can you say of how long standing this fracture was? A. I cannot. * * * Q. From your examination and the condition presented at the time of the operation, can you say whether or not there was any dislocation of the wrist between the radius and the small bones of the wrist? A. No, there was no dislocation. Q. Did you find any dislocation in the arm in the course of your examination or at the time of the operation? A. Technically, I would have to answer no. Q. Did you or did you not find a dislocation in the course of your examination in this case? A. No, I have had many cases of like fractures, but every case is different. There was no dislocation; there was some displacement of the ends of the fractured bones; displacement is not dislocation. Dislocation is where the bone is out of place with its mate, if you understand. Displacement is where the bones are broken and out of place somewhere else. * * * Q. Will you state what the displacement consisted of and what was the result? A. The lower fragments were displaced backwards. * * * Q. In your examination, upon what did you determine an operation to be necessary? A. The displacement chiefly. Q. Was an operation essential and necessary in this case or not? A. I think so. Q. At the time of the operation was there a union between the bones? A. There was not. Q. Was there any impaction of the fragments? A. Yes. Q. Will you state just what the condition was in that respect? A. The upper fragment was jammed into the lower fragment. Q. Would you call this an ordinary fracture? A. The manipulation of the wrist between the fingers showed this to be more than an ordinary fracture. * * * Q. What was the position of the hand with respect to the arm at the time Mr. McCollum called upon you? A. The hand was displaced backwards. Q. At about what angle? A. Displacement has no relation to angle. Q. Will you state just what was the position of the hand with relation to the forearm at the time the patient called upon you? A. The lower fragment was displaced backwards and impacted into the upper and the position of the hand was displaced backwards."

Defendant testified in his own behalf. He was asked to give his account of plaintiff's injury and the treatment given. He replied:

"He came to my residence on October 24, 1915, informing me that he had injured his hand by cranking an automobile and wanted me to take care of it. I looked at the hand, and my bandages and case were out in the automobile. We went out there, and with the assistance, I believe he said his brother-in-law, Mr. Beaver, I believe is the name—between us, Mr. Beaver holding the arm and my pulling and manipulating the wrist, I reduced a dislocation of the right wrist between the carpal and metacarpal bones. Q. To what extent did you at that time examine the forearm or wrist? A. I examined it very thoroughly at that time to see—beforehand to see what the conditions were, and after placing them to seeing that they were in place. Q. Did you at that time discover any evidence of a fracture? A. I did not. * * * Q. For what purpose was your examination made? A. For the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the injury. Q. Proceed, if you will, and detail the times when you treated him and the nature of the treatment. A. During the same day he called on me, saying that his hand was quite painful and was swelling very rapidly. I stated I would be at the Rideout Hospital in a short time, and to meet me there, and I had to make a call; he got in the automobile with me and I made the call. We returned to the office, I removed the bandage I had previously applied, then applied Levis' metallic splint to the hand, and rebandaged it again. I also examined the hand very thoroughly at the office at that time."

He testified that plaintiff came to him at different dates giving them, in October and November, and on November 3d, he removed the splint from the hand and applied the bandage only.

"Q. At that time, in your opinion, what progress was being made with the forearm? A. That it was in very good shape. There was still some swelling, still some thickening. On November 29th I removed the bandage, and I last saw him on December 11th and examined the hand. He said, 'Doctor, I cannot grasp anything.' I said, 'Take something in the hand, put it in motion, and it will strengthen it as you use the hand and put it in motion.' That is the last time I saw him to examine the hand under my care. Q. Was there anything said by him at that time or any question asked about whether his hand was broken or his arm? A. On December 11th he came to my office and asked me, saying, 'Doctor, do you think my arm is broken?' I said, 'Up to the present time I have seen nothing to indicate that your arm was broken.'"

He was asked to describe what he did on October 24th when plaintiff first came to him, and answered:

"I took his hand in my hand, grasping the fingers firmly, Mr. Beaver taking hold of the shoulder and arm, and by giving a very vigorous pull with my hand pulling on his, and with my fingers against the dislocated parts, pressing and bringing them down and working them in place, so they were placed down into their proper position. I then requested Mr. Beaver to take hold of his hand, and as I had no splint at the house, and I don't like to put on a piece of stave or barrel or anything of that kind, I simply bandaged the hand until I could get to the office, which was done in the afternoon. The hand was kept in the position we usually keep fractures or dislocations, which is a position with the fingers slightly extended out as in all splints if you look at them. The hand was padded and bandaged in that position, and kept in that position in the splint, brought up against the body, bending the elbow, bringing it up here for easy carriage. At the time I examined the forearm there was a deformity in the wrist and the palm of the hand, and a deformity on the back of the hand by the bones projecting backward out of their place. Q. On the hand, you mean? A. And the wrist, in the wrist."

He testified that the deformity referred to was caused by "a dislocation of those bones from each other"; that the "discoloration of the hand extended only about two and a half inches from the palm of the hand in the wrist." He further explained as follows:

"The dislocation occurred in this location between the carpal and metacarpal bones. The metacarpal bones were driven upward and backward over the carpal bones. By traction it was pulled and worked, with the assistance of Mr. Beaver, until those bones were reduced and in place. Of course, there was some swelling at that time; but on examining the hand at the present, with the exception of the scar I see here on the hand, I cannot see much, if any, difference in the alignment than what it was when I last saw it in my office on December 11, 1915. There was some thickening all through the hand, and by nonuse it had probably atrophied some. The hand to-day is about perhaps the same alignment that it was at that time. There is still some thickening at this place on the hand at the present, which can take place in all cases of the tearing of the ligament of any joint."

He testified that at no time did he discover any indications of a fracture, and that at all times he treated him to the best of his ability.

On cross-examination he testified that when plaintiff first came to him the discoloration was as he had stated, but later, within two or three days, "it showed further up"; that he employed no method of examination of plaintiff's injury "other than digital and visual," and did not use a fluoroscope or X-ray; that he visited patients in the Rideout Hospital, and that there was an X-ray apparatus there; that he treated the case as one of dislocation; that in his practice, if he had a suspicion that there was a fracture, he used the X-ray, but in this case he had no such suspicion.

The foregoing facts are found in the testimony of the only witnesses who saw or treated plaintiff or had personal knowledge of his injury. The remaining testimony is that of physicians who had practiced surgery, given as experts. For example, the following questions propounded to Dr. Miller by defendant, and his answers, will illustrate the scope of this class of evidence relied upon by defendant:

"Q. Assume on the 24th of October, 1915, the plaintiff here was at that time 27 years of age, called upon a surgeon, the defendant in this case, stating to him that he, the plaintiff, had just that day received an injury to his right forearm or wrist by the cranking of an automobile. Will you please state to the jury what, in your opinion, ordinary care and skill would require of the surgeon in diagnosing and treating that injury? A. The first thing we do usually is to inquire how the accident happened, the direction in which the force was applied, and the amount of force that was exerted, as near as can be found out. Then we look at the arm or the wrist, note if there is any deformity, any swelling or discoloration. Then we usually put it through certain motions, using both hands, to see if there is a dislocation or fracture, in fact to discover the extent of the injury. That is the ordinary procedure in examination of injuries of this nature. Q. And assuming that the physician or surgeon should diagnose the case as a dislocation, and be called upon to treat the patient for a period of time, some weeks thereafter, state, Doctor, what, in your opinion, reasonable care and skill on his part would require in such treatment, and how it should be done? A. The first treatment consists in correcting any condition that may exist. For instance, if it is a dislocation, the dislocation is reduced; if it is a fracture, the fracture is reduced; whatever condition exists is corrected as discovered by the surgeon; for instance, a dislocation of the wrist, the parts are put back into position, and the hand and arm are put in a splint and immobilized. * * * Q. Now, Doctor, in your opinion, in such a case as I have suggested to you in my first question, would ordinary care and skill on the part of the surgeon necessarily require the use of the X-ray? A. Not necessarily, no; because we treat a great many fractures and dislocations without the use of the X-ray, and it is ordinarily done."

On cross-examination he testified that where there is doubt "it is customary to use the X-ray."

Dr. Gray, called by defendant, gave somewhat similar answers to like questions put to Dr. Miller. On cross-examination he testified that in case of doubt he regarded it as essential to use the X-ray; that the treatment described by him had reference to dislocations and not to fractures; that the treatment would not differ "if the bones were properly approximated"—that is, "if the bones had set in their proper position."

Dr. Kauffman, called by plaintiff, testified that where an injury such as the one in question is presented to a surgeon the usual and recognized method of examination among the profession for the purpose of diagnosis is by the X-ray, and that an examination without the use of the X-ray—

"would not indicate the exercise on the part of the examining surgeon of ordinary skill and care. Q. If a patient's arm, at the time of examination, reveals a deformity in the form of a prominence on the inner or front surface of the forearm, a widening of the two bones of the forearm at the wrist, and a discoloration of the forearm from the wrist to a point near the elbow, would that condition indicate a fracture or a dislocation, or either, in your opinion? A. Fracture. Q. If both bones of the forearm are broken near the wrist, would you, in your opinion, say that the placing of the forearm in the splint, with the hand drawn towards the body, was the usual or is the usual and recognized method of treatment among the profession to secure proper results in the case of a fracture? A. No. Q. Will you give your reasons for that statement, Doctor? A. Because one is not getting apposition in that way. Q. Explain what you mean by apposition. A. Merely carrying out the procedure as indicated in the question won't bring the two ends of each bone in position; that is, if both bones of the forearm were broken, putting on a splint bringing them toward the body is doing nothing whatever to bring these two bones and the broken ends of the bones together; it is bringing the whole forearm against the body, not bringing the two ends of the bone together. * * * Q. In your opinion, where a patient calls upon a surgeon with his arm injured in the manner indicated by me in my previous questions, would the examination and treatment of the arm or wrist in the case of a dislocation without the use of an X-ray plate be in accordance with the usual method pursued by the profession in such cases?" Over objection, the witness answered: "No. May I explain that? Q. Give your reasons; you may explain it. A. I was wondering what was happening. One can't be sure that any dislocation is a pure dislocation or that associated with the dislocation there is not some concomitant fracture. In treating the dislocation without treating the fracture that may go with it, you won't get perfect results; while you may treat a case successfully of pure dislocation without the X-ray plate, it isn't good practice. A dislocation per se may be treated without an X-ray plate."

Dr. Casper, adjunct surgeon of Mount Zion Hospital, San Francisco, was called by plaintiff:

"Q. If a patient who has injured his right forearm in cranking an automobile calls upon the surgeon to examine the forearm and ascertain the cause of the injury, and if the forearm at the time reveals a deformity near the wrist, ascertainable by observation, would the taking of the patient's hand by the surgeon, coupled with the pressing of the latter's thumb upon the wrist bones of the patient's arm, and other manipulations, the feeling with the fingers of both bones of the arm, and the pulling of the patient's arm, be sufficient, by the exercise of ordinary skill and care on the part of the surgeon, to determine the existence of a fracture and displacement and dislocation, or either, if the same were present?" Over objection, the witness answered: "Yes; and I would say such an examination supplemented by the X-ray, either before or after. Q. In the case of an injury of this character, happening as I have stated in my previous questions, if an X-ray was not used, would you say in your opinion that that would indicate the exercise of ordinary skill or care on the part of the surgeon?" An objection was overruled and the answer was: "I would say it was not. Q. If the patient's arm, at the time of examination, reveals a deformity in the form of a prominence on the inner or front surface of the forearm, a widening of the two bones of the forearm at the wrist, and a discoloration of the forearm from the wrist to the elbow, would that condition indicate, if there was exercised by the surgeon ordinary care and skill in his examination, a fracture or a dislocation or either?" Over objection, the witness answered: "It would be very suggestive of a fracture. * * * Q. If there were a dislocation, would there, in such a case, be a discoloration of the arm from a point near the wrist to a point near the elbow? A. It is not as likely as in a fracture."

He testified that in his opinion it was not ordinary skill and care on the part of the surgeon to treat a dislocation of an arm or wrist without using the X-ray if the latter were accessible; that if the X-ray is not accessible when the patient is first treated, it should be resorted to "as soon as the splints are applied."

The instructions given by the court correctly and without objection stated the principles of law by which the jury were to be governed as follows:

"One who holds himself out to the world as a physician and surgeon impliedly contracts that he possesses the skill properly to practice his profession and specialty. He is bound, therefore, in the discharge of his duties, to use ordinary care, diligence, and skill, according to the circumstances of the case.

"If the defendant in this case possessed the skill and learning which is required of one of his profession, and failed to exercise it in this case, and, in his examination and treatment of patient's injured arm, was careless and negligent, and the plaintiff was injured and sustained damages in consequence thereof, the defendant is liable for such damages as plaintiff has sustained.

"A patient is entitled to ordinarily careful and thorough examination such as the circumstances, the condition of the patient, and the physician's opportunities for examination will permit. If there is a reasonable opportunity for examination, and the nature of the injury or ailment can be discovered by the exercise of ordinary care and treatment, then the physician is answerable for failure to make such discovery.

"The court instructs the jury that if you find that plaintiff's forearm was fractured and displaced, and not dislocated, at the time he consulted defendant, and during the times he remained under defendant's treatment, and that defendant's failure to ascertain that such forearm was fractured and displaced, and his subsequent treatment of the same for a dislocation, were the result of a failure on the part of defendant to exercise, as a surgeon, ordinary care and diligence in connection therewith, you will find, under the evidence, that plaintiff is entitled to a verdict for the amount of the damages which in your opinion he should recover in accordance with the evidence in the case.

"A surgeon does not undertake to perform a cure, nor does he undertake to use the highest possible degree of skill, but he undertakes only a fair and reasonable degree of skill, and the question for the jury to decide is whether in his treatment of the plaintiff defendant used such reasonable care and skill; and unless you find from the evidence that he failed in this respect plaintiff cannot recover, and your verdict must be for defendant.

"In his treatment of plaintiff defendant as a physician and surgeon was not required to avail himself of the use of any particular appliance. All that was required of him was to adopt such means and follow such procedure and use such appliances as, under the circumstances, was required in the exercise of ordinary care and skill; and if you find from the evidence that in this regard defendant did use ordinary skill and care, then your verdict must be for defendant.

"Even if you find from the evidence that at the time plaintiff called upon defendant for treatment he was suffering both from a fracture and dislocation of the forearm, and that defendant treated him for a dislocation only, and that in so doing defendant exercised reasonable skill and care to ascertain and treat the nature of plaintiff's injuries, then your verdict must be in favor of defendant."

In point of numbers the expert witnesses called by defendant and testifying substantially as did Dr. Miller and Dr. Gray exceed the number testifying as experts at plaintiff's call. It will be observed, however, that the attention of defendant's expert witnesses was directed more particularly to a case where the attending surgeon's diagnosis and treatment had relation to a case of dislocation, whereas the two expert witnesses called by plaintiff were given a statement of what was claimed to be the facts in the present case as shown by the evidence. Appellant's contention is that he made an honest diagnosis upon sufficient examination, according to accredited practice in such cases, and did all he could in subsequent treatment, and all that ordinary care and skill required, to accomplish a restoration of the injured forearm to its normal condition; that his diagnosis revealed to him no more than a dislocation, and, having properly treated the injury as such, no liability attached for results. Defendant not only diagnosed the case as one of dislocation and treated it as such for seven weeks, but, in his verified answer to the complaint, he denied that plaintiff's forearm suffered a fracture, although the testimony of Dr. Kauffman and Dr. Hunkin leaves no doubt that both bones of plaintiff's forearm were broken.

[1] It is very clear that defendant made a faulty and erroneous diagnosis of plaintiff's injury and adhered to it during the period of his treatment. Does the evidence sufficiently support the implied finding of the jury that this erroneous diagnosis was illy considered and carelessly or negligently made and not warranted by the facts as they presented themselves to defendant? In solving the question we must give to the evidence such interpretation as the jury gave it, and deduce from it such inferences as the jury deduced, if such interpretation and deduction were such as reasonable men might make in the discharge of their duties as jurymen.

The testimony of Dr. Kauffman was that when plaintiff came to him, while still under defendant's care, he discovered at once, by visual and digital examination, that plain-tiff's forearm was fractured, and this he confirmed by the X-ray. So, also, Dr. Hunkin made the same discovery without using the X-ray. Dr. Kauffman's description of the condition in which he found plaintiff's wrist at the end of seven weeks' treatment by defendant should have suggested to defendant that something more serious than a dislocation was present. Accepting as true the testimony of Drs. Kauffman and Hunkin (as we must assume that the jury so treated it, and considering other established facts in the case), we cannot say that the jury were without support in finding that had defendant exercised ordinary care and skill when he made his diagnosis he would have discovered the existing fracture, or, if not then, at least at some period during a seven weeks' treatment. The expert witnesses seemed to agree that in case of doubt the X-ray, if accessible, should be used. There was testimony of the experts that where discoloration existed to the extent here shown, though not conclusive, was indicative of fracture. Defendant testified that he had no doubt of the correctness of his diagnosis. But was he justified, in view of the facts, in closing his mind against any doubt, and neglecting an available and accepted means of testing the correctness of his judgment? Defendant's ability and skill as a physician and surgeon seem not to be questioned. The point urged is that in this particular instance he did not exercise the care and skill of which he was capable, and did not "use ordinary care, diligence, and skill, according to the circumstances of the case," as the court instructed the jury was his duty.

At the oral argument the attorney for defendant assumed that defendant treated the patient properly for a dislocation, and that, had the diagnosis been correct, the treatment was proper. But we think counsel was in error in assuming that "about the only issue made during the trial was as to whether or not Dr. Barr should have examined the patient, when making his diagnosis, by the X-ray process." Counsel also claimed that it was "after an X-ray had been applied to the injured member that it was discovered, or claimed to have been discovered, that there had been a fracture." We think counsel justified in his assumption that the treatment given by defendant was proper for a dislocation had the defendant's diagnosis been correct. But whether or not defendant should have used an X-ray in making his diagnosis was not the only issue. As to that the experts differed in opinion, and it was shown that surgery had been successfully practiced before the X-ray was discovered. Apart from the conflicting expert testimony on this point, there was testimony by two surgeons who examined plaintiff's wrist, one of whom was practicing in the locality, that the presence of a fracture was revealed readily without the use of the X-ray. May not the jury have been justified in finding that, by the exercise of ordinary skill and care, defendant would have discovered, at some time during his seven weeks' treatment of plaintiff, what these surgeons saw at once upon examining plaintiff's arm without using the X-ray? May not the jury have been justified in finding that, had defendant used the ordinary skill and care which he possessed, enough evidence of a fracture would have been revealed to him to require of defendant that he verify or test his diagnosis by resorting to the X-ray, which was available to him at the Rideout Hospital? It may be conceded that defendant's expert witnesses were correct in their opinion that ordinary skill and care did not require of defendant that he should have used the X-ray in making his diagnosis. But there still remained the question whether the defendant did in fact exercise ordinary care and skill in making his diagnosis, and the still further question whether, had he exercised ordinary care and skill in his treatment, he would not have discovered the error in his diagnosis.

Counsel quote as follows from the opinion in Hesler v. California Hospital Co., 174 Pac. 654: "It is never enough to show"—that is, as against a physician—"that he has not treated his patient in that mode, nor used those measures, which in the opinion of others, even medical men, the case required, because such evidence tends to prove errors of judgment, for which the defendant is not responsible, as much as the want of reasonable care and skill, for which he may be responsible"—citing a New Hampshire case. It may be doubted that the degree of skill and care of a physician in diagnosing and treating disease is the same as that of a surgeon in all cases of surgery. A broken or dislocated member of the body, usually discernible to the eye or the touch of the surgeon, presents an entirely different problem from internal disorders whose manifestations are obscure and often misleading. However this may be, the question is always open to inquiry whether or not the physician or surgeon in a given case did in fact exercise ordinary skill and care. The statement above quoted has reference to the force of expert or opinion testimony as to whether or not in a given case ordinary care and skill have been shown. In the present case the verdict finds support in facts shown irrespective of expert testimony.

[2] We cannot say that the verdict was without sufficient support.

[3] Error is assigned "in ruling against the introduction of evidence." During the cross-examination of Dr. Kauffman by defendant an offer was made to show by a patient of Dr. Kauffman's present in court, that he had treated this patient without resort to the X-ray. The purpose was to discredit his testimony. The court sustained plaintiff's objection. To have permitted this would have involved an inquiry into the character of this patient's injury, the diagnosis made and the treatment given, and practically opened up an investigation upon a collateral matter much the same as was being investigated in the case itself. The witness testified that he had treated patients with dislocated and fractured forearms "without subjecting the member to the X-ray process." He also testified that in case of "pure dislocation" the X-ray was not essential. Having had these answers, it was not error to rule against exhibiting the witness' patients.

[4] A hypothetical question was propounded to Dr. Kauffman in which the facts in this case were stated, and an opinion asked as to the length of time it would take for "the bones to knit and the injury to heal if they were primarily set and if primary attention and treatment were given to the patient." Objection was made that the question omitted to state "the condition of the patient, nothing at all except the mere fact of the injury." The point now made that his opinion was not founded upon "all the facts of the case goes to the weight of his evidence rather than to its competency or materiality." Reardon v. Richmond Land Co., 21 Cal. App. 357, 131 Pac. 894.

[5, 6] Error is claimed for misconduct of plaintiff's attorney in seeking to get before the jury statements made by defendant to plaintiff in a conversation between plaintiff and defendant after plaintiff returned from San Francisco. Defendant's attorney moved to strike out all the testimony. "The Court: Strike it out. The jury is instructed to pay no attention to the testimony that has been stricken out, the answer of the witness as to the conversation taking place between him and Dr. Barr at the time is to be disregarded by you altogether, and treated as though you had not heard it." Plaintiff's attorney put the question in another form, and defendant moved to strike out the answer. "The Court: Strike it out; the same injunction as before," turning to the jury, "that you pay no attention to that answer." It was improper for plaintiff's attorney, after a ruling against him, to endeavor to get before the jury in another form the matter ruled out. We must assume, however, that the jury obeyed the court's instructions.

Defendant offered the following instructions, which were refused:

"Unless you find from the evidence that when plaintiff called upon the defendant for treatment, or during the course of the treatment, plaintiff's forearm was fractured, then your verdict must be for defendant."

"Plaintiff in this action alleges that defendant, as a surgeon, examined his forearm in a negligent and careless manner, and without exercising ordinary skill, thereby causing the injury and damage claimed by him in his complaint; and I instruct you that the burden rests upon the plaintiff to prove these allegations by a preponderance of the evidence, and that if he fails in this respect you should find your verdict for defendant."

[7] Of the first of these instructions it may be said that, although defendant in his answer denied that plaintiff's forearm was fractured, the testimony was uncontradicted that plaintiff's forearm was fractured; and when on the witness stand defendant made no claim further than that he did not discover any fracture, we think the jury must necessarily have found that plaintiff's forearm was fractured, and hence the refusal to give the instruction was not error.

[8, 9] As to the second instruction, the court instructed the jury that "the burden rests upon the plaintiff to prove every material allegation in his complaint, and if he has failed in this respect you should find your verdict for defendant." The error now assigned is that the court in its instruction failed to tell the jury that plaintiff must prove every material allegation "by a preponderance of the evidence." This omission we do not think of sufficient importance to justify a reversal. Furthermore, the plaintiff not only alleged negligence in examining plaintiff's forearm, but in its treatment. The proposed instruction omits this latter feature of the case.

The judgment is affirmed.

INSANE PERSONS ⊂=33(2)—GUARDIANSHIP—PROCEEDINGS—REVIEW.

Where the court's order appointing guardian for alleged incompetent person is based upon sufficient evidence to justify the order, the order will not be disturbed on appeal in absence of claim or showing that court abused its discretion in making order; the lower court having personally observed the alleged incompetent, and having had a superior opportunity to estimate the value and weight of the evidence.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

⊂=For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

In the matter of the estate and guardianship of Mary Jane Cowper, an incompetent person. From an order appointing guardian, the alleged incompetent appeals. Affirmed.

Isidore B. Dockweiler and J. Wiseman Macdonald, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. N. Goodwin and Wm. J. Variel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is a proceeding wherein it was sought to have a guardian appointed for the estate of Mary Jane Cowper. The petitioner was her sister, Margaret A. Saunders. The petition was opposed by Mary Jane Cowper herself, supported by another sister named Mrs. Julia Brown. The petitioner averred that Mary Jane Cowper was the owner and in possession of certain real and personal property in the city and county of Los Angeles, of considerable value and income; that she was of the age of 52 years, unmarried, and for several years last past had been and then was in delicate health, and by reason thereof had been and then was mentally incompetent to manage or properly take care of her said properties. The petition asked for the appointment of the Title Insurance & Trust Company of Los Angeles as the guardian of her said estate. The opposition to the petition denied its averments as to the ill health or incompetency of Mary Jane Cowper. The matter came on for hearing before the court upon this single issue on July 25, 1917, the parties supporting and opposing the petition being present in court and respectively represented by able counsel. The hearing occupied three days, during all of which time Mary Jane Cowper was present in court, and during a considerable period on two of said days was upon the witness stand and was subjected to the observation of the court and to a very careful and thorough examination as to her mental and physical condition. The respective members of the family supporting and opposing the petition were examined at length, as were also numerous witnesses familiar with her life history. After such hearing, observation, and examination, the court took the matter under advisement for some time, after which, and on September 11, 1917, its findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed, wherein the court found:

"That the said Mary Jane Cowper is not insane, but that she is incompetent because, by reason of weakness of mind, she is unable unassisted to properly manage and take care of her property, and by reason thereof would be likely to be deceived or imposed upon by artful or designing persons."

The court accordingly appointed the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank guardian of the estate, and from its order to that effect this appeal has been taken.

The sole matter discussed in the briefs of counsel upon this appeal is the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the foregoing finding and order of the trial court. Some authorities are cited on behalf of the appellant upon the value of expert evidence with which this court has no quarrel, but which would be more persuasively directed to the trial court, since they relate to the weight of such evidence. Our attention is also called to the case of Matter of Coburn, 165 Cal. 202, 131 Pac. 352, which in some of its features resembled the case at bar, and in which the order of the trial court appointing a guardian was upheld. The test of competency declared by this court in that case was evidently the one adopted by the trial court in the instant case, since its finding follows the precise wording of the former decision. We are also referred to the Estate of Schulmeyer, 171 Cal. 342, 153 Pac. 233, in which the language of this court in the Coburn Case as to the proper test of incompetency was approved, and in which also the order of the trial court appointing a guardian was affirmed. In this latter case this court very aptly said that the trial court had the advantage, not only of hearing and seeing the other witnesses, but of observing the appellant himself, and was in a far better position than we could be to determine his mental condition. The Matter of Sarah A. Watson, 168 Pac. 341, is also cited as being a case in which this court reviewed the evidence and found it insufficient to sustain the order for a guardian's appointment; but a comparison of that case with the instant case disclosed quite a difference between its facts and those of the case at bar.

Without undertaking to recite at length the testimony presented in the instant case, we are satisfied from a careful examination of the record that there was sufficient evidence before the court to justify its order, and that in view of the superior opportunity of the trial judge to estimate the weight and value of such evidence, and especially to determine the mental and physical condition of the alleged incompetent from personal observation and from her extended examination in his presence, we are not disposed to interfere with the result of its exercised discretion, in the absence of any claim or showing that such discretion has been abused.

Order affirmed.

TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (L. A. 5763.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 4, 1918.)

EXECUTION ⊂399 — SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS—PRIVILEGE.

In proceedings supplemental to execution, under Code Civ. Proc. § 717, where a trust company was averred to have in its possession property, etc., of the judgment debtor, the trust company cannot, under the provisions of Bank Act, § 103, as amended by St. 1913, p. 183, § 71, requiring trust companies to keep inviolate all communications, etc., refuse to divulge information sought on the ground it concerned a private trust.

In Bank.

Application by the Title Insurance & Trust Company, a corporation, for a writ of prohibition prayed to be directed against the Superior Court of the state of California in and for the county of Los Angeles and Grant Jackson, judge presiding. Transferred by the District Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court. Writ denied.

Erle M. Leaf and James E. Shelton, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

John W. Luter and Randall & Bartlett, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This application for a writ of prohibition was presented to the District Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District, and an alternative writ issued. Upon the hearing thus ordered, the justices of that court being unable to agree as to whether a permanent writ should issue, the matter was transferred to this court for decision.

The facts upon which the application for the writ was based are briefly these: One Charles C. Branch commenced an action in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles against George C. Peckham and H. E. Branch, and in said action recovered judgment against said defendants in the sum of $579.75 and costs of suit. Thereafter, and on March 7, 1918, an execution was issued upon such judgment in the usual form, which was delivered to the sheriff of said county for levy. On March 8, 1918, the said sheriff levied said execution upon the petitioner herein, by notifying said petitioner that all moneys, goods, credits, and debts due or owing, or any personal property in petitioner's possession or under its control, belonging to said defendants, and particularly any escrow by which defendant H. E. Branch was to receive money from Gillman Bros., or others, for the sale of Gillman's Relief Hot Springs, formerly known as San Jacinto Hot Springs, of San Jacinto, Cal., were attached by virtue of the execution, a copy of which was delivered to the petitioner. To this levy and garnishment the petitioner made no reply, whereupon, and on May 1, 1910, upon the filing of an affidavit of L. B. Randall, one of the attorneys of record of the plaintiff in said action, setting forth the fact of said garnishment and of the failure of the petitioner herein to reply thereto, and averring "that the Title Insurance & Trust Company of Los Angeles, Cal., has in its possession and under its control money and personal property belonging to the defendant H. E. Branch," and further deposing that according to the information and belief of the affiant "said Title Insurance & Trust Company has in its possession or under its control certain books, papers, and documents showing the condition and details of the said assets of said defendant," and thereupon praying for an order of said court requiring the officers of said petitioner to appear and be before said court at a designated time, there to "answer such questions as may be proper concerning the assets of said defendant H. E. Branch in the hands of or under the control of said Title Insurance & Trust Company, producing with them at said time and place all books, papers, and documents necessary to show the condition and details of said assets of said defendant in its control," the court thereupon made an order in accordance with the prayer of said application, which was duly served upon the petitioner herein, and thereafter one of the officials of said petitioner appeared before said court in response to said application and order, and a hearing was then had thereon, at which hearing the said official of said petitioner was asked the question as to whether petitioner had in its possession or under its control any property belonging to the defendant H. E. Branch, to which question the said official of the petitioner answered that the petitioner had no property in its possession or under its control belonging to the said defendant, "unless the same was in connection with a private trust." He was thereupon asked if the petitioner had in its possession or under its control any property belonging to the defendant H. E. Branch in connection with any private trust. This question he declined to answer for the stated reason that the petitioner was required under section 103 of the California Bank Act, under which it was organized, to keep inviolate all communications and writings made to or by any trustee touching upon the existence, condition, management, and administration of any private trust confided to such trustee, except in certain instances provided in said section within which exceptions this proceeding did not come. Thereupon the court made an order that the hearing be continued to the 15th day of May, 1918, and that said court on said day would require the said official of said petitioner to fully answer all questions relating to the existence and condition of any private trust of which the petitioner herein might be trustee, and in which the said defendant H. E. Branch might have any beneficial interest. It is the making and threatened enforcement of this order which the petitioner herein claims is beyond the jurisdiction of said court.

The section of the Bank Act of California (St. 1909, p. 108, § 103, as amended by St. 1913, p. 183, § 71) upon which this claim is predicated reads as follows:

"Any trust company exercising the powers and performing the duties provided for in this act, shall, except as herein otherwise provided, keep inviolate all communications and writings made to or by said trustee touching the existence, condition, management and administration of any private trust confided to it; and no creditor or stockholder of any such trust company shall be entitled to disclosure or knowledge of any such communication or writing: Provided, however, that the president, vice president, manager, trust officer, secretary or regularly employed attorney of any such trust company shall be entitled to knowledge of any such communication or writing; and provided further, that in any suit or proceeding touching the existence, condition, management or administration of any such trust, the court wherein the same is pending may require disclosure of any such communication or writing."

It is the concluding proviso of the foregoing section of the Bank Act which, according to the respondents' contention herein, justifies the making and enforcement of the order which the petitioner herein objects to and seeks to avoid. We are satisfied that the respondents' contention in that behalf must be sustained. It is true that the original action in which the judgment was entered which is sought to be enforced by the writ of execution which was served upon the petitioner did not involve any matter touching the existence, condition, management, or administration of the private trust which the petitioner claims the right to keep inviolate; but we think it is equally true that the proceeding in which the order of the court complained of was immediately made was such a proceeding as was contemplated in the final proviso of said Bank Act as being one touching the existence, condition, management, and administration of such trust as to authorize the court to require a disclosure of any communication or writing within the possession or knowledge of the petitioner with regard to the same. The proceeding in question was one instituted under and in accordance with the provisions of chapter 2 of title 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure, entitled "Proceedings Supplemental to Execution." Section 717 of said Code, under that title, reads as follows:

"After the issuing or return of an execution against property of the judgment debtor, or of any one of several debtors in the same judgment, and upon proof by affidavit or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the judge, that any person or corporation has property of such judgment debtor, or is indebted to him in an amount exceeding fifty dollars, the judge may, by an order, require such person or corporation, or any officer or member thereof, to appear at a specified time and place before him, or a referee appointed by him, and answer concerning the same."

It thus appears that the supplemental proceedings provided for by this chapter, and particularly by the above-quoted section thereof, have for their direct and immediate purpose and procedure the making of such inquiries of persons other than the judgment debtor as may serve to reveal to his execution creditor and to the court the existence and condition of such property or interests of such debtor as may be within the possession or control of such persons. It is a proceeding, therefore, "touching the existence, condition, management, and administration" of any trust with which the petitioner herein may be invested respecting property or interests of the judgment debtor, and which have thereby been placed in its possession or under its control. It comes, therefore, within the exception embraced in the foregoing final proviso of the Bank Act, and under its terms the court had and has power to make the precise inquiry which the petitioner herein seeks to prohibit.

It may be suggested in conclusion that the construction of the foregoing section of the Bank Act for which the petitioner contends would open a convenient door to judgment debtors behind which they might safely sequester their property and effects subject to execution, and thereby set at defiance and render practically ineffectual the salutary provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to proceedings supplemental to execution.

The writ is denied.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Reid Whitelaw against Gideon D. McGilliard. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

R. T. Lightfoot, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff was awarded by a jury $1,000 damages for personal injuries, and judgment was entered accordingly. From said judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

[1] The accident occurred at the intersection of Broadway and Temple street, in the city of Los Angeles. Defendant's son, a young man 17 years of age, was driving defendant's automobile at an admittedly unlawful rate of speed, that is, from 20 to 25 miles an hour, northward on the east side of Broadway, and he did not modify the speed of the motor vehicle as he approached the intersection of Broadway and Temple street. Plaintiff was crossing Broadway at Temple street, coming from the west on a motorcycle. The two vehicles came into collision east of the central point of the intersection of the two streets. There was a conflict of testimony regarding the exact point and the precise manner of the contact. Some of the witnesses testified that the motorcycle ran into the automobile, others that the left front wheel of the motor car struck the motorcycle, dismounting the rider, and that the rear wheel of the larger vehicle passed over his legs.

Of course, it is not the province of this court to review the conclusion reached by the jury upon such testimony, if there be any rational basis for the verdict.

According to plaintiff's testimony, as he was proceeding at a very low rate of speed across Broadway a truck was going south on that street. He passed behind the truck a little south of the center line of Temple street. He was then moving, he said, at the rate of about 4 miles an hour. When he emerged from behind the truck, he saw the automobile moving north on the east side of Broadway at a rate of 20 to 25 miles an hour. (Anything over 10 miles an hour at such an intersection was contrary to ordinance.) He further testified:

"When I saw the automobile first, I was only about 4 feet from it. The automobile came in contact with my motorcycle, the left front wheel of the automobile striking the motorcycle which I was riding. I did not hear any signal given by the automobile, no gong or blowing of horn. The collision occurred a little north of the center of Temple street and on the west side of Broadway."

The witness also testified that as soon as he saw the approaching automobile he did all in his power to stop the motorcycle.

The testimony of the young man who was driving the motor car was not entirely consistent. Upon his cross-examination he said:

"I saw the motorcycle when it was about 4 feet from me. I did not slacken the speed of the car as I went up Broadway, and I did not blow any horn."

But upon his direct examination he had testified, among other things:

"When I had reached a point at about 10 feet to the south of the southeast corner of Temple street and Broadway, I first noticed the motorcycle. I knew I had the right of way, and so I proceeded right along. The motorcycle was, at the time I first saw it, about the same distance beyond the intersection of Temple and Broadway on the west. The motorcycle looked to me as though it would pass behind me, as I had about cleared the railroad tracks in the the center of Temple street going north, and was several feet north of the center of Temple street on the west side of Broadway when the motorcycle which was coming down the center of Temple street took a sharp turn to the north and struck the automobile on the running board just back of the front wheel."

[2-4] The local ordinance, which was introduced in evidence, provided that the drivers of vehicles traveling north and south had the right of way over those proceeding east and west, and it is argued that since the plaintiff was violating that ordinance by failing to yield the right of way, and was disobeying the rule of the road by seeking to cross Broadway north of the middle line of Temple street extended, his own negligence was the proximate cause of his injury, and that therefore the judgment should not be allowed to stand. There is no force in this argument. The jury may have believed the first statement of defendant's son, which placed him about 40 feet from the median line of Temple street extended and 10 feet from the south line when he saw the plaintiff already passing across the street. The plaintiff could not be expected to yield the right of way to one so far away, whose duty it was to slow down in crossing the intersection. When the defendant's son drove the vehicle upon that space, he was going at an unlawful rate of speed, which he maintained. The rule regarding right of way does not impose upon the person crossing the street the duty of assuming that the other will continue across an intersecting street without slowing down, as required by law. It is clear that if the defendant's son had been going at a lawful rate of speed, or had slowed down as required by law, there would have been ample opportunity for the safe passage of the motorcycle. If the driver of the motorcycle was violating the rule of the road by being north of the median line of Temple street extended across the intersection, it cannot be justly said as a matter of law that such violation, if any, was the proximate cause of the injury. The questions of the defendant's negligence and the plaintiff's alleged contributory negligence were duly submitted to the jury upon instructions of which we find no criticism in the brief of appellant. It was a case in which the jury might determine from the evidence whether there had been negligence or not, and who was guilty thereof.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of G. W. Hume, deceased. From an order admitting to probate, on the petition of C. E. Hume, the will of the deceased, Dorothy Hume Reeves appeals. Affirmed.

Edgar D. Peixotto, of San Francisco, Chapman & Trefethen, of Oakland, and Metson, Drew & Mackenzie, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Abe P. Leach, of Oakland, and Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. G. W. Hume died on February 12, 1912, a resident of Alameda county. He left a will executed on December 8, 1908. By its terms his entire estate was left to his wife, Annie E. Hume, and it declared that he intentionally left none of it to his children or grandchildren. After making the will, he transferred to his wife all of his property. Upon his death it was believed that he left no estate, and for that reason his will was not presented for probate. On January 15, 1917, nearly five years after Hume's death, the appellant, Dorothy Hume Reeves, a grandchild, who would have been entitled to succeed to one-sixth of his property if there was any, if he had died intestate, began an action to quiet title or to recover an undivided one-sixth of the estate, claiming that the said Hume died intestate, that he was seized of a large amount of property and that he had not transferred it to his said wife. On January 23, 1917, C. E. Hume, a son of the decedent, filed in the superior court a petition for the probate of the aforesaid will. Dorothy Hume Reeves appeared in said proceedings and filed a paper purporting to be a demurrer to the petition for probate, assigning as cause therefor that the proceeding for such probate was barred by the provisions of sections 343 and 363 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court overruled the demurrer, heard the testimony in support of the petition, and thereupon made an order admitting the will to probate. From this order Dorothy Hume Reeves appealed.

The petition was originally set for hearing on February 7, 1917. Of this due notice was given. The hearing was continued to April 16, 1917, and on April 2, 1917, the aforesaid demurrer was filed to the petition. After the overruling of the demurrer, which took place on April 16, 1917, the appellant asked for a continuance to enable her to "prepare and file such further papers in answer, or opposition or contest" as her counsel should advise. The court refused to continue the case for that purpose. This ruling and the overruling of the demurrer are assigned as errors.

No error is shown in the order refusing a continuance. The appellant stated nothing to show that she had any grounds of contest or opposition to the probate of the will other than that it was barred by the statute of limitations. That point had already been presented to the court and decided against her by the order overruling the demurrer. She did not show that she had any cause for resisting the probate of the will on the ground of fraud, undue influence, insanity, or defective execution. Under these circumstances the court was justified in refusing any continuance.

The respondent makes the preliminary objection that the law does not authorize a demurrer to a petition for the probate of a will. There is no special provision for such practice in the chapter on probate of wills; but, if such a proceeding may be barred by the statute of limitations, we do not consider that the mode by which the point is presented is important, for, in the event that it is good, it must be considered at some stage of the proceeding. We shall therefore disregard the objection and proceed to consider the proposition on its merits. It is a new question in this state.

Section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that—

"An action for relief not hereinbefore provided for must be commenced within four years after the cause of action shall have accrued."

This section is a part of title II, pt. II, of that Code. Nowhere in that title is there any provision for a limitation against proceedings to probate wills. Consequently it is not thereinbefore provided for, and, if it comes within the meaning of the word "action" and is a matter to which the phrase "cause of action shall have accrued" could be applied, it would be included in the four-year period. It is contended that this conclusion must follow from the terms of section 363, which is a part of the same title. It reads as follows:

"The word 'action' as used in this title is to be considered, whenever it is necessary to do so, as including a special proceeding of a civil nature."

In the introduction the Code divides civil remedies into two classes, namely, actions and special proceedings. Section 21. It then defines an "action" as:

"An ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which one party prosecutes another for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense." Section 22.

"Every other remedy is a special proceeding." Section 23.

The body of the Code is divided into four parts stated in the outline preceding the text in the original official edition of the statute enacting it, as follows:

"Part I. Courts of Justice. Part II. Civil Actions. Part III. Special Proceedings of a Civil Nature. Part IV. Evidence."

The detailed outline of the subjects treated in part III, following the subhead "Special Proceedings of a Civil Nature," enumerates the several proceedings that come within that description, designating them separately as "Titles." Title I embraces proceedings in review, in mandamus, and in prohibition. Title II relates to election contests; title III to summary proceedings, judgments by confession, submissions without action, discharge of persons imprisoned on civil process and proceedings in unlawful detainer and forcible entry. Title IV relates to the enforcement of liens; title V to contempts; title VI to dissolution of corporations; title VII to eminent domain; title VIII to escheated estates; title IX to change of names; and title X to arbitrations. The subhead of title XI, which is here involved, is "Proceedings in Probate Courts." This title is divided into twelve chapters, and it includes, among other things, proceedings to probate wills and appoint executors, proceedings to appoint administrators, proceedings to determine heirship, proceedings to sell property of the decedent, and proceedings to appoint guardians. An application to sell real estate of a decedent is a proceeding against the heirs in whom the property vested at the death of the ancestor. Estate of Crosby, 55 Cal. 580. If a proceeding to probate a will is a special proceeding of a civil nature, as that phrase is used in section 363, it must be admitted that the other proceedings just mentioned are also of that character.

It is our opinion that sections 343 and 363 do not apply to a proceeding for the probate of a will. The reasons for this conclusion we proceed to state.

The chapter of the Code relating to the probate of wills does not provide for opposition to such probate on the ground of the bar of the statute of limitations, but, in effect, excludes it from the category of grounds allowed as a basis for such opposition. Section 1299 declares that any person interested in the estate "may at any time after the death of the testator, petition the court having jurisdiction to have the will proved." This implies that there is no arbitrary time limit. Section 1300 specifies the facts which must be alleged in the petition, and sections 1303 and 1304 prescribe the notice to be given of the hearing and the mode of service on the heirs. Section 1306 provides that unless the parties appear at the time set for the hearing the court "must require proof that the notice has been given, which being made, the court must hear testimony in proof of the will." Section 1307 provides that "any person interested may appear and contest the will." Section 1308 declares that, "if no person appears to contest the probate of a will, the court may admit it to probate," on proof of its execution and of the sanity of the testator. The proceedings to be had if there is a contest of the will are set forth in article 2 of the chapter, embracing sections 1312 to 1318. Section 1312 provides that the person contesting the will "must file written grounds of opposition to the probate thereof" and serve the same upon the petitioner and other residents of the county interested in the estate, to which grounds of opposition any of such interested parties may demur. If the demurrer is overruled the proponents may answer. The issues of fact which the contestant may raise upon such contest are also specified. They are: (1) The competency of the decedent to make a will; (2) his freedom from duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence; (3) the due execution of the will; (4) "any other questions substantially affecting the validity of the will." There is no provision for an issue or a finding upon any other facts, or for presenting any other grounds of opposition to the probate. The fourth ground refers only to matters affecting the validity of the will. It does not include a plea of the statute of limitations, which, in effect, concedes its validity, but interposes the statute as a bar. Provision is made for the submission of the issues above enumerated to a jury and for findings thereon by the jury, or by the court if a jury is not demanded. Section 1317 declares:

"If the court is satisfied, upon the proof taken, or from the facts found by the jury, that the will was duly executed, and that the testator at the time of its execution was of sound and disposing mind and not acting under duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence, a certificate of the proof and the facts found, signed by the judge and attested by the seal of the court, must be attached to the will."

This excludes the bar of the statute of limitations from consideration as one of the matters which may be shown in opposition to the probate. This is further emphasized by section 1314, which, in substance, declares that, if upon the verdict of the jury the facts mentioned in section 1317 as aforesaid appear to be established, the court "must" admit the will to probate. Section 1314 thus makes it imperative that the court shall admit the will to probate if the execution is proven and the grounds of opposition authorized by section 1312 are not established. This clearly implies that no grounds of opposition other than those enumerated in section 1312 may be set up, and it leaves no place for the application of the statute of limitations.

It is further to be observed that, notwithstanding the positive and comprehensive language of sections 343 and 363, if taken literally, there can be no doubt that they cannot apply to all special proceedings of a civil nature. Proceedings for a change of name, or in arbitration, or for voluntary dissolution of a corporation, or for guardianship, or for a married woman to become a sole trader, are all within the definition of the phrase, and each is enumerated, classed, and defined as such proceeding by the Code. If the statute of limitations applied, it would begin to run against such proceedings as soon as the right to institute them accrued. Yet from the very nature of these proceedings it is obvious that neither of them could be subject to such limitation.

This construction of these Code provisions is confirmed by the long-continued and uniform practice and the universal understanding of the bench and bar of the state on the subject. It is not uncommon for a will to be offered for probate more than four years after the death of the testator and for such a will to be contested. It is a well-known fact that in searching titles preparatory to sales of real estate it is often found that there has been no administration upon the estate of some deceased person from whose heirs the vendor derives title. As our statute makes real estate of a decedent primary assets for the payment of his debts, this would be a cloud upon the title. Consequently, in such cases it has always been customary to cure the defect by administration upon the estate, regardless of the lapse of time since the death of such person. A plea of the bar of the statute of limitations in any of these cases, so far as we are aware, has never been made and is an unknown thing in our jurisprudence. The appellant does not claim that such a plea has ever been presented in any case. As instances of cases where such a plea, if it were permitted, would have been effectual to defeat the probate or the granting of letters, we cite Estate of Strong, 119 Cal. 663, 51 Pac. 1078; Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 147 Cal. 245, 81 Pac. 516; Bell v. Hudson, 73 Cal. 285, 14 Pac. 791, 2 Am. St. Rep. 791; and Estate of Yorba, 167 Pac. 854. The opinions and the records in these cases fail to show that the bar of the statute of limitations was even suggested as a defense. We have no doubt that further investigation would reveal a large number of similar cases. In Estate of Crosby, supra, 17 years had elapsed after the allowance of the claim, for the payment of which the administrator applied for an order to sell the real estate. It was urged that the proceeding was barred, not by the statute of limitations, but by the equitable doctrine of laches. The lower court denied this claim and made the order of sale. On appeal the Supreme Court said:

"We have not found it necessary to inquire whether any provision of our statute of limitations is applicable, in terms, to a proceeding of the character we have been considering. Neither of the counsel has claimed this; but, on the contrary, it was assumed by both that the statute did not apply. Since, however, it has been decided that a proceeding in the probate court is in the nature of an original proceeding against the heirs, and such proceeding is simply statutory, and is not analogous to an action conducted according to the course of the common law, it may be perhaps 'a special proceeding of a civil nature,' and, as such, subject to an appropriate section of the title of the Code of Civil Procedure which treats of limitations. Code Civ. Proc. § 363."

But it was not deemed necessary to determine the question, for the court held that under the facts appearing in the record the proceeding was barred by laches and reversed the order of sale, remanding the case with directions to dismiss the petition or deny the order. In Estate of Arguello, 85 Cal. 151, 24 Pac. 641, nineteen years had passed after the allowance of the claim involved and before the petition, which was by a creditor, for the sale of real estate to pay the claim, was filed. Circumstances to account for the delay were shown, and the court below held them a sufficient excuse, and made the order. This order was affirmed on appeal. It does not appear that the statute of limitations was pleaded; but, as this was a special proceeding of a civil nature, it would have barred the proceeding many times over, regardless of the existence of facts excusing the delay, if it were applicable in such cases. Section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1895, provides that—

If in any action to quiet title to real property, "the validity of any gift, devise, or trust, under any will, or instrument purporting to be a will, whether admitted to probate or not, shall be involved, such will, or instrument purporting to be a will, is admissible in evidence; and all questions concerning the validity of any gift, devise, or trust therein contained, save such as under the Constitution belong exclusively to the probate jurisdiction, shall be finally determined in such action."

Actions to quiet title frequently involve wills of persons who have died many years before the action was begun. The section contemplates that such a will, although not yet probated, may be construed in the action and may be afterwards probated, and it clearly shows that the Legislature did not understand that the right to probate such will would be barred if the testator had died more than four years before the petition for probate was filed.

This uniform practice and understanding of the bench and bar, and of the legislative department of the state also, is a strong argument to the effect that the statute of limitations does not apply to such proceedings. The authorities on the effect of such long acquiescence are numerous. In Bancroft v. Bancroft, 110 Cal. 378, 42 Pac. 897, the court approved the following passage from the opinion in Le Caux v. Eden, 2 Doug. 594:

"A universal silence in Westminster Hall on a subject which so frequently gives occasion for litigation is a strong argument to prove that no such action can be sustained."

In Knowles v. Yates, 31 Cal. 90, speaking of a construction by practice and implication, and not by direct decision, the court said:

"Contemporaneous exposition has ever been esteemed by jurists and statesmen as strong evidence in support of an interpretation or construction of a statute, or of a provision of the organic law in consonance with such exposition."

In Bruce v. Schuyler, 4 Gilman (Ill.) 267, 46 Am. Dec. 450, the court thus stated the rule:

"In short, it has been either directly sanctioned or acquiesced in by all the departments of government, and by its officers, with the concurrence of the entire community, without a doubt or question, for about 20 years. Such a contemporaneous construction of a statute, or constitutional law, thus approved and sanctioned, has always been regarded by the courts as equivalent to a positive law."

In Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cranch, 308 (2 L. Ed. 115), speaking of the effect of an act of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States said:

"Practice and acquiescence under it, for a period of several years, commencing with the organization of the judicial system, affords an irresistible answer, and has indeed fixed the construction. It is a contemporary interpretation of a most forcible nature."

The following are of similar import: Cronise v. Cronise, 54 Pa. 261; Faribault v. Misener, 20 Minn. 401 (Gil. 347); State v. Wrightson, 56 N. J. Law, 206, 28 Atl. 56, 22 L. R. A. 548; Kenny v. Hudspeth, 59 N. J. Law, 504, 37 Atl. 67; People v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 544; 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 931.

The Code of Civil Procedure, which includes sections 343 and 363 and the title on probate proceedings, was enacted in 1872. From that time to the present, as we have seen, it has been understood that these sections did not apply to probate proceedings, and the uniform practice has been in accordance with that understanding. Under the principles set forth in the foregoing authorities, this long-continued practice and acquiescence in the aforesaid construction must be taken as settling the question.

In support of her contention on this point, the appellant cites Gwinn v. Melvin, 9 Idaho, 202, 72 Pac. 961, 108 Am. St. Rep. 119, 2 Ann. Cas. 770; Allen v. Froman, 96 Ky.

313, 28 S. W. 497; Foster v. Jordan, 130 Ky. 449, 113 S. W. 490; and Thompson v. Penn, 149 Ky. 158, 148 S. W. 33. The Idaho statute on the subject of limitations is in the same language as the statute of this state, and so also, apparently, is the statute on probate of wills, although the latter is not referred to in the decision in Gwinn v. Melvin. The Kentucky statute of limitation is substantially the same as ours. These decisions hold that a proceeding to probate a will is barred after the time limited, in Idaho four years, in Kentucky ten years. In Foster v. Jordan it was held that the ten-year limitation applied to the probate of a foreign will which had been probated 48 years before in the state of the testator's domicile. If we were disposed to follow these decisions, they unquestionably uphold the appellant's position. But we think, in view of the specific provisions of our probate law, and the long-continued practical construction of our statute on the subject, the better rule is to the contrary.

Our conclusion is that sections 343 and 363 do not bar the proceeding, and that the court below properly allowed proof of execution and admitted the will to probate.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

CAMPBELL v. BRADBURY et al.
(L. A. 4484.)

1. INSANE PERSONS ⟸80 — TORTS — NEGLIGENT OPERATION OF PASSENGER ELEVATOR.

An incompetent was liable for the negligent operation of a passenger elevator owned by her and operated for her benefit.

2. CARRIERS ⟸316(1) — OPERATION OF PASSENGER ELEVATOR—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In action for injuries from fall of passenger elevator, it is unnecessary to prove actual negligence save as such negligence may be inferred from the injury.

3. INSANE PERSONS ⟸65—PERSONAL INJURY ACTION—INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY OF GUARDIAN.

A guardian of an incompetent is not individually liable for injuries sustained in fall of passenger elevator owned by and operated for benefit of the incompetent, merely by reason of fact that he was in active control and management of her property as guardian.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1033(5)—ERROR FAVORABLE TO APPELLANT.

Court's refusal to define the preponderance of evidence was not prejudicial to defendants, where court did instruct that plaintiff was required to produce proof "which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind" and was required to prove his case by such evidence as "satisfies and produces conviction in the mind of the jury"; the instruction given being more favorable to defendants than they were entitled to.

5. TRIAL ⟸296(3)—INSTRUCTIONS—CURE OF ERROR.

In action for injuries from fall of elevator, where defendants' requested instruction that defendants were not liable if elevator dropped from unforeseen or unknown conditions was modified by requiring jury, in holding defendants not liable, to find the safety and sufficiency of materials entering into the construction of elevator, the modification was harmless, where only evidence concerning such materials related to the safety device, the cables, and the bumpers, and court instructed jury that defendants were not liable for a defect in cables not discovered by careful examination and that defendants were not liable if elevator fell by mere accident without any fault on their part.

6. CARRIERS ⟸321(21)—FALL OF PASSENGER ELEVATOR — ACTION FOR INJURY — INSTRUCTION.

In action for injuries from fall of passenger elevator resulting from breaking of cable, it was proper for court, in instructing jury as to presumption of negligence, to omit to state that the injury must have resulted from the operation of elevator in order to raise such presumption.

7. INSANE PERSONS ⟸99—ACTION FOR INJURIES—INSTRUCTION.

In action for injuries from fall of passenger elevator, where both the incompetent owner of elevator and her guardian individually were defendants, an instruction that the fact of the accident raised presumption of negligence on part of defendants was improper in permitting a recovery against the guardian individually without affirmative proof of actual negligence on his part.

8. DAMAGES ⟸159(3)—PLEADING AND PROOF —PERMANENT DAMAGE.

Plaintiff in a personal injury action was not limited, as to his right to recover for loss of earning power, to the amount specifically alleged in his complaint as damages resulting from total inability to practice his profession up to time of filing complaint and six months thereafter, but, under general allegation of damage, could recover for subsequent permanent impairment of his capacity to practice his profession.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸930(1)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

A jury will be presumed to have rendered a verdict according to the evidence after having sworn so to do under Code Civ. Proc. § 604.

10. CARRIERS ⟸296—LIABILITY—OVERLOADING OF ELEVATOR.

Owner of building for whom passenger elevator is being operated may be liable for injuries sustained in fall of elevator, where operator was powerless to prevent overloading of elevator.

11. Damages ⟸132(6)—Excessive Damages —Personal Injuries.

Where young lawyer enjoying annual income of $9,000 suffered permanent injuries to feet, making it doubtful whether he would ever be able to walk without crutches, had been unable to practice his profession for more than six months, and was permanently crippled so as to impair his usefulness as an attorney before a court and jury, making it appear doubtful if he would ever regain former income, a $35,000 verdict was not excessive.

12. Damages ⟸208(1)—Question for Jury.

In personal injury action, it is for jury in the first instance to determine what sum will compensate plaintiff for his injuries.

13. New Trial ⟸162(1)—Damages—Excessiveness—Duty of Court.

It is for the trial judge, upon motion for new trial, to consider the testimony, and if verdict is, in his judgment, excessive, to reduce amount, or, in default thereof, to grant new trial.

14. New Trial ⟸140(3)—Affidavits—Excessive Damages.

On motion for new trial of personal injury action, affidavits that courtroom during trial was crowded with pupils of plaintiff, who was a law professor, and that there was laughter and other manifestations of approval or disapproval by such pupils, were inadmissible under Code Civ. Proc. § 658, as evidence to prove passion or prejudice for purpose of having damages reduced.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Kemper B. Campbell against Simona Bradbury, Incompetent, by Lewis Bradbury and Louisa Bradbury, guardians of the estate and person of Simona Bradbury, and Lewis Bradbury. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Judgment against Simona Bradbury affirmed, and against Lewis Bradbury reversed.

Joseph Scott, Henry T. Gage, and W. I. Foley, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

E. B. Drake and Frank P. Doherty, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff recovered a judgment against Simona Bradbury, an incompetent, and Lewis Bradbury individually, for $35,000 for damages for personal injuries due to the fall of an elevator in the Tajo building, in Los Angeles, owned by Simona Bradbury. Defendants appeal. The evidence is undisputed that the cables supporting the passenger elevator broke while it carried 20 persons, most of them law students attending a law college on the fourth floor of said building; that it dropped about four floors to the basement; that the plaintiff, a teacher in the law school, was a passenger in the elevator at the time; that his ankles were crushed and his feet permanently injured by the fall; that at the time of the accident and for a long time prior thereto Simona Bradbury had been an incompetent; that her property was under the management and control of Lewis Bradbury and Louisa Bradbury, the guardians of her person and estate; that, by reason of an arrangement between the guardians, the defendant Lewis Bradbury at the time of the accident was in general supervision and control of the building, but that the actual supervision over the building was delegated by the guardians to an agent of the Bradbury estate; and that the elevator at the time of the accident was actually being operated by an employé of the guardians.

Simona Bradbury appeared by her general guardians, and Lewis Bradbury appeared individually. They were represented by the same attorney. Upon the appeal the incompetent is represented by the attorney for the guardians, and a brief also has been filed on behalf of the incompetent by her guardian ad litem. In the latter brief it is claimed that the negligence, if any, was the negligence of the guardians, for which she is not responsible. The instructions to the jury, offered by both plaintiff and defendants, in the main did not discriminate between the liability of the incompetent and of Lewis Bradbury individually for the negligence, if any, resulting in plaintiff's injury. At the request of the plaintiff, the jury was instructed, in effect, that if they believed that Lewis Bradbury, as guardian, had employed the elevator operator in the building, and also as guardian was in charge and control of said building, by himself or agents, then he would be responsible individually for any act of negligence charged in the complaint which might be found to be the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff. These acts of negligence alleged in the complaint consisted in lowering the elevator in a careless and negligent manner, overloading the elevator, failure to apply a proper safety appliance, failure to equip the elevator properly, failure to maintain bumpers in the basement to lessen the impact of the falling elevator, carelessly permitting the safety device to become clogged with dirt, carelessly installing the elevator and cables so that the latter became crystallized, failure to provide the elevator with necessary appliances, etc. It will be observed, therefore, that the responsibility of Lewis Bradbury is based upon his duty as guardian to employ the elevator operator, and to control the building. At the trial plaintiff relied upon the breaking of the cables and the fall of the elevator to establish a prima facie case of negligence, but, in addition to the presumption arising from the nature of the accident, offered testimony to the effect that the safety device on the elevator failed to operate because it was clogged with dirt, and that the elevator was loaded beyond its rated capacity, but offered no other evidence to support the other specifications of negligence. Defendants offered evidence tending to show that the elevator and cables were in apparently good condition; that the cables were new and recently installed; that the injury must have resulted from a latent defect in the cables which could not have been discovered by the exercise of the highest degree of care; and that the safety device was in good condition. The jury was instructed that the responsibilities of the defendants were those of a carrier of passengers for hire, and that the accident raised a presumption of negligence. The liability of the incompetent was, by the instruction, based upon her ownership of the building and consequent responsibility for the injury, if caused by negligence.

Respondent relies upon the case of Morain v. Devlin, 132 Mass. 87, 42 Am. Rep. 423, wherein a lunatic, under guardianship, was held liable for an injury to the plaintiff by reason of the defect in a doorstep of a tenement building owned by the lunatic, but in the care and management of the guardian. It is there said:

"The owner of real estate is liable for such a defect, although not caused by his own neglect, but by that of persons acting in his behalf or under contract with him. * * * And there is no precedent and no reason for holding that a lunatic, having the benefits, is exempted from the responsibilities of ownership of real estate."

The guardian ad litem, on the other hand, relies upon the case of Rooney v. People's Trust Co., 61 Misc. Rep. 159, 114 N. Y. Supp. 612, under similar facts, holding the guardian, or "committee" as the guardian is there called, individually liable for injuries resulting from such a defect, and upon the case of Ward v. Rogers, 51 Misc. Rep. 299, 100 N. Y. Supp. 1058, holding that the incompetent and the guardian as such were not liable therefor. The case of Gillet v. Shaw, 117 Md. 508, 83 Atl. 394, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 87, dealing with the question of the responsibility of a lunatic for an injury resulting from a collision between a traveler upon the highway and an automobile owned by the lunatic, but purchased by the guardian, is also cited, but presents a very different state of facts. There, neither the chauffeur nor the automobile was, at the time of the accident, under the direction, control, or authority of the lunatic, and at the time the automobile was not performing any service for the lunatic, but was engaged in the business of the institution where the lunatic was confined; while in the instant case the profits derived from the operation of the elevator in question belonged to the estate of the incompetent. Both of the cases, decided by the New York Supreme Court, grew out of the ownership of property. Neither of them involved the operation of an elevator or the conduct of a business in the nature of that of a common carrier of passengers for hire. The responsibilities of a guardian in the carriage of passengers for hire on behalf of the ward would seem to be more nearly analogous to those of a receiver of a railroad in conducting its business as a carrier of passengers for hire. In each case the business is conducted by an officer of the court (Matter of Otis, 101 N. Y. 580, 585, 5 N. E. 571; 34 Cyc. 15) for and on behalf of those interested in the property. The rights of persons injured by the operation of railroads in the control of receivers are well settled by the courts.

In McNulta v. Lochridge, 141 U. S. 327, 12 Sup. Ct. 11, 35 L. Ed. 796, the Supreme Court of the United States, in passing upon the question as to whether or not a suit could be maintained against a receiver upon a cause of action arising out of the negligent operation of the railroad during the administration of a previous receiver, said:

"So long as the property of the corporation remains in the custody of the court and is administered through the agency of a receiver, such receivership is continuous and uninterrupted until the court relinquishes its hold upon the property, though its personnel may be subject to repeated changes. Actions against the receiver are in law actions against the receivership, or the funds in the hands of the receiver, and his contracts, misfeasances, negligences, and liabilities are official and not personal, and judgments against him as receiver are payable only from the funds in his hands."

See, also, Archambeau v. Platt, 173 Mass. 249, 53 N. E. 816.

The doctrine of the liability of a receiver is thus stated in Elliott on Railroads, § 576:

"His liability for acts done in the discharge of his duties is official only, and such acts bind only the trust estate. It accords with sound principle and reason that a receiver exercising the franchise of a railroad company shall be held amenable, in his official capacity, to substantially the same rules of liability that are applicable to the company while it exercises the same powers of operating the road. And this is the rule established by the great weight of modern authority. * * * The cases are practically unanimous in holding that a receiver who assumes to exercise the rights and powers of a common carrier become answerable in his official capacity for all injuries and losses sustained by persons dealing with him in that capacity to the same extent in general that the corporation would have been liable."

[1-3] In Williams v. Hays, 143 N. Y. 442, 38 N. E. 449, 26 L. R. A. 153, 42 Am. St. Rep. 743, it was held that the captain and part owner of a vessel was responsible to the other part owners for his negligence in the operation of the vessel, even though he was at the time insane, and for that reason unable properly to manage the vessel in a storm.

The authorities on the subject are there collated. If an insane person, the owner and manager of a business building, would be responsible for the negligent operation of an elevator, notwithstanding his insanity and incapacity, there seems no good reason for holding that he should be exempt therefrom because of the fact that his property was being operated for him by an agent (Pharis v. Gere, 110 N. Y. 336, 347, 18 N. E. 135, 1 L. R. A. 270) appointed by the court. Liability for elevator accidents is one of the incidents of the ownership of property equipped with elevators. This view, by which damages inflicted by the operation of an elevator are treated as an expense of maintaining the building in which it is installed, was in part the basis of a decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, where the building was owned by a charitable corporation not liable for torts. Gamble v. Vanderbilt University, 138 Tenn. 616, 200 S. W. 510, L. R. A. 1918C, 875. It was there held that such damages as may be adjudged against the owner for breaches of duty in respect of the negligent management of the elevator should be charged as expenses of the operation of the particular property, and only the residue of the income should be considered available for the uses of the charity. See, also, Stewart v. Cal. Med. M. & B. Ass'n, 176 Pac. 46. The same reasons which hold the property of a railroad, in the hands of a receiver, liable for the negligent operation of its trains, and which induced the Supreme Court of Tennessee to hold the owner of the building liable for damages in the case of Gamble v. Vanderbilt University, supra, seem to apply with equal force to the instant case, and require that the incompetent be held liable for the negligent operation of an elevator owned by and operated for the benefit of the incompetent. The decisions of this court in relation to the responsibility of a decedent's estate and of the executor of a will for torts, cited in behalf of the incompetent (Eustace v. Jahns, 38 Cal. 3, and Sterrett v. Barker, 119 Cal. 492, 51 Pac. 695) each related to an entirely different state of facts, and the principle thereof cannot be applied here. It is not necessary in a case of this kind for plaintiff to prove actual negligence, save as such negligence may be inferred from the injury to the plaintiff by the operation of the elevator. This rule is established for the benefit of the passenger, and it would be a harsh rule, indeed, by which to measure the individual responsibility of a guardian. We think therefore, on the whole, that the rules relating to the obligations and liabilities for torts of a receiver operating the properties of a carrier of passengers for hire furnish the true test of the individual liability of a guardian and the liability of the ward in this case. The instruction therefore, basing the individual liability of Lewis Bradbury solely upon the fact that he was in the active control and management of the property as guardian, was erroneous, and, for the same reason, the instructions to the effect that the defendant Simona Bradbury was liable for the injuries received by the plaintiff, based upon the theory that the defendant was charged with the liability of a common carrier of passengers for hire, were correct.

Some other alleged errors require consideration.

[4] Appellants complain of the refusal of the court to give an instruction defining "the preponderance of evidence." At the request of the plaintiff, however, two instructions, W and X, were given on the measure of proof required of the plaintiff. Instruction W is as follows:

"While it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove his case, the law does not require from him absolute demonstration—that is, such a degree of proof excluding possibility of error as produces absolute certainty, because such proof is rarely possible. Moral certainty is all that is required, or that degree of proof which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind."

A similar instruction was held by this court, in the case of People v. Miller, 171 Cal. 649, 652, 154 Pac. 468, to be the equivalent of one requiring proof beyond a reasonable doubt. The same may be said of instruction X, as follows:

"By a preponderance of evidence is not necessarily meant a greater number of witnesses; but, if the plaintiff has proven his case by such evidence as satisfies and produces conviction in the mind of the jury, then he has proven his case by a preponderance of the evidence." People v. Miller, supra.

As these instructions on the measure of proof required of plaintiff were more favorable to the defendants than they were entitled to, they were not prejudiced by the failure of the court to give the instruction requested by them.

[5] Defendants offered an instruction to the effect that if the jury found from a preponderance of the evidence that the elevator was in proper condition and repair at the time it dropped and was properly operated at said time, and that it dropped from unforeseen and unknown conditions that could not have been guarded against by the exercise of the utmost care and prudence on the part of the defendants, their verdict "must be for the defendants." The court modified the instruction by an additional proviso requiring they should also find "the safety and sufficiency of the materials entering into the construction of the elevator and its appliances and the safety and sufficiency of the mechanical construction of these materials." The only evidence concerning the safety and sufficiency of the materials entering into the construction of the elevator and its appliances related to the safety device, the cables, and the bumpers. The jury was elsewhere instructed that, "if the fall of the elevator happened by mere accident without any fault on the part of the defendants, plaintiff could not recover," and also that defendants were not responsible for a defect or fault in the cables "not discoverable upon a reasonable and careful examination, according to the best known tests reasonably practicable." No prejudicial error resulted from the modification of the instruction.

[6, 7] Defendants complain of an instruction:

"That it is only necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he was being carried on the elevator; that there was an accident to the elevator in which he was riding, and when the accident is proved the law presumes negligence, and the burden of proof shifts upon the defendants to show, either that the accident could not have been avoided by the exercise of the highest degree of care on their part, or that said accident was caused by inevitable casualty, or some other cause which human foresight could not prevent."

The accident and injuries having resulted from the breaking of the cables, it was proper to omit the usual qualification in such instruction that the injury must have resulted from the operation of the elevator, in order to raise the presumption of negligence. The instruction, however, predicates the individual liability of the guardian, Lewis Bradbury, upon the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, and thus permits a recovery against him without affirmative proof of actual negligence on his part, and for that reason was erroneous. The criticism of the instruction that the burden of proof "shifts" is sufficiently disposed of by our previous decisions. Steele v. Electric Ry. Co., 168 Cal. 378, 143 Pac. 718; Valente v. Sierra Ry. Co., 151 Cal. 540, 91 Pac. 481; Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 22 Pac. 266, 5 L. R. A. 498, 13 Am. St. Rep. 175; Worden v. Central Fire Proof Bldg. Co., 172 Cal. 94, 155 Pac. 839; Champagne v. Hamburger, 169 Cal. 683, 147 Pac. 954.

[8, 9] At plaintiff's request, the court gave the rule as to the measure of damages substantially as stated in Storrs v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 134 Cal. 91, 66 Pac. 72. In addition thereto, at the request of the defendants, the court instructed the jury as to the elements of damages, stating that they were "to assess plaintiff's damage at such sum as you may believe from all the evidence will compensate him for all the injuries sustained by him, if any, by reason of said accident." They are also instructed "not to allow any speculative damages or to consider any element of damages which is remote or imaginary or uncertain or conjectural or speculative," etc. From a critical analysis of the complaint, defendants contend that the plaintiff has limited his right to recover for damages for loss of earning power to the amount specifically alleged in his complaint, namely, $2,500 up to the time of filing the complaint, and $5,000 for six months after the filing of the complaint. But this allegation relates to the injuries suffered from the "total" inability of the plaintiff to practice his profession, and the pleader's theory was that after the lapse of six months he would be able to take up his professional duties, but with impaired capacity to carry them on. The element of damage resulting from this impairment was covered by the general allegation of damage in the complaint and properly presented to the jury by the instructions. Nor is the instruction complained of susceptible of the construction that the jury were thereby told to disregard the evidence in determining the damages plaintiff suffered by reason of his loss of earning capacity, as was the case in Rouse v. Pacific Ry. Co., 27 Cal. App. 772, 151 Pac. 164. The effect of the instruction was merely to inform the jury that it was not necessary in order for them to estimate future damage for any witness to testify thereto. Other instructions emphasized the fact that they were to be guided by the evidence in determining the amount of damages to be awarded the plaintiff, and the jury, of course, were sworn to render a verdict "according to the evidence" (Code Civ. Proc. § 604), and it is presumed that they did so.

[10] Defendants offered an instruction to the effect that, if the operator of the elevator was powerless to prevent the overloading thereof, "the verdict should be for the defendants." This is not the law. Many other elements entered into the question of negligence in this case.

[11-13] It is claimed that the verdict is excessive. The evidence shows that the plaintiff was a comparatively young attorney and was making an income of $9,000 per year. At the time of the trial he came into the courtroom using two crutches, and it was a serious question whether he would ever be able to walk without the aid of crutches. He had suffered great pain and had been unable to transact any business for more than six months at the time the case was tried; was permanently crippled in such fashion as to impair his usefulness as an attorney before a court and jury. The natural effect of his injury was that he would lose some of his clients, some part of the business already on hand, and that, on becoming able to transact business again, if he ever regained his former income, it would require a long time to do so. It was the duty of the jury in the first instance to determine what sum would compensate the plaintiff for his injuries. It was the duty of the trial judge, upon the motion for new trial, to consider the testimony, and, if the verdict was in his judgment too large, to either provide for a reduction of the judgment, or, in default thereof, grant a new trial. In view of the earning capacity of the plaintiff, the nature and character of his injuries, his permanent handicap in re-establishing and conducting his practice, we cannot say that the verdict is excessive. Aldrich v. Palmer, 24 Cal. 513; Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 255, 116 Pac. 513.

[14] For the purpose of proving "passion or prejudice" on the part of the jury in awarding damages, defendants offered certain affidavits upon the motion for new trial, to the effect that the courtroom was crowded with law students, pupils of the plaintiff, and that during the trial there was laughter and other manifestations of approval and disapproval of the proceedings by such students. It is sufficient to say upon this subject that on the question of excessive damages these affidavits were not admissible as evidence. Section 658, Code Civ. Proc.; Harrison v. Sutter Street Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 157, 161, 47 Pac. 1019; Doolin v. Omnibus Cable Co., 125 Cal. 141, 144, 57 Pac. 774.

BRINCK v. BRADBURY et al. (L. A. 4560.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1918. Rehearing Denied Jan. 2, 1919.)

1. STIPULATIONS ⟸14(7)—EXPERT EVIDENCE —QUALIFICATIONS.

Where qualifications of expert witness were stipulated to, it was not proper to cross-examine witness as to his qualifications.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸259 — FAILURE TO EXCEPT.

Conduct of witness will not be held prejudicial error on appeal, where no exception was taken.

3. TRIAL ⟸191(8)—INSTRUCTIONS—COMMENT ON EVIDENCE.

In personal injury action, an instruction, authorizing damages in such reasonable sum as jury shall award plaintiff on account of pain and anxiety she has suffered by reason of her injuries, was not objectionable as assuming that plaintiff had in fact suffered pain and anxiety, though there was testimony that plaintiff was stolid and reticent concerning her injuries.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1064(2)—REVIEW— HARMLESS ERROR.

In personal injury action, an instruction as to measure of damages recoverable, if erroneous by reason of assuming that plaintiff suffered pain and anxiety, was harmless, where plaintiff's foot was twisted at right angles to proper position, the bone broken and protruding, and the back permanently injured.

5. DAMAGES ⟸208(1)—JURY QUESTION.

In personal injury action, the amount which would compensate plaintiff for injuries received was for jury under proper instructions of court.

6. NEW TRIAL ⟸76(1)—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES —DISCRETION.

Trial court has wide discretion to grant new trial where, in its opinion, considering the weight of evidence, verdict is excessive.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸930(1)—REVIEW— PRESUMPTION.

On appeal from judgment for plaintiff in personal injury action after trial court denied motion for new trial on ground that verdict was excessive, the testimony will be viewed most favorably to plaintiff.

8. DAMAGES ⟸132(3)—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES— PERSONAL INJURY ACTION.

Where attractive young woman 25 years of age, a student of law, was so permanently crippled in foot and ankle that she will never be able to walk without limp, and her spine so permanently injured that at time of trial she was unable to occupy ordinary chair, and her nervous system permanently impaired, extensive atrophy of the muscles of the back existing and increasing, a $17,354.80 judgment was not excessive.

9. INSANE PERSONS ⟸80—LIABILITY FOR INJURIES.

An incompetent is liable for injuries received from negligent operation of passenger elevator in a building owned by the incompetent.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Grace Brinck against Simona Bradbury, an incompetent, by Lewis Bradbury and another, guardians of the estate and person of Simona Bradbury, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Joseph Scott, Henry T. Gage, and W. I. Foley, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Isidore B. Dockweiler and Dockweiler & Mott, all of Los Angeles (G. C. O'Connell, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for Isidore B. Dockweiler, guardian ad litem.

WILBUR, J. [1, 2] This is an appeal from a judgment rendered against the defendants Simona Bradbury, incompetent, and Lewis Bradbury, for damages for personal injuries received by the plaintiff by the falling of a passenger elevator in a building owned by the defendant, Simona Bradbury. The same accident is referred to in Campbell v. Bradbury, 176 Pac. 685, filed herewith. Defendants admitted liability, and the only issue tried was as to the amount of damages. Upon the trial an objection to a question asked by defendants on the cross-examination of a witness testifying for plaintiff was sustained. Defendants claim that the question was proper for the purpose of testing the qualifications of the physician as an expert. As his qualifications were stipulated to, there was no error in sustaining the objection. Defendants claim that prejudicial error occurred on the trial by reason of the fact that plaintiff's physician, called by her to testify to her injuries, without consulting or advising plaintiff's attorney thereof, while on the witness stand requested the plaintiff to leave the room before he testified as to her injuries. The reason given by him, after plaintiff retired from the room, was that he did not wish to testify in her presence that her injuries were permanent, for fear of the bad effect upon her mind and nervous system of such a declaration by him. Plaintiff in her complaint alleged and verified a statement that she was permanently injured, and it is therefore claimed that in this apparent effort of the physician to keep her from the knowledge of his opinion of her injuries he was not acting in good faith, but for the purpose of arousing the sympathy of the jury. The conduct of the witness was entirely consistent with his sworn statement to the effect that plaintiff was permanently injured in her nervous system and added nothing thereto. It is a sufficient answer, however, to defendants' contention, to say that no exception thereto was taken at the time.

[3, 4] Defendants complain of an instruction substantially the same as that given on the measure of damages in the case of Storrs v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 134 Cal. 91, 66 Pac. 72, and particularly the item therein "such reasonable sum as the jury shall award her on account of pain and anxiety she has suffered by reason of her injury." It is claimed that this amounted to an instruction on the part of the court that the plaintiff had suffered pain and anxiety by reason of her injury. Even if it be conceded that a critical analysis of this instruction might lead to the conclusion that the court assumed that the plaintiff had in fact suffered pain and anxiety, in view of the severe character of the injuries suffered by the plaintiff, her foot being twisted at right angles to the position that it ought to assume, the bone being broken and protruding from the flesh, the back permanently injured, and the plaintiff facing the prospect of going through life a cripple, there could be no prejudicial error in such an instruction to the jury on the theory that it assumed that she had in fact suffered both pain and anxiety. Nor does the testimony that the plaintiff was stolid and reticent concerning her injuries make the instruction objectionable.

Defendants offered an instruction predicated upon the theory that the damages suffered by the plaintiff were in part the result of malpractice by the physician who had her case in charge. There was no evidence or pleading upon which such an instruction could properly be based, and therefore no error in its refusal.

[5-7] It is claimed that the verdict and judgment for $17,354.80 was excessive. The amount which would compensate the plaintiff for the injuries received by her was to be decided by the jury under proper instructions from the court, and subject to the wide discretion vested in a trial court to grant a new trial where in its opinion considering the weight of the evidence, the verdict was excessive. The trial court by its refusal to grant a new trial has left the defendants to such remedies as they may have in this court for an excessive verdict. Here it is assumed that the verdict is based upon the testimony most favorable to the plaintiff and all the inferences most favorable to her to be drawn therefrom.

[8] The plaintiff, an attractive young woman, 25 years of age, a student of law, was so permanently crippled in the left foot and ankle that she will never be able to walk without a limp. Her spine between the neck and middle of the waist is permanently injured, so that at the time of the trial she was unable to occupy an ordinary chair, but spent most of her time in a Morris chair. Her nervous system is permanently impaired. Extensive atrophy of the muscles of the back already exists and is increasing and will continue to increase. Without stating in further detail the nature and character of the injuries, we cannot say, as a matter of law, that the verdict of the jury is so disproportionate to the injuries as to justify the interference of this court.

[9] The incompetent is liable for the injuries received by the plaintiff from the negligent operation of the elevator. Campbell v. Bradbury (opinion filed herewith), 176 Pac. 685.

Judgment affirmed.

38 Cal. App. 441

Ex parte BOUCHARD. (Cr. 820.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 16, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1206(3) — JUDGMENT—INDETERMINATE SENTENCE.

An indeterminate sentence applied to an offense committed before the indeterminate sentence law took effect is absolutely void, as a sentence should be given under the laws in effect at time crime was committed.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸977(1)—SENTENCE—VALIDITY.

Though court has jurisdiction of defendant and offense charged, a judgment, to be valid, must be one which court has power to pronounce.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸993—JUDGMENT—PASSING OF INVALID SENTENCE—CORRECTION.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 1191 and 1202, as amended in 1909 (St. 1909, p. 898), where sentence pronounced by court was void because passed under indeterminate sentence law, which had not taken effect at time crime was committed, a sentence could be pronounced later; the case standing as though no sentence had ever been passed.

4. JUDGMENT ⟸486(1) — COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A void judgment in a criminal case could be either directly or collaterally attacked.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸192, 193¼, New, vol. 19 Key-No. Series—SENTENCE—JEOPARDY.

Defendant who by appeal or habeas corpus causes a second sentence to be imposed upon himself ordinarily will not be heard to claim twice in jeopardy.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸168—SECOND SENTENCE—JEOPARDY.

Court, having pronounced void sentence, could not, after defendant had served nine months thereof, resentence him, where such resentence was not on appeal or habeas corpus proceedings brought by defendant; such sentence placing defendant twice in jeopardy.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1188 — INVALID SENTENCE—REMANDING PRISONER.

In view of Pen. Code, § 1484, where sentence was invalid because pronounced under indeterminate sentence law, though offense charged was committed before such law took effect, and resentence passed after prisoner had served nine months was void because placing prisoner twice in jeopardy, the Court of Appeals, where prisoner has already served the term of imprisonment fixed by the resentence, will on habeas corpus release prisoner and not remand him for a valid judgment to be entered.

Application by Edwin Bouchard for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner discharged.

Petitioner, in pro. per.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. The petitioner filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, seeking thereby to be discharged from the custody of the warden of San Quentin state prison. From the petition and the return thereto it appears that heretofore an information was filed in the superior court of San Diego county charging the petitioner with the crime of robbery, alleged to have been committed on the 14th day of March, 1917. The petitioner pleaded guilty to the crime of grand larceny. October 4, 1917, he was sentenced to "imprisonment in a state prison of the state of California for the term prescribed by law." He was received at the prison October 6, 1917. Later, on the motion of the district attorney of San Diego, the petitioner was taken back to San Diego, and on May 13, 1918, he was sentenced to "imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California at San Quentin for the term of one year"; and it is admitted that he has earned his credits under section 1588 of the Penal Code.

Under these facts and the law applicable thereto, is the petitioner entitled to be discharged?

[1-5] The crime alleged against the petitioner was committed before July 27, 1917, the date upon which the indeterminate sentence law took effect, and as to him it is an ex post facto law, and not applicable. He should have been sentenced in the first instance under the laws in effect when the crime was committed. Ex parte Lee (Sup.) 171 Pac. 958. It is a common statement that a judgment is not void if the court pronouncing it has jurisdiction of the defendant and of the offense charged. Ex parte Gibson, 31 Cal. 619, 627, 91 Am. Dec. 546; Ex parte Bigelow, 113 U. S. 328, 330, 331, 5 Sup. Ct. 542, 28 L. Ed. 1005. That rule has at least one well-defined qualification, which is that the judgment must be one which the trial court has power to pronounce. In re Bonner, 151 U. S. 242, 258, 14 Sup. Ct. 323, 38 L. Ed. 149; 1 Bailey, Habeas Corpus, § 51. That qualification of the rule was not called to the attention of this court when it was considering the case of Ex parte Silva, 175 Pac. 481. When the trial court, in passing the first sentence, applied the indeterminate sentence law to a crime committed before that law took effect, it attempted to exercise a power which had not been conferred on it, and such sentence was absolutely void. In re Bonner, supra; Ex parte Lee, supra. As the act was absolutely void, the case then stood as though sentence had never been pronounced, and therefore a sentence could later be pronounced. Such was the rule before sections 1191 and 1202 of the Penal Code were amended in 1909 by St. 1909, p. 898 (In re Smith, 152 Cal. 566, 568, 93 Pac. 191); and, as applicable to the facts now before us, the amendment to those sections did not change the rule (Ex parte Lee [Sup.] 171 Pac. 958). As its judgment of October 4, 1917, was absolutely void, the trial court, or any other court, could attack such judgment, either directly or collaterally. People v. Dodge, 104 Cal. 487, 38 Pac. 203. The trial court, therefore, had power on May 13, 1918, to vacate its former judgment, but the question then arises as to its power to enter a second judgment. If the defendant in a criminal case by appeal or habeas corpus causes a second sentence to be imposed upon himself, ordinarily he will not be heard to claim twice in jeopardy. Com. v. Murphy, 174 Mass. 369, 54 N. E. 860, 48 L. R. A. 393, 75 Am. St. Rep. 353; note to In re Taylor, as reported in 45 L. R. A. 136; Marshall v. Texas and note as reported in L. R. A. 1915A, 526. When the defendant was not the actor in bringing about the second sentence, the authorities hold that he should be discharged because a second sentence would place the defendant twice in jeopardy. In those cases it was said that the question did not turn on whether the second judgment was entered during the term or after the term, or whether the first judgment was valid or void; but it depended upon whether the prisoner had served a part of the term. Ex parte Lange, 85 U. S. (18 Wall.) 163, 175, 21 L. Ed. 872; Feeley's Case, 66 Mass. (12 Cush.) 598; People v. Whitson, 74 Ill. 20; Re Jones, 35 Neb. 499, 53 N. W. 468; Rutland v. State, 14 Ga. App. 752, 82 S. E. 293; Smith v. Court, 132 Iowa, 603, 109 N. W. 1085, 11 Ann. Cas. 296; State v. Meyer, 86 Kan. 793, 122 Pac. 101, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 278; s. c., 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 90, and note; Rupert v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 226, 131 Pac. 713, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 60; In re Johnson (C. C.) 46 Fed. 481; State v. Warren, 92 N. C. 828; Grisham v. State, 19 Tex. App. 514; In re Sullivan, 3 Cal. App. 193, 84 Pac. 781.

[6] In the case before us the prisoner had served nine months when he was taken back for resentence. Such resentence was, under the last authorities cited, a void act.

[7] Finally the question remains whether this court should apply the rule in Ex parte Lee, supra, and remand for a valid judgment to be entered. We think not. The facts are much different than in Lee's Case. Lee had served a very short time when he applied. This petitioner has served over a year. On October 4, 1917, the petitioner was in effect sentenced for not less than 1 year nor more than 10. On May 13, 1918, for the same offense the trial court again stated its mind and fixed the punishment at 1 year, which, allowing credits, means 10 months. But the petitioner has now served over 12 months. It is the duty of this court to "dispose of such party as the justice of the case may require." Pen. Code, § 1484; In re Bonner, 151 U. S. 242, 261, 14 Sup. Ct. 323, 38 L. Ed. 149; Feeley's Case, supra, p. 600. We do not hesitate in saying we think that the "justice of the case" does not require that the prisoner be remanded. The Supreme Court has remanded for further proceedings in some cases when it appeared from the record that the petitioner had not served much of his term. In Ex parte Lee, supra, the petitioner had been convicted of manslaughter, and had served only about 4 months. In Ex parte Smith, supra, he had been convicted of burglary, but was still in the custody of the sheriff and had served no time. Although the judgment was void and the petitioner had served only a part of his term, in other cases, he was discharged. Ex parte Baldwin, 60 Cal. 432; Ex parte Bulger, 60 Cal. 438; Ex parte Bernert, 62 Cal. 524; Ex parte Kelly, 65 Cal. 154, 3 Pac. 673; Ex parte Sylvester, 81 Cal. 199, 22 Pac. 550; Ex parte Morton, 132 Cal. 346, 64 Pac. 469; In re Sullivan, 3 Cal. App. 193, 84 Pac. 781.

Under the facts of this case we are not disposed to remand. It is therefore ordered that the petitioner be discharged.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

The record showing merely exclusion of defendant's question to his witness, as to what conversation they had, and not what he expected to prove, or what bearing it would have, discloses no error.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜1111(4)—APPEAL—REMARKS OF COUNSEL — TRIAL COURT'S VERSION.

The trial court's version of the remarks of counsel must be accepted on appeal, being the only version authenticated, the remarks not having been taken down, and counsel on motion to amend transcript by inserting them having been unable to agree what they were.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜722½ — REMARKS OF COUNSEL.

Remarks of prosecuting attorney that the person who set the fire was experienced in setting fires, which had some basis in the evidence, is not ground for reversal, especially where the court promptly, on defendant's request, admonished the jury to pay no attention thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Solomon Rose was convicted under Pen. Code, § 548, of burning insured property, and, from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, appeals. Affirmed.

G. C. Ringolsky and H. A. I. Wolch, both of San Francisco, and Will A. Dower, of San Andrea, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was informed against, by the district attorney of Calaveras county, for the crime of willfully burning insured property with intent to defraud the insurer, He was duly tried and convicted, and was thereupon sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison in conformity with the statute relating to indeterminate sentences. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The points made on appeal are: (1) That the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict of guilty; (2) misconduct of the prosecuting attorney.

[1] The alleged insufficiency of the evidence is addressed specifically to the failure of the prosecution to show that defendant knew the buildings and other property destroyed by fire were insured. It is urged that, under section 548 of the Penal Code, "the motive is an essential portion of the crime and must therefore be expressly proven by the prosecution," citing People v. Schwartz, 32 Cal. 160, 165. It is hence urged that the prosecution must prove that the defendant had actual knowledge that the property was insured, citing Moore v. State, 66 Tex. Cr. R. 169, 146 S. W. 183; State v. Greer, 243 Mo. 599, 147 S. W. 968, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1163.

[2] Obviously, the intent to defraud the insurance company is of the essence of the crime, and no such intent could exist without knowledge on the part of the accused that the property was insured. We are asked to read the record carefully, for it is claimed that "the record on this very important element of the offense charged is silent."

Witness John Cosgrave, sheriff of Calaveras county, testified that defendant came to his house about 10 o'clock on the night of December 16, 1917, and informed him that his house and all his belongings had that day been burned. The witness narrated a conversation he had with the defendant at that time. He testified:

"I asked him if the place was insured. He says, 'I think my wife had a little insurance.' I asked him how much. He said he did not know. Then he talked considerable what his losses were."

Sheriff Cosgrave met defendant and his wife at the premises the next day:

"Q. Did Mrs. Rose make any statement? A. I asked about the insurance, and she seemed to be very reluctant about telling. I asked if there was $1,500, and he said they told maybe there was, and then I told him I would have to arrest him, * * * and I brought him into town and made the charge, and the judge fixed the bail."

The title to the property was in defendant's wife.

It appeared that there were two insurance policies issued and in force at the time the fire occurred (one for $2,000 and one for $500) covering two buildings, the household effects, and farming implements—substantially all the improvements on the place and all the personal property. The evidence of defendant's guilt was circumstantial, but was, we think, sufficient to fix the burning of this property upon him. There is no conceivable motive for his destroying this property by fire unless it was that his wife should realize on her insurance policies, and the circumstances, aside from his admission to Sheriff Cosgrave, warranted the inference that he knew of the existence of these policies. There was no evidence tending in any degree to indicate that some evil-disposed person other than defendant set fire to the property.

[3] Defendant's counsel say that—

"The court expressly refused to permit the defendant to show that he did not know there was any insurance upon the place."

Attention is called to pages 177 and 178 of the transcript. It appears that Mrs. Rose received a letter, dated November 10, 1917, written by William Adams, informing her that she had not sent him the insurance premium on policy "taken out last June." Mrs. Rose testified that this letter was opened by Mr. Rose who handed it to her. She was then asked "what conversation was had" between her and her husband. The court sustained an objection to the question. Counsel for defendant then asked that the jury be excused and he allowed to renew the question. The witness was again asked to state what was said in that conversation "with reference to keeping that policy in force." The objection was renewed.

"Mr. Ringolsky (one of defendant's attorneys): My purpose is that it goes to a motive, a lack of motive for the crime that is alleged to be committed. Mr. Keetch (assistant to district attorney): Let's argue it out then. By the Court: The jury is excused, after being admonished, and leave the room until called back. * * * Stipulated that the jury are all present."

And there the record ends. No ruling appears and no explanation by defendant's counsel as to what he expected to prove or what its bearing would have on the issues. There is no showing that the court was advised of the facts or matters on which defendant relied to establish motive or tend to destroy the showing as to motive. The record presents no ground for holding that the court erred.

[4, 5] The remaining ground for reversal is alleged misconduct of the assistant district attorney in making his closing argument. At page 216 of the transcript appears an objection "to the statements of counsel with reference to the history and previous record of the defendant." What the objectionable remarks were is not set forth, but defendant's attorney asked that—

The court "instruct the jury to refrain from (paying attention to?) certain remarks of that character made by the prosecuting attorney. * * * The Court: The jury will refrain from paying any attention to the remarks of counsel as far as that was concerned."

The objectionable remarks of Mr. Keetch were not taken down by the court reporter, and, after the transcript was certified a motion was made to amend by inserting at page 216 the remarks referred to. The matter was heard, and counsel for the parties respectively stated what their recollection was of these remarks.

"The Court: My recollection may not be any better than the counsel's for the respective parties, but my recollection of the matter was that Mr. Keetch remarked 'the person who set the fire was experienced in setting fires,' and then he was interrupted by Mr. Ringolsky and asked why he did not produce the defendant's record here, and the statement was 'that he had no right to introduce the record in this case, but if given an opportunity he would do so.' That is the conversation as I recall it."

We must accept the version as given by the court, as it is the only one that comes to us authenticated. The statement made, that whoever set the fire was experienced, had some basis in the evidence. Some neighbors, who came to the place while the dwelling was burning, found a burning candle placed in a sack saturated with coal oil in the barn and in a position which would have caused the barn to burn in a short time. Some hours later in the day, while defendant was at the place, the barn burned. He could give no satisfactory explanation how it happened, The suggestion that attorney Keetch meant to apply his remarks to defendant was made by defendant's attorney when he asked Mr. Keetch why he did not produce defendant's record. The remarks first above quoted do not on their face necessarily give rise to the inference that they were pointed to defendant. We do not think the episode in any view can warrant a reversal of the judgment, especially as the court very promptly, on defendant's request, admonished the jury to pay no heed to it or to the remarks of counsel.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. YOUNG. (Cr. 451.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 23, 1918.)

CRIMINAL LAW ⊜1130(4)—ABANDONMENT OF APPEAL.

Where, after cause was placed on calendar, it was ordered, counsel for appellant not appearing, that appellant have 15 days in which to file opening brief, court will assume that appeal has been abandoned, and will affirm judgment for want of prosecution; the time having expired, and not having been extended.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

W. J. Young, alias James Brown, was convicted of making and drawing a fictitious check, and appeals from judgment and order denying new trial. Judgment amended and affirmed.

C. E. Nuland, of San Andreas, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant was convicted of "making and drawing a fictitious check," and was sentenced to the state prison at San Quentin "for a term of from 1 to 14 years." He appealed from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The cause was placed upon the September calendar, and, counsel for the defendant not appearing, it was ordered, on September 10, 1918, that appellant have 15 days in which to file his opening brief, the respondent 10 days to answer, and appellant 10 days to reply, cause then to stand submitted.

The time for filing appellant's opening brief having expired, and the time not having been extended, we must assume that the appeal has been abandoned, and therefore affirm the judgment for want of prosecution. We have, however, read the evidence in the case, and find it sufficient to support the verdict.

The judgment is amended by striking out the words "for a term of from 1 to 14 years," and as thus amended the judgment and order are affirmed.

AKERMAN et al. v. MOODY, City Auditor. (Civ. 2774.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 17, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜54—GOVERNMENTAL POWER.

A "municipal corporation" is but a branch of the state government and is established for the purpose of aiding the Legislature in making provisions for the wants and welfare of the public within the territory for which it is organized.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Municipal Corporation.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜64—POWERS—LEGISLATIVE CONTROL.

It is for the Legislature to determine the extent to which it will confer upon a municipal corporation any power to aid in the discharge of the obligation which the Constitution has imposed upon itself.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜211—BOARD OF EDUCATION—RECALL.

Under Const. art. 11, § 8½, Charter of City of San Diego, art. 7, § 2, as amended in 1905, article 1, c. 3, as amended in 1909, article 1, c. 4, § 4, and article 7, § 3 and Pol. Code, §§ 1576 and 1616, the members of the board of education of the city of San Diego are subject to recall, though the San Diego school district comprises certain territory outside of the corporate limits of the city, and the board members are paid by warrants drawn upon the county treasurer.

Petition for writ of mandate by John S. Akerman and others against H. L. Moody, as Auditor of the City of San Diego. Peremptory writ issued.

Harrison G. Sloane, of San Diego, for petitioners.

Warren E. Libby, of San Diego, for respondent.

T. B. Cosgrove, City Atty., of San Diego, amicus curiæ.

CONREY, P. J. In accordance with proceedings regularly taken for that purpose, the common council of the city of San Diego, on the 31st day of July, 1918, adopted a resolution calling for a primary election to be held in said city for the purpose of nominating candidates for three offices of members of the board of education of that city in case the incumbents be recalled at a proposed recall election. The resolution was duly referred and presented to the defendant for the purpose of procuring from him a written certificate to the effect that the indebtedness incurred under the terms of said resolution could be incurred without the violation of any of the provisions of the freeholders' charter of the city. The defendant has refused to make the required certificate, basing his refusal upon the ground that the recall provisions of the charter do not apply to members of the board of education. In this proceeding the petitioners pray for a writ of mandate commanding the defendant to make the demanded certificate.

The duty of the city auditor to make certificates of the kind here required is prescribed by section 14 of chapter 2 of article 2 of the charter of the city of San Diego. That he must do this in a proper case is not denied. Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., 118 Cal. 524, 551, 45 Pac. 824, 50 Pac. 670; Pollok v. City of San Diego, 118 Cal. 593, 596, 50 Pac. 769.

Section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution of California, as amended October 10, 1911, and also as amended November 3, 1914, provides that—

"It shall be competent, in all charters framed under the authority given by section eight of this article, to provide, in addition to those provisions allowable by this Constitution and by the laws of the state as follows: * * * 2. For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of boards of education shall be elected or appointed, for their qualifications, compensation and removal, and for the number which shall constitute any one of such boards."

The charter of the city of San Diego at all times since its adoption in 1889 has provided that the government of the San Diego school district shall be vested in a board of education. As amended in the year 1905, section 2 of article 7 of the charter reads as follows:

"The government of the San Diego school district shall be vested in a board of education, composed of five persons, who shall be elected by the electors of the city of San Diego, at large, at the same time and in the same manner as other municipal officers, and each of whom shall have been for two years a resident of said city, who shall be styled member of the board of education. They shall serve four years, or until their successors are elected and qualified."

Chapter 3 of article 1 of the charter, as amended in 1909, provides for the manner in which all primary and general municipal elections for the nomination and election of municipal officers shall be conducted in the city of San Diego. In that chapter members of the board of education are listed as municipal officers to be elected. Section 4 of chapter 4 of article 1 of the charter, as enacted in the year 1915, provides for the recall of "the holder of any elective office of this municipality," and prescribes the procedure for such recall. Section 3 of article 7 of the charter provides that—

"The duties and powers of the board of education shall be such as are now, or may hereafter be enjoined and conferred on boards of education in city and school districts by the laws of the state of California."

Section 1576 of the Political Code provides that every city (with an exception not important here) shall constitute a separate school district which shall be governed by the board of education or board of school trustees of such city. Section 1616 of the same Code provides that—

"Boards of education are elected in cities under the provisions of the laws governing such cities, and their powers and duties are as prescribed in such laws, except as otherwise in this chapter provided."

The provisions of the city charter leave no room for doubt that the charter recognizes members of the board of education as municipal officers. That the Constitution authorizes a city in its charter to create such municipal offices is also entirely clear and certain. The legislation of the state concerning school districts has been framed with an evident intent to harmonize with the power of cities to act as school districts and to be governed by boards of education. In Allen v. Board of Trustees, 157 Cal. 720, 109 Pac. 486, a writ of mandate was granted requiring the board of trustees of a city of the fifth class to include in their call for an election of officers of the city the matter of election of members of a board of education thereof. After citing that section of the municipal corporations act which provides that in cities of the fifth class there shall be a board of education, and after quoting from section 1576 of the Political Code, the Supreme Court declared that—

"Under the plain terms of the statutes above cited, such city will form a school district, to be governed by the board of education of such city. A board of education, composed of five members, is a part of the governmental machinery of cities of the fifth class, and it would therefore seem plain that a call for the election of the officers required by law to be elected in corporations of this class must include a call for the election of five members of the board of education."

It has been stipulated as a fact in this case that the San Diego school district of the county of San Diego comprises certain territory outside of the corporate limits of the city of San Diego; that the members of the board of education of the city of San Diego are paid the salary provided for them in the charter of said city by warrants drawn upon the county treasurer, upon orders approved by the superintendent of schools of the county of San Diego, and are not paid by the city treasurer of the city of San Diego. Relying upon these facts, the defendant claims that the members of the board of education of the city are not subject to recall under the provisions of the charter, and are not municipal officers, because electors outside of the city limits and within the school district have the right to vote for the said members, and therefore they cannot be termed municipal officers, and also because electors outside of the city are qualified as candidates for such offices, and therefore members of the board of education cannot be termed municipal officers.

[1, 2] If the provisions of the written law on this subject were obscure, we might follow counsel for defendant in a study of the character of the duties, powers, and functions of school districts and of their officers, as a method of testing the question as to whether or not a member of a city board of education is a municipal officer. But in the absence of such ambiguity or obscurity such investigation is not necessary. If any rights of the persons residing in or owning property within the limits of the San Diego school district and outside of the city of San Diego have been encroached upon by the creation of the city of San Diego as a school district, there are within the law ample means for the protection of those rights without denying to the city of San Diego the right to have and to choose the members of a board of education.

"That the education of the youth is properly included within the functions of a municipal government cannot be denied. A municipal corporation is but a branch of the state government, and is established for the purpose of aiding the Legislature in making provision for the wants and welfare of the public within the territory for which it is organized, and it is for the Legislature to determine the extent to which it will confer upon such corporation any power to aid it in the discharge of the obligation which the Constitution has imposed upon itself." In re Wetmore, 99 Cal. 146, 150, 33 Pac. 769, 770; Los Angeles City School Dist. v. Longden, 148 Cal. 380, 83 Pac. 246.

While those decisions recognize the principle that the school system of the state is a matter of general concern, and not a municipal affair, they also recognize the right of a municipality to maintain educational departments running current with the general laws of the state touching the common school system. For such purposes there is no reason why a city should be denied the right to have municipal officers to take charge of the educational activities of the city. In the case of Stern v. City Council of Berkeley, 25 Cal. App. 685, 145 Pac. 167, the defendant challenged the validity of a provision of the city charter of the city of Berkeley which provided for compensation to a school director. It was contended that, inasmuch as the public school system of the state has been made by the Constitution and general laws a matter of general concern, the regulation of that system is a state affair as distinguished from a municipal affair, and therefore can be rightly covered and controlled only by general state laws. To which the court responded:

"Generally speaking, this may be so; but in our opinion appellant, as a school director of the city of Berkeley, is a municipal officer, irrespective of whether or not the duties of the office are exacted by the charter or imposed by the general law of the state, and therefore the compensation to be paid him by the city out of the city treasury for services rendered the city in maintaining its school system as an integral part of the state school system is purely a municipal affair, which is exclusively controlled by charter provisions."

[3] It is our opinion that the right to recall members of the board of education, equally with the right to elect such members, is vested in the city of San Diego. On the record presented herein, the petitioners are entitled to the demanded relief.

Let the peremptory writ issue.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

Ex parte JACOBS. (Cr. 459.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 18, 1918.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS ⊂⊃4, 27, 30(1)—FUNCTION OF WRIT.

Habeas corpus in California is not a writ of error, or a mode of review, but merely a means to inquire into question of jurisdiction, so that, if judgment of conviction of crime is not void on its face, it will stand as against collateral attack by habeas corpus, though errors on trial might be shown.

2. HABEAS CORPUS ⊂⊃85(1)—PRESUMPTIONS—ACTION OF COURT—WITNESSES.

On habeas corpus to secure release from imprisonment where record of trial is not before court, presumption is that action of court in refusing to bring into court witnesses regularly subpœnaed and defaulting in appearance did not involve an abuse of discretion.

3. HABEAS CORPUS ⊂⊃4 — CONVICTION OF CRIME—MATTERS NOT REVIEWABLE.

That judge trying prosecution refused to compel witnesses to appear for petitioner, and that magistrate who held preliminary examination refused to compel physical examination of person against whom petitioner was alleged to have committed offense, were points which, if reviewable at all, could be reviewed only on appeal and not in habeas corpus proceeding.

4. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION ⊂⊃137(5)—GROUND FOR SETTING ASIDE—REFUSAL OF PHYSICAL EXAMINATION.

That magistrate who held preliminary examination of defendant accused of the crime against nature refused to compel physical examination of the victim was not legal ground for setting aside the information.

In the matter of the application of Alfred Jacobs for writ of habeas corpus. Application denied.

Alfred Jacobs, in pro. per.

HART, J. The petitioner, now confined in the Folsom state prison, claiming that he is being restrained of his liberty by the warden of said prison without warrant or authority of law, has made this application to me, to the end that the cause of his imprisonment may be inquired into and thereupon his restraint declared illegal and that he consequently be discharged therefrom.

An examination of the petition for the writ has readily convinced me that no legal ground is therein stated for the issuance thereof and that the application will therefore have to be denied.

Ordinarily, an opinion setting forth the reasons for the denial of an application for a writ of habeas corpus is not deemed necessary; the mere order denying the same being sufficient. In this instance, however, the petitioner, who is not an attorney, makes the application himself, or in propria persona, and, inasmuch as he is not a lawyer and acquainted with the remedial function or scope of the writ of habeas corpus, at least so far as that writ is invokable where the claim is that a citizen is deprived of his personal liberty by virtue of some process issued by a state tribunal purporting to act under some local law of the state, I think it is but fair to the prisoner to reduce to writing the grounds upon which his application must be and is denied.

[1] In the first place, I may remark that the statement in the petition that the writ of habeas corpus is a writ of error, or a mode whereby errors of law occurring at a trial may be reviewed, is erroneous, at least so far as this state is concerned. The sole function or the full scope of the inquiry which is authorized to be prosecuted through the instrumentality of that writ is the question of jurisdiction. If therefore a judgment of conviction and sentence in a criminal case is not void upon its face, it will stand as against a collateral attack, such as is the attack upon such a judgment through the writ of habeas corpus, even though it might be shown, if it were proper to show it in a proceeding on habeas corpus, that during the trial culminating in such judgment many egregious errors, prejudicial to the rights of the prisoner, had been committed.

The petitioner here was convicted by a jury in the superior court of Sonoma county on the 6th day of December, 1916, of a crime against nature, and, on the 12th of the same month, was sentenced therefor to a term of 12 years in the state penitentiary. As grounds for the petitioner's release from the custody of the warden, the petition states, in substance, that the judge who presided at the trial in the superior court refused to compel two certain witnesses, named in the petition, to appear in court and testify in petitioner's behalf; that the magistrate, who held the preliminary examination of the petitioner on the charge of which he was subsequently convicted and committed him for trial on said charge in the superior court, refused to compel the examination by a physician of the person upon whom the crime charged against petitioner was alleged to have been committed for the purpose of determining whether the act constituting the crime charged had actually been committed upon such person; that, "because of such refusals," the petitioner was deprived of an opportunity to prove his innocence of the crime of which he was convicted and for which he is now being restrained of his personal liberty.

[2-4] It is not made clear in the petition just what is meant by the complaint that the judge of the superior court refused to compel certain witnesses to appear and testify for the petitioner. If it is meant that the witnesses failed to appear in court after having been regularly subpœnaed and that the court refused to issue the proper process for compelling them to obey the subpœnas and so made to appear in court, one ready reply is that the record of the trial is not before us, and in such case, even upon appeal, the presumption would be and is that the refusal to take steps to bring the defaulting witnesses into court did not involve an abuse of judicial discretion. But, in any event, it is, of course, readily obvious to the legal mind that the grounds above set forth are wholly insufficient to justify the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus. In other words, the points therein involved, even if reviewable under any circumstances, may only be reviewed on appeal and not in a proceeding on habeas corpus. As to the action of the magistrate above mentioned, even if such action were a legal ground for setting aside the information (and obviously it is not), the only way in which it could be reviewed by this court, if at all, would be upon appeal upon a proper and timely record made with respect thereto in the superior court.

Manifestly, the application for the writ must be denied, and it is so ordered.

NAPA VALLEY ELECTRIC CO. v. CALISTOGA ELECTRIC CO. (Civ. 2529; S. F. 8193.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 18, 1918. On Rehearing in Supreme Court, in Bank, Dec. 16, 1918.)

1. ELECTRICITY ⊂=1—ILLEGALITY OF SALE OF PROPERTIES OF PUBLIC UTILITY—STATUTE.

A contract between two electric companies for the sale of its properties by one to the other, not approved by the Railroad Commission as required by Public Utilites Act, §§ 51, 76, was void and unenforceable, as in violation of statutes for the protection of the public.

2. EQUITY ⊂=15—JURISDICTION—DECREE DEPENDENT ON APPROVAL OR REJECTION OF OTHER BOARD.

A court of equity will never assume jurisdiction to prepare a decree dependent for its efficacy on approval or rejection of some other co-ordinate or inferior board or tribunal, but only when the court can itself enforce its decree.

3. CONTRACTS ⊂=105 — CONDITIONS PRECEDENT—OBTAINING PERMITS.

When within its constitutional powers the Legislature has sought by statute to provide that certain contracts may be made only after obtaining certain permits, the obtaining of the latter are conditions precedent to the making of enforceable contracts.

4. CONTRACTS ⊂=138(1)—ILLEGALITY—ACTION TO ENFORCE.

When fact is called to attention of court that contract sought to be enforced is illegal, court will refuse plaintiff any relief, and will leave the parties where it finds them.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⊂=55 — SALE OF PROPERTIES OF PUBLIC UTILITY — PERMISSION OF RAILROAD COMMISSION.

In view of Public Utilities Act, § 51, one electric company could not have the equitable remedy of specific performance to compel another electric company to convey its properties, on which it had given an option, where neither of the companies had secured from the Railroad Commission an order authorizing the sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by the Napa Valley Electric Company, a corporation, against the Calistoga Electric Company, a corporation. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appealed to the District Court of Appeals, which affirmed, and plaintiff applies for hearing in the Supreme Court. Application denied.

U'Ren & Beard, of Napa, for appellant.

Asher, Meyerstein & McNutt and Joseph C. Meyerstein, all of San Francisco, and H. L. Johnston and L. E. Johnston, both of Napa, for respondent.
